Conditions in restraint of marriage have not generally been favoured, as contrary to sound policy; but where a legacy has been given over to another, there the condition has always been held good; and it seems that such conditions, as only reasonably restrain children from imprudent marriages will be always supported.—That is to say, where they operate only as particular, not as universal restrictions. In the case of Scott v. Tyler, 2 Bro. C. R. 431. &c. it was determined after very long arguments, that a condition annexed to a legacy, that the legatee should not marry under twenty-one, without consent of her mother, (or rather that the legacy should vest previous to twenty-one, if the legatee married with such consent,) was a valid condition.—And upon marriage without such consent, it was determined to go to the mother under a gift of a general residue.—See the first paragraph of Div. III. of this title.—And the cases of Peyton v. Bury, 2 P. Wms. 626. and the following cases cited in Mr. Cox's note there, viz. Bellases v. Ermine, 1 C. C. 22. Fry. v. Porter, 1 C. Rep. 739. and the cases there cited.—The case of Scott v. Tyler above mentioned, and Amos v. Horner, 1 Eq. Ab. 112. p. 9. have determined that a bequest of the residue, notwithstanding some contradictory authorities, is equivalent to a limitation over; where the condition is precedent and never performed.—As to the invalidity of a legacy in perfect restraint of marriage, see Knap v. Noyes, Ambl. 662. and Elton v. Elton. 1 Wils 159. And the rule of the ecclesiastical law is, that where a portion is given in consideration that a daughter should never marry, the condition is void. Swimb. —See also Rose's notes on Com. Rep. 728. and the cases there cited; and at large on this subject, Fonblanque's Treatise of Equity, i. 245. &c. and this Dict. title Marriage.

The word "If" will not always make a condition; but sometimes it makes a limitation, as where a lease is made for years, if A. B. lives so long. And this is contrary to a condition; for a stranger may take advantage of an estate determined thereby, &c. Co. Lit. 236. Dyer 300. Sub conditione is the most proper word to make a condition; proviso is as good a word, when not dependant upon another sentence; but in some cases, the word proviso may make no condition, but be only a qualification or explanation of a covenant. 2 Danv. 1. 2. And neither the word proviso, nor any other makes a condition, unless it is restrictive. Plowd. 34. 1 Nels. 466.

Regularly the word "for" does not import a condition, though it has the force of a condition when the thing granted is executory, and the consideration of the grant is a service, or some such thing, for which there is no remedy, other than the stopping the thing granted; as in the case of an annuity granted pro consilio, or for executing the office of a steward of a court or the service of a captain or keeper of a fort, here the failure of giving counsel, or performing the service, is a kind of eviction of that which is to be done for the annuity, the grantor having no means either to exact the counsel, or recompence for it, but by stopping the annuity; and in these cases the condition is not precedent, and therefore the performance thereof need not be averred when the annuity is demanded. Per Hobart Ch. J. Hob. 41. Mich. 10. Jac. in the case of Cowper v. Andrews.

As the intent of the testator chiefly governs in wills, such construction is always made of the words, as will best support his intent, and therefore these words ad faciendum, faciendo, ea intentione, ad effectum, &c. in a will create a condition. Co. Lit. 204 a. See titles Devise, Will.

A grant to one to the intent he shall do so and so, is no condition, but a trust and confidence. Dyer 138. Some words in a lease do not make a condition but a covenant, upon which the lessor may bring his action. A lease being the deed of lessor and lessee, every word is spoken by both; and a condition may be therein, though it sounds in covenant. 1 Nels. 464. A covenant not to grant, sell, &c. may be a condition; and covenant that, paying the rent, the lessee shall enjoy the land, is conditional. 2 Danv. 2. 6. Where words are indefinite, and proper to defeat an estate, they shall be taken to have the force of a condition. Palm. 503.

III. A condition may be well performed, when it is done as near to the intent as may be: for if the condition of a feoffment be that the feoffee shall make an estate back to the feoffor and his wife, and the heirs of their two bodies, remainder to the right heirs of the feoffor; in this case, if the feoffor die before, the estate shall be made to the wife without impeachment of waste, the remainder to the heirs of the body of the husband begotten on the wife, &c. Co. Lit. 219. 8 Rep. 69. If a condition be performed in substance and effect, it is good although it differs in words; and where it is to deliver letters-patent, and the party bound having lost them, delivers an exemplification, &c. 2 Danv. 40. Though payment of the money before the day, is payment at the day, in performance of a condition; yet a feoffor, &c. cannot re-enter, and revest his old estate by force of the condition, till the day whereon the condition gives him power to re-enter. Ibid. 121. If a man seised of land in right of his wife, make a feoffment in fee on condition, and dies; if the heir of the feoffor enters for the condition broken, and defeats the feoffment, his estate vanishes, and presently it is vested in the wife. Co. Lit. 202. And if a person seised of land, as heir on the part of his mother, makes a feoffment on condition and dieth; though the heir on the part of the father, who is heir at Common Law, may enter for the condition broken, the heir on the part of the mother shall enter upon him, and enjoy the land. Ibid. 12.

Where there is a condition in a feoffment or lease, that if no distress can be found, the feoffor, &c. shall re-enter; if the place is not open to the distress, as if there be only a cupboard in the house, which is locked, &c. it is all one as if there was no distress there, and the feoffor, &c. may enter. 2 Danv. 46. When a rent is to be paid upon condition at a certain day, the lessor cannot enter for the condition broken, before demand of the rent. Ibid. 98. And the lessor ought to demand the rent at the day, or the condition shall not be broken by the non-payment of the rent. A re-entry may be given on a feoffment, &c. though none be reserved: if one make a lease for life or feoffment upon condition, that if the feoffee or lessee does such an act, the estate shall be void: now although the estate cannot be void before entry, this is a good condition, and shall give an entry to the lessor, &c. by implication. 1 Rol. Abr. 408. A lease for life on condition, being a freehold, cannot cease without entry; but if it be a lease for years, the lease is void ipso facto, on breach of the condition without any entry. 1 Inst. 214. If a lease for years is, that, on breach of the condition, the term shall cease, the term is ended without entry; but where the words are, that the lease shall be void, it is otherwise. Cro. Car. 511. 3 Rep. 64. Regularly, where one will take advantage of a condition, if he may enter, he must do it; and if he cannot enter, he must make a claim. Co. Lit. 218. Where on condition broken, lessor brings an ejectment, entry is not necessary: if tenant defends, he is bound by the rule, to confess entry.

No one can reserve the power or benefit of re-entry, on breach of a condition to any other but himself, his heirs, executors, &c. parties and privies, in right and representation: privies in law, grantees of reversions, &c. are to have no advantage by it. But by the stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. Grantees of reversions may take advantage against lessees, &c. by action. 1 Inst. 214. 215. Plowd. 175. Where one doth enter for a condition broken, it generally makes the estate void ab initio, and the party comes in of his first estate; and he shall have the land in the same manner it was when he parted with it; and his possession at the time of making the condition; therefore he shall avoid all subsequent charges on the lands. 4 Rep. 120. Plowd. 186. Co. Lit. 233. If one enters on a condition performed, he shall avoid all incumbrances upon the land after the condition made: and a condition when broken, or performed, &c. will defeat the whole estate. So that if there be a lease for life, remainder in fee on condition that the lessee for life shall pay 20*l.* to the lessor; if he pay not this money, the estate in remainder will be avoided also. Dyer 127. 8 Rep. 90. But this may be otherwise by special limitation to an use: and if tenant for life, and he in remainder join in a feoffment on condition, that if, &c. then the tenant for life shall re-enter, this may be good without defeating the whole estate; though regularly a condition may not avoid part of an estate, and leave another part entire, nor can the estate be void as to some persons, and good as to others. 8 Rep. 190. 1 Inst. 214.

Lessee for life makes a feoffment on condition, and enters for the condition broken; by this he shall be restored to his estate for life, and reduce the reversion to the lessor; and the rent due to the lessor shall be revived: but in this case the lessee will not be in the same course as he was before, for his estate is subject to a forfeiture, though he be tenant for life still. Roll. 474. Shep. Abr. 405.

Tenants by the curtesy, tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, tenant in dower, for life, or years, &c. hold their estates subject to a condition in law, not to grant a greater estate than they have, nor to commit waste, &c. 1 Inst. 233. And estates made by deed to infants, and feme coverts, upon condition, shall bind them, because the charge is on the land. 2 Danv. 30. A release of all a man's right may be upon condition; a lessee may surrender upon condition: a contract may be upon condition, &c. But a parson cannot resign upon condition, any more than be admitted upon condition: and a condition cannot be released on condition. 9 Rep. 85.

No person shall defeat any estate of freehold upon condition without shewing the deed wherein the condition is contained: but of chattels real or personal, &c. a man may plead that such grants or leases were made upon condition without shewing the deeds; and in the case of a condition to avoid a freehold, though it may not be pleaded without the deed, it may be given in evidence to a jury, and they may find the matter at large. Lit. 374. 5 Rep. 40. A condition may be apportioned by act of law, or of the lessee. 4 Rep. 120. But a man cannot by his own act divide, or apportion a condition, which goes to the destruction of an estate. 1 Nels. Abr. 474. A condition in a will is a thing odious in law, which shall not be created without sufficient words. 2 Leon. 40. A devise to the heir at law, provided he pay to A. B. 20*l.* is a void condition, because there is no person to take advantage of the non-performance. 1 Lutw. 797. Yet conditional devises as well of lands as of goods, are allowed by our law, and not being performed, the heir or executors shall take advantage of them. 1 Nels. 467.

Where there are negative and affirmative conditions, the pleader must shew, not only that he has not broke the negative ones, but also that he has performed the affirmative ones. Fletcher v. Richardson, Hardw. 322.

As to relief against the breach of conditions. Some say that in all cases of penalty or forfeiture that lie in compensation, Equity will relieve; for where they can make compensation, no harm is done. So that although an express time be appointed for the performance of a condition, the judge may, after that day is past, allow a reasonable space to the party, making reparation for the damage, if it be not very great, nor the substance of the covenant destroyed by it. See Fonblanque's Treat. Eq. i. 387. and the cases there cited.

The substantial distinction which governs the interference of Courts of Equity in cases of conditions broken, is not whether the condition be precedent or subsequent, but whether compensation can or cannot be made: and therefore, where A. conveyed lands to B. &c. upon trust, that if C. the son of A. within six months after the death of A. should secure to trustees 500*l.* for the younger children of C. then after such security given to convey to C. and his heirs; and until the time for giving such security in trust for the eldest son of C. and in default of such security, to convey to such eldest son and his heirs; C. died before such security given: yet this condition precedent being only in the nature of a penalty, the intent of the trust shall be regarded, which was to secure 500*l.* to the younger children. Wallis v. Crimes, 1 C. C. 89. See Glascock v. Brownell, Finch. 178. Pitcairne v. Bruce, Finch. 403. Woodman v. Blake, 2 Vern. 222. Bertie v. Falkland, 2 Vern. 339. Hayward v. Angell, 1 Vern. 222. Bland v. Middleton, 2 C. C. 1. Francis's Maxims, p. 49.

But though Equity will, under some circumstances, relieve against the breach of a condition precedent, where damages are certain; yet it seems, that they will not where the damages accrued are contingent, and cannot be estimated. Sweet v. Anderson, 5 Vin. 93. pl. 15. See Treatise of Equity, p. 209. 387. 391.

IV. There are no precise technical words required in a deed, to make a stipulation a condition precedent or subsequent; neither does it depend on the circumstance whether the clause is placed prior or posterior in the deed, so that it operates as a proviso or covenant; for the same words have been construed to operate as either the one or the other according to the nature of the transaction, per Ashhurst Justice. 1 Term Rep. 645.—Further, as to the nature of conditions precedent and subsequent, see 3 Atk. 364. 2 P. Wms. 419. 626. 1 Vern. 83. 3 C. C. 130. 3 Lev. 132. Fearne on Cont. Rem. 2 Burr. 899. 4 Burr. 1930. 1 Wils. 105. 136. 2 Bro. C. R. 67. and Ib. 431. 489. as to a condition annexed to a legacy, that the legatee should marry with consent of her mother, which was held to be valid. In 1 Eq. Ab. 108. it is said that conditions precedent are such as are annexed to estates, and must be punctually performed before the estate can vest. A condition subsequent, is when the estate is executed; but the continuance of such estate depends on the breach or performance of the condition. The two most material points of discussion respecting the doctrine and different operations at law, and in equity, of conditions precedent and subsequent arise, 1. From cases where conditions are annexed to devises, making them void on the marriage of the devisee without consent: See ante II. and title Marriage: And 2. From cases arising on the vesting of portions and legacies made payable at a future time. See titles Devise, Legacy, Portions.

Conditions precedent are such as must be punctually performed before the estate can vest; but on a condition subsequent, the estate is immediately executed: yet the continuance of such estate dependeth on the breach or performance of the condition. Co. Lit. 218. Eq. Abr. 108. As if I grant, that if A. will go to such a place, about my business, that he shall have such an estate, or that he shall have 10*l.* &c. this is a condition precedent. 1 Rol. Abr. 414. So if I retain a man for 40*s.* to go with me to Rome, this is a condition precedent, for the duty commences by going to Rome. 1 Rol. Abr. 914. So if a man, by will devises certain legacies, and then devises all the residue of his estate to his executor, after debts, legacies, &c. paid and discharged, this is a condition precedent; so that the executor cannot have the residue of the estate before the debts and legacies are discharged. 1 Rol. Abr. 415. 1 Jones 327. Cro. Car. 335.

But if a man devises a term to A. and that if his wife suffers the devisee to enjoy it for three years, that she shall have all his goods as executrix; but if she disturbs A. then he makes B. executor, and dies, his wife is executrix presently; for though in grants the estate shall not vest till the condition precedent is performed, yet it is otherwise in a will, which must be guided by the intent of the parties; and this shall not be construed as a condition precedent, but only as a condition to abridge the power of being executrix, if she perform it not. Cro. Eliz. 219.

Where the one promise is the consideration of the other, and where the performance and not the promise is, must be gathered from the words and nature of the agreement, and depends intirely thereupon; for, if there was a positive promise that one should release his equity of redemption, and on the other side, that the other would pay 7*l.* then the one might bring his action without any averment of performance; but where the agreement is, that the plaintiff should release his equity of redemption, in consideration whereof the defendant was to pay him 7*l.* so that the release is the consideration, and therefore being executory, it is a condition precedent, which must be averred. 12 Mod. 455. 460. Thorp v. Thorp.

So in an action against the hundred on the stat 9 G. 1. c. 22. for damage sustained by the wilful burning of the party's barn, it is a precedent condition that the party grieved should, within the time limited, give in his examination upon oath before a magistrate, whether or not he knew the offender or offenders, or any of them: and an examination on oath, in which the party only swore that he suspected that the fact was done by some person or persons to him unknown, is not sufficient within the statute; still less in support of an averment in the declaration, that he gave in such examination, &c. in and by which it appeared that the plaintiff did not know the person or persons who committed the fact. For non constat by the terms of such examination, that the plaintiff did not know some of the offenders if there were several. Thurtell v. Mutford, and Lothingland Hundred. 3 East. 400.

By the proposals of the Phœnix company, it is stipulated that "persons insured shall give notice of the loss forthwith, deliver in an account, and procure a certificate of the minister and church-wardens, &c. importing that they knew the character, &c. of the assured, and believe that he really sustained the loss, without fraud;" the procuring such certificate, is a condition precedent to the right of the assured, to recover on the policy; and it is immaterial that the minister, &c. wrongfully refused to sign the certificate. Worsly v. Wood; in error. 6 Term Rep. 720.

If there be a day set for the payment of money, or doing the thing which one promises, agrees or covenants to do for another thing, and that day happens to incur before the time, the thing for which the promise, agreement or covenant is made, is to be performed by the tenor of the agreement; there, though the words be, that the party shall pay the money, or do the thing for such a thing, or in consideration of such a thing; after the day is past the other shall have action for the money, or other thing, though the thing for which the promise, agreement, or covenant was made, be not performed; for it would be repugnant there to make it a condition precedent; and therefore they are in that case left to mutual remedies, on which, by the express words of the agreement, they have depended. Per Holt Ch. Justice. 12 Mod. 461. Pasch. 13 W. 3. Thorp v. Thorp.

M. agrees to give A. so much for the use of a coach and horses for a year, and A. agreed further with M. to keep the coach in repair; it was averred the coach and horses were delivered to M. but nothing of the repair; and Holt Ch. Justice held upon this evidence, that repairing was not a condition precedent, and therefore need not be averred. Per Holt Ch. Justice at Guildhall, and judgment pro querente. 12 Mod. 503. Pasch. 13 Will. 3. Atkinson v. Morris.

But if the agreement had been that A. had agreed to give M. a coach and horses for a year, and to repair the coach, and that for that M. promised so much money, then the repairing had been a condition precedent necessary to be averred. Per Holt Ch. Justice. 12 Mod. 503. Pasch. 13 W. 3. in S. C.

Condition that A. shall do, and for the doing B. shall pay, is a condition precedent, but time fixed for payment will verify the condition; per Holt Ch. Justice. 1 Salk. 171. Pasch. 13 Will. 3. B. R. Thorp v. Thorp.—See this Dict. title Award.

If A. makes a lease for five years to B. upon condition, that if B. pays him 10*l.* within two years, that then he shall have a fee-simple in the lands, and make livery and seisin to B. this passes the freehold immediately, and B. has a fee conditional: because if the freehold was not to vest in B. till the condition performed, it would be difficult to determine in whom the freehold lay; for conditions may be inserted in such deeds as are perfected privately, which might prove greatly prejudicial to strangers. Lit. sect. 350. Co. Lit. 216. 217.

But in case of a lease for life, with such a condition, the freehold passes not before the condition performed, because the livery may presently work upon the freehold. But if a man grants an advowson, &c. (which lie in grant) for years, upon such condition, the grantee shall have no fee till the condition performed. Co. Lit. 217.

If A. leases to B. for years, upon condition, that if B. pays money to A. or his heirs, at a day, that B. shall have the fee, and before the day A. his attainted of treason and executed; now though the condition became impossible by the act and offence of A. yet B. shall not have a fee, because a precedent condition to increase an estate must be performed; and if it becomes impossible, no estate shall rise. Co. Lit. 210. Also in equity, with respect to conditions precedent and subsequent, the prevailing distinction seems to be, to relieve against the breach or non-performance, not so much whether the condition be precedent or subsequent, as whether a compensation can be made. 1 Vern. 79. 167. As if A. conveys lands to B. &c. and their heirs, upon trust, that if C. the son of A. within six months after the death of A. should secure to the trustees 500*l.* for the younger children of C. then after such security given, to convey to C. and his heirs, and until the time for giving such security, in trust for the eldest son of C. and in default of such security, to convey to such eldest son and his heirs, if C. dies before any such security given, yet this condition, though precedent, being only in nature of a penalty, the intent of the trust shall be regarded, which was to secure 500*l.* for the younger children. 1 Chan. Ca. 89.

If a feme covert, having power by will to devise lands, devises them to her executors, to pay 500*l.* out of them to her son; provided, that if the father gives not a sufficient release of certain goods to her executors, that then the devise of the 500*l.* should be void, and go to the executors; and after her death a release is tendered to the father, and he refuses, yet upon making the release after, the money shall be paid to the son; for it was said to be the standing rule of the court, that a forfeiture should not bind, where a thing may be done after, or a compensation made for it; as where the condition is to pay money, &c. and though it is generally binding, where there is a devise over, yet here, it being to go to the executors, it is no more than the law implies. 2 Vent. 252.

CONE AND KEY. A woman at the age of fourteen or fifteen years might take the charge of her house, and receive cone and key: cone or colne in the Sax. signifying computus; so that she was then held to be of competent years, when she was able to keep the accounts and keys of the house. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 37. CONEY BURROWS. Places where conies or rabbits breed and haunt, &c. Commoners cannot lawfully dig up coney-burrows in the common. 2 Wils. 51.—See title Common.

CONFEDERACY, confæderacio.] Is when two or more combine together to do any damage or injury to another, or to do any unlawful act. And false confederacy between divers persons shall be punished, though nothing be put in execution: but this confederacy, punishable by law before it is executed, ought to have these incidents; first, it must be declared by some matter of prosecution, as by making of bonds, or promises the one to the other; secondly, it should be malicious, as for unjust revenge; thirdly, it ought to be false against an innocent person; and lastly, it is to be out of court voluntarily. Termes de Ley. Where a writ of conspiracy doth not lie, the confederacy is punishable: and inquiry shall be made of conspirators and confederators, who bind themselves together, &c. See post, title Conspiracy.

CONFESSION, confessio.] Is where a prisoner is indicted of treason or felony, and brought to the bar to be arraigned; and his indictment being read to him, the court demands what he can say thereto; then he either confesses the offence, and the indictment to be true, or pleads Not guilty, &c.

Confession may be made in two kinds, and to two several ends: the one is, that the criminal may confess the offence whereof he is indicted openly in the court, before the judge, and submit himself to the censure and judgment of the law; which confession is the most certain answer, and best satisfaction that may be given to the judge to condemn the offender; so that it proceeds freely of his own accord, without any threats or extremity used; for if the confession arise from any of these causes, it ought not to be recorded: as a woman indicted for the felonious taking of a thing from another, being thereof arraigned, confessed the felony, and said that she did it by commandment of her husband; the judges in pity would not record her confession, but caused her to plead Not guilty to the felony; whereupon the jury found that she did the fact by compulsion of her husband, against her will, for which cause she was discharged. 27 Assis. pl. 50.

The other kind of confession is, when the prisoner confesses the indictment to be true, and that he hath committed the offence whereof he is indicted, and then becomes an approver, or accuser of others, who are guilty of the same offence whereof he is indicted, or other offences with him; and then prays the judge to have a coroner assigned him, to whom he may make relation of those offences and the full circumstances thereof. See title Accessory.

There was also a third sort of confession, formerly made by an offender in felony, not in court before the judge, but before the coroner in a church, or other privileged place, upon which the offender, by the ancient law of the land, was to abjure the realm. 3 Inst. 129.—See title Abjuration.

Confession is likewise in civil cases, where the defendant confesses the plaintiff's action to be good: by which confession there may be a mitigation of a fine against the penalty of a statute; though not after verdict. Finch. 387. 2 Keb. 408.

There is also a confession indirectly implied, as well as directly expressed in criminal cases; as if the defendant, in a case not capital, doth not directly own himself guilty of the crime, but by submitting to a fine owns his guilt; whereupon the judge may accept of his submission to the King's mercy. Lamb. lib. 4. c. 9. By this indirect confession, the defendant shall not be barred to plead Not guilty to an action, &c. for the same fact: the entry of it is, that the defendant puts himself on the King's mercy. And of the direct confession, that he acknowledges the indictment. And this last confession carries with it so strong a presumption of guilt, that being entered on record, on indictment of trespass, it estops the defendant to plead Not guilty to an action brought afterwards against him for the same matter: but such entry of a confession of an indictment of a capital crime, it is said, will not estop a defendant to plead Not guilty to an appeal, it being in case of life. And where a person upon his arraignment actually confesses himself guilty, or unadvisedly discloses the special manner of the fact, supposing that it doth not amount to felony, where it doth; the judges upon probable circumstances, that such confession may proceed from fear, weakness, or ignorance, may refuse such a confession, and suffer the party to plead Not guilty. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 2.

A confession may be received, and the plea of Not guilty be withdrawn, though recorded. Kel. 11. The confession of the defendant, whether taken upon an examination before justices of peace, in pursuance of the 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. or 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 10. upon an offender's being bailed or committed for felony; or taken by the Common Law, upon an examination before a Secretary of State, or other magistrate, for treason or other crimes, is allowed to be given in evidence against the party confessing; but not against others. Also two witnesses of a confession of high treason, upon an examination before a justice of peace, were sufficient to convict the person so confessing, within the meaning of 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. and 5 & 6 Ed. 6. cap. 11. which required two witnesses in high treason; unless the offender should willingly confess, &c. But the stat. 7 W. 3. cap. 3. requires two witnesses, except the party shall willingly without violence confess, &c. in open court. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. § 3.—See title Evidence.

It has been held, that wherever a man's confession is made use of against him, it must all be taken together, and not by parcels. 2 Hawk. P. C. 46. § 5. And no confession shall, before final judgment, deprive the defendant, of the privilege of taking exceptions in arrest of judgment, to faults apparent in the record. Ibid. c. 32. § 4. A demurrer amounts to a confession of the indictment as laid, so far, that if the indictment be good, judgment and execution shall go against the prisoner. Bro. 86. S. P. C. 150. H. P. C. 246. And in criminal cases, not capital, if the defendant demur to an indictment, &c. whether in abatement or otherwise, the court will not give judgment against him to answer over, but final judgment. 2 Hawk. c. 32. § 7.—See title Abatement. Where a prisoner confesses the fact, the court has nothing more to do than to proceed to judgment against him. Confessus in judicio pro judicato habetur. 11 Rep. 30. 4 Inst. 65.—See further, 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 32. and this Dict. title Evidence.

CONFESSOR, Lat. confessor, confessionarius.] Hath relation to private confession of sins, in order to absolution: and the priest who received the auricular confession, had the title of confess*or*, though improperly; for he is rather the confess*ee*, being the person to whom the confession is made. This receiving the confession of a penitent, was in old English to shreve or shrive; whence comes the word beshrieved, or looking like a confessed or shrieved person, on whom was imposed some uneasy penance. The most solemn time of confessing was the day before Lent, which from thence is still called Shrove-Tuesday. Cowel.—See title Papist.

CONFIRMATION, confirmatio, from the verb confirmare, firmum facere.] A conveyance of an estate, or right in esse, that one hath in or to lands, &c. to another that hath the possession thereof, or some estate therein; whereby a voidable estate is made sure and unavoidable; or a particular estate is increased, or a possession made perfect. 1 Inst. 295. See Shep. Touch. 311. It is a strengthening of an estate formerly made, which is voidable, though not presently void: as for example; a bishop granteth his chancellorship by patent, for term of the patentee's life; this is no void grant, but voidable by the bishop's death, except it be strengthened by the confirmation of the dean and chapter.

Confirmation, is also defined to be the approbation or assent to an estate already created; which as far as is in the confirmer's power, makes it good and valid: so that the confirmation doth not regularly create an estate, but yet such words may be mingled in the confirmation as may create and enlarge an estate; but that is by force of such words as are foreign to the business of confirmation, and by their own force and power, tend to create the estate. Gilb. Ten. 75.

A Confirmation is of a nature nearly allied to a release; the words of making it are these, Have given, granted, ratified, approved, and confirmed. Litt. § 515. 531.

The words dedi & concessi, are as strong as the word confirmavi, for they amount to a grant of the right of the person in possession; and if he has any right, I can never after impeach his estate. Gilb. Ten. 79. See further what words shall enure as a confirmation in Vin. Abr. title Confirmation (X.).

Madox in p. 19. of the Dissert. annexed to the Formul. Angl. says, that most ancient Confirmations made after the conquest, often run like feoffments; and are distinguishable from them, chiefly by some words importing a former feoffment or grant.

In ancient times, when feoffees were frequently disseised of their lands upon some suggestion or other, charters of confirmation seem to have been in great request. For in the early times after the conquest, so many confirmations may be met with, successively made to the same persons, or their heirs or successors, of the same lands and possessions, that it looks as if they did not think themselves secure in their possessions against the king, or the great lords who were their feoffors, or in whose fees their lands lay, unless they had repeated confirmations, from them, their heirs or successors. And these Confirmations very anciently seem to have been some times made, either by precept or writ from the king, or other lords, to put the feoffees, or their heirs or successors into seisin, after they had been disseised, or to keep them in their seisin undisturbed, or else by charter of express Confirmation. Shep. Touch. edit. 1791. p. 314. in n. And on this subject of confirmation in general, see Sheppard's whole chapter.

Confirmation, aut est perficiens, crescens aut diminuens: Perficiens, as if feoffee upon condition make a feoffment, and the feoffor confirm the estate of the second feoffee: Crescens, that doth always enlarge the estate of a tenant; as tenant for years, to hold for life, &c. Diminuens, as when the lord of whom the land is holden, confirms the estate of his tenant, to hold by a less rent. 9 Rep. 142.

The lord may diminish the services of his tenant by confirmation; but not reserve new services, so long as the former estate in the tenantcy continues: and therefore if he confirm to the tenant, to yield him a hawk, &c. yearly, it is void. Lit. sect. 539. 1 Co. Inst. 296. Leases for years may be confirmed for part of the term, or part of the land, &c. But it is otherwise of an estate of freehold, which being entire, cannot be confirmed for part of the estate. 5 Rep. 31. There may be a confirmation implied by law, as well as express by deed; where the law by construction makes a confirmation of a grant made to another purpose: and a confirmation may enlarge an estate, from an estate held at will to term of years, or a greater estate; from an estate for years to an estate for life; from an estate for life to an estate in tail, or in fee; and from an estate in tail to an estate in fee-simple. 1 Inst. 305. 9 Rep. 142. Dyer, 263. But if the confirmation be made to lessee for life or years, of his term or estate, and not of the land, this doth not increase the estate, though if the lessor confirm the land, to have and to hold the land to the lessee and his heirs, this will enlarge the estate, and so of the rest. Co. Lit. 299. Plowd. 40.

In every good confirmation, there must be a precedent rightful or wrongful estate in him to whom made, or he must have the possession of the thing as a foundation for the confirmation to work upon; the confirmor must have such an estate and property in the land, that he may be thereby enabled to confirm the estate of the confirmee; the precedent estate must continue till the confirmation come, so that the estate to be increased comes into it; and it is required that both these estates be lawful. Co. Lit. 296. 1 Rep. 146. Dyer 109. 5 Rep. 15. If one have common of pasture in another's land, and he confirms the estate of the tenant of the land, nothing passes of the common, but it remains as it was before; so if a man have a rent out of the land, and he doth confirm the estate which the tenant hath in the land, the rent remaineth. Lit. sect. 537.

Tenant for life makes a lease for years to a man, and after leases the land to another person for years; and he in reversion confirms the last lease, and after that the first lease, this is not good: the second lessee hath an interest before by the confirmation of him in reversion. But in a like case, confirmation of the first lease, after the second was confirmed, was held good: for the lease takes no interest by the confirmation, but only to make it durable and effectual. Moor, c. 180. 1 Inst. 296. Plowd. 10.

If a disseisee confirm the land to the disseisor but for one hour, one week, a year, or for life, &c. it is a good confirmation of the estate for ever: and if he confirms the estate of the disseisor without any word of heirs, he hath a fee-simple; and if a disseisor make a gift in tail, and the disseisee doth confirm the estate of the donee, it shall enure to the whole estate; also if the disseisor enfeoffs A. and B. and the heirs of B. and the disseisee confirms the estate of B. for his life; this shall extend to his companion, and for the whole fee-simple. Co. Lit. 291. 227. 299.

But where the estate is divided, it is otherwise; as if there be an estate for life, the remainder over, there the confirmation may be of either of the estates; and if the lessee of a disseisor of a lease for twenty years, make a lease for ten years; the disseisee may confirm to one of them, and not to the other. 1 Cro. 472. 5 Rep. 81. If a disseisor or any other make a lease for years to begin at a day to come, a confirmation to the lessee before the lease begins will not be good; for there is no estate in him. Co. Lit. 296.

The tenant in tail of land hath a reversion in fee expectant; in this case, the confirmation of the estate-tail will not extend to the reversion. And if my disseisor make a lease for life, the remainder in fee, and I confirm the estate of the tenant for life; this shall not confirm the estate of him in remainder:

but if I confirm the remainder estate, without any confirmation to tenant for life, it shall enure to him also. Co. Lit. 297. 298. If lands are given to two men, and the heirs of their two bodies begotten, and the donor confirms their estate in the lands, to have and to hold to them two and their heirs; this shall be construed a joint estate for their lives, and after they shall have several inheritances. Co. Lit. 299. Tenant in tail, or for life, of land, lets it for years, if after he makes a confirmation of the land to the lessee for years, to hold to him and his heirs for ever, the lessee hath only an estate for the life of the tenant in tail, &c. and therein his lease for years is extinct. Lit. sect. 606.

A freehold for life, and term for years, it is said, cannot stand together of the same land, in the same person. 1 Nels. Abr. 480. If a feme lessee for years marries, and the lessor confirms the estate of husband and wife, to hold for their lives, by such a confirmation the term will be drowned; and the husband and wife are joint-tenants for their lives. Co. Lit. 300. But if the feme were lessee for life, then by the confirmation to husband and wife for their lives, the husband holdeth only in right of his wife for her life; but shall take a remainder for his life. Ibid. 299. Confirmation to lessee for life, and a stranger to hold for their lives, is void, for there is no privity: but it is otherwise, if for years. 2 Danv. Abr. 141. If tenant for life grant a rent-charge, &c. to one and his heirs, he in reversion is to confirm it, otherwise it is good only for the life of tenant for life. Lit. 529. A tenant for life, and remainder man in fee, join in a lease, this shall be taken to be the lease of tenant for life, during his life, and confirmation of him in remainder: though after the death of tenant for life, it is the lease of him in remainder, and confirmation of tenant for life. 6 Rep. 15. 1 Nels. Abr. 481.

If lessee for years, without impeachment for waste, accepts a confirmation of his estate for life; by this he hath lost the privilege annexed to his estate for years. 8 Rep. 76. Acceptance of rent in some cases makes a confirmation of a lease: As if a man leases for life, reserving rent upon a condition of re-entry; if after the condition is broken, by non-payment of the rent, the lessor distrains for the said rent, this act shall be a confirmation of the lease, so as he cannot enter. 2 Danv. 128. 129.

What a person may defeat by his entry, he may make good by his confirmation. Co. Lit. 300. But none can confirm, unless he hath a right at the time of the grant; he that hath but a right in reversion cannot enlarge the estate of a lessee. 2 Danv. 140. 141. And where a person hath but interesse termini, he hath no estate in him upon which a confirmation may enure. Co. Lit. 290.

As confirmation is to bind the right of him who makes it, but not alter the nature of the estate of him to whom made, it shall not discharge a condition. Poph. 51. If A. enfeoffs B. upon condition, and after A. confirms the estate of B. yet the condition remains: though if B. had enfeoffed C. so that the estate of C. had been only subject to the condition in another deed, and after A. had confirmed the estate of C. this would have extinguished the condition, which was annexed to the estate of B. 1 Rep. 147. A confirmation will take away a condition annexed by law: and by confirmation, a condition after broken in a deed of feoffment is extinguished. 1 Co. Rep. 146. Confirmations may make a defeasible estate good; but cannot work upon an estate that is void in law. Co. Lit. 295.

A confirmation of letters-patent, which are void as they are against law, is a void confirmation. 1 Lil. Abr. 295. If there be lord and tenant, and the tenant having issue, is attainted of felony, if the king pardons him, and the lord confirms his estate, and the tenant dies, his issue shall not inherit, but the lord shall have it against his own confirmation: for that could not enable him to take by descent, who by the attainder of his father was disabled. 9 Rep. 141.

Grants and leases of bishops not warranted by the stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. must be confirmed by dean and chapter: and grants and leases of parsons, &c. by patron and ordinary. 1 Inst. 297. 300. 301. Bishops may grant leases of their church-lands for three lives, or twenty-one years, having the qualities required by 32 H. 8. c. 28. and concurrent leases for twenty-one years, with confirmation of dean and chapter. See 1 El. cc. 4. 19. If a prebend leases parcel of his prebendary, and the bishop, who is patron, confirms it: this shall not bind the succeeding bishop, without confirmation of dean and chapter, because the patronage is parcel of the possessions of the bishoprick; but it shall bind the present bishop, &c. 2 Danv. 139. If a parson grants a rent, the confirmation of the patron and bishop is sufficient without the dean and chapter, and shall be good against the succeeding bishop. Ibid. 140. The dean of Wells may pass his possessions, with the assent of the chapter, without any confirmation of the bishop. Ibid. 135. Leases of bishops are affirmed ex assensu et consensu decani et totius capituli. See further title Leases.

To the grants of a Sole Corporation, as Parson, Prebendary, Vicar, and the like, the Patron must give his consent: because such sole corporation has not the absolute fee: but a corporation aggregate, as Dean and Chapter, Master, Fellows and Scholars of a College, &c. or any sole corporation that has the absolute fee, as a bishop with consent of the dean and chapter, may by the Common Law make any grant of their possessions without their founder or patron. 1 Inst. 300 b. See further in what cases the confirmation of the Patron and Ordinary is necessary; and as to confirmation by dean and chapter of the grant of the bishop; Vin. Abr. title Confirmation. (G.) (H.) Bac. Abr. Leases. (G.)

A confirmation, as has been already said, is in nature of a release, and in some things is of greater force: and in this deed, it is good to recite the estate of the tenant, as also of him that is to confirm it; and to mention the consideration; the words ratify and confirm, are commonly made use of; but the words give, grant, demise, &c. by implication of law, may enure as a confirmation. 1 Inst. 295. West. Symb. 1. p. 457.

CONFISCATE, OR CONFISCATED. From the Lat. confiscare, and that from fiscus, which signifies metonymically the Emperor's treasure: and as the Romans say, such goods as are forfeited to the Emperor's treasury for any offence are bona confiscata, so we say of those that are forfeited to our King's Exchequer. And the title to have these goods is given to the King by the law, when they are not claimed by some other: as if a man be indicted for stealing the goods of another person, when they are in truth his own proper goods, and when the goods are brought into court against him, and he is asked what he says to the said goods, if he disclaims them he shall lose the goods, although that afterwards he be acquitted of the felony, and the king shall have them as confiscated; but it is otherwise if he do not disclaim them. It is the same where goods are found in the possession of a felon, if he disavows them, and afterwards is attainted for other goods, and not for them; for there the goods which he disavows are confiscate to the King; but had he been attainted for the same goods, they should have been said to be forfeited and not confiscate. So if an appeal of robbery be brought, and the plaintiff leaves out some of his goods, he shall not be received to enlarge his appeal; and forasmuch as there is none to have the goods so left out, the King shall have them as confiscate, according to the rule, Quod non capit Christus, capit fiscus. Staund. P. C. lib. 3. cap. 24.

Goods confiscated are generally such as are arrested and seized for the King's use, but confiscare and forisfacere are said to be synonima; and bona confiscata are bona forisfacta. 3 Inst. 227.—See title Forfeiture.

CONFORMITY to the church of England. See stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2. &c. and titles Recusant, Nonconformist, Religion.

CONFRAIRIE, confraternitas.] A fraternity, brotherhood, or society; as the confraire de St. George, or les chevaliers de la bleu gartier, the honourable society of the Knights of the Garter.

CONFRERES, confratres.] Brethren in a religious house; fellows of one and the same society. Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 24.

CONFUSION, property by—Where goods of two persons are so intermixed, that the several portions can no longer be distinguished, if the intermixture be by consent, it is supposed the proprietors have an interest in common, in proportion to their respective shares; but, if one wilfully intermixes his money, corn, or hay, with that of another man, without his approbation or knowledge, or cast gold in like manner into another's melting pot or crucible, our law does not allow any remedy in such case; but gives the entire property, without any account to him, whose original dominion (or property) is invaded, and endeavoured to be rendered uncertain, without his own consent. 2 Com. 405.

CONGEABLE, From the Fr. congé, leave or permission.] Signifies in our law as much as lawful or lawfully done, or done with permission: as entry congeable, &c. Lit. Sect. 420.

CONGE D'ACCORDER, Fr.] Leave to accord or agree, mentioned in the statute of fines, 8 Ed. 1. in these words.—When the original writ is delivered in the presence of the parties before justices, a pleader shall say this, Sir justice, congé d'accorder; and the justice shall say to him, What saith Sir R. and name one of the parties, &c.

CONGE D'ESLIRE, Fr. i. e. leave to choose.] The King's license or permission sent to a dean and chapter to proceed to the election of a bishop, when any bishoprick becomes vacant. See title Bishop.

CONGIUS. An ancient measure, containing about a gallon and a pint. Charta Edmondi Regis, anno 946.

CONINGERIA. A coney-borough, or warren of conies. Inquis. anno. 47 H. 3.

CONJUGAL RIGHTS, OR RITES. A suit for restitution of conjugal rights, is one of the species of matrimonial causes: and is brought when either the husband or wife is guilty of the injury of subtraction, or lives separate from the other without any sufficient reason; in which case the ecclesiastical jurisdiction will compel them to come together again, if either party be weak enough to desire it, contrary to the inclination of the other. 3 Comm. 94.—See titles Baron and Feme.

CONJUNCT FIERS. Is when several people are conjunctly infeft, or otherwise have a joint fee. Scotch Dict.

CONJURATIO. An oath; and conjuratus, the same with conjurator, viz. one who is bound by the same oath. Conjurare is where several affirm a thing by oath. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. p. 207.

CONJURATION, conjuratio.] Signifies a plot or compact made by persons combining by oath, to do any public harm: but was more especially used for the having (as was supposed) personal conference with the devil, or some evil spirit, to know any secret, or effect any purpose. The difference between conjuration and witchcraft was said to be, that a person using the one, endeavoured by prayers and invocations to compel the devil to say or do what he commanded him, the other dealt rather by friendly and voluntary conference, or agreement with the devil or familiar, to have his desires served, in lieu of blood or other gift offered. Both differed from enchantment or sorcery; because the latter were supposed to be personal conferences with the devil, and the former were but medicines and ceremonial forms of words usually called charms, without apparition. Cowel.

Hawkins, in his Pleas of the Crown, lib. 1. c. 3. says, that conjurors are those who, by force of certain magic words, endeavour to raise the devil, and oblige him to execute their commands. Witches are such who by way of conference bargain with an evil spirit, to do what they desire of him: and Sorcerers are those, who by the use of certain superstitious words, or by the means of images, &c. are said to produce strange effects, above the ordinary course of nature. All which were anciently punished in the same manner as heretics by the writ de hæretico comburendo, after a sentence in the ecclesiastical court: and they might be condemned to the pillory, &c, upon an indictment at Common Law. 3 Inst. 44. H. P. C. 38.

The stats. 33 H. 8. c. 8. and 1 Jac. 1. c. 12. against Conjuration and Witchcraft are repealed, by stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 5. which enacts, that no prosecution shall be commenced on the same: but where persons pretend to exercise any kind of witchcraft or conjuration, &c. or undertake to tell fortunes, or from pretended skill in any crafty science, to discover where goods stolen or lost may be found; upon conviction, they shall be imprisoned a year, and stand in the pillory once in every quarter, in some market-town, and may be ordered to give security for their good behaviour. See 4 Comm. 60.

CONQUEST, Conquæstus.] The feodal term for purchase. As to countries granted by conquest, see title Plantations. And also title King.

CONSANGUINEO. A writ mentioned in Reg. Orig. de avo, proavo et consanguineo, &c. f. 226. See Cosinage.

CONSANGUINEUS FRATER. A brother by the father's side. 2 Comm. 232.

CONSANGUINITY, consanguinitas.] Is a kindred by blood or birth; as affinity is a kindred by marriage: and it is considerable in the descent of lands, who shall take it as next of blood, &c. and also in administrations, which shall be granted to the next of kin. See titles Descent, Executor.

CONSCIENCE, COURTS OF. These are courts for recovery of small debts, constituted by act of parliament, in London and Westminster, &c. and other trading and populous districts. See titles Courts, Arrest, Process, &c.

CONSECRATION. See titles Bishops, Church.

CONSENT. In all cases when any thing executory is created by deed, it may, by consent of all persons that were parties to the creation of it by their deed, be defeated and annulled, and therefore it was said, that warranties, recognizances, rents, charges, annuities, covenants, leases for years, uses at common law, &c. may, by a defeasance made with the mutual consent of all that were parties to the creation of them by deed, be annulled, discharged, and defeated. 1 Rep. 113. Albany's Case.

A consent ex post facto is not of any signification; for it cannot be had for things which cannot be otherwise; per Vaughan, Ch. J. Mod. 312. Fry v. Porter.

The consent of the heir makes good a void devise. Chanc. Cases, Trin. 23 Car. 2. Lord Conbury v. Middleton. 1 C. C. 208. Cases.* 28. Pasch. 32 Car. 2. Sidney v. The Earl of Leicester. Consent to a trial of a] title to land in another county than where the land lies, will not help, it being an error, though such consent be of record: agreed per cur. 2 Show. 98. pl. 97. Pasch. 32 Car. 2. B. R. Lord Clare v. Reach.

A burgess of a corporation consenting to be turned out from his burgess's place, and the common council of the corporation removing him accordingly, does not amount to a resignation; and a peremptory mandamus was granted to restore him. Holt 450. Mayor of Gloucester's case.

CONSEQUENTIAL LOSSES OR DAMAGES. It is a fundamental principle in law and reason, that he who does the first wrong shall answer for all consequential damages. 12 Mod. 639. Roswell v. Prior. But this admits of limitation. Though a man does a lawful thing, yet if any damage do thereby befal another, he shall answer if he could have avoided it; and this holds in all civil cases. As if a man lops

a tree, and the boughs fall upon another ipso invito, yet an action lies. So if a man shoots at butts, and hurts another unawares. So if I have land through which a river runs to your mill, and I lop the sallows growing on the river side which accidentally stop the water so as your mill is hindred. So if I am building my own house, and a piece of timber falls on my neighbour's house and breaks part of it. So if a man assaults me, and I lift up my staff to defend myself, and strike another in lifting it up; but it is otherwise in criminal cases, for there actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea. Raym. 422. 423. See title Chance Medley.

If I have a pond, I cannot so let it out that it shall drown my neighbour's land. Arg. Het. 119. cites. 6 Ed. 4. 6. If a stranger drive my cattle upon your land, whereby they are destrained by you, I shall recover against the stranger for this distress by you. Lane 67. cites 9 Ed. 4. 4. A smith pricks the horse of a servant being on his journey to pay money for his master to save the penalty of a bond, both the master and servant may have their several action on the case, for the several wrongs they have thereby sustained; per Coke Ch. J. 2 Bulst. 344.

Where one is party to a fraud, all which follows by reason of that fraud, shall be said as done by him. Arg. Cro. J. 469. An action lies for threatening workmen to maim and prosecute them, whereby the master loses the selling of his goods, the men not daring to go on with their work. Cro. J. 567. Garret v. Taylor. A. breaks the fence of B. by which cattle get into C.'s ground, C. shall have case against A. but not trespass. Per Roll. Sty 131. Cowper v. St. John. CONSERVATOR, Lat.] A protector, preserver, or maintainer; or a standing arbitrator, chosen and appointed as a guarantee to compose and adjust differences that should arise between two parties, &c. Paroc. Antiq. p. 513.

CONSERVATOR OF THE PEACE, conservator vel custos pacis.] Is he that hath an especial charge to see the king's peace kept: and of these conservators Lambard saith, that before the reign of Ed. III. who first created Justices of the Peace, there were divers persons that by the common law had interest in keeping the peace; some whereof had that charge by tenure, as holding lands of the king by this service, &c. And others as incident to their offices which they bore, and so included in the same, that they were nevertheless called by the name of their office only: also some had it simply, as of itself, and were therefore named custodes pacis, wardens or conservators of the peace. The Chamberlain of Chester is a conservator of the peace in that county, by virtue of his office. 4 Inst. 212. Sheriffs of counties at common law are conservators of the peace; and constables by the common law were conservators, but some say they were only subordinate to the conservators of the peace, as they are now to the justice.

The King's Majesty is, by his office and dignity royal, the principal conservator of the peace within all his dominions; and may give authority to any other to see the peace kept, and to punish such as break it: hence it is usually called the king's peace. The Lord Chancellor or Keeper, the Lord Treasurer, the Lord High Steward of England, the Lord Mareschal, and Lord High Constable of England, (when any such officers are in being,) and all the Justices of the court of King's Bench, (by virtue of their offices,) and the Master of the Rolls, (by prescription,) are general conservators of the peace throughout the whole kingdom, and may commit all breakers of it, or bind them in recognizances to keep it: the other judges are only so in their own courts. The coroner is also a conservator of the peace within his own county; as is also the sheriff; and both of them may take a recognizance or security for the peace. Constables, tythingmen, and the like, are also conservators of the peace within their own jurisdictions; and may apprehend all breakers of the peace, and commit them till they find sureties for their keeping it. 1 Comm. 350. See titles Justices of Peace, Commitment.

CONSERVATOR OF THE TRUCE AND SAFE-CONDUCTS, conservator nauciarum et salvorum regis conductuum.] Was an officer appointed by the king's letters patent, whose charge was to inquire of all offences done against the king's truce, and the safe-conducts upon the main sea, out of the liberties of the cinque ports, as the admirals customably were wont to do, and such other things as are declared in stat. 2 Hen. 5. st. 1. c. 6. Two men learned in the law were joined to conservators of the truce as associates; and masters of ships sworn not to attempt any thing against the truce, &c. And letters of request and of marque were to be granted when truce was broken at sea to make restitution. Stat. 4 H. 5. c. 7. See title Truce.

There was anciently a Conservator of the privileges of the Hospitallers and Templars. West. 2. c. 43. And the Corporation of the great level of the fens consists of a governor, six bailiffs, twenty conservators, and commonalty. Stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 17.

CONSIDERATIO CURIÆ. Is often mentioned in law pleadings, and where matters are determined by the court. Ideo consideratum est per curiam, i. e. Therefore it is considered and adjudged by the court; consideratio curiæ is the judgment of the court.

CONSIDERATION, consideratio.] The material cause, quid or pro quo, of any contract, without which it will not be effectual or binding. This consideration is either expressed; as when a man bargains to give so much for a thing bought; or to sell his land for 100*l.* or grants it in exchange for other lands; or where I promise that if one will marry my daughter or build me a house, &c. I will give him a certain sum of money; or one agrees for a certain sum to do a thing. Or it is implied, when the law itself enforces a consideration; as where a person comes to an inn, and there staying eats and drinks, and takes lodging for himself and horse, the law presumes he intends to pay for both, though there be no express contract for it; and therefore if he discharge not the house, the host may stay his horse; and so if a taylor makes a garment for another, and there is no express agreement what he shall have for it; he may keep the clothes till he is paid, or sue the party for the same. 5 Rep. 29. Plowd. 308. Dyer 30. 337.

Considerations may be considered either as relating to contracts generally or to deeds in particular; and further relating thereto. See titles Assumpsit, Deed.

As to contracts, a consideration may be defined to be the reason which moves the contracting party to enter into the contracts.—This consideration must be a thing awful in itself, or else the contract is void. A good consideration is that of blood or natural affection between near relations; the satisfaction accruing from which, the law esteems an equivalent for whatever benefit may move from one relation to another. 3 Rep. 83. 2 Inst. 271. 1 Rep. 176. This consideration may sometimes, however be set aside, and the contract become void, when it tends in its consequences to defraud creditors or other third persons of their just rights. But a contract for any valuable consideration, as for marriage, for money, for work done, or for other reciprocal contracts can never be impeached at law: and if it be of a sufficient adequate value is never set aside in equity; for the person contracted with has then given an equivalent in recompence, and is therefore as much an owner, or a creditor as any other person. 2 Com. 444. Noy's Max. 87. Hob. 230. See titles Fraud, Fraudulent Conveyance.

These valuable considerations are divided by the Civilians into four species—Do ut des—Facio ut facias—Facio ut des—Do ut facias—the bare mention of which is here sufficient.

A consideration of some sort or other is so absolutely necessary to the forming of a contract, that a nudum pactum or bare agreement to do or pay any thing on one side without any compensation on the other is totally void in law: and a man cannot be compelled to perform it. Dr. & St. d. 2. c. 24. As if one man promises to give another 100*l.* here there is nothing contracted for or given on one side, and therefore there is nothing binding on the other. And however a man may or may not be bound to perform it in honour or conscience, which the municipal laws do not take upon them to decide, certainly those laws will not compel the execution of what he had no visible inducement to engage for, and therefore our law has adopted the maxim of the civil law ex nudo pacto non oritur actio. But any degree of reciprocity will prevent the pact from being nude: nay even if the promise be founded on a prior moral obligation (as a promise to pay a just debt, though barred by the statute of limitations) it is no longer nudum pactum. And as this rule was principally established to avoid the inconvenience that would arise from setting up mere verbal promises, for which no good reason could be assigned, it therefore does not hold in some cases where such promise is authentically proved by written documents. 2 Comm. 445, 6.—Blackstone instances voluntary bonds and notes—as to which latter, see Fonblanque's observations in Treat. Eq. 334. n.

Deeds also must be founded upon good and sufficient consideration, not upon an usurious contract. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 8. Nor upon fraud or collusion either to deceive purchasers, bonâ fide, or just and lawful creditors. Stats. 13 Eliz. c. 5. 27 Eliz. c. 4.—Any of which bad considerations will vacate the deed and subject such persons as put the same in ure, to forfeitures, and often to imprisonments. A deed also, or other grant made without any consideration, is as it were of no effect; for it is construed to enure or to be effectual, only to the use of the grantor himself. Perk. § 533. The consideration of deeds also, like that of contracts, may be either a good or valuable one—Deeds made upon good consideration only, are considered as merely voluntary, and are frequently set aside in favour of creditors, and bonâ fide purchasers. 2 Comm. 296. See further title Deeds.

A consideration ought to be matter of profit and benefit to him to whom it is done; by reason of the charge or trouble of him who doth it. Cro. Car. 8. If a person hath disbursed several sums for another, without his request, and afterwards such other says, that in consideration he hath paid the said sums for him, he promises to pay them: this is no consideration, because it was executed before. But it will be otherwise, if the sums were paid at the request of the other. Moor. 220. Cro. Eliz. 282. A mere voluntary curtesy will not be a good consideration of a promise: but the value and proportion of the consideration is not material, to maintain an action; for a shilling or a penny is as much binding as 100*l.* Though in these cases, the jury will give damages proportionably to the loss. Hob. 5. 10 Rep. 76.

A consideration that is void in part, is void in the whole: and if two considerations be alledged, and one of them is found false by the jury, the action fails. Hob. 126. Cro. Eliz. 848. But if there be a double consideration, for the grounding of a promise, for the breach whereof an action is brought; though one of the considerations be not good, yet if the other be good, and the promise broken, the action will lie upon that breach: for one consideration is enough to support the promise. 1 Lill. 297. A consideration must be lawful, to ground an assumpsit. 2 Lev. 161. Where considerations are valuable, and consist of two or more parts, there the performance of every part ought to be shewn. Cro. Eliz. 579. In case a deed of feoffment be made of lands; or a fine and recovery be passed, and no consideration is expressed in the deed, &c. for the doing thereof, it shall be intended by the law, that it was made in trust, for the use of the feoffor or conusor; for it shall be presumed he would not part with his land without a consideration; and yet the deed shall be construed to operate something, and that which is most reasonable. 1 Lill. Abr. 299.

CONSIGN, is a word used by merchants, where goods are assigned, delivered over, or transmitted from beyond sea or elsewhere to a factor, &c.

Consignor, and Consignee, signify among merchants, the shipper of merchandize, and the person to whom they are addressed. Where the consignor of goods abroad advised the consignee by letter, that he had chartered a certain ship on his account, and inclosed him an invoice of the goods laden on board, which were therein expressed to be for account and risk of the consignee; and also a bill of lading in the usual form, expressing the delivery to be made to order, &c. he paying freight for the said goods according to charter-party, and the letter of advice also informed the consignee, that the consignor had drawn bills on him at three months for the value of the cargo; held, that the invoice and bill of lading sent to the consignee, and the delivery of the goods to the captain, vested the property in the consignee, subject only to be devested by the consignor's right to stop the goods in transitû, in case of the insolvency of the other. And the consignor's agent having obtained possession of the cargo under another bill of lading, and having refused to deliver it up unless the consignee would make immediate payment, which he declined doing, but offered his acceptances at three months, in the manner before stipulated: held that the consignee might maintain Trover against such agent without having tendered payment of the freight either to him or the captain, the defendant having possessed himself of the goods wrongfully. Walley v. Montgomery, E. 43 Geo. 3. East. 585. See further titles Merchant, Factor, Transitu.

CONSILIUM, dies consilii.] A time allowed for one accused to make his defence, and answer the charge of the accuser.—It is now used for a speedy day appointed to argue a demurrer: which the court grants after the demurrer joined, on reading the record of the cause, &c.

CONSIMILI CASU, writ of entry in. A writ of entry. This and the writ in casu proviso lay not at common law, but are given by statute Gloc. 6 Ed. 1. c. 7. and Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 24. for the reversioner after alienation; but during the life of the tenant in dower, or other tenant for life. See F. N. B. 205, 206. 3 Comm. 183. n.

CONSISTOR. A magistrate so called: testibus Rogere de Gant, Willielmo consistore Cestriæ, &c. Blount.

CONSISTORY, consistorium.] Signifies as much as prætorium, or tribunal: it is commonly used for a council-house of ecclesiastical persons, or place of justice in the spiritual court; a session or assembly of prelates. And every archbishop and bishop of every diocese hath a consistory court, held before his chancellor, or commissary in his cathedral church, or other convenient place of his diocese, for ecclesiastical causes. 4 Inst. 338. The bishop's chancellor is the judge of this court, supposed to be skilled in the civil and canon law: and in places of the diocese, far remote from the bishop's consistory, the bishop appoints a commissary (commissarius foraneus) to judge in all causes within a certain district, and a register to enter his decrees, &c. 2 Rol. Abr. 286. Seld. Hist. of Tithes, 413, 414. From the sentence of this consistory court an appeal lies by virtue of stat. 24 H. 8. c. 12. to the archbishop of each province respectively.

CONSOLIDATION, consolidatio.] Is used for the uniting of two benefices into one. Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 21. Which union is to be by the assent of the ordinary, patron, and incumbent, &c. and to be of small churches lying near together. Vide titles Church, Union. This word is taken from the civil law, where it signifies properly an uniting of the possession, occupancy, or profit of lands, &c. with the property. See also Extinguishment, Insurance.

CONSPIRACY, conspiratio.] This word was formerly used almost exclusively, for an agreement of two or more persons falsely to indict one, or to procure him to be indicted of felony; who after acquittal, shall have writ of conspiracy. See 33 Edw. 1. stat. 2. 7 Hen. 5. 18 Hen. 6. c. 12. See post title Conspirator. Now, it is no less commonly used for the unlawful combination of journeymen to raise their wages, or to refuse working, except on certain stipulated conditions; an offence particularly provided for by stat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 15. (revised, continued, and confirmed by stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 19. now expired:) which enacts among other things, that "if any artificer do conspire, that they shall not do their works but at a certain price, or shall not take upon them to finish that another hath begun, or shall do but a certain work in a day, or shall not work but at certain times, every person so conspiring, shall forfeit for the first offence 10*l.* or be imprisoned 20 days, for the second 20*l.* or be pilloried, and for the third 40*l.* or be pilloried, lose an ear and become infamous."—This stat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 15. appears to be yet in force, though not frequently resorted to for remedy in this case; the proceeding being usually by indictment for conspiracy.

By the Common Law there can be no doubt but that all confederates whatsoever, wrongfully to prejudice a third person, are highly criminal. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 72. § 2.—See further stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. particularly §§ 18, 19, 20. and this Dict. titles Labourers, Servants.

Journeymen confederating and refusing to work unless for certain wages, may be indicted for a conspiracy; notwithstanding the statutes which regulate their work and wages do not direct this mode of prosecution; for this offence consists in the conspiring and not in the refusal, and all conspiracies are illegal though the subject matter of them may be lawful. See the case of The Tub-women v. The London Brewers, 8 Mod. 11. 320.—So also a bare conspiracy to do a lawful act to an unlawful end is a crime; though no act be done in consequence thereof. 8 Mod. 321.—The fact of conspiring need not be proved on the trial, but may be collected by the jury from collateral circumstances. 1 Black. Rep. 392. Stra. 144. And if the parties concur in doing the act, although they were not previously acquainted with each other, it is conspiracy. Lord Mansfield in the case of the prisoners in the King's Bench. Hil. T. 26 Geo. 3.—1 Hawk. P. C. c. 72. § 2. in n.

Unlawful combinations of workmen were prohibited and punished by the act 39 G. 3. c. 81. which was repealed, and more effectual provision enacted by 39 and 40 G. 3. c. 106.

By this latter act all contracts (except those between masters and men) for obtaining advance of wages, altering the usual time of working, decreasing the quantity of work, &c. are declared illegal.—Workmen making such illegal contracts are punishable by imprisonment: and the like punishment is inflicted on workmen entering into combinations to procure advance of wages, or preventing other workmen from hiring themselves, or procuring them to quit their employ, &c.—All meetings and combinations for effecting such illegal purposes are punishable in like manner: and offenders giving evidence against each other are indemnified.

The same act provides for settling all disputes between masters and workmen by arbitration, with an appeal to the quarter sessions.

By 43 G. 3. c. 86. similar provisions are made for preventing combinations of workmen, artificers, journeymen, and labourers, in Ireland.

For the provisions of stats. 12 Geo. 1. c. 34. 22 Geo. 2. c. 27. 57 Geo. 3. c. 115. 122. and 58 Geo. 3. c. 51. see titles Manufacturers, Servants.

Writ of conspiracy lies for him that is indicted of a trespass, and acquitted, though it was not felony: also upon an indictment for a riot. 2 Mod. 306. 5 Mod. 405. Where a man is falsely indicted of any crime, which may prejudice his fame or reputation; and though it doth not import slander, if it endangers his liberty; or if the indictment be injurious to his property, &c. writ of conspiracy lieth. 3 Salk. 97. But though a conspiracy to charge falsely be indictable, yet the party ought to shew himself to be innocent; and the writ of conspiracy lies not without an acquittal. Mod. Cas. 137. 185. 186. Not only writ of conspiracy, which is a civil action at the suit of the party; but also action on the case in the nature of a writ of conspiracy, doth lie for a false and malicious accusation of any crime, whether capital or not capital, even of high treason; and this though the bill of indictment is found ignoramus, or it does not go so far as an indictment. And the same damages may be recovered in such action, as in a writ of conspiracy, where the party is lawfully acquitted by verdict. 1 Rol. Abr. 111. 112. 9 Rep. 56. See Gilb. Ca. 185. 10 Mod. 148. 214. Salk. 15. An action on the case is preferable, as being more in use, and the proceedings easier, and not attended with such niceties as the writ of conspiracy. See titles Malicious Prosecution, Action.

If one falsely and maliciously procure another to be arrested, and brought before a justice of peace to be examined concerning a felony, &c. on purpose to vex and disgrace him, and put him to charges and trouble, although he is not indicted for the same, yet he may have an action on the case; in which he need not aver that he was lawfully acquitted, as he ought to do in a writ of conspiracy: but he must aver that the accusation was falsè et malitiosè, which words are necessary in the declaration; and it must appear that there was no ground for it. And as an action on the case may be prosecuted, against one person, where the writ of conspiracy or indictment doth not lie but against two, this action is most commonly brought. 1 Danv. Abr. 208. 213. 2 Inst. 562. 638.

Conspirators may be indicted at the suit of the king; and at the Common Law, one may prefer an indictment against conspirators, who only conspire together, and nothing is executed: though the conspiracy ought to be declared by some act, or promise to stand by one another, &c. But a bare conspiracy will not maintain a writ of conspiracy, at the suit of the party, because he is not damaged by it; though it is a ground for an indictment. 9 Rep. 56. 2 Rol. Abr. 77. If the defendants can shew any foundation or probable cause of suspicion, they shall be discharged: and if a man hath good cause of suspicion that a person is guilty of felony, and causes him to be indicted, in prosecution of justice, action of conspiracy will not lie: but it is otherwise if the prosecutor imposes the crime of felony, where no felony was committed. 1 Rol. Abr. 115. 4 Rep. 438.

The Conspiracy is the gist of the offence, and though as before said nothing is done in prosecution of it, it is a complete and consummate offence of itself: and whether the conspiracy be to charge a temporal or ecclesiastical offence on an innocent person it is the same thing. Ld. Rayn. 1167. 1 Salk. 174. Stra. 193.

A conspiracy consists in unlawfully conspiring to injure a person by a false charge. 3 Burr. Rep. 1320.

Several persons may lawfully meet together and consult to prosecute a guilty person; otherwise, if it be to charge one that is innocent, right or wrong, for that is indictable. 1 Salk. 174.

In conspiracies there is no occasion to prove the actual fact of conspiring, but it may be collected from all the collateral circumstances of the case. 1 Bl. Rep. 392.

It is an indictable offence to conspire to charge a person with being the father of a bastard child. 1 Salk. 174.

If a man and woman marry, the man assuming the name of another, and the woman marrying him by such false name, knowing it to be false, with a design thereby to do a future injury to a person whose name was assumed, it is a conspiracy. Leach's Crown Law Cases, 44.

An indictment will not lie for conspiracy to commit a civil trespass by several persons agreeing to go, and by going, into a preserve for game the property of another in order to snare hares, though alledged to be done by the defendants armed with offensive weapons, for the purpose of opposing resistance to any endeavours to apprehend or obstruct them. 13 E. R. 228.

After conviction of a conspiracy all the defendants must be present in court when a motion is made on their behalf in arrest of judgement. Burr. Rep. 929: 1 Bl. Rep. 209.

And so also upon a motion for a new trial. 11 E. R. 309; 3 Maul. & Sel. Rep. 2.

The quarter sessions have jurisdiction over conspiracies. Burr. Rep. 1320. 1 Bl. Rep. 368.

An action lies not against a justice of peace, who sends out his warrant upon a false accusation: but it lies if he makes it out without any accusation. 1 Leon 187. Conspiracies ought to be out of court; for if a prosecution be ordered in a course of justice, and witnesses appear against a party, &c. there shall be no punishment: and if persons acted only as jurors in a criminal matter, or judges in open court, there is no ground for prosecution. S. P. C. 173. 12 Rep. 24. If all the defendants but one are acquitted on indictment for conspiracy, that one must be acquitted also; because one person alone cannot be indicted for this crime: and husband and wife, being but one person, may not be indicted alone for a conspiracy. 2 Rol. Abr. 708. The acquittal of one person is the acquittal of another upon indictment of conspiracy. 3 Mod. 220. (i. e. where only two are indicted, and it is not laid or proved that they conspired with others, unknown). Though where one is found guilty, according to the opinion of the Lord Chief Justice Hale, if the other doth not come in upon process, or if he dies pending the suit, judgment shall be had against the other, 1 Vent. 234. See Stra. 193. 1227. Writ of conspiracy was brought against two persons, and one found not-guilty; the other shall not have judgment; but in action on the case, it had been good. Cro. Eliz. 701. And action on the case in the nature of a conspiracy may be brought against one only. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 72. § 8. If the parties are found guilty of the conspiracy, upon an indictment of felony, at the king's suit; the judgment is, that they shall lose their frank law (which disables them to be put upon any jury, to be sworn as witnesses, or to appear in person in any of the king's courts), and that their lands, goods, and chattels be seized as forfeited, and their bodies committed to prison; which is called a villainous judgment. 2 Inst. 143. 222. Crompt. Just. 156. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 72. § 9. There has been no instance of the villainous judgment since the reign of Edw. III. The usual mode of punishment at present is, by pillory, fine, imprisonment, and surety for good behaviour. Burr. 996. 1027. Stra. 196.—The quarter sessions have jurisdiction over this offence. Finch, 80. 8 Mod. 321. And on motion in arrest of judgment, the defendant must be personally present in court. Stra. 1227. Burr. 931.

The matter of the conspiracy ought to touch a man's life, where the villainous judgment is imposed. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 72. For conspiring to charge a person with poisoning another, &c. one of the parties was fined 1000*l.* and some others had judgment of the pillory, and to be burnt in the cheek with the latters F. and C. to signify false conspirators. Moor, 816. As fine and imprisonment is the usual punishment at this day on indictment for conspiracy, so on writ of conspiracy, &c. the party shall be fined, and render damages. See further, 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 72. at large.

Conspirators, conspiratores.] By stat. 33 E. 1. st. 2. are defined to be those that do bind themselves by oath, covenant, or other alliance, that every of them shall aid the other falsely and maliciously to indict persons: or falsely to move or maintain pleas, &c. And such as retain men in the country, with liveries, or fees, to maintain their malicious enterprises, which extends as well to the takers as the givers; and stewards and bailiffs of great lords, who by their office or power undertake to bear and maintain quarrels, pleas, or debates, that concern other parties than such as relate to the estate of their lords or themselves. 2 Inst. 384. 562. And against conspirators, false informers, and imbracers of inquest, the king hath provided a writ in the Chancery; and the justices of either bench and justices of assise, shall, on every plaint, award inquest thereupon. Stat. 28 E. 1. st. 3. c. 10. From the description of conspirators in several of our old law books, conspiracy is taken generally, and confounded with maintenance and champerty; see those titles. Besides these, there are conspirators in treason; by plotting against the government, &c. See title Treason.

CONSTABLE.

The origin of the word Constable, erroneously sought for in the Saxon language, is undoubtedly to be found in the comes stabuli of the Eastern Empire; who was at first, as his title imports, no more than superintendant of the imperial stables; or, in other words, the emperor's master of the horse; but having in process of time obtained the command of the army, his name (corrupted into constabulus and constabularius; see Spelman) began to signify a commander: and with this signification appears to have been introduced into England at the Norman Conquest; or perhaps sooner.

The Constable of England, or Lord-High-Constable, was anciently an officer of the highest dignity and importance in the realm. He was the leader of the king's armies; and had the cognizance of all contracts and other matters touching arms or war. 13 R. 2. st. 1 c. 2.—and see Maddox's History of the Exchequer, p. 27. He sate as judge with the Earl-Marshal, having precedence of him in the court of chivalry—and he is by some of our books also called Marshal.—See title Marshal.

This office, which appears to have been granted by William the Conqueror, to Walter Earl of Gloucester, or according to others to William Fitzosborne or Roger de Mortimer, became hereditary in two different families, as annexed to the earldom of Hereford: and in that right, after a lapse of near two centuries, was revived by judgment of law, in the person of Edward Stafford Duke of Buckingham; who being attainted of high treason, an. 13 H. 8. this office became forfeited to the crown. Since this period there has been no Lord High Constable, except pro hac vice at a coronation, or on other solemn occasions.

Constable of Castles, were keepers or governors of the castles of the king: or of great barons, and who were frequently hereditary or by feudal tenure; such were the Constable of the Tower, the Constable of London, or Baynard's Castle, the Constables of the castles of Dover, Windsor, Chester, Flint, &c. some of which offices, though not now hereditary, are remaining to this day. These are the constables intended in Magna Charta, c. 17. 20; and who, in the Stat. of Westm. 1. (3 E. 1.) c. 15. are called Constables of Fees, and there considered as keepers of prisons; a constituent part indeed of all ancient castles. See 2 Inst. 31. The statute of 5 H. 4. c. 10. reciting the oppressions of these constables, and enacting that none be imprisoned but in the common gaol, seems to have put an end to a race of tyrants, who by their misconduct had rendered themselves odious to the people.

A Constable of the Exchequer is mentioned in the Dialogus Scaccarii, l. 1. c. 5—in the stat. de Districtione Scaccarii, 51 H. 3. st. 5—in Fleta. l. 2. c. 31—and in Madox's History of that Court, p. 274.

The Constable of the Staple is also mentioned in some old statutes. See 27 E. 3. c. 8. 15 R. 2. c. 9. 23 H. 8. c. 6.

THE CONSTABLE OF THE HUNDRED, or the High, Chief or Head Constable (as he is otherwise called) is next to be spoken of. By the Stat. of Winton or Winchester, 13 Ed. 1. (c. 6.) it is ordered that in every hundred or franchise there shall be chosen two constables to make the view of armour, and to present the defaults of armour, and of the suits of towns and of highways, &c.

Lambard (on Constables, p. 3.), Coke (4 Inst. 267), and Hale (2 P. C. 96), all agree in declaring that constables of the hundred were first introduced by this statute. (And see Cro. Eliz. 375). And though it has been asserted that they were officers and conservators of the peace at Common Law, and that the stat. of Winton only enlarged their authority, yet no evidence has hitherto been produced to that purpose. —See Salk. 175, 381. 11 Mod. 215. 2 Ld. Raym. 1193, 5. —The first mention made of the High Constable in any statute subsequent to that of Winton, is in stat. 3 E. 4. c. 1.

Nothing, however, can be more certain than that the Constable of the hundred, or High Constable, whether he be allowed an officer at the Common Law, or not, was instituted long before the stat. of Winton. This curious fact is ascertained by a writ or mandate of 36 H. 8. preserved in the Adversaria to Watts's edition of Matthew Paris, and from which c. 4 & 6 of the stat. of Winton are evidently taken; though it has hitherto escaped the notice of every writer or speaker upon the subject. By this writ it is provided, "that in every hundred there should be constituted a CHIEF CONSTABLE, at whose mandate all those of his hundred sworn to arms, should assemble and be observant to him, for the doing of those things which belong to the conservation of the king's peace." No mention of this officer, it is believed, can be any where found prior to the date of this instrument; which perhaps may no more determine the question as to his original creation than the stat. of Winton. Be this as it will, the discovery ought at least to teach those who are desirous of explaining the antiquities of our law, to look into matters of record, and to trust very little to opinion.

THE CONSTABLE OF THE VILL (or Petty Constable, as he is frequently called, to distinguish him from the officer last mentioned) is he who is generally understood by the term constable, when mentioned without any peculiar addition.

THIS CONSTABLE has been repeatedly acknowledged by the law, to be "one of the most ancient officers in the realm for the conservation of the peace," Poph. 13. 4 Inst. 265. It must be confessed, however, that no mention of him by this identical name, is any where found to occur anterior to the writ or mandate of King Henry III, already mentioned; whereby it is also provided, that in every village or township, there should be constituted a constable or two, according to the number of the inhabitants. But it is pretty certain that Lord Coke's idea is right, and that This officer is actually owing to the institution of the frankpledge, usually attributed to King Alfred, and was in fact originally the senior or chief pledge of the tithing or decima. See the stats. 2 E. 3. c. 3. 20 H. 6. c. 14. 28 H. 8. c. 10.

Thus it appears that the ordinance of Hen. III, far from instituting the office, merely enlarged the number of officers, placing them in towns and villages, instead of franchises; since it might frequently happen, that a manor of great extent, had only a single constable for several townships; a case exactly similar, indeed, sometimes occurring at this day, where a township, comprehending several hamlets, equally populous it may be with itself, has only one constable for the whole. [For a constablewick cannot be created at this day, unless by act of parliament. 1 Mod. 13.]

We find the Constable beginning to be familiarly known by that name, in the time of King Edward I; but not previously. In some articles of inquiry at the Eyre, perhaps, or Trailbaston, certainly in the time of Edward I, are items in which this officer is mentioned. Coll. Madox. Mus. Brit. iii. 285.—He seems also to be meant in the two chapters of the Eyre, as given in Fleta, lib. 1. c. 20. §§ 126. 133.

He is named in the stat. of 2 E. 3. c. 3. for the first time; as also in those of 4 E. 3. c. 10. 5 E. 3. c. 14. 25 E. 3. st. 1. c. 6. and 36 E. 3. st. 1. c. 2. and in several statutes now repealed or obsolete, in the reigns of R. 2. H. 4. and H. 6. 1 H. 7. c. 7. &c.

It seems highly probable that, at the Common Law, and before the mandate of Henry III, the constable of the hundred, and the constable of the manor, were officers of the same nature and authority, originating at the same time, and differing only as to the extent of their several districts; in short, that they bore to each other the same analogy as subsisted between the bailiff of the hundred and the bailiff of the manor. It follows that the constable of the hundred neither possessed nor could have exercised any more authority within the precinct of the latter, than the constable of one manor possessed or could have exercised in another; the manor being to all intents and purposes exempt from, and excluded out of the hundred.

Lord Bacon observes, that though the High Constable's authority hath the more ample circuit, "yet I do not find," says he, "that the petty constable is subordinate to the high constable, or to be ordered or commanded by him." Those cases wherein it has been adjudged, that the being subject to a particular leet, shall not excuse a man from serving the office of constable of the hundred, seem therefore to have been decided upon a wrong principle. See 3 Keb. 197, 230. 231. Freem. 348. 11 Mod. 215.

The powers and duties of this officer shall be considered under the following heads.

I. 1. His Quality; and 2. Qualifications.
II. 1. His Election; and 2. Who are exempted.
III. His Power and Authority.
IV. His Duty. [These two are in many instances co-extensive, and are therefore carefully to be compared together].
V. His Protection, Indemnity, and Allowances; and lastly, VI. His Responsibility and Punishment.

But first it may be necessary to state a few particulars as to the HIGH CONSTABLE, or constable of the hundred or similar division; who is as much the officer of the justices of the peace as the constable of the vill. Fort. 128. He is elected at the leet or turn of the hundred, or by justices of the peace. 1 Ro. Ab. 535. Bulst. 174. 3 Keb. 197. And by stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 25. § 8, 9. in Westminster a high constable is to be elected annually by the dean or high steward or his deputy at a court leet.—As to his power—he may hold petty or statute sessions (for hiring servants) according to ancient usage. Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. But it is doubtful whether he can arrest for breach, or take surety, of the peace. 1 Salk. 381. Cro. Eliz. 375. 376.—He is said to be an officer within the annual mutiny act, for billetting of soldiers; and liable to the penalties thereby inflicted for mal-practice in so doing; and he may occasionally make a deputy, whose acts in his principal's absence, will be good. 1 Blackst. 350. 3 Burr. 1262. but see the act § 1.—Under stats. 4 E. 4. c. 1. 39 Eliz. c. 20. and 13 Geo. 1. c. 23. he may determine complaints of clothiers, and see after abuses mentioned in those acts.—His Duty is—To present those who harbour strangers for whom they will not answer. 13 Ed. 1. c. 6.—To deliver lists of persons qualified to serve on juries. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25. and see 3 & 4 Ann. c. 18.—On receiving notice of any robbery to make fresh suit and hue and cry after the felons, and to defend actions against the hundred by those robbed. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16. See title Hue and Cry, and stat. 13 E. 1. c. 6.—To collect the county rate, and pay it to the treasurer, or account, at the sessions, on pain of imprisonment. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29.—The stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. as to his paying the allowance for vagrants is altered by stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 34.—To enforce the laws against profane swearing. 19 Geo. 2. c. 21.—To give notice to the constables of the orders of the lieutenant or deputy lieutenant as to the militia. 26 Geo. 3. c. 107.—This officer is removeable by the justices of the peace, on good cause. Bulst. 174. 1 Salk. 150.—He shall be discharged from serving the office of collector of the poor's rate during his office. 2 Jones, 46.

I. 1. The Constable was ordained to repress felons and to keep the peace, of which he is a conservator by the Common Law. 10 E. 4. 18. Cromp. Just. 201. 4 Inst. 265.

His office is therefore, First, original or primitive as conservator of the peace; and Secondly, ministerial and relative to justices of the peace, coroners, sheriffs, &c. whose precepts he is to execute. 1 Hale. P. C. 88.

He is however an officer only for his own precinct, and cannot execute a warrant directed to the constable of the vill, or to all constables, generally, of that particular jurisdiction: for he is a constable no where else; nor is he compellable to do it, though the warrant be directed to him by name; but he may, if he will, and so indeed may any other person. 1 Hale P. C. 459. Comb. 446. Carth. 508. 1 Salk 176. 3 Salk. 99. 2 Ld. Raym. 1300. 12 Mod. 316. Fost. 312. n. 2 Black. Rep. 1135. 1 H. Black. 13.—See stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 55. under which a constable may execute a warrant in any other county, &c. if indorsed by a justice of such other county, &c. and carry the offender before a justice of such other county, &c. and if the offender shall give bail, the constable is to deliver the recognizance, examination or confession of the offender, and all other proceedings relating thereto, to the clerk of assises, or clerk of the peace of the county &c. where the offence was committed, under the penalty of 10*l.* But if the offence shall not be bailable, or the offender shall not give bail, the constable shall carry the offender before a justice of the county where the offence was committed.

He is an officer of the court of Quarter-Sessions, over whom they have power. Comb. 204.

2. The Common Law requires, that every constable should be idoneus homo, i. e. apt and fit to execute the said office; and he is said in law to be idoneus, who has these three things, honesty, knowledge and ability: honesty to execute his office truly, without malice, affection or partiality; knowledge to know what he ought duly to do; and ability as well in estate as body, that he may intend and execute his office when need is, diligently; and not for impotence or poverty neglect it. 8 Rep. 41. b. And if one be elected constable who is not idoneus, he by the law may be discharged of his office, and another who is idoneus appointed in his place.

He must be an inhabitant of the place for which he is chosen. 12 Mod. 256.

He ought not to be the keeper of a publick house. 6 Mod. 42.—And this is made an express disqualification in Westminster, by stat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 25.

II. 1. The Constable is chosen by the Common Law, at the leet: or, where there is no leet, at the tourn; sometimes by the suitors and sometimes by the steward; and now in many towns and parishes by the parishioners; all according to ancient and particular usage. If he be present when chosen, he is to take the oath in court; if absent, he may be sworn before a (single) justice of the peace. But in the latter case he ought to have special notice of his election, and a time and place should be appointed for his taking the oath [well and truly to serve the office]. 4 Inst. 265. 2 Salk. 502. Comb. 416. 2 Jones 212. Salk. 175. Ld. Raym. 70, 71. 2 Stra. 1119. 1149. 5 Mod. 130, 1. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 10. § 46.

Constables of London (which city is divided into twenty-six wards, and every ward into precincts, in each whereof is a constable) are nominated by the inhabitants of each precinct on St. Thomas's day, and confirmed, or otherwise, at the court of wardmote; and after they are confirmed, they are sworn into their offices at a court of Aldermen on the next Monday after Twelfth-day; their oath is long and particular, and goes to duties now seldom performed, but regulated by articles of the wardmote inquest, which directs the several matters to be observed by the constable; who is in the nature of a general superintendant of the morals of the inhabitants; and he ought to notice all new-comers, who, if of bad character, may be required to give security for their good behaviour, or be imprisoned; and see Carth. 129. 138.—Every constable may execute warrants through the whole city.

In case a constable die, or quit the precinct, two justices may make and swear a new one, till the lord of the manor shall hold a court leet, or till the next quarter sessions, who may either approve of the constable so made, or appoint another. Also, if he continue above a year in office, the quarter sessions may discharge him, and put another in his place until the lord shall hold a court. But justices of the peace, either in or out of the quarter sessions, cannot in any other case discharge a constable chosen in the leet. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. Comb. 328. Stra. 789. 1050. 1213. Bulst. 174. Sty. 362. Barn. 51.

A mandamus may be granted to the steward of a court-leet to swear a constable. Comb. 285.

A person may be indicted for not taking upon him the office of constable. Stra. 920. See 5 Mod. 96. for the form of the indictment.

In the leet or tourn where one is elected constable, and refuses to be sworn, he may, if present, be fined for the contempt; if absent, amerced or subjected to a penalty for non-acceptance of the office according to the order. 5 Mod. 130.

Though the justices of the peace have not originally the making of the constable, it is matter of the peace within their general jurisdiction, and they may examine it in their sessions. 2 Jon. 212. See 1 Mod. 13. And on just cause remove them. 4 Inst. 267. And by warrant compel them to appear and be sworn. 5 Mod. 128. All. 78.

An information in the nature of a quo warranto is grantable against one to show by what authority he exercises the office of constable. 2 Stra. 1213.

2. Exemptions from serving the office.—1. Aged Persons, incapacitated by weakness, should never be elected; and in Westminster those of sixty-three years old are expressly exempted by stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 17. § 13.—2. Aldermen of London. Doug. 538. 1 Jon. 462. *Cra. may rather be said to be incapacitated.—9. Militia, serjeants or private men serving in. 26 Geo. 3. c. 107. § 130.—10. Parliament, servants to members of. 1 Mod. 13. but this seems doubtful.—11. Physicians, President and Fellows of the College in London by stat. 32 H. 8. c. 40. but no other physicians, nor they elsewhere. See 1 Mod. 22. & contra 1 Sid. 431. 2 Keb. 578. 2 *H. P. If however a gentleman of quality, or a physician, officer, &c. be chosen constable, where there are sufficient persons beside, and no special custom concerning it, it is said such persons may be relieved in B.R. 2 Hawk. P. C. 100. c. 10. § 41.

A Constable may make a Deputy; but the constable is answerable, and his deputy ought to be sworn, though it is not in all cases necessary. Sid. 355. and see 1 Bur. 129. 3 Bur. 1262. Stra. 942. *Cromp. A woman made constable, by virtue of a custom, that the inhabitants of a town shall serve by turns, on account of their estates or houses, may procure another to serve for her, and the custom is good. *Cro. III. The Constable hath as good authority in his place, as the Chief Justice of England hath in his. 1 Ro. Rep. 238.

But a Constable cannot act as such out of his particular district, even though a warrant is directed to A. constable of B; to C. and to all other officers of the peace in the county of D. 1 H. Blackst. 15. n.

It may save much trouble to the inquirer to class the objects of his power and authority, as well as those of his duty, in alphabetical order; a method in some measure formerly pursued in Law Dictionaries, but not with sufficient care and accuracy.

1. Affray.—If He see one making affray, or assaulting another, or breaking the peace, or hear or know one to menace, or threaten to kill, wound, maim, or beat another, the Constable may take and set him in the stocks, or commit him to prison (as he may persons about to make an affray, and commanded to disperse), till the offender find surety to keep the peace, or for his good behaviour. Cromp. J. P. 130, 1. 155. 201. Dalt. 33. Lamb. 135. 141.—But he may not set one who hath broken the peace in the stocks, if he can have him to the next gaol for the night. 22 E. 4. 35.—Neither may he commit a party after an affray to compel him to find surety of the peace, as he cannot take any man's oath that he is in fear of his life. But he may upon complaint arrest the party, and bring him before a justice of peace (which indeed is always the safest way), to find surety. Cro. El. 375. Bro. Tit. Faux. Imp. 6. 2 Hale P. C. 88. 90. If men be making affray in a house, and the doors are shut, or persons making affray, run into a house, the constable may enter to see the peace kept. And if man-slaughter, or bloodshed, is likely to ensue, and entrance upon demand is refused, he may break open the doors to keep the peace and prevent the danger. Cromp. J. P. 130 b. 2 Hale P. C. 95. 135. See post, 2.

Aid of the subject, requiring; see next division, Arrest.

Alehouses. See 3. and post, IV.

2. Arrest of felons, &c. Where a felony is committed, though out of his precinct, the constable may, ex officio, without a warrant, arrest the felon (if found within his precinct), and imprison him till he can be conveyed to a justice of peace, or to the common gaol. 2 Hale P. C. 90. 95. 120. —If the felon in any case resists or flies, whether after arrest or before, and cannot be taken, the Constable may kill him, and such killing is justifiable. 1 Hale P. C. 481. 9. 2 Hale P. C. 90.—Where a felony has been actually committed, the constable (or any person), upon probable grounds of suspicion, may lawfully (and it is the constable's duty to) apprehend the suspected person, and carry him before a magistrate. Cromp. C. c. 11. § 15 n.—Stat. 22 G. 3. c. 58. empowers constables and watchmen to arrest persons suspected of conveying away stolen goods by night.—Probable grounds are very many, e. g. common fame; hue and cry levied; goods found on a person, &c. Cromp. J. P. 87. 154. Ow. 121. 12 Rep. 92. 2 Hale P. C. 81. 3 Bulst. 287.—In case of a felony committed, or in danger to be committed (as if one beat or wound another dangerously), the constable, either upon complaint, or hue and cry, may break open the doors to take the offender, if upon demand and notice, he will not yield himself, or entrance be refused; or if the constable act under a justice's warrant for treason or felony. And he may imprison the offender till the injured party is out of danger. 2 Hale P. C. 82. 90. 4. Cromp. J. P. 141. Brownl. 211. 1 Bulst. 146.—The Constable may officially imprison for a time to prevent felony; as if he see two with weapons drawn ready to fight: or if a man in a fury be purposed to kill, maim, or beat another. He may also arrest and imprison one for a felonious intent, as if a man bring a helpless infant into a field or elsewhere, and leave it to perish for want: and the constable see this himself. Moore 284. Poph. 13. Though no felony has actually been committed, constable and his assistants are justified in arresting on a given charge of felony. Doug. 359. 360. and in this case constable may discharge the person suspected. Cro. El. 202. 752. Dalt. 272. He may arrest persons coming before the king's justices with force and arms, or who bring force in affray of the peace, or go or ride armed in a warlike and unnecessary manner. Stat. 2 E. 3. c. 3.—And see the stat. 5 E. 3. c. 14. as to his arresting of Roberdesmen, Wastours, and Drawlatches.—He may take aid of his neighbours to arrest another, or in execution of any part of his duty at Common Law, and under several statutes, and they are compelled to assist him; upon affray or such like he may raise the people of the realm to cause the peace to be observed. Cromp. J. P. 141. 201 b. Comb. 309.—He may carry one that he has arrested for felony to the common gaol, and the gaoler is bound to receive him. 1 Hale P. C. 595.

As to what constable shall do with a prisoner when taken, if for an affray, see Affray above.—In other offences he may convey his prisoners to the sheriff, or his jailor of the county; or to the jailor of the franchise in which they are taken, who are bound to receive them. Stat. 4 E. 3. c. 10. See stats. 5 H. 4. c. 10. 23 H. 8. c. 2. But the best way in all cases is, to take him to a justice of peace, to bail or discharge him; till when it is the duty of the constable to keep and imprison an offender. 2 H. P. C. 95. 120.—If a felon fly, constable ought to seize his goods, and keep them for the king's use, and send hue and cry after him. Stat. 27 El. c. 13. Dalt. 289. 340. *Cromp. J. Armed going. See ante, 2.

Assault. See ante 1, 2.

3. Breaking open Doors.—See this division passim.—Other occasions not yet mentioned which justify so doing, are—A capias utlagatum, or capias pro fine.—On forcible entry and detainer found by inquisition, or view of justices.—On escape from a lawful arrest.—On warrant to search for stolen goods if found. 2 Hale P. C. 151. 117.—It is best always, and generally requisite, first to signify the cause of the constable's coming, and to demand that the door should be opened. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 14. Fost. 136. 320.

4. Deserters.—Constable may apprehend persons suspected to be such, and take them before a justice; under the annual mutiny acts; and he is allowed 20*s.* for each.

5. Disorderly Houses and Persons.—If there be disorderly drinking or noise at an unseasonable time of night, especially in inns, taverns, or ale-houses, the constable or his watch demanding entrance, and being refused, may break open the doors to see and suppress the disorder; as is constantly done in London and Middlesex. 2 Hale P. C. 95.—He or his watchmen (or indeed any men) may apprehend indecent night-walkers, and commit them till morning. 2 Hale P. C. 98.—And he may arrest and commit lewd persons frequenting bawdy-houses, to make them find security for their good behaviour. Cromp. J. P. 153 b. See title Bawdy-houses, and stat. 5 E. 3. c. 14.

Felons.—Arrest, imprisonment, and flight of. See ante 2.

Hue and Cry.—See ante 2. ad finem; and IV.

6. Husbandry.—He may grant testimonials under seal to servants in licensing them to change their masters. Stat. 5. Eliz. c. 4. And by the same statute, he is to cause all persons mete for labour, to serve by the day, in mowing, reaping, &c. or on refusal, set them in the stocks. By stats. 43 Eliz. c. 7. and 15 Car. 2. c. 2. persons unlawfully cutting corn growing, robbing orchards or gardens, breaking fences, pulling up fruit-trees, spoiling woods, &c. (not being felony), not satisfying the damages, shall be committed to the constable to be whipped.

Imprisonment.—See this division passim.

7. Inn-keepers.—The constable on complaint may compel them to receive guests. Br. Act. sur le Case, 76. Cromp. J. P. 201. See stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 9.

8. Insult, to himself; He may imprison any one insulting, assaulting, or making affray on him, or opposing him, though only verbally, in execution of his office. 1 Ro. Rep. 238. Cromp. J. P. 131. Clayt. 10.

9. Lunatics or Madmen.—The constable may take and imprison; and he shall not be charged if they die there. Ow. 28. and see stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. § 20. and this Dict. title Lunatics.

10. Peace, Surety of. See ante 1, 2.—The constable may take surety by obligation in his own name, but not otherwise, and may certify it at the sessions. 10 E. 4. c. 18. Br. Peace, pl. 2. Sureties, pl. 23. Cromp. J. P. 131. 4 Inst. 265. Cro. El. 375, 6.

11. Plague, in the time of.—Constable may command infected persons to keep in the house. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 31. See title Plague.

12. Warrants.—Where constable has a warrant, he is tied up thereby, to act only as it directs. 11 Mod. 248.—If he arrests on a general warrant (before some justice), he may carry his prisoner to what justice he will. 5 Rep. 59. See stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 55. as to indorsed warrants, by which offenders may be taken in any county; ante I. 1.

Though the constable is not named in 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 10. nor appointed to be the officer to execute the warrants, yet the justices may command him to execute them. 1 Salk. 381. And a constable need not return his warrant, but should keep it for his own justification.—See stat. 24 Geo. 1. c. 44. 1 Salk. 381. 2 Ld. Raym. 1196.

The Constable is the proper officer to a justice of peace, and bound to execute his lawful warrants; and therefore where a statute authorises a justice to convict a person of any crime, and to levy the penalty, &c. without saying to whom such warrant shall be directed, the constable is the officer to execute the warrant, and must obey it. 5 Mod. 130. 1 Salk. 381. Constable must at his peril take notice that his warrant is by one in the commission of the peace. 12 Mod. 347. and that the matter is within the justice's jurisdiction. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 13. § 11.—And if guilty of misdemeanour in executing a lawful warrant, he becomes a trespasser. 12 Mod. 344.—But a warrant properly penned (even though the magistrate who issues it should exceed his jurisdiction), will by stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44. at all events indemnify the officer who executes it ministerially. 4 Comm. 288.

13. Watch.—Constable hath power ex officio to keep a watch for the purpose to raise or pursue hue and cry upon robberies committed, by the statute of Winton, c. 1.; to search for lodgers in suburbs of cities that are suspicious persons, which is to be done every week, or at least once in fifteen days, by the same statute c. 4.; for such as ride or go armed, by the statute of 2 E. 3. c. 3.; for night-walkers and persons suspicious, either by night or day, by the statute of 5 E. 3. c. 4. And it is in his power to hold such watches as often as he pleases, and the watchmen are his ministers and assistants, and are under the same protection with him, and may act as he doth, and regularly he ought to be in company with them in their walk and watch. 2 Hale P. C. 97.

A watchman hath a double protection of the law, viz. 1. As an assistant to the constable when he is present or in the watch. 2. Purely as a watchman set by order of law; and the law takes notice of his authority; and the killing of a watchman in the execution of his office is murder. 2 Hale P. C. ubi sup.—If an inhabitant refuse to watch in his turn, constable may set him in the stocks. 3 Lev. 208.—See stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 90. for regulating the nightly watch and duty of constables in Westminster. 10 Geo. 2. c. 22. for London, and other acts only of very local importance, and which those who are to act under should diligently consult. See this Dict. title Watchmen.

By 52 G. 3. c. 17. a temporary act (last continued by 58 G. 3. c. 52.) the constables under the direction of justices of the peace are to assist in execution of that act, in places where disturbances prevail or are apprehended.

IV. The Constable's duty and office continue till his successor be sworn. 12 Mod. 256. Though he may for just cause be removed by the authority which elected him. Bulst. 174. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 10. § 37. 38.

Affray.—See III. 1.

Ale-houses.—Constables are to enforce the penalties against the keepers of. See ante III. and this Dict. title Ale-houses. And stats. 1 Jac. 1. c. 9. and 3 C. 1. c. 4.—And by stat. 26 G. 2. c. 31. Constable is to give notice of the days appointed for licensing.

Armed going.—See ante III. 2. and this Dict. title Arms.

Bawdy-houses.—See III.

Bridges.—By stat. 22 H. 8. c. 5. Constable and two most able inhabitants in the parish are to make an assessment for the repairs of bridges, to be allowed by Justices. See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 77. § 7.

Burglary.—If Constable have notice that one is committed, it is his duty to pursue the felon immediately though in the night. Cro. El. 16.

Customs.—By several statutes, constables are to be assisting to all persons appointed for the collecting and management of the customs; and to persons having a warrant from the lord treasurer, &c. to make a search for goods that have not paid the customs. See int. al. stats. 12 Car. 2. c. 19. 23. and 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11.

Distress, for rent.—Constables are to assist in. See this Dict. title Distress.—He is to make distresses under justices' warrants. Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 20. under which constable may take his own reasonable charges.

Drunkenness.—To assist the justices in punishing; under stat. 4 Jac. 1. c. 5.

Escape.—See post VI.

Felons.—See ante III. 2. Felons' goods. Constable must keep goods found on the felon till trial, and then return them according to the directions of the court.

Fires.—Constables to assist at. See this Dict. title Fires.

Fishing unlawful.—Constable is to assist in enforcing acts against.

Forcible entry.—Constable is to give assistance to justices of the peace, in removing, or shall be committed and fined. 5 Rep. 2.

Gunpowder.—Under stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 61. constable may by warrant search for gunpowder. See title Gunpowder.

Hawkers and Pedlars.—By stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 25. constable is to assist in putting the laws in execution against hawkers and pedlars, that travel without licences, and by stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 26. against hawkers of spirits.

Highways.—Constable is to be aiding and assisting in putting the acts in execution relating to; and to return lists of persons qualified for the office of surveyor, &c. but he is not bound to present them if out of repair. 1 Vent. 336. See this Dict. title Highway.

Horses.—Constable is to be assisting in driving off commons, forests, &c. horses and cattle; on pain of 40*s.* Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 13. but see stats. 8 Eliz. c. 8. and 21 Jac. 1. c. 28. —And in levying duties on horses under stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 49.

Hue and Cry.—By stats. 13 E. 1. st. 2. c. 6. 27 El. c. 13. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16. to make hue and cry after offenders where a felony or robbery is committed; to call upon the parishioners to assist in the pursuit; and if the criminal be not found in the precinct of the first constable, he is to give notice to the next, and thus continue the pursuit from town to town, and county to county. And where offenders are not taken, constables shall levy the tax to satisfy an execution, on recovery against a hundred, and pay the same to the sheriffs, &c. and neglecting to make hue and cry, shall forfeit 5*l.* See this Dict. title Hue and Cry.

Husbandry.—See ante III.

Innkeepers.—See ante III.

Juries.—Under stats. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 32. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 10. 3 & 4 An. c. 18. 3 Geo. 2 c. 25. Constables are to give in to the justices at Michaelmas sessions yearly, a list of persons qualified to serve on juries. These lists are to be made from the rates of each parish; and constables wilfully omitting persons qualified, or inserting wrong persons, shall forfeit 20*s.* See this Dict. title Jury.

Labourers.—See III.

Lead.—See Thieves.

Lottery Offices illegal, constable is to endeavour to suppress. Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 1.

Malt.—See this Dict. title Malt.

Measures.—By stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 8. constable is to search and examine if any persons use other measures than such as are Winchester measure, and agreeable to the standard; and to seize and break the same; and see stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 17. for Westminster.

Militia.—Constable's duty as to. See the statutes relating to The Militia.

Night Walkers.—See III.

Physicians, College of.—By stats. 14 & 15 H. 8. c. 5. and 32 H. 8. c. 40. In the city of London, constable is to be assisting to them in putting their laws in execution.

Plague.—See ante III.

Poor's Rate.—Under stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 12. the weekly rate for the relief of the poor is to be assessed, in case the parishioners disagree, by the churchwardens and constables, who are in either case to levy the rate; and by § 35, the churchwardens and constables of every parish are to collect the sums rated, and pay the same over to the High-Constable. And see stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29. and this Dict. title Poor.

Postage.—Under stat. 9. An. c. 10. to levy money due for postage of letters under 5*l.* § 30.

Presentments.—Constable is at the quarter-sessions to make presentment of all things against the peace, and belonging to his office. Dalt. J. P. 474. Fitz. J. P. 6. And they are usually summoned by the sheriff to attend the quarter-sessions and assizes to make presentments; which seems justified by no express law, though perhaps by usage.

Riot.—Constables are to suppress, and they may ex officio commit offenders, &c. See stat. 1. Geo. 1. c. 5. and this Dict. title Riot.

Robbery.—See Hue and Cry.

Scolds.—Under a presentment in the leet and the steward's warrant, constable and his assistant may put them in the cucking stool. Moor, 847.

Servants.—See III. Constables to assist in levying duty on. under stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 43.

Soldiers.—Constables are to quarter soldiers in inns, alehouses, victualling houses, &c. Not to receive any reward to excuse quartering them. To give in lists to the justices, of the houses and persons obliged to quarter soldiers, and to provide carriages for troops on their march. See the annual statutes concerning Soldiers, and ante III.

Statutes, or Acts of Parliament; constables are called upon to assist in the execution of these, on almost innumerable occasions.

Sunday.—Constable is to enforce acts 1 C. 1. c. 1. and 29 C. 2. c. 7. against the profanation of. See this Dict. title Holidays.

Swearing.—By stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 21. constable is to levy the penalty for profane swearing: which is 1*s.* for a servant, labourer, &c. 2*s.* for others under the degree of a gentleman; and 5*s.* for a gentleman; and as the crime is repeated, the penalty is to be doubled.

Thieves petty, of lead, iron copper, &c. Constable, watchmen, and beadles, are to apprehend. Stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 30.

Turnpikes.—Constables to assist in enforcing the act 13 G. 3. c. 84.

Vagrants.—Constables to assist in enforcing the laws against. See this Dict. title Vagrants.

Warrants of Justices.—It is part, and a great part of constable's duty to execute these, which are issued under an amazing variety of acts of parliament; in all which cases constable's office is chiefly ministerial. See ante III.

Watch.—See ante III.

Weavers, Kidderminster.—Constables to assist, by stats. 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 8.

Weights.—Under stats. 8 H. 8. c. 5. and 16 C. 1. c. 19. constables, being head officers of places, shall have in their custody sealed weights, &c. under penalties: persons buying or selling by false weights or measures, forfeit 5*s*. leviable by constables.

Wreck.—Under stat. 12 An. st. 2. c. 18. constables may call together assistance to save ships from wreck; and see this Dict. title Wreck.

V. If a Constable doth not his duty, he may be indicted and fined by the justices of peace; on the other hand he is protected by law, in the execution of his duty.

It has been already mentioned that he shall have aid of the county to pacify affrays.

By stat. 7 Jac. 1. cap. 5. if any action is brought against a constable, for any thing done by virtue of his office, he, and also all others who in his aid, or by his command, shall do any thing concerning his office, may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence, and if he recovers he shall have double costs. But this must be certified on the record by the judge. 2 Vent. 45. Doug. 294.—And see stat. 19 G. 2. c. 21. against profane swearing, which gives treble costs.

By stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44. no action shall be brought against any constable, or other officer, or any person acting by his order, and in his aid, for any thing done in obedience to any warrant of a justice of peace, until demand of the perusal and copy of such warrant, and the same hath been refused or neglected by the space of six days; and in case after such demand, and compliance therewith, any action shall be brought against such constable, &c. without making the justice a defendant; then on producing and proving such warrant, the jury shall give a verdict for the defendant, notwithstanding any defect of jurisdiction in such justice: and if such action be brought jointly against such justice, and also against such constable, &c. then on proof of such warrant, the jury shall find for such constable, &c. and if the verdict shall be given against the justice, the plaintiff shall recover his costs against him to be taxed so as to include costs plaintiff shall be liable to pay to such defendant, &c. No action shall be brought against any constable, &c. unless commenced within six calendar months after the act committed.—This statute extends only to actions of tort. See Buller's N. P. 24.

Where defendants, (constables, &c.) in order to levy a poor-rate under magistrates' warrant, broke and entered the house; held that they might be sued in trespass without a previous demand of the perusal and copy of the warrant. 2 Maule & Selw. Rep. 259.

Where a constable having a magistrate's warrant of distress to levy a church-rate under stat. 53 Geo. 3. c. 127. broke the door of and entered plaintiff's dwelling-house; the court of K. B. held that although he thereby exceeded his authority, yet no action could be sustained, after the three months limited by that act. Theobald v. Crichmore, Hil. 58 Geo. 3. Term Rep. K. B.

The charges of sending malefactors to jail were at Common Law to be borne by the vill, in which they were apprehended. 1 Hale, P. C. 96. But now under stats. 3 Jac. 1. c. 10. and 27 Geo. 2. c. 3. where a malefactor has not sufficient property in the county where he is taken, on application by the constable or officer conveying him, a justice of peace may on oath examine into and ascertain the reasonable expences to be allowed; and by warrant without fee, order the treasurer of the county to pay the same; except in Middlesex, where such expences are to be paid by the overseers of the place where the offender was taken.

By 41 G. 3. (U. K.) c. 73. when special constables are appointed (in England) to execute warrants in cases of felony, two justices may order proper allowances for their expences, &c. whether allowed, or disallowed, by the sessions. In like manner, allowances may be made to high-constables for extraordinary expences in the execution of their duty, in cases of Riot, Felony, &c.

If in the execution of his office, and acting within his own district, after competent notice that he is constable, he or any that come to his assistance be killed, it is murder: although the party killing do not know his person. 1 Hale, P. C. 9. 459. 460. 1. 2 Ld. Raym. 1300. But see Leach's Cases in Crown Law, 211.

If two men are combating, and the constable come to part them and is hurt, he shall have action of trespass; and if he hurt them, they shall not have action against him. And so of those who aid him; every man who is assisting to the constable in the execution of his office having the same protection that the law gives to the constable. Cromp. J. P. 130. 2 Hale, P. C. 97.

If he be removed without just cause the court of King's Bench will by rule of court order him to be restored to his place. Bulst. 174.

A justice of peace's warrant is a sufficient justification of a constable in a matter within the jurisdiction of such justice. Stra. 711. See ante III. 12.

By stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 19. every constable is every three months, and within fourteen days after he goes out of office, to deliver to the overseers of the poor an account entered in a book, kept for the purpose, and signed by him, of all sums by him expended and received on account of the parish, &c. which overseers are within fourteen days to lay the same before the inhabitants, and, if approved, are to pay the money due out of the poor rates; but, if disallowed, are to deliver the book back to the constable, who may produce it before a justice of peace, giving reasonable notice to the overseers; which justice is to examine the account, determine objections, settle the sum due, and enter it in, and sign the account: and the overseers are to pay such sum out of the poor's rate: but may appeal (giving notice) to the quarter sessions.

VI. A Constable arresting one possessed of money who dies, is chargeable with the money. And so where he takes from a felon money of which he had robbed another, even though he should be afterwards robbed of it himself. Ow. 121.

Neglecting a duty incumbent on him, either by Common Law, or by statute, he is for his default indictable. 1 Salk. 381. 2 Ro. Rep. 78.

If he will not return his warrant, or certify what he has done under it, he may be fined. 6 Mod. 83. 1 Salk. 381. But see 5 Mod. 96. Gib. 192.

If he wilfully lets a felon escape out of the stocks, and go at large, it is felony. 1 Hale, P. C. 596. And it seems generally agreed, that all voluntary escapes in the officer, amount to the same crime as the offender was guilty of, whether treason or felony. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19. § 22. et seq.

It is a misdemeanour in him to discharge an offender brought to the watch-house by a watchman in the night. 2 Burr. 867. But see III. 2.

He is liable to various pecuniary and sometimes personal punishments, on neglecting the duty imposed on him by several statutes.

The Constable's Oath.

YOU shall swear, that you will well and truly serve our Sovereign Lord the King in the office of Constable for the township of C. within this manor, [hundred or county] for the year now next ensuing, or until you shall be thereof discharged by due course of law: you shall see the King's peace kept, and keep all such watch and ward as are usually accustomed and ought to be kept: and you shall well and truly do and execute all other things belonging to the said office according to the best of your knowledge. So help you God.

FORM OF AN OBLIGATION TO BE TAKEN BY A CONSTABLE FOR KEEPING THE PEACE.

KNOW ALL MEN by these presents, That I A. B. of C. in the county of D. labourer, am held and firmly bound unto E. F. yeoman, constable of the township [manor, &c.] of C. aforesaid, in the sum of forty pounds to be paid to the said E. F. or his certain attorney, executors, administrators or assigns; for which payment to be well and faithfully made, I bind myself, my heirs, executors, and administrators, firmly by these presents, sealed with my seal. Dated this —— of ——, in the 30th year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Third, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the faith, and so forth, and in the year of our Lord 1790.

The Condition of the above written obligation is such, that if the above bounden A. B. shall [personally appear at the next general quarter sessions of the peace, to be holden in and for the county of D. to do and receive what shall be there and then enjoined him by the court, and in the mean time shall] keep the peace [and be of good behaviour] toward the King and all his liege people, and especially toward G. R. of C. in the said county, yeoman, then the said obligation to be void, or else to remain in full force and virtue.

Signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of }

OATH OF THE APPRAISERS OF GOODS DISTRAINED FOR RENT; TO BE ADMINISTERED BY THE CONSTABLE.

YOU shall swear that you will faithfully appraise and value the goods now taken in distress, and mentioned in the inventory to you shewn, as between buyer and seller, according to the best of your skill and understanding. So help you God.

APPOINTMENT OF A DEPUTY.

I, A. B. Constable of C. in the county of D. do hereby make, substitute, and appoint E. F. of the same place, yeoman, my true and lawful deputy in the office aforesaid, as long as I shall hold the same; or thus, during the continuance of my will and pleasure, [or for any particular purpose] dated, &c.

For a command or PROCLAMATION for RIOTERS to disperse, see title Riot.

See more fully Ritson's Office of Constable, from whence the preceding information on this subject has been principally extracted.

CONSTAT, Lat.] The name of a certificate, which the clerk of the pipe, and auditors of the exchequer make at the request of any person who intends to plead or move in that court, for the discharge of any thing: and the effect of it, is the certifying what constat (appears) upon record, touching the matter in question. See stats. 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 4. 13 Eliz. c. 6. A Constat is held to be superior to an ordinary certificate, because it contains nothing but what is evident on record. An Exemplification under the great seal, of the inrolment of any letters patent is called a Constat. Co. Lit. 225.

CONSTRUCTIVE TREASON. See title Treason.

CONSUETUDINARIUS. A ritual or book, containing the rites and forms of divine offices, or the customs of abbeys and monasteries: it is mentioned in Brampton.

CONSUETUDINIBUS ET SERVICIIS. Is a writ of right close, which lies against the tenant that deforceth his lord of the rent or service due to him. Reg Orig. 159. F. N. B. 151. When the writ is brought by the party in the right only, he shall count of the seisin of his ancestor, and the writ be in the debet; but when he counts of his own seisin, then the writ is in the debet et solet, &c. And if the party say in the writ ut in redditibus et arreragiis, these words prove that the demandant himself was seised of the services; and then if he count in such writ of seisin of his ancestors, and not of his own seisin, the writ shall abate: so that if he will bring a writ of customs and services of the seisin of his ancestors, he ought to leave these words ut in redditibus, &c. out of the writ. Where a person brings a writ of customs and services against any tenant, and by count demands homage, the writ ought to make special mention thereof; as ut in homagio, &c. or the writ shall abate. New Nat. Brev. 330. F. N. B. 151. If this writ be brought against a tenant for life, where the remainder is over in fee, there the tenant may pray in aid of him in the remainder, &c.

CONSUL, Lat.] In our law books signifies an earl. Bract. l. 1. c. 8. tells us, that as comes is derived from comitatu, so consul is derived from consulendo: and in the laws of Edward the Confessor, mention is made of vicecomites and viceconsules. Blount. Consuls among the ancient Romans were chief officers, of which two were yearly chosen, to govern the city of Rome. Those who now pass under the name of Consuls residing in England sent from foreign nations, and in foreign ports sent from England, are merchants, or persons of eminence and knowledge, appointed to take care of the affairs and interests of merchants. See Lex Mercat.

A resident merchant of London, who is appointed and acts as Consul to a foreign prince, is not exempted from arrest upon mesne process. Viveash v. Becker, Term Rep. K. B. Mich. 55 Geo. 3. 284. See title Arrest.

CONSULTA ECCLESIA. A church full, or provided for. Cowel.

CONSULTATION, consultatio.] A writ whereby a cause having been removed by Prohibition from the Ecclesiastical court, to the King's court, is returned thither again; for if the judges of the King's court, upon comparing the libel with the suggestion of the party, find the suggestion false, or not proved, and therefore the cause to be wrongfully called from the Ecclesiastical court, then upon this consultation or deliberation they decree it to be returned; whereupon the writ in this case obtained is called a Consultation. Reg. Orig. 44. &c. Statute of Writ of Consultations, 24 Ed. 1.

This writ is in nature of a procedendo; but properly a consultation ought not to be granted, but in case where a man cannot recover at the Common Law, in the King's courts. New. Nat. Br. 119. Causes of which the Ecclesiastical or Spiritual courts have jurisdiction, are of administrations, admissions of clerks, adultery, appeals in ecclesiastical causes, apostacy, general bastardy, blasphemy, solicitation of chastity, dilapidations and church repairs, celebration of divine service, divorces, fornication, heresy, incest, institution of clerks, marriage rites, oblations, obventions, ordinations, commutation of penance, pensions, procurations, schism, simony, tithes, probate of wills, &c. and where a suit is in the Ecclesiastical court, for any of these causes or the like, and not mixed with any temporal thing, if a suggestion is made for a prohibition, a consultation shall be awarded. 5 Rep. 9.

To move for a prohibition in another court, after motion in the Chancery, &c. on the same libel which is granted, is merely vexatious, for which a consultation shall be had. Cro. Eliz. 277: Where a consultation is granted upon the right of the thing in question, there a new prohibition shall never be granted on the same libel; but where granted upon any default of the prohibition, in form, &c. there a prohibition may be granted upon the same libel again. 1 Nels. Abr. 485. See title Prohibition.

CONTEMPT, contemptus.] A disobedience to the rules, orders, or process of a Court, which hath power to punish such offence; and one may be imprisoned for a contempt done in court; but not for a contempt out of court, or a private abuse. Cro. Eliz. 689. But for contempt out of court, an attachment may be granted. Attachment also lies against one for contempt to the court, to bring in the offender to answer on interrogatories, &c. and if he cannot acquit himself, he shall be fined. 1 Lill. 305. If a sheriff, being required to return a writ directed to him, doth not return the writ, it is a contempt: and this word is used for a kind of misdesmeanor, by doing what one is forbidden; or not doing what he is commanded. 12 Rep. 36. And as this is sometimes a greater, and sometimes a lesser offence; so it is punished with greater or less punishment, by fine, and sometimes imprisonment. Dyer, 128. 177. 1 Bulst. 85.

If a defendant in Chancery, on service of a subpœna, does not appear within the time limited by the rules of the court, and plead, demur, or answer, to the bill against him, he is then said to be in contempt: and the respective processes of contempt are in successive order awarded against him. These are attachment; attachment with proclamations; a commission of rebellion; and finally a sequestration. 3 Comm. 443.

An attachment of contempt may issue against a bishop, or other peer: but for not returning a fieri facias de bonis ecclesiasticis, it is proper to move against the chancellor, commissary, or official. Rex v. Bishop of St. Asaph. 1 Wils. 332.

It is a contempt to institute a suit fictitiously, though the demand is real, either to hurt any person, or to get the opinion of the court. Coxe v. Phillips, Hardw. 237. 239.—See further title Attachment; and 4 Comm. 283.

Contempts against the King's prerogative are by refusing to assist him for the good of the public; either in his councils, by advice, if called upon; or in his wars, by personal service, for defence of the realm, against a rebellion or invasion. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 22.

Under this class may be ranked the neglecting to join the posse comitatus, or power of the county, being thereunto required by the sheriff or justices according to the stat. 2 Hen. 5. c. 8. (see title Riots;) which is a duty incumbent upon all that are 15 years of age, under the degree of nobility, and able to travel. Lamb. Eliz. 315.

Contempts against the prerogative may also be by preferring the interests of a foreign potentate to those of our own; or doing or receiving any thing that may create an undue influence, in favour of such extrinsic power; as by taking a pension from any foreign prince without the consent of the King. 3 Inst. 114.—Or by disobeying the king's lawful commands; whether by writs issuing out of his courts of justice, or by a summons to attend his privy council; or by letters from the king to a subject, commanding him to return from beyond the sea: (for disobedience to which his lands shall be seized till he doth return, and himself afterwards punished); or by his writ of ne exeat regno or proclamation commanding the subject to stay at home.

Disobedience to any of these commands is a high mis-prision and contempt; and so, lastly, is disobedience to any act of parliament, where no particular penalty is assigned; for then it is punishable, like the rest of these contempts, by fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the King's courts of justice. 4 Comm. 122. See also 1 Hawk. P. C. cc. 22. 23. 24. And this Dict. titles Oaths, King.

CONTENEMENT, contenementum.] Is said to signify a man's countenance or credit, which he hath together with, and by reason of, his freehold: in which sense, it is used in stat. of 1 Ed. 3. and other statutes: and Spelman, in his Glossary, says, contenementum est æstimatio et conditionis forma, qua quis in repub. subsistit. But contenement is more properly that, which is necessary for the support and maintenance of men, agreeable to their several qualities, or states of life. See Magna Charta, c. 14. and Glanvil. lib. 9. c. 8. and this Dict. title Distress.

CONTINGENT LEGACY. See title Legacy.

CONTINGENT REMAINDER. Contingent or executory remainders (whereby no present interest passes) are where the estate in remainder is limited to take effect, either to a dubious and uncertain person; or upon a dubious and uncertain event; so that the particular estate may chance to be determined, and the remainder never take effect. 3 Rep. 20. 2 Comm. 169. And see 10 Rep. 85. See this Dict. titles Estate, Limitation, Remainder; and also title Executory Devise.

CONTINGENT USE. Is a use limited in a conveyance of land, which may or may not happen to vest, according to the contingency expressed in the limitation of such use: a use in contingency is such which by possibility may happen in possession, reversion, or remainder. 1 Rep. 121.

CONTINUAL CLAIM. See title Claim.

CONTINUANCE. Is the insuring of a cause in court, by an entry upon the records there for that purpose. There is a continuance of the assize, &c. And continuance of a writ or action is from one term to another, in case where the sheriff hath not returned a former writ, issued out in the said action. Kitch. 262. Continuances and essoins are amendable upon the roll, at any time before judgment: they are the acts of the court, and at Common Law they may amend their own acts before judgment, though in another term; but their judgments are only amendable in the same term wherein they are given. 3 Lev. 431. Upon an Original, a term or two or three terms may be mesne between the teste and the return; and this shall be a good continuance; for the defendant is not at any prejudice by it, and the plaintiff may give a day to the defendant beyond the common day, if he will.

But a continuance by capias ought to be made from term to term, and there cannot be any mesne term, because the defendant ought not to stay so long in prison. 2 Danv. Abr. 150. If a man recover upon demurrer, or by default, &c. and a writ of inquiry of damages is awarded, there ought to be continnances between the first and second judgment, otherwise it will be a discontinuance; for the first is but an award, and not complete, till the second judgment, upon the return of the writ of inquiry of damages. Ibid. 153. If the plaintiff be nonsuit, by which the defendant is to recover costs; if the plaintiff will not enter his continuances, on purpose to save the costs, the defendant shall be suffered to enter them. Cro. Jac. 316. 317. The course of the Court of King's Bench is to enter no continuance upon the roll, till after issue or demurrer, and then to enter the continuance of all upon the back, before judgment: and if it is not entered, it is error. Trin. 16 Jac. B. R. Vide titles Discontinuance, Process.

CONTINUANDO. A word used in a special declaration of trespass, when the plaintiff would recover damages for several trespasses in the same action: and to avoid multiplicity of suits, a man may in one action of trespass recover damages for many trespasses, laying the first to be done with a continuando to the whole time, in which the rest of the trespasses were done; which is in this form, Continuando (by continuing the trespass aforesaid, &c. from the day aforesaid, &c.) until such a day, including the last trespass. Termes de Ley.

In trespass with a continuando of divers things, though of some of those things there could be no continuando, yet it shall be good for those things for which the continuando could be, and not for the others; but if the continuando had been particularly of such things whereof a continuando could not be, then it had been nought. 3 Lev. 94. Every day's trespass is said to be a several trespass; though a continuando may not be of men's continuing a trespass day and night, for some time together; for mankind must take some rest: where cattle do trespass upon ground, they are continually trespassing night and day, and therefore the continuando in that case is good. 1 Lill. Abr. 307. Trespass for breaking an house with a continuando is good; and until a re-entry is made, the continuation of the possession is a continuing of the trespass. Lutw. 1312. See title Trespass.

CONTRABAND GOODS. From contra, and the Ital. bando, an edict or proclamation.] Are those which are prohibited by act of parliament, or the king's proclamation to be imported into, or exported out of this into any other nation. See titles Navigation Acts, Customs.

CONTRACAUSATOR. A criminal, or one prosecuted for a crime: this word is mentioned in Leg. H. 1. cap. 61.

CONTRACT, contractus.] A covenant or agreement between two or more persons, with a lawful consideration or cause, West. Symb. part 1. As if a man sells his horse or other thing to another, for a sum of money; or covenants in consideration of 20*l.* to make him a lease of a farm, &c. these are good contracts, because there is a quid pro quo, or one thing for another: but if a person make promise to me, that I shall have 20*s.* and that he will be debtor to me therefore, and after I demand the 20*s.* and he will not give it me, yet I shall never have any action to recover this 20*s.* because this promise was no contract, but a bare promise, or nudum pactum; though if any thing were given for the 20*s.* if it were but to the value of a penny, then it had been a good contract. See title Consideration.

Every contract doth imply in itself an assumpsit in law, to perform the same; for a contract would be to no purpose, if there were no means to enforce the performance thereof. 1 Lill. Abr. 308. Where an action is brought upon a contract, and the plaintiff mistakes the sum agreed upon, he will fail in his action: but if he brings his action on the promise in law, which arises from the debt, there, although he mistakes the sum, he shall recover. Aleyn, 29. See titles Action, Assumpsit.

There is a diversity where a day of payment is limited on a contract, and where not; for where it is limited, the contract is good presently, and an action lies upon it, without payment: but in the other not. If a man buys 20 yards of cloth, &c. the contract is void, if he do not pay the money presently; but if day of payment be given, there the one may have an action for the money, and the other trover for the cloth. Dyer, 30. 293. Where a seller says to a buyer, he will sell his horse for so much, and the buyer says he will give it; if he presently tell out the money it is a contract; but if he do not, it is no contract. Noy's Max. 87. Hob. 41. The property of any thing sold is in the buyer immediately by the contract; though regularly it must be delivered to the buyer, before the seller can bring his action for the money. Noy, 88. If one contract to buy a horse or other thing of me, and no money is paid, or earnest given, nor day set for payment thereof, nor the thing delivered; in these cases, no action will lie for the money, or the thing sold, but it may be sold to another. Plowd. 128. 309.

All contracts are to be certain, perfect, and complete: for an agreement to give so much for a thing as it shall be reasonably worth, is void for incertainty; so a promise to pay money in a short time, &c. or to give so much, if he likes the thing when he sees it. Dyer, 91. 1 Bulst. 92. But if I contract with another to give him 10*l.* for such a thing, if I like it on seeing the same; this bargain is said to be perfect at my pleasure; though I may not take the thing before I have paid the money; if I do, the seller may have trespass against me; and if he sell it to another, I may bring an action on the case against him. Noy, 104. If a contract be to have for cattle sold 10*l.* if the buyer do a certain thing, or else to have 20*l.* it is a good contract and certain enough. And if I agree with a person to give him so much for his horse, as J. S. shall judge him worth, when he hath judged it, the contract is compleat, and an action will lie on it: and the buyer shall have a reasonable time to demand the judgment of J. S. But if he dies before the judgment is given, the contract is determined. Perk. sect. 112. 114. Shep. Abr. 294.

In contracts, the time is to be regarded, in and from which the contract is made; the words shall be taken in the common and usual sense, as they are taken in that place where spoken; and the law doth not so much look upon the form of words, as on the substance and mind of the parties therein. 5 Rep. 83. 1 Bulst. 175. A contract for goods may be made as well by word of mouth, as by deed in writing; and where it is in writing only, not sealed and delivered, it is all one as by word. But if the contract be by writing sealed and delivered, and so turned into a deed, then it is of another nature; and in this case generally the action on the verbal contract is gone, and some other action lies for breach thereof. Plowd. 130, 309. Dyer, 90.

Contracts, not to be performed in a year, are to be in writing, signed by the party, &c. or no action may be brought on them; but if no day is set, or the time is uncertain, they may be good without it. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. And by the same statute, no contract for the sale of goods for 10*l.* or upwards, shall be good, unless the buyer receive part of the goods sold; or give something in earnest to bind the contract; or some note thereof be made in writing, signed by the person charged with the contract, &c. See titles Frauds, Agreement III. IV.

If two persons come to a draper, and one says, Let this man have so much cloth, and I will pay you; there the sale is to the undertaker only, though the delivery is to another by his appointment; but if a contract be made with A. B. and the vendor scruples to let the goods go without money, and C. D. comes to him, and desires him to let A. B. have the goods, and undertakes that he shall pay him for them, that will be a promise within the statute 29 Car. 2. c. 3. and ought to be in writing. Mod. Cas. 249.

A contract made and entered into upon good consideration, may for good considerations be dissolved. See Agreement and Sale. As to Usurious Contracts, see title Usury.

CONTRAFACTION, contrafactio.] A counterfeiting. Contrafactio sigilli regis, a counterfeiting the King's seal.—Blount.

CONTRA FORMAM COLLATIONIS. A writ that lay where a man had given lands in perpetual alms, to any late houses of religion, as to an abbot and convent, or to the warden or master of any hospital and his convent, to find certain poor men with necessaries, and do divine service, &c. If they aliened the land, to the disherison of the house and church, then the donor or his heirs should bring this writ to recover the lands. It was had against the abbot or his successor; not against the alience, though he were tenant of the land: and was founded upon the statute of Westm. 2. c. 1. Reg. Orig. 238. F. N. B. 210.

CONTRA FORMAM FEOFFAMENTI. A writ that lay for the heir of a tenant, enfeoffed of certain lands or tenements, by charter of feoffment from a lord to make certain services and suits to his court, who was afterwards distrained for more services than were mentioned in the charter. Reg. Orig. 176. Old. Nat. Br. 162.

CONTRA FORMAM STATUTI, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided.] The usual conclusion of every indictment, &c. laid on an offence created by statute.

If one statute be relative to another, as where the former making the offence, the latter adds a penalty, the indictment ought to conclude contra formam statutorum. 2 Hale's Pl. C. 173. cap. 24.

Where there are several statutes, and it does not appear on which the information is founded, the concluding contra formam statuti is ill. Cro. Jac. 145. pl. 19. Broughton v. Moor, cited as adjudged in Talbot et al. Where one act makes the offence, and another gives the penalty, an information must be contra formam statutorum; in the case of Talbot and Sheldon, indicted for recusancy contra formam statuti, 23 Eliz. c. 1. and the judgment reversed because the penalty was demanded: for the 10 Eliz. made the offence, and the 23d gave the penalty: but, if the information had been for the offence only, it had been good: per Coke. Ow. 135. Trin. 9 Jac. See 5 Vin. Abr. 552. 556.—See further titles Statutes, Indictment.

CONTRAMANDATIO PLACITI. A respiting or giving a defendant further time to answer; or a countermand of what was formerly ordered. Leg. H. 1. c. 59.

CONTRAMANDATUM. A lawful excuse which the defendant in a suit by attorney alledgeth for himself, to shew that the plaintiff hath no cause of complaint. Blount.

CONTRAPOSITIO. A plea or answer. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 34.

CONTRARIENTS. In the reign of King Edward II. Thomas Earl of Lancaster taking part with the Barons against the King, it was not thought fit, in respect of their great power, to call them rebels or traitors, but contrarients; and hence we have a record of those times, called Rotulum Contrarientium.

CONTRATENERE. To with-hold. Si quis decimas contrateneat. Leg. Alfredi apud Brompton, c. 9.

CONTRAVENTION. Is the action founded on the breach of Law-burrows. Scotch Dict.

CONTRIBULES, contribunales.] Kindred or cousins.—Lamb. p. 75.

CONTRIBUTION, contributio.] Is where every one pays his share, or contributes his part to any thing. One parcener shall have contribution against another; one heir have contribution against another heir, in equal degree; and one purchaser shall have contribution against another. Also conusors in a statute shall be equally charged, and not one of them solely extended. 3 Rep. 12. 13. &c. On a statute or recognisance, there is a contribution and stay till the full age of the heir, &c. and this doth extend to the lessee for life or years, of the conusor, who has part of the land liable, and the heir within age the residue; for the land of every one of them ought to be charged equally, because the whole is liable to the judgment; and this cannot be, if during the nonage, the burthen shall fall upon one only. Jenk. Cent. 36. If lands are mortgaged, and then devised to one person for life, with remainder to another; both devisees shall make contribution to payment of the mortgage-money. Chan. Cas. 224. 271.—See title Mortgage.

Where goods are cast into the sea, for the safeguard of a ship, or other goods, &c. abroad in a tempest: there is a contribution among merchants, towards the loss of the owners. See title Insurance. And where a robbery is committed on the highway, and damages are recovered against one or a few persons in an action against the hundred, the rest of the inhabitants shall make contribution to the same. 27 Eliz. c. 13.—See title Robbery.

CONTRIBUTIONE FACIENDA. A writ that lieth where there are tenants in common, that are bound to do one thing, and one is put to the whole burden: as where they jointly hold a mill pro indiviso, and take the profits equally, and the mill falling into decay, one of them will not repair the mill: now the other shall have a writ to compel him to contribute to the reparations. And if there be three coparceners of land, that owe suit to the lord's court, and the eldest performs the whole; then may she have this writ to compel the other to make their contribution. So where one suit is required for land, and that land being sold to divers persons, suit is demanded of them all, or some of them by distress, as entirely as if all the land were still in one. Reg. Orig. 175. F. N. B. 162.

CONTROLLER, Fr. contrerolleur, Lat. contrarotulator.] An Overseer or officer relating to public accounts, &c. And we have divers officers of this name; as Controller of the King's Household; of the Navy; of the Customs; of the Excise; of the Mint, &c. And in our courts, there is the controller of the Hamper, of the Pipe, and of the Pell, &c. The office of Controller of the Household, is to control the accounts of the Green Cloth; and he sits with the Lord Steward and other officers in the countinghouse, for daily taking the accounts of all expences of the household. The Controller of the Navy controls the payment of wages; examines and audits accounts; and inquires into rates of stores for shipping, &c. Controllers of the Customs and Excise, their office is to control the accounts of those revenues. And the Controller of the Mint, controls the payment of wages, and accounts relating to the same. Controller of the Hamper is an officer in the Chancery attending the Lord Chancellor daily in term-time, and upon seal-days; whose office is to take all things sealed from the Clerk of the Hamper, inclosed in bags of leather, and to note the just number and effect of all things so received, and enter the same in a book, with all the duties appertaining to his Majesty, and other officers for the same. The Controller of the Pipe is an officer of the Exchequer, who writes out summons twice every year to the sheriffs, to levy the farms and debts of the Pipe; and keeps a controlment of the Pipes, &c. Controller of the Pell is also an officer of the Exchequer; of which sort there are two, who are the Chamberlain's clerks, that do or should keep a controlment of the Pell, of receipts and goings out; and this officer was originally such as took notes of other officers' accounts or receipts, to the intent to discover if they dealt amiss, and was ordained for the Prince's better security. Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 18. Stat. 12 Ed. 3. cap. 3. This last seems to be the original use and design of all Controllers.

CONTROVER, controveur.] One that of his own head devises or invents false news. 2 Inst. 227.

CONTROVERTED ELECTION. See Parliament VI. (B.) 3.

CONVENABLE, Fr.] Agreeable. Stat. 27 Ed. 3. c. 21. See Covenable.

CONVENIENT, convenicns.] Of the use of this word, Sir Edw. Coke in his Institute says,—Non solum quod licet sed quod est conveniens est considerandum, nihil quod est inconveniens est licitum. 1 Inst. 66.

CONVENT, conventus.] Signifies the fraternity of an abbey or priory; as societas doth the number of fellows in a college. Bract. lib. 2. c. 35.—See title Monastery, Mortmain.

CONVENTICLE, conventiculum.] A private assembly or meeting for the exercise of religion; first used as a term of disgrace for the meetings of Wickliffe in this nation, above two hundred years since; and now applied to the illegal meetings of the Nonconformists: it is mentioned in the statutes 2 Hen. 4. c. 15. 1. H. 6. c. 3. and 16 Car. 2. c. 4. which statute was made to prevent and suppress conventicles: and by stat. 22 Car. 2. cap. 1. it is enacted, that if any persons of the age of sixteen years, subjects of this kingdom, shall be present at any conventicle where there are five or more assembled, they shall be fined 5*s.* for the first offence, and 10*s.* for the second; and persons preaching incur a penalty of 20*l.* Also suffering a meeting to be held in a house, &c. is liable to 20*l.* penalty. Justices of peace have power to enter such houses, and seize persons assembled, &c. And if they neglect their duty, they shall forfeit 100*l.* And if any constable, &c. know of such meetings, and do not inform a justice of peace, or chief-magistrate, he shall forfeit 5*l.* But the Stat. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 18. ordains that protestant dissenters shall be exempted from penalties; though if they meet in a house, with the doors locked, barred, or bolted, such dissenters shall have no benefit from that statute. By stat. 52 Geo. 3. 155. the act 22 Car. 2. c. 1, was finally repealed. By stat. 10 An. c. 2. Officers of the government, &c. present at any conventicle, at which there shall be ten persons, if the Royal family be not prayed for in express words, shall forfeit 40*l.* and be disabled. See titles Nonconformist, Religion.

CONVENTIO. An agreement or covenant: as A. B. queritur, &c. de C. D. &c. pro eo quod non teneat conventionem, &c. There is a strange record of the court of the manor of Hatfield, in Com. Ebor. held anno 11 Ed. 3. relative to a con*vention* to sell the Devil, and on earnest given, and non-delivery, action brought; which on hearing was adjourned in infernum.

CONVENTIONE. A writ for the breach of any covenant in writing, whether real or personal: a Writ of Covenant. Reg. Orig. 115. F. N. B. 145.

CONVENTION. A parliament assembled, but in which no act is passed, or bill signed. Dict.

The term Convention, is rather applied to the meeting of the Lords and Commons, without the assent of, or being called together by, the King; and which can only be justified ex necessitate rei.

Of this nature was the Convention-Parliament, which restored King Charles II. and which met above a month before his return: the Lords by their own authority, and the Commons in pursuance of writs issued in the name of the keepers of the liberty of England by authority of parliament. And if this Convention had not so met, it was morally impossible that the kingdom should have been settled in peace.

In a similar manner, at the time of the Revolution. A. D. 1688, the Lords and Commons by their own authority, and upon the summons of the Prince of Orange, (afterward William III.) met in a Convention, and therein disposed of the Crown and Kingdom. And it is declared by stat. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 1. that this Convention was really the two houses of parliament, notwithstanding the want of writs or other defects of form.

If we may be allowed to suppose a possible case, that the whole Royal line should at any time fail and become extinct, which would indisputably vacate the throne; in this situation it seems reasonable to presume that the body of the nation, consisting of Lords and Commons, would have a right to meet and settle the government: otherwise there must be no government at all. But whenever the throne is full, no national meeting, nor any meeting pretending to be such, can be legal, but the parliament assembled by command of the King. See title Parliament, and 1 Comm. 151, 2.

The Constitution of Great Britain having placed the representation of the nation, and the expression of the national will, in the parliament, no other meeting or Convention even of every individual in the kingdom, would be a competent organ to express that will; and meetings of such a nature tending merely to sedition, and to delude the people into an imaginary assertion of rights, which they had before delegated to their representatives in parliament, could only tend to introduce Anarchy and Confusion; and to overturn every settled principle of government. An act of parliament was passed in Ireland, in the year 1793, to prevent any such meetings or Conventions: and a few ignorant individuals, who in the same year had dared to assemble under that title in Scotland, were quickly dispersed, and their leaders convicted of seditious practices; for which they were sentenced to transportation. See further titles Parliament, Treason, Seditious Assemblies.

CONVENTUALS. Religious men united together in a convent or religious house. Cowel.

CONVENTUAL CHURCH. A church that consists of regular clerks, professing some order of religion: or of Dean and Chapter, or other societies of Spiritual men.

CONVERSION. Is where a person finding or having the goods of another in his possession, converts them to his own use, without the consent of the owner, and for which the proprietor may maintain an action of Trover and Conversion against him.—And refusal to restore goods, is, primâ facie, sufficient evidence of a conversion, though it does not amount to a conversion. 10 Rep. 56. 3 Comm. 152. See title Trover.

CONVERSOS. The Jews here in England were formerly called Conversos, because they were converted to the Christian religion. King Hen. III. built an house for them in London, and allowed them a competent provision or subsistence for their lives; and this house was called Domus Conversorum. But by reason of the vast expences of the wars, and the increase of those converts, they became a burden to the Crown; so that they were placed in abbeys and monasteries for their support and maintenance. And the Jews being afterwards banished, King Ed. III. in the 51st year of his reign, gave this house which had been used for the converted Jews, for the keeping of the Rolls; and it is said to be the same which was till lately enjoyed by the Master of the Rolls. Blount. Harg. Co. Lit. 291 b.

CONVEYANCE. A deed which passes or conveys land from one man to another. Conveyance by feoffment, and livery, was the general conveyance at Common Law; and if there was a tenant in possession, so that livery could not be made, then was the reversion granted, and the tenant always attorned; also upon the same reason a lease and release was held to be a good conveyance to pass an estate; but the lessee was to be in actual possession, before the release. But the lease is now considered as operating so as to give the possession, which it does in point of law.

By the Common Law, when an estate did not pass by feoffment, the vendor made a lease for years, and the lessee actually entered; and the lessor granted the reversion to another, and the lessee attorned: afterwards, when an inheritance was to be granted, then likewise was a lease for years usually made, and the lessee entered (as before), and then the lessor released to him: but after the statute of uses, it became an opinion, that if a lease for years was made upon a valuable consideration, a release might operate upon it without an actual entry of the lessee; because the statute did execute the lease: and raised an use presently to the lessee: and serjeant Moor was the first who practised this way. 2 Mod. 251. 252.

The most common Conveyances now in use are deeds of gift, bargain and sale, lease and release, fines and recoveries, settlements to uses, &c.

The following further observations on conveyances at Common Law and those which derive their effect from the Statute of Uses, are abridged from the long and learned note on 1 Inst. 271 b.; to which the curious enquirer is referred for a more particular investigation of the subject. See also this Dict. titles Deed, Estate, Lease and Release, Limitation, Trusts, Uses.

FEOFFMENTS and GRANTS were the two chief modes used in the Common Law for transferring property. The most comprehensive definition which can be given of a FEOFFMENT seems to be, a conveyance of corporeal hereditaments, by delivery of the possession, upon, or within view of, the hereditaments conveyed. This delivery was thus made, that the lord and the other tenants might be witnesses to it. No charter of feoffment was necessary; it only served as an authentication of the transaction; and when it was used, the lands were supposed to be transferred, not by the charter, but by the livery which it authenticated. Soon after the Conquest, or perhaps towards the end of the Saxon government, all estates were called fees; the original and proper import of the word feoffment is, the grant of a fee. It came afterwards to signify a grant with livery of seisin of a free inheritance to a man and his heirs: more respect being had to the perpetuity, than to the feudal tenure, of the estate granted. In early times, after the Conquest, charters of Feoffment were various in point of form. In the time of Ed. I. they began to be drawn up in a more uniform stile. The more antient of them generally run with the words dedi, concessi or donavi. It was not till a later period that feoffavi came into use. The more antient feoffments were also usually made in consideration of, or for the homage and service of the feoffee, and to hold of the feoffor and his heirs. But after the stat. quiaemptores, (18 E. 1. st. 1.) feoffments were always made to hold to the chief lords of the fee, without the words pro homagio et servitio. See further, 1 Inst. 6 a: 271 b.

The proper limitation of a feoffment is to a man and his heirs; but feoffments were often made of conditional fees, (or of estates tail as they are now called,) and of life-estates; to which may be added, feoffments of estates given in frank-marriage and frankalmoigne. To make the feoffment complete, the feoffor used to give the feoffee seisin of the lands: this is what the feudists call Investiture. It was often made by symbolical tradition, but it was always made upon or within view of the lands. When the King made a feoffment he issued his writ to the sheriff, or some other person to deliver seisin: other great men did the same; and this gave rise to powers of attorney. See Mad. Form. pref.

A GRANT in the original signification of the word, is a conveyance or transfer of an incorporeal hereditament. As livery of seisin could not be had of these, the transfer of them was always made by writing, in order to produce that notoriety, which in the transfer of corporeal hereditaments was produced by delivery of the possession. But in other respects a feoffment and a grant did not materially differ.

Such was the original distinction between a feoffment and a grant; but from this real difference in their subject matter only, a difference was supposed to exist in their operation. A feoffment visibly operated on the possession; a grant could only operate on the right of the party conveying. Now as possession and freehold were synonymous terms, no persons being considered to have the possession of the lands but he who had at least an estate of freehold in them, a conveyance which was considered as transferring the possession, must necessarily be considered as transferring an estate of freehold; or, to speak more accurately, as transferring the whole fee. But this reasoning could not apply to grants; their essential quality being that of transferring things which did not lie in possession; they therefore could only transfer the right; that is, could only transfer that estate which the party had a right to convey. It is in this sense the expressions are to be understood, that a feoffment is a tortious and a grant a rightful conveyance. See title Disseisin.

This appears to have been the outline of conveyances at Common Law. The introduction of uses produced a great revolution in this respect. Uses at the Common Law, were, in most respects what trusts are now. When a feoffment was made to uses, the legal estate was in the feoffee. He filled the possession, did the feudal duties, and was in the eye of the law the tenant of the fee. The person to whose use he was seised, called the cestuy que use, had the beneficial property of the lands: had a right to the profits; and a right to call upon the feoffee to convey the estate to him, and to defend it against strangers. This right at first depended on the conscience of the feoffee; if he with-held the profits from the cestuy que use, or refused to convey the estate as he directed, the feoffee was without remedy. To redress this grievance the writ of subpœna was devised, or rather adopted from the Common Law courts, by the court of Chancery, to oblige the feoffee to attend in court and disclose the trust; and then the court compelled him to execute it.

Thus uses were established: they were not considered as issuing out of, or annexed to the land, as a rent or condition, or a right of common; but as a trust reposed in the feoffee, that he should dispose of the lands at the discretion of the cestuy que use, permit him to receive the rents, and in all other respects have the beneficial property of the lands. To all other persons except the cestuy que use, the feoffee was as much the real owner of the fee as if he did not hold it to the use of another: his wife was entitled to dower; his infant heir was in wardship to the lord; and upon his attainder the estate was forfeited.

To remedy these inconveniences, the stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10. was passed: by which the possession was devested out of the persons seised to the use, and transferred to the cestuy que use. For by that statute it is enacted "that when any person shall be seised of any lands to the use, confidence or trust of any other person or persons, by reason of any bargain, sale, feoffment, fine, recovery, contract, agreement, will, or otherwise: in such case the persons having the use, confidence or trust, should from thenceforth be deemed and adjudged in lawful seisin, estate and possession of and in the lands, in the same quality, manner and form as they had before in the use."—There seems to be little doubt but that the intention of the legislature in passing this act, was utterly to annihilate the existence of uses considered as distinct from the possession. But they have been preserved under the appellation of trusts. The courts hesitated much before they allowed them under this new name. And at length secret modes of transferring the possession itself, have been discovered, and have totally superseded that notorious and publick mode of transferring property, which the Common Law required, and the statute intended to restore; and many modifications or limitations of real property have been allowed, which the Common Law did not admit. See title Lease and Release.

A son did give and grant lands to his mother, and her heirs; though this was a defective conveyance at Common Law, yet it was adjudged good by way of use, to support the intention of the donor, and therefore, by these words, an use did arise to the mother by way of covenant to stand seised. 2 Lev. 225. A feoffment without livery and seisin, will not enure as a grant; but where made in consideration of a marriage, &c. it has been adjudged, that it did enure as a covenant to stand seised to uses. 2 Lev. 213.

Tenant in fee, in consideration of marriage, covenanted, granted, and agreed all that messuage to the use of himself for life, then to his wife for life, for her jointure, then to their first son in tail male, &c. Now by these words it appeared, that the husband intended some benefit for his wife, wherefore the court supplied other words to make the conveyance sensible. 1 Lutw. 782. 1 Inst. 271 b. n.

A conveyance cannot be fraudulent in part, and good as to the rest: for if it be fraudulent and void in part, it is void in all, and it cannot be divided. 1 Lil. Abr. 311. Fraudulent conveyances to deceive creditors, defraud purchasers, &c. are void, by stats. 13 Eliz. cap. 5. 27 Eliz. cap. 4.—See title Fraud.

CONVICT AND CONVICTION.

CONVICT, convictus.] He that is found guilty of an offence by verdict of a jury. Staund. P. C. 186. Crompton saith, that conviction is either when a man is outlawed, or appeareth and confesseth, or is found guilty by the inquest: and when a statute excludes from clergy persons found guilty of felony, &c. it extends to those who are convicted by confession. Cromp. Just. 9. The law implies that there must be a conviction, before punishment, though it is not so mentioned in a statute: and where any statute makes a second offence felony, or subject to a heavier punishment than the first, it is always implied that such offence ought to be committed after a conviction for the first. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 10. § 9. c. 41. § 3.

Judgment amounts to conviction; though it doth not follow that every one who is convict, is adjudged. A conviction at the King's suit may be pleaded to a suit by an informer, on a penal statute: because while in force it makes the party liable to the forfeiture, and no one ought to be punished twice for the same offence: but conviction may not be pleaded to a new suit by the king. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 10. A person convicted or attainted of one felony, may be prosecuted for another, to bring accessaries to punishment, &c. Fitz. Coron. 379.

Persons convicted of felony by verdict, &c. are not to be admitted to bail, unless there be some special motive for granting it; as where a man is not the same person, &c. for bail ought to be before trial, when it stands indifferent whether the party be guilty, or not. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 45. 80. See title Bail.—Conviction of felony, and other crimes, disables a man to be a juror, witness, &c. In our books conviction and attainder are often confounded. See title Attainder.

SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS are directed by several acts of parliament for the conviction of offenders, and the inflicting of certain penalties imposed by those acts. In these there is no intervention of a jury, but the party accused is acquitted or condemned by the suffrage of such person only as the statute has appointed for his judge.

Of this summary nature are all trials for offences and frauds contrary to the laws of the Excise, and other branches of the Revenue: which are to be inquired into and determined by the commissioners of the respective departments, or by justices of peace in the country. And experience has shewn that such convictions are absolutely necessary for the due collection of the public money; and are in fact, a species of mercy to the delinquents, who would be ruined by the expence and delay of frequent prosecutions by action or indictment.

Another branch of summary proceedings, is that before justices of the peace, in order to inflict divers petty pecuniary mulcts, and corporal penalties, denounced by act of parliament, for many disorderly offences; such as common swearing, drunkenness, vagrancy, idleness, and a vast variety of others subjected to their jurisdiction. See title Justice of Peace, and the titles of the various offences throughout this Dict. These offences used formerly to be punished by the verdict of a jury in the court leets, and sheriff's tourn, the King's ancient courts of law; and which were formerly much revered and respected, but are now fallen very much into disuse and contempt.

The process of these summary convictions is extremely speedy. Though the courts of Common Law have thrown one check upon them, by making it necessary to summon the party accused before he is condemned; which is now held an indispensable requisite, and is highly consonant to the general principles of justice. See Stra. 261. 678. Salk. 181. 2 Ld. Raym. 1405.—After this summons, the magistrate may go on to examine one or more witnesses, as the statute may require, upon oath; and then make his conviction of the offender in writing: upon which he usually issues his warrant, either to apprehend the offender, in case corporal punishment is to be inflicted on him; or else to levy the penalty incurred by distress and sale of his goods, according to the directions of the several statutes which create the offence, or inflict the punishment; and which usually chalk out the method by which offenders are to be convicted in such particular cases.

The magistrates ought to state in the conviction the whole of the evidence for and against the defendant. 8 T. R. 220. And not merely the legal effect of such evidence in the words of a statute, though the latter form is valid; but the magistrate subjects himself to an information if he endeavour to shelter himself from detection by mis-stating such legal result, when the evidence would not warrant it. 9 E. R. 358.

Where power of conviction is by statute given to a magistrate he is the sole judge of the weight of the evidence given before him, and the court of K. B. will not examine whether or not he has drawn a right conclusion from the evidence. 8 T. R. 588.

The witnesses must be sworn and examined in the defendant's presence. It is not sufficient to read over the deposition of a witness in the defendant's presence. 1 T. R. 125.

A summary conviction for any offence created by statute must negative every exception contained in the clause creating the offence. 8 T. R. 542.

A conviction must contain an adjudication whether the punishment be or be not fixed by the statute. 7 T. R. 288.

Outlawry is a conviction within the meaning of stat. 14 G. 2. c. 6. § 1. against sheep stealing. 4 T. R. 521.

When a penalty is to be sued for within a certain time after the offence committed, it must appear upon the face of the conviction that the prosecutor was within time. 7 E. R. 146.

In a conviction on the stat. 5 An. c. 14. for killing game, the evidence need not, but the conviction must, negative all the qualifications mentioned in the act, 22, 23 Car. 2. § 25.—1 T. R. 125. 1 E. R. 643. See title Game.

See further this Dictionary title Justices of Peace.—Burn's Justice, title Conviction; and 4 Comm. c. 20. as to the policy of extending this summary mode of proceeding.

CONVICT RECUSANT. According to the statutes. See titles Recusant, Papist.

CONVIVIUM. Signifies the same thing among the laity, as procuratio doth with the clergy, viz. When the tenant by reason of his tenure is bound to provide meat and drink for his lord once or oftener in the year. Blount.

CONVOCATION, convocatio.] The assembly of the representatives of the Clergy, to consult of ecclesiastical matters in time of parliament, as there are two houses of parliament, so there are two houses of convocation: the one called the Higher or Upper House, where the archbishops and all the bishops sit severally by themselves: and the other, the Lower House of Convocation, where all the rest of the clergy sit, i. e. All deans and archdeacons, one proctor for every chapter, and two proctors for all the clergy of each diocese, making in the whole number one hundred and sixty-six persons. Each convocation house hath a prolocutor, chosen from among themselves, and that of the lower house is presented to the bishops, &c.

The Archbishop of Canterbury is the President of the Convocation, and prorogues and dissolves it by mandate from the King. The convocation exercises jurisdiction in making of canons, with the King's assent: for by the stat. 25 H. 8. c. 19. the convocation is not only to be assembled by the King's writ: but the canons are to have the royal assent: they have the examining and censuring of heretical and schismatical books and persons, &c. But appeal lies to the King in chancery, or to his delegates. 4 Inst. 322. 2 Rol. Abr. 225. But in case the King himself be a party, the appeal lies by stat. 24 H. 8. c. 12. to all the bishops assembled in the Upper House of Convocation. See 3 Comm. 67.

Mr. Christian, in his note on 1 Comm. 280. remarks that from the statement there given, the student would perhaps be apt to suppose that there is only one convocation at a time. But the King before the meeting of every new parliament, directs his writ to each archbishop to summon a convocation in his peculiar province.

Godolphin says, that the convocation of the province of York, constantly corresponds, debates, and concludes the same matters with the provincial synod of Canterbury. God. 99. But they are certainly distinct and independent of each other; and when they used to tax the clergy, the different convocations sometimes granted different subsidies. In 22 Hen. 8. the convocation of Canterbury had granted the King 100,000*l.* in consideration of which an act of parliament was passed, granting a free pardon to the clergy for all spiritual offences: but with a proviso, that it should not extend to the province of York, unless its convocation would grant a subsidy in proportion; or unless its clergy would bind themselves individually to contribute as bountifully This statute is recited at large in Gib. Cod. 77.

All Deans and Archdeacons (as has been already observed) are members of the convocation of their province; each chapter sends one proctor or representative, and the parochial clergy in each diocese of Canterbury, two proctors; but on account of the small number of dioceses in the province of York, each archdeaconry elects two proctors. In York the convocation consists only of one house: but in Canterbury there are two houses, of which the twenty-two bishops form the Upper House; "wherein the Archbishop presides with regal state," (says Blackstone, 1 Comm. 279); and before the reformation, abbots, priors, and other mitred prelates sat with the bishops. The Lower House of Convocation in the province of Canterbury, consists of twenty-two Deans, fifty-three Archdeacons, twenty-four Proctors for the Chapters, and forty-four Proctors for the Parochial Clergy. Total 144.

By stat. 8 H. 6. c. 1. the clergy in their attendance on the Convocation, have the same privilege in freedom from arrest as the members of the House of Commons, in their attendance on Parliament.

CONVOY. See Insurance, I. 3.

CONUSANCE OF PLEAS. A privilege that a city or town hath to hold pleas. See Cognisance.

CONUSANT, Fr. connoissant.] Knowing or understanding: as if the son be conusant, and agreed to the feoffment, &c. Co. Lit. 159.

COOPERS. Shall make their vessels of seasonable wood, and mark them with their own marks, on pain of 3*s.* 4*d.* forfeiture; and the contents of vessels are appointed to be observed under like penalty, as the beer barrel shall contain thirty-six gallons, a kilderkin eighteen, a firkin nine, &c. The wardens of the Cooper's company in London, with an officer of the mayor, are to search all vessels for ale, beer, and soap to be sold there; and to mark them that are right, and they may burn those that be not so: and if any cooper, &c. diminish a vessel by taking out the head, or a stave thereof, it shall be burnt and the offender forfeit 3*s.* 4*d.*—Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 4.

COOPERTIO. The head or branches of a tree cut down; though Coopertio Arborum is rather the bark of timber trees felled, and the chumps and broken wood. Cowel.

COOPERTURA. A thicket or covert of wood. Chart. de Foresta, cap. 12.

COPARCENERS, participes.] Otherwise called Parceners, are such as have equal portion in the inheritance of an ancestor, and by law are the issue female, which, in default of heirs male, come in equality to the lands of their ancestors. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 30. They are to make partition of the lands; which ought to be made by coparceners of full age, &c. And if the estate of a coparcener be in part evicted, the partition shall be avoided in the whole. Lit. 243. 1 Inst. 173. 1 Rep. 87. The Crown of England is not subject to coparcenary; and there is no coparcenary in dignities, &c. Co. Lit. 27. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 22.—See titles Descent, Parceners.

COPARTNERSHIP. See titles Partners and Partnership.

COPE. A custom or tribute due to the King, or lord of the soil, out of the lead mines in some part of Derbyshire; of which Manlove saith:

Egress and regress to the King's highway,
The miners have: and lot and cope they pay:
The thirteenth dish of ore within their mine,
To the lord for lot, they pay at measuring time;
Six-pence a load for cope the lord demands,
And that is paid to the berghmaster's hands, &c.

See also Sir John Pettus's Fodinæ Regales, where he treats on this subject. This word, by Domesday Book, as Mr. Hagar hath interpreted it, signifies a hill: and Cope is taken for the supreme cover, as the cope of heaven. Also it is used for the roof and covering of a house; the upper garment of a priest, &c.

COPIA LIBELLI DELIBERANDA. A writ that lay where a man could not get the copy of a libel at the hand of a judge ecclesiastical, to have the same delivered to him. Reg. Orig. 51.

COPPA. A cop or cock of grass, hay or corn divided into titheable portions; as the tenth cock, &c. This word in strictness, denotes the gathering or laying up the corn in copes, or heaps, as the method is for barley or oats, &c. not bound up, that it may be the more fairly and justly tithed; and in Kent they still retain the word, a cop or cap of hay, straw, &c. Thorn in Chron.

COPPER AND COPPER ORE. Copper plates and copper fully wrought, to what duties liable. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 5. § 2 All copper may be exported paying the lawful duties and customs, 5 W. & M. c. 17.—See 41 G. 3. (U. K.) c. 68. and 43 G. 3. c. 153. § 11. regulating the exportation of copper: by the latter act the exportation of copper applicable to naval purposes may be prohibited by proclamation during the then existing war. See further title Navigation Acts.

COPPER-PLATE ENGRAVINGS.—See title Literary Property, &c.

COPY, copia.] In a legal sense the transcript of an original writing; as the copy of a patent, of a charter, deed, &c. A clause out of a patent, taken from the chapel of the Rolls, cannot be given in evidence; but there must be a true copy of the whole charter examined: it is the same of a record. And if upon a trial, some part of an office copy is given in evidence to prove a deed, which deed is to prove the party's title to the land in question, that gives it in evidence; if that part of the office copy given in evidence, be not so much of it as doth any ways concern the land in question, the court will not admit of it; for the court will have a copy of the whole given, or no part of it shall be admitted. 1 Lil. Abr. 312. 313. Where a deed is inrolled certifying an attested copy is proof of the inrolment; and such copy may be given in evidence. 3 Lev. 387. A common deed cannot be proved by a copy or counterpart, when the original may be procured. 10 Rep. 92. And a copy of a will of lands, or the probate, is not sufficient; but the will must be shewn as evidence. 2 Rol. Abr. 74. Copies of court rolls admitted as evidence. See at large title Evidence.

COPYHOLD.

Tenura per copiam rotuli curiæ.] A tenure for which the tenant hath nothing to shew but the copy of the rolls, made by the steward of the lord's court; on such tenant's being admitted to any parcel of land or tenement belonging to the manor. 4 Rep. 25. It is called base tenure, because, held at the will of the lord, and Fitzherbert says, it was anciently tenure in villenage, and that copyhold is but a new name. See this Dict. title Tenures, III. 13. Some Copyholds are held by the verge in ancient demesne: and though they are by copy, yet are they a kind of freehold; for if a tenant of such copyhold commit felony; the King hath the year, day, and waste, as in the case of freeholders: some other copyholds are such as the tenants hold by common tenure, called mere copyhold, whose land, upon felony committed, escheats to the lord of the manor. Kitch. 81. But copyhold land cannot be made at this day; for the pillars of a copyhold estate are, That it hath been demised time out of mind by copy of court-roll; and that the tenements are parcel of, or within, the manor. 1 Inst. 58. 4 Rep 24.

A copyhold cannot be created by operation of law: and therefore where wastes are severed from the manor, by a grant of the latter, with the exception of the former, though the copyholders continue to have a right of common in the wastes by immemorial usage: yet if afterwards a grant of the soil of those wastes be made to trustees for the use of the copyholders in free socage, the lands when inclosed, will be freehold, and not copyhold. 2 Term Rep. 415. 705.

COPYHOLD.

A copyhold tenant had originally in judgment of law but an estate at will; yet custom so established his estate that by the custom of the manor it was descendible, and his heirs inherited it; and therefore the estate of the copyholder is not merely at the will of the lord, but at the will of the lord, according to the custom of the manor; so that the custom of the manor is the life of copyhold estates; for without a custom, or if copyholders break their custom, they are subject to the will of the lord; and as a copyhold is created by custom, so it is guided by custom. 4 Rep. 21. A copyholder, so long as he doth his services, and doth not break the custom of the manor, cannot be ejected by the lord: if he be, he shall have trespass against him: but if a copyholder refuses to perform his services, it is a breach of the custom, and forfeiture of his estate.

It appears that estates held by copy of court roll, but not at the will of the lord, have been deemed freehold by Lord Coke (See 1 Inst. 59 b), and others; and in order to distinguish them from the ordinary kind, have been denominated customary freeholds. In consequence of the prevalence of this notion, a considerable number of such tenants claimed a right of voting as freeholders at the election of knights of the Shire.—This gave occasion to a short treatise on this subject, in which the origin of lands held in this peculiar way is traced, and it is proved that though these tenures in some respects resemble freeholds, they are in truth nothing more than a superior kind of copyhold. Soon after the publication of this treatise, the stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 14. was past, declaring that no person holding by copy of court-roll should be entitled to vote at the election of Knights of the Shire.

The freehold, of an estate parcel of a manor, and demiseable only by leave of the lord, passing by surrender and admittance to hold to the tenant and his heirs of the lord by the accustomed rent, &c. is in the lord and not in the tenant, though not holden at the will of the lord. 7 E. R. 298.

One may hold the prima tonsura, or fore crop of land as copyhold, and another may have the soil, and every other beneficial enjoyment of it as freehold. 7 E. R. 200.

In some manors where the custom hath been to permit the heir to succeed the ancestor in his tenure, the estates are styled Copyholds of Inheritance: in others, where the lords have been more vigilant to maintain their rights, they remain copyholds for life only. For the custom of the manor has in both cases so far superseded the will of the lord, that provided the services be performed, or stipulated for by fealty, he cannot in the first instance refuse to admit the heir of his tenant upon his death; nor in the second can he remove his present tenant so long as he lives, though he holds nominally by the precarious tenure of his lord's will. 2 Comm. 97. 147. And see title Ancient Demesne.

If the lord refuses to admit he shall be compelled in Chancery. 2 Cro. 368.—And if the lord refuse to admit a surrenderee, on account of a disagreement about the fine to be paid, the court of B. R. will grant a mandamus to compel the lord to admit without examining the right to the fine. 2 Term Rep. 484.—But that court will not grant a mandamus to admit a copyholder by descent; because without admittance he has a complete title against all the world but the lord. 2 Term Rep. 198.

One who has a primâ facie title to a copyhold is entitled to inspect the court rolls and take copies of them, so far as relates to the copyhold claimed, though no cause be depending for it at the time. 10 E. R. 235.

Copyholds descend according to the rules and maxims of the Common Law (unless in particular manors, where there are contrary customs, of great antiquity); 1 T. R. 474.: but such customary inheritances shall not be assets, to charge the heir in action of debt, &c. 4 Rep. 22. Kitch. Though a lease for one year of copyhold lands, which is warranted by the Common Law, shall be assets in the hand of an executor. 1 Vent. 163. Copyholders hold their estates free from charges of dower, being created by custom, which is paramont to title of dower. 4 Rep. 21. Copyhold inheritances have no collateral qualities, which do not concern the descent; as to make them assets; or whereof a wife may be endowed; a husband be tenant by the curtesy, &c. But by particular custom, there may be dower and tenancy by the curtesy. Cro. Eliz. 361. There may be an estate-tail in copyhold lands by custom, with the co-operation of the stat. W. 2. And as a copyhold may be entailed by custom, so by custom the tail may be cut off by surrender. 1 Inst. 60.

Where by special custom a descent of copyholds may be, contrary to the rules of the Common Law, such custom shall be interpreted strictly: thus, where there is a custom within a manor, that lands shall descend to the eldest sister, where there is neither a son nor a daughter; this shall not extend to an eldest niece: but in default of such son, daughter and sister, the lands must descend according to the rules of the Common Law. 1 Term Rep. 466. See 12 E. R. 62.

Evidence of reputation of the custom of a manor that, in default of sons, the eldest daughter, and in default also of daughters the eldest sister, and in case of the death of all the descendants of the eldest daughter or sister, the descendants of the other daughters or sisters respectively, of the person last seised, should take, is proper to be left to the Jury of the existence of such a custom, as applied to a great nephew (the grandson of an elder sister) of the person last seised: although the instances in which it was proved to have been put in use extended no further than those of eldest daughter and eldest sister, and the son of an eldest sister. Doe, d. Foster, v. Sisson. 50 Geo. 3. 12. E. R. 62.—The existence of such custom in adjacent manors seems to be no evidence of the custom in the particular manor, ib.

Copyhold descending by custom to all the children equally of the tenant last seised, one of the parceners may maintain ejectment on his single demise for his own share. Roe, d. Raper, v. Lansdale. 50 G. 3. 10. East Rep. 39.

A copyhold may be barred by a recovery, by special custom; and a surrender may bar the issue by custom. A fine and recovery at Common Law will not destroy a copyhold estate; because Common Law assurances do not work upon the assurance of the Copyhold: though copyhold lands are within the stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24. of fines and proclamations, and five years non-claim, and shall be barred. 1 Rol. Abr. 506. See title Fines.

A plaint may be made in the court of the manor, in the nature of a real action, and a recovery shall be had in that plaint against tenant in tail, and such a recovery shall be a discontinuance to the estate-tail. 1 Brownl. 121. And the suffering a recovery by a copyholder tenant for life in the lord's court is no forfeiture, unless there is a particular custom for it. 1 Nels. Abr. 507. Copyholders may entail copyhold lands, and bar the entails and remainders, by committing a forfeiture, as making lease without licence, &c. and then the lord is to make three proclamations, and seize the copyhold, after which the lands are granted to the copyholder, and his heirs, &c. This is the manner in some places, but it must be warranted by custom. 2 Danv. Abr. 191. Sid. 314.

Customs ought to be time out of memory, to be reasonable, &c. And a custom in deprivation or bar of a copyhold estate, shall be taken strictly; but when for making and maintaining, it shall be construed favourably. Comp. Cop. sect. 33. Cro. El. 879. An unreasonable custom, as for a lord to exact exorbitant fines; for a copyholder for life to cut down and fell timber-trees, &c. is void. A copyholder for life pleaded a custom, that every copyholder for life might, in the presence of two other copyholders, appoint who should have his copy- hold after his death, and that the two copyholders might assess a fine, so as not to be less than had been usually paid; and it was adjudged a good custom. 4 Leon. 238. But a custom to compel a lord to make a grant, is said to be against law; though it may be good to admit a tenant. Moor, 788.

If there be a custom within a manor for a lord to grant parcels of the waste by copy of court roll, the land granted by that mode is well described as copyhold, though the date of the grant be modern. 3 Bos. and Pul. 346.

The lord of a manor has no right to enter on a copyhold of inheritance, and cut timber for his own use leaving sufficient for Botes and Estovers, unless there be a custom in the manor for his so doing. Whitechurch v. Holworthy. Term Rep. K. B. Mic. 56 Geo. 3. 340.

By the custom of some manors, where copyhold lands are granted to two or more persons for lives, the person first named in the copy may surrender all the lands. 1 Nels. Abr. 497. There are customs ratione loci, different from other places: but though a custom may be applied to a particular place, yet it is against the nature of a custom of a manor to apply it to one particular tenant. 1 Nels. 504. 1 Lutw. 126.

A single instance of a surrender in fee, by tenant in special tail of a copyhold estate, held evidence of a custom within the manor to bar entails by surrender, though the surrenderer had not been dead 20 years, and though one instance was proved of a recovery suffered by tenant in tail to bar the entail. 2 Maul. and Selw. Rep. 92.

A custom that all the customary tenants of a manor having gardens, parcel of their customary tenements respectively, have immemorially by themselves, their tenants and occupiers, dug, taken, and carried away from a waste within the manor, to be used upon their said customary tenements, for the purpose of making and repairing grass plats in the gardens parcels of the same respectively, for the IMPROVEMENT thereof, such turf covered with grass fit for the pasture of cattle as hath been fit, and proper to be so used at all times of the year, as often and in such quantity as occasion hath required; is bad in law as being indefinite and uncertain and destructive of the common: and so is a similar custom for taking and applying such turf for the purpose of making and repairing the banks and mounds in of and for the hedges and fences of such customary tenements. 7 East. Rep. 121.

There are usually custom-rolls of manors, exhibited on oath by the tenants; setting forth the bounds of the manor, the royalties of the lord, services of the copyhold tenants, the tenures granted, whether for life, &c. concerning admittances, surrenders, and the rights of the copyholders, as to taking timber for repairs, fire-bote, &c. Common belonging to the tenants, payment of rent, suing in the court of the manor, taking heriots, &c. All which customs are to be observed. Comp. Court. Keep. 21.

When an act of parliament altereth the service, customs, tenure, and interest of land, in prejudice of the lord or tenant, there the general words of such an act shall not extend to copyholds. 3 Rep. 7.—Copyholds are not within the stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10. of jointures; nor stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. of leases, Copyholds being in their nature demisable only by copy: they are not within the statute of uses; nor are copyholds extendible in execution: but copyholds are within the statute of limitation of actions; and the statutes against bankrupts. The lord shall have the custody of the lands of ideots, &c. And a copyholder is not within the act 12 Car. 2. c. 24. to dispose of the custody and guardianship of the heir; for if there be a custom for it, it belongs to the lord of the manor. 3 Lev. 395. 1 Nels. Abr. 492. 522.

Copyholders shall neither implead nor be impleaded for their tenements by writ, but by plaint in the lord's court held within the manor: and if on such plaint, erroneous judgment be given, no writ of false judgment lies, but petition to the lord in nature of a writ of false judgment, wherein errors are to be assigned, and remedy given according to law. Co. Lit. 60.

Where a man holds copyhold lands in trust to surrender to another, &c. if he refuses to surrender to the other accordingly, he may be compelled by bill exhibited in the lord's court, who, as chancellor, has power to do right. 1 Leon. 2. A copyholder may have a formedon in descender in the lord's court. Lessee of a copyholder for life for one year, shall maintain an ejectment. 4 Rep. 26. Moor, 679. It is every day's practice to bring ejectments, to recover the possession of copyholds; for defendant by the rule, obliging himself to confess lease, entry, and ouster, the title only can come in question on the trial. But the lessor of plaintiff, before be brings his ejectment should be admitted. See title Ejectment.

A manor is lost when there are no customary tenants or copyholders; and if a copyhold comes into the hands of the lord in fee, and the lord leases it for one year, or half a year, or for any certain time, it can never be granted by copy after: but if the lord alters the manor, &c. his alienee may re-grant land by copy. If the lord keeps the copyhold for a long time in his hand, it is no impediment but that he may after grant it again by copy. 2 Danv. Abr. 176. 177. A copyholder in fee accepts of a lease, grant, or confirmation of the same land from the lord, this determines his copyhold estate. 2 Cro. 16. Cro. Jac. 253. If a copyholder bargains and sells his copyhold to a lessee for years, &c. of the manor, his copyhold is extinguished. 2 Danv. 205. A copyholder may grant his estate to his lord, by bargain and sale, release, &c. for between lord and tenant the conveyance need not be according to custom. 1 Nels. 504. A copyholder in other cases cannot alien by deed; though he that hath a right only to a copyhold may release it by deed. And if a copyhold surrenders upon condition, he may afterwards release the condition by deed. 2 Danv. 205. Cro. Jac. 36. Also one joint copyholder may release to another, which will be good without any admittance, &c. Ibid.

A Copyholder cannot convey or transfer his copyhold estate to another, otherwise than by surrender; which is the yielding up of the land by the tenant to the lord: according to the custom of the manor, to the use of him that is to have the estate: or it is in order, to a new grant, and further estate on the same.

As to copyhold grants; which are made either in fee, or for three lives, &c. the lord of the manor that hath a lawful estate therein, whether he be tenant for life or years, tenant by statute merchant, &c. or at will, is dominus pro tempore, and may grant lands, herbage of lands, a fair, mill, tithes, &c. and any thing that concerns lands, by copy of court-roll, according to custom; and such grants shall bind those in remainder: the rents and services reserved by them shall be annexed to the manor, and attend the owner thereof after their particular estates are ended. 4 Rep. 23. 11 Rep. 18. And if a lord of the manor for the time being, lessee for life, years, &c. take a surrender, and before admittance he dieth, or the years or interest determine, though the next lord comes in above the lease for life or years, or other particular interest, yet he shall be compelled to make admittance according to the surrender. Co. Lit. 59. But a lord at will, of a copyhold manor, cannot licence a copyhold tenant to make a lease for years; though he may grant a copyhold for life according to the custom: if a lord for life gives licence to a tenant to make a lease for years, this lease shall continue no longer than the life of the lord. 2 Danv. Abr. 202.

If he that is lord of the manor for the time being admits one to a copyhold, he dispenses with all precedent forfeitures; not only as to himself, but also as to him in reversion; for such grant and admittance amount to an entry for the forfeiture, and a new grant; but a lord by tort cannot by such admittance purge the forfeiture as to the rightful lord. 1 Lev. 26. Grants by copy of court-roll by infants, &c. will be binding: and if a guardian in socage grants a copyhold in reversion, according to the custom of the manor, this shall be a good grant. 2 Rol. Abr. 41. If baron and feme seised of a manor in right of the feme grant a copyhold, this shall bind the feme notwithstanding her coverture. 4 Rep. 23. An executor may make grants of copyhold estates, according to the custom of the manor, where a devise is made that the executor shall grant copies for payment of debts. 2 Danv. 178.

A manor may be held by copy of court-roll, and the lord of such manor may grant copies; and such customary manor may pass by surrender and admittance, &c. A customary manor may be holden of another manor, and such customary lord may grant copies and hold courts: but a copyholder, lord of such a manor, cannot hold a court baron to have forfeitures, and hold pleas in a writ of right, &c. 1 Nels. Abr. 524.

All grants of copyhold estates are to be according to the custom of the manor; and rents and services customary must be reserved; for what acts of the lord in granting copyholds are not confirmed by custom, but only strengthened by the power and interest and the lord, have no longer duration than the lord's estate continueth. Comp. Court Keeper, 421. If by the custom, a copyhold may be granted for three lives, and the lord grants it to one for life, remainder to such woman as he shall marry, and to the first son of his body; both these remainders are void: and a remainder limited upon a void estate in the creation, will be likewise void. But if by custom it is demisable in fee, a surrender may be to the use of one for life, remainder in tail, remainder in fee. 2 Danv. Abr. 203. Cro. Eliz. 373. It is held, where by the custom of a manor the lord can grant a copyhold for three lives, he may grant it for an estate coming within the intent of the custom; as to A. B, and his assigns, to hold to him and his assigns for the lives of three others, and of the longer liver of them successively, &c. 2 Ld. Raym. 994. 1000.

The lord of a manor may himself grant a copyhold estate at any place out of the manor; but the steward cannot grant a copyhold at a court held out of the manor. 4 Rep. 26. Though the steward may take surrenders out of the manor, as well as the lord. 2 Danv. Abr. 181. A steward is in place of the lord, and without a command to the contrary may grant lands by copy, &c. But if a lord command a steward that he shall not grant such a copy, if he grants it, it is void: and if the steward diminishes the ancient rents and services, the grant will be void. Cro. Eliz. 699.

Things of necessity done by a steward, who is but in reputed authority, are good if they come in by presentment of the jury; as the admittance of an heir upon presentment, &c. Though acts voluntary, as grants of copyhold, &c. are not good by such stewards. Cro. Eliz. 699. If an under-steward hold a court without any disturbance of the lord of the manor, though he hath no patent nor deputation to hold it, yet it is good; because the tenants are not to examine what authority he hath, nor is he bound to give them an account of it. Moor, 110. A deputy steward may authorise another to do a particular act; but cannot make a deputy to act in general. 2 Salk. 95.

In admittances, in court upon voluntary grants, the lord is proprietor: in admittances upon surrender, the lord is not proprietor of the lands but only a necessary instrument of conveyance; and in admittances by descent the lord is a mere instrument, not being necessary to strengthen the heir's title, but only to give the lord his fine. 4 Rep. 21, 22. The heir of a copyholder may enter, and bring trespass, before admittance, being in by descent; and he may surrender before admittance; but he is not compleat tenant to be sworn of the homage, or to maintain a plaint in the lord's court. And if the heir do not come in and be admitted, on the death of his ancestor, where the same is presented and proclamation made, he may forfeit his estate. Cro. El. 90. 4 Rep. 22. 27.

On surrender of a copyhold, the surrenderor or person making the same, continues tenant till the admittance of the surrenderee; and the surrenderee may not enter upon the lands, or surrender before admittance, for he hath no estate till then; though it is otherwise of the heir by descent, who is in by course of law, and the custom casts the possession upon him. Comp. Court Keep. 436. A surrender is not of any effect until admittance, and yet the surrenderee cannot be defrauded of the benefit of the surrender; for the surrenderor cannot pass away the land to another or make it subject to any other incumbrances; and if the lord refuse the surrenderee admittance, he is compellable in Chancery. Comp. Cop. sect. 39. A grantee hath no interest vested in him till he is admitted; but admittance of a copyholder for life is an admittance of him in remainder, for they are but one estate; and the remainder-man may, after the death of tenant for life, surrender without admittance. 3 Lev. 308. Cro. El. 504.

The title to copyhold lands relates back to the time of the surrender, as against all persons except the lord: so that the surrenderee may recover in ejectment against the surrenderor on a demise laid between the times of surrender and admittance. 1 Term. Rep. K. B. 600.

Every admittance upon a descent or surrender may be pleaded as a grant; and a person may alledge the admittance of his ancestor as a grant; and shew the descent to him, and that he entered, &c. But he cannot plead that his father was seised in fee, &c. and that he died seised, and the land descended to him. 2 Danv. 208. Admittance on surrenders must, in all respects, agree with the surrender; the lord having only a customary power to admit secundum formam et effectum sursum-reddditionis. 4 Rep. 26. If any are admitted otherwise, they shall be seized according to the surrender: yet where a voluntary surrender is general, without saying to whose use, a subsequent admittance may explain it. 2 Danv. 187. 204.

In voluntary admittances, if the lord admits any one contrary to custom, it shall not bind his heir or successor. If a copyholder surrender to the use of another, and after the lord, having knowledge of it, accepts the rent of such other out of court, this is an admittance in law: and any act, implying the consent of the lord to the surrender, shall be adjudged a good admittance. 1 Nels. Abr. 493. If the steward accept a fine of a copyholder, it amounts to an admittance. 2 Danv. 189. But delivering a copy is no admittance.

An enclosure made from the waste 12 or 13 years before, and seen by the steward of the same lord from time to time without objection made, may be presumed by the Jury to have been made by the licence of the lord, and ejectment cannot be brought against the tenant without previous notice to throw up the land. 11 E. R. 56.

Where a widow's estate is created by custom, that shall be an admittance in law: and her estate arising out of that of her husband's, his admittance is the admittance of her. Hut. 18. And she who hath a widow's estate by the custom of the manor, upon the death of her husband, need not pay a fine to the lord for the estate; for this is only a branch of the husband's. Hob. 181. When a custom is, that the wife of every copyholder for life shall have her free bench, after the death of the baron, the law casts the estate upon the wife, so that she shall have it before admittance, &c. 2 Danv. 184. But if a wife is entitled to her free bench by custom, and a copyholder in fee surrenders to the use of another, and then dies; it has been adjudged, that the surrenderee should have the land, and not the wife; because the wife's title doth not commence till after the death of her husband; but the plain-tiff's title begins with the surrender, and the admittance relates to that. 1 Inst. 59. 1 Salk. 185.

The widow's title commenced not by the marriage; if it did, then the husband could do nothing in his lifetime to prejudice it: but it is plain he may alien or extinguish his right, so as to bind the estate of the widow: the free bench grows out of the estate of the husband; and it is his dying seised which gives the widow a title, and as the husband has a defeasible estate, so the wife may have her free-bench defeated. 4 Mod. Rep. 452. 453.

Entries on the rolls of a manor of admissions of tenants in remainder, after the determination of the estate of the last tenant's widow, who held during his chaste viduity, are evidence of a custom for the widow to hold on that condition, so as to maintain ejectment against her for a forfeiture on proof of her incontinence, although there was no instance in fact stated on the rolls or known of such a forfeiture having been enforced. 10 East's Rep. 520.

A copyholder may surrender in court, by letter of attorney: and out of court, by special custom. 9 Rep. 75. 76. A copyholder being in Ireland, the steward of a manor here made a commission to one to receive a surrender from him there, and it was held good. 2 Danv. 181.

The intent of surrenders is, that the lord may not be a stranger to his tenant, and the alteration of the estate. As a copyholder cannot transfer his estate to a stranger by any other conveyance than surrender: so if one would exchange a copyhold with another, both must surrender to each other's use, and the lord admit accordingly. Comp. Cop. s. 39.

With respect to the devising of copyholds, the law formerly was, that no such devise could be made without a surrender to the use of the party's will; and that the lands did not then pass by the will but by the surrender, the will being considered only as declaratory of the uses of the surrender. Many evils were found to result in the cases of creditors, wives, and children, from this necessity of a surrender to a will, and the courts of equity were astute in finding reasons for supplying the surrender, with due precaution in favour of the claims of the several parties. See 3 P. Wms. 98 in n.

All these questions are now set at rest by a statute passed for that purpose, 55 Geo. 3. c. 192. by which it is enacted, That in all cases where, by the custom of any manor in England, [or Ireland, though instances of copyhold are rare there,] any copyhold tenant of such manor may by will dispose of or charge land, surrendered to the use of the will, every disposition or charge of any such copyhold, made by the will of any person who shall hereafter die, shall be as valid and effectual, although no surrender shall have been made to the use of the will, as if such surrender had been actually made. On admissions under testamentary dispositions, the steward is allowed to charge his fees, as in cases of a surrender to the use of the will. § 2. The act shall not affect the validity of Devises. § 3.

In the case of copyholds devised to charitable uses, the want of surrender in such cases is made good, not by the discretion of the court, but by the strong and general words of stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4. Attorney General v. Burdett, 2 Vern. 755. Duke's Char. Uses, 84. Attorney General v. Andrews, 1 Ves. 225.

A cestui que trust may devise an interest in land, &c. without surrender; and if copyhold lands are in mortgage, the mortgagor can dispose of the equity of redemption by will, without any surrender made; because he hath at that time no estate in the land, whereof to make a surrender. Præced. Canc. 320. 322. One jointenant may surrender his part in the lands to the use of his will, &c. And where there are two jointenants of a copyhold in fee, if one of them make a surrender to the use of his will, and die, and the devisee is admitted, the surrender and admittance shall bind the survivor. 2 Cro. 100.

A surrender of copyhold lands to the use of a will only operates on the estate which the surrenderor had at the time of the surrender; and therefore if a copyholder, having an estate pour autre vie, surrender all his estate in possession, remainder or expectancy, to the use of his will, and afterwards take the fee by descent and then dispose of the fee by will, the fee will not pass by it. 6 Term Rep. 63.

Devisees of contingent remainders in a copyhold, not being in the seisin, cannot make a surrender of their interest, nor will such a surrender operate by estoppel against the parties or their heirs. 11 E. R. 185.

A surrender may not be to commence in futuro; as after the death of the surrenderor, &c. March, 177. A copyholder cannot surrender an estate absolutely to another, and leave a particular estate in himself: though he may surrender to uses, &c. A copyholder surrendered to the use of his wife and younger son, without mentioning what estate; and adjudged, that they had an estate for life. 4 Rep. 29. If a man having bought a copyhold to himself, his wife and daughter, and their heirs, afterwards surrenders it to another and his heirs, for securing a sum of money: after his death, the surrenderee shall not be entitled to the land, it being an advancement for the wife and daughter. 2 Vern. 120.

A feme covert may receive a copyhold estate, by surrender from her husband, because she comes not in immediately by him, but by the admittance of the lord, according to the surrender. 4 Rep. 29 b. A feme covert is to be secretly examined by the steward, on her surrendering her estate. Co. Lit. 59. An infant surrendered his copyhold, and afterwards entered at full age, and it was held lawful, though the surrenderee was admitted. Moor, 597.

By the general custom of copyhold estates, copyholders may surrender in court, and need not alledge any particular custom to warrant it: but where they surrender out of court, into the hands of the lord by customary tenants, &c. custom must be pleaded. 9 Rep. 75. 1 Rol. Abr. 500. Surrenders out of court are to be presented at the next court: for it is not an effectual surrender till presented in court. Where a copyholder in fee surrenders out of court, and dies before it is presented, yet the surrender, being presented at the next court, will stand good, and cestui que use shall be admitted: so if cestui que use dies before it is presented, his heir shall be admitted. But if the surrender be not presented at the next court, it is void. Co. Lit. 62. 2 Danv. 188. If the tenants by whose hands the surrender was made shall die, and this upon proof is presented in court, it is well enough. 4 Rep. 29.

Tenants refusing to make presentment are compellable in the lord's court. And by surrender of copyhold lands to the use of a mortgagee, the lands are bound in equity, though the surrender be not presented at the next court. 2 Salk. 449. When a copyholder surrenders upon condition, and this is presented absolutely, the presentment is void: but where a conditional surrender is presented, and the steward omits entering the condition, on proof thereof the condition shall not be avoided; but the rolls shall be amended. 4 Rep. 25. A copyholder may surrender to the use of another, reserving rent with a condition of re-entry for non-payment, and in default of payment may re-enter. Ibid. 21.

If a copyholder of inheritance takes a lease for years of his copyhold estate, it is a surrender in law of his copyhold. Where there is a tenant for life, and remainder in fee, he in remainder may surrender his estate, if there be no custom to the contrary. 3 Leon. 329. If a surrender is made with remainders over, case lies, for him in remainder, against a copyholder for life, who commits waste, &c. 3 Lev. 128. A surrenderee of a reversion of a copyhold is an assignee within the equity of the stat. 32 H. 8. c. 34. to bring action of debt or covenant against lessee, &c. 1 Salk. 185. A copyholder in fee surrenders to the use of one for life, with remainder to another for life, remainder to another in fee; as the particular estates and remainders make but one estate, there is but one fine due to the lord. 2 Danv. 191.

The fruits and appendages of a copyhold tenure, that it hath in common with free tenures are Fealty, Services, (as well in rents as otherwise,) Reliefs and Escheats. The two latter belong only to copyholds of inheritance: the former to those for life also. But besides these, Copyholds have also Heriots, Wardship and Fines. Heriots are incident to both species of copyhold, but wardship and fines to those of inheritance only. Wardship in copyhold estates partakes both of that in chivalry and that in socage. Like that in chivalry the lord is the legal guardian, who usually assigns some relation of the infant tenant to act in his stead; and he, like guardian in socage, is accountable to his ward for the profits. Of fines, some are in the nature of primer seisins due on the death of each tenant: others are mere fines for the alienation of the lands. In some manors only one of these sorts can be demanded; in some both, and in others neither. They are sometimes arbitrary and at the will of the lord, sometimes fixed by custom: but even when arbitrary, the courts of law, in favour of the liberty of copyholders, have tied them down to be reasonable in their extent: otherwise they might amount to a disherison of the estate. No fine therefore is allowed to be taken upon descents or alienations (unless in particular circumstances) of more than two years' improved value of the estate. 2 Ch. Rep. 134. See 2 Comm. 97.

Fines are paid to the lord on admittances: and may be due on every change of the estate by lord or tenant. The lord may have an action of debt for his fine: or may distrain by custom. 4 Rep. 27. 13 Rep. 2.

A Covenant made by a copyholder with a stranger to assign and surrender his copyhold to him, which covenant is afterwards presented by the homagee, does not give the lord any right to a fine before admission. 2 T. R. 484. The lord may recover from a copyholder the fine assessed by him on admittance, not exceeding two years' value of the tenement, although there be no entry of the assessment of such fine on the court rolls, but only a demand of such a sum for a fine, after the value of the tenement had been found by the homagee. 6 E. R. 56.

An heriot is a duty to the lord, rendered at the death of the tenant, or on a surrender and alienation of an estate: and is the best beast or goods, found in the possession of the tenant deceased, or otherwise, according to custom. And for heriots, reliefs, &c. the lord may distrain, or bring action of debt.—Plowd. 96.

It seems that a custom for the homage to assess a compensation in lieu of heriot, to be paid by an in-coming copyholder on surrender or alienation, is not good. 1 Bos. & Pul. 282. See title Heriot.

Relief is a sum of money which every copyholder in fee, or freeholder of a manor, pays to the lord, on the death of his ancestor; and is generally a year's profits of his land. See titles Tenure, Relief.

Services signify any duty whatsoever accruing unto the lord from tenants; and are not only annual and accidental; but corporal, as homage, fealty, &c. Comp. Court. Keep. 7. 8. 9. &c.

Copyholds escheat, and are forfeited in many cases; escheat of a copyhold estate, is either where the lands fall into the hands of the lord for want of an heir to inherit them; or where the copyholder commits felony, &c. But before the lord can enter on an estate escheated, the homage jury ought to present it.—Forfeitures proceeding from treasons, felonies, alienation by deed, &c. a presentment of them must be also made in court, that the lord may have notice of them. A copyholder refusing to do suit of court, being sufficiently warned, is a forfeiture of his estate; unless he be prevented by sickness, inundations of water, &c. If the lord demandeth his rent, and the copyholder being present, denies to pay it at the time required, this is a forfeiture; but if the tenant be not upon the ground when demanded, the lord must continue his demand upon the land; so that by continual denial in law, it may amount to a denial in fact: though it is said there must be a demand from the person of the copyholder, and a wilful denial, to make a forfeiture.

If a Copyholder do not perform the services due to his lord; or if he sue a replevin against the lord, upon the lord's lawful distress for his rent or services, these are forfeitures. If the lord upon admittance of a copyholder, the fine by the custom of the manor being certain, demandeth his fine, and the copyholder denieth to pay it upon demand, this is a forfeiture.

Upon the descent of any copyhold of inheritance, the heir by the general custom is tied, upon three solemn proclamations, made at each of three several courts, to come in and be admitted to his copyhold; or if he faileth therein, this failure worketh a forfeiture.

The proclamations need not enumerate the particular estate of which the tenant died seized. 3 T. R. 162. Nor is it necessary they should be proved by vivâ voce testimony. The entry in the court rolls is sufficient. Ibid. A person claiming to be admitted as heir need not tender himself to be admitted at the lord's court, if the steward upon application to him out of court has refused to admit him. 2 Maul. & Selw. Rep. 87.

A lord of a manor cannot seize a copyhold estate as forfeited pro defectu tenentis without a custom: therefore when on the death of a copyholder of inheritance, the lord, after three proclamations for the heir to come in, seized the estate into his hands and afterwards granted it in fee to another, the court considered it as an absolute seizure, and consequently irregular, there being no custom to warrant it, and being irregular as an absolute seizure it could not afterwards be set up by the lord as a seizure quousque. 3 T. R. 162.

A forfeiture of a copyhold estate can only be taken advantage of by him who is lord at the time of the forfeiture, except in those cases where the act of forfeiture destroys the estate. 3 T. R. 162.

An ideot, lunatick, &c. though able to take copyholds, they yet are unable to forfeit them: and in respect to others, forfeitures may be mitigated by custom, and the copyholder only amerced. By stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 29. on default of infants and feme coverts appearing to be admitted tenants to copyhold lands, the lord or his steward may name a person to be guardian or attorney for them, and by such guardian, &c. admit them: and if the usual fine thereon be not paid in three months, being demanded in writing, the lord may enter on the copyhold, receive the rents, &c. till the fine is paid with all charges. And by this statute no infant or feme covert shall forfeit any copyhold lands for their neglect to come to court to be admitted, or refusal to pay any fine.

The general custom of copyholds allows a copyholder to make a lease for one year of his copyhold estate and no more, without incurring a forfeiture: but a copyholder may make a lease for one year, and covenant with the lessee, that, after the end of that year, he shall have the same for another year, and so from year to year during the space of seven years, &c. and be no forfeiture. Cro. Jac. 300. For this does not amount to a lease, but is only a covenant, subjecting the covenantor to an action for damages. Though a copyholder may not make a lease to hold for one year, and so from year to year during his life, excepting one day yearly, &c. which will be a forfeiture, being a mere evasion. But a licence to lease may be had. A woman who was a copyholder in fee married, her husband made a lease for years, not warranted by the custom, which was a forfeiture; the husband died; and adjudged that the lord shall not take advantage of this forfeiture after his death, but the wife shall enjoy the estate. Cro. Car. 7. And see 4 Rep. 21 to 25. &c.

Livery upon any conveyance of a copyhold estate amounts to a forfeiture. And yet if a copyholder for life surrender to another in fee, this is no forfeiture; for it passeth by the surrender to the lord, and not by livery.

If copyholder for life cut down timber-trees, it is a forfeiture of his copyhold; though such copyholder may take house-bote, hedge-bote, and plough-bote, upon his copyhold, of common right, as a thing incident to the grant; if he be not restrained by custom, to take them by the assignment of the lord or his bailiff. Where a copyholder for life fells timber trees, the lord may take them, and the estate is forfeited; but if under lessee for years of a copyholder cut down timber, this shall not be a forfeiture of the copyhold estate, but the lord is put to his action on the case against the lessee. 1 Bulst. 150. Style, 233. A copyhold granted to two for their lives successively, where the custom of the manor is, that they shall not fell trees; if the first copyholder for life cut down trees, &c. it is not only a forfeiture of his own estate for life, but of him in remainder. Moor, 49.

In other cases, a copyholder for life, committing waste, shall not forfeit the estate of him in remainder. Cro. Eliz. 880. If copyholder for life, where the remainder is over for life, commits a forfeiture by waste, &c. he in remainder shall not enter, but the lord. 2 Danv. 198. A copyholder committing waste voluntary, or permissive, this is a forfeiture: voluntary, as if he pull down any house, though built by himself; lop trees, and fell them, plough up meadows whereby the ground is made worse, &c. Permissive, if he suffer the roof of the house to let in rain, or the house to fall; or if he permit his meadow-ground to be surrounded with water, so that it becomes marshy, or his arable land to be thus surrounded, and become unprofitable, &c. these and the like are forfeitures. See 2 Danv. Abr. 192. 193. 196. &c. 1 Nels. Abr. 509. 510. &c.

If a feme copyholder for life takes husband, who commits waste and dies, the estate of the feme is forfeited: though not if a stranger commit the waste, without the assent of the husband. 4 Rep. 37. Sed qu. the difference between copyholder for life and copyholder in fee, in this respect; unless waste is distinguished from other forfeitures?

Most forfeitures are caused by acts contrary to the tenure: but a succeeding lord of a manor, shall not have any advantage of a forfeiture, by waste done by a copyholder in the time of his predecessor. 2 Sid. 8. And if a present lord doth any thing whereby he acknowledges the person to be his tenant after forfeiture, this acknowledgement is a confirmation of his estate. Coke's Cop. c. 1.

The lord may enter for waste committed by a copyholder for life, though there be an intermediate estate in remainder between the estate of copyholder for life and the lord's reversion. 2 Maul. & Selw. Rep. 68.

The court of Chancery will sometimes relieve against a forfeiture for waste, and compel the lord to re-admit, on receiving satisfaction for the injury he has sustained. Such relief is particularly given where the waste is committed through ignorance, or where the waste is merely permissive, and there has not been an obstinate perseverance in neglecting to repair after notice. 1 C. C. 95. Pre. Ch. 568. Another instance in which relief against forfeiture for waste is said to be proper, is where the lessee of a copyholder commits waste without his direction or privity. Toth. 237. But in this latter case it may be doubted whether the waste is a forfeiture. See Mo. 49.

Also, When the estate is forfeited for non-payment of rent, a fine, or such things, where a value may be set on them, and compensation made the lord on any laches of time, the tenant may be relieved: for there the land is but in nature of a security for those sums. Preced. Chan. 569. 572.

In case of making a lease for years, without licence, and not warranted by custom, found to be forfeiture at law, equity has nothing to do with it, to give any remedy; it is like to a feoffment made, or fine levied by particular tenants, against which there can be no relief. Ibid. 574. Where copyhold lands are purchased in fee, in trust for an alien, the lands are not seizable by the King: nor is the trust forfeited to him; for if the lands were forfeited as purchased for such alien, then the lord of the manor would lose his fines and services, &c. Hard. 436.

By stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 26. Copyhold estates of poor prisoners may be assigned to creditors, and the assignees admitted by the lord, on paying the usual fine due on a surrender, &c.; and see stat. 1 Geo. 3. c. 17. § 14. as to Insolvents.

By stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 14. § 1. already mentioned, copyholders are not to vote for Knights of the Shire.—The admission of infants and feme coverts entitled by descent, or surrender to the use of a will, is regulated by stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 29.—And the stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 46. (explained by 6 Geo. 3. c. 49.) compels the steward to receive the stamp duty on admission, &c. at the same time he receives the fees of court.

COPY-RIGHT. The exclusive right of printing and publishing copies of any literary performance; extended also to music, engravings, &c. See title Literary Property.

CORAAGE, Coraagium.] A kind of extraordinary imposition, growing upon some unusual occasion, and seems to be of certain measures of corn: for corus tritici is a measure of wheat. See Bract. lib. 2. c. 16. Numb. 6. Numb. 8. Blount.

CORACLE. A small boat used by fishermen on some parts of the river Severn, made of an oval form, of split sallow twigs interwoven, and on that part next the water covered with leather, in which one man, being seated in the middle, will row himself swiftly with one hand, while with the other he manages his net or fish-tackle; and coming off the water, he will take the light vessel on his back, and carry it home. This boat is of the same nature as the Indian canoes: though not of the same form, or employed to the like use. But quere if not long out of use?

CORAM NON JUDICE. Is when a cause is brought and determined in a court whereof the judges have not any jurisdiction: then it is said to be coram non judice, and void. 2 Cro. 351.

CORBEL STONES. Are stones wherein images stand: the old English corbel was properly a niche in the wall of a church, or other structure, in which an image was placed for ornament or superstition: and the corbel stones were the smooth polished stones, laid for the front and outside of the corbels or niches. The niches remain on the outside of very many churches and steeples in England, though the little statues and reliques are most of them broken down. Paroch. Antiq. 575.

CORD OF WOOD. Is a quantity of wood eight feet long, four feet broad, and four feet high, ordained by the statute.

CORDAGE, Fr.] Is a general appellation for all stuff to make ropes, and for all kind of ropes belonging to the rigging of a ship; it is mentioned in 15 Car. 2. c. 13. and see stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 56. against frauds in the manufacture of cordage for shipping. See Sail Cloth.

CORDINER. See Cordwainer.

CORDUBANARIUS. A Cordwainer; A shoemaker, Cowel. from the Fr. Cordouannier, a shoemaker; we call him vulgarly a Cordwainer; and so this word is used in divers statutes; as 3 H. 8. c. 10. 5 H. 8. c. 7. 27 H. 8. c. 14. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 13. 1 Jac. 1. c. 22. &c. By which last statutes the masters and wardens of the Cordwainers' Company in London, &c. are to appoint searchers and triers of leather; and leather is not to be sold before searched and sealed, &c.

CORETES. From the Brit. Cored, pools, ponds, &c.—Et cum suis piscibus et coretibus anguillarum et cum toto territorio suo. Du Fresne.

CORIUM FORISFACERE. Was where a person was condemned to be whipped; which was anciently the punishment of a servant. Corium perdere, the same: and corium redimere is to compound for a whipping.

CORN. As to the general provisions relative to the importation and exportation of Corn, see title Navigation-Acts.—And as to the exportation of Corn to enemies in time of war, see stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 27. and tit. Treason.

No corn was formerly to be exported, without the King's licence: except for the victualling of ships, and in some special cases, from some ports only: and none might by stat. 5 Eliz. c. 12. buy corn to sell again without licence from justices. But now corn, as wheat, barley, oats, &c. may be exported to states in amity when they exceed not certain prices, regulated by many statutes; and the exporters of it shall pay no duty or custom, but be entitled to bounty money or a certain allowance for exportation.

By stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 22. if any person use violence on another person to hinder him from buying or carrying corn to any sea-port town to be transported, &c. he shall be imprisoned by two justices, for not more than exceeding three months, and be publicly whipped, &c. and committing a second offence, or destroying granaries, or corn in any boat or vessel, to be adjudged a felon, and transported for seven years: and the hundred to make good the damage, if not above 100*l.* as in cases of robbery; where an offender is not apprehended and convicted within twelve months; but notice must be given to the constable in two days.—Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 56. ordains the bounty on ground corn to be regulated by weight; and stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 15. appoints interest to be paid on debentures for the bounty of corn exported. A corn market established at Westminster, by stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 25. § 1. Forms of the certificates of prices of grain, to regulate the price of bread are settled by stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 29. See title Bread.

The principal acts now in force to regulate the returns of the prices of grain are stats. 31 Geo. 3. c. 30. 33 Geo 3. c. 65. by the former of which several statutes (viz. 1 Jac. 2. c. 19. 1 W. & M. c. 12. 5 Geo. 2. c. 12. 10 Geo. 3. c. 39. 13 Geo. 3. c. 43; 21 Geo. 3. c. 50. and 29 Geo. 3. c. 58.) are all repealed; as also every provision in any other act for regulating the importation of wheat, &c. except such as relate to the making of malt for exportation and the exportation thereof.—So much of stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 7. as prohibits the buying of corn to sell again, and the laying it up in granaries is also repealed.

By the statutes 31 Geo. 3. c. 30. 33 Geo. 3. c. 65. bounties are granted on exportation at certain prices, and the exportation prohibited when at higher prices.—The quantity of corn to be exported is settled; (as to which see also 34 Geo. 3. c. 71. 53 Geo. 3. c. 38.)—The maritime counties of England are divided into districts.—The exportation of corn to be regulated in London, Kent, Essex, and Sussex by the prices at the Corn Exchange, the proprietors of which are to appoint an Inspector of corn returns, to whom weekly returns are to be made by the factors: and he is to make up weekly accounts, and transmit the average price to the receiver of the returns, to be transmitted to the officers of the customs and inserted in the London Gazette.—The exportation in other districts, and in Scotland, to be regulated by the prices at different appointed places, for which mayors, justices, &c. are to elect inspectors.—Declarations are to be truly made by factors of the corn sold by them.—Orders of council may be made to regulate importation or exportation from time to time. Such orders to be laid before parliament.—See also stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 50. and 33 Geo. 3. c. 3. as to the exportation of wheat, and as to trans-shipping of corn brought coastwise. By 44 Geo. 3. c. 109. 45 Geo. 3. c. 86. the mode of ascertaining the average price, to regulate the importation and exportation of corn to and from Great Britain, is further provided for.—By the latter act such average is to result from the prices in the twelve maritime districts of England and Wales.—See also 46 Geo. 3. c. 11: 55 Geo. 3. c. 26. § 5.

By several acts made from time to time with a view to relieve the public against the scarcity or dearness of corn, the exportation and importation of corn and provisions are allowed to be prohibited and regulated by order of the King (or lord lieutenant of Ireland) and council. See 35 Geo. 3. c. 4. 36 Geo. 3. c. 3. 37 Geo. 3. c. 7. 39 Geo. 3. c. 87. (continued by various subsequent acts): 39, 40 Geo. 3. c. 9. and c. 58. 41 Geo. 3. (G. B.) c. 2. c. 5. 41 Geo. 3. (U. K.) c. 36. (for Ireland, continued by several subsequent acts.)—By others of these temporary acts Bounties are given on the importation of corn, flour, &c.—See 36 Geo. 3. c. 21. c. 56. 37 Geo. 3. c. 7. c. 83. 38 Geo. 3. c. 10. 39, 40 Geo. 3. c. 29. c. 35. c. 53. 41 Geo. 3. B.) c. 3.—or in making malt, 41 Geo. 3. (U. K.) c. 16. (in Ireland).—And in like manner the manufacture of flour and bread has been occasionally regulated. See 41 Geo. 3. (G. B.) c. 16. 48 Geo. 3. (U. K.) c. 1. 2.—(And see title Bread.)

By stat. 54 Geo. 3. c. 69. to permit the Exportation of Corn, grain, meal, malt, and flour from any part of the United Kingdom, without payment of duty or receiving of bounty, all duties and bounties on the exportation of corn are repealed; and it is enacted, that it shall be lawful for any person to export at all times from any port of the United Kingdom, any corn, &c. without the payment of any duty of customs thereon; and that no person shall be entitled to any bounty upon or in respect of the exportation of any corn, &c.

By stat. 55 Geo. 3. c. 26. to amend the laws in force for regulating the Importation of Corn, it is enacted that all foreign corn, meal or flour, importable by law, may, at all times, be allowed to be imported into the United Kingdom, and warehoused without payment of any duty, and taken out of warehouse for exportation, without duty, § 1.—That such corn may be taken out of warehouse for home consumption, without duty, whenever foreign corn is admissible into the kingdom, § 2.—Foreign corn, meal, or flour may be admitted into the United Kingdom, free of duty, whenever the prices of British corn are at or above the following rates per quarter, viz. wheat 80*s.*; rye, peas, and beans, 53*s.*; barley, beer or bigg, 40*s.*; oats, 27*s.* § 3.—When British corn is below those prices, no corn shall be imported, or taken out of warehouse, for home consumption, § 4.—Corn, &c. the growth of the British North American Colonies may be imported duty-free, for home consumption, whenever British corn is at or under the following prices: wheat, 67*s.*; rye, &c. 44*s*; barley, &c. 33*s.*; oats, 22*s.* per quarter, § 6—9.—See also 57 G. 3. c. 85. (a temporary act) permitting the importation of corn, &c. in any ship, from any country, under the regulations as to price, &c. in 55 Geo. 3. c. 26.

To preserve the markets of corn uninterrupted, it is enacted by 36 Geo. 3. c. 9. that persons hindering the buying of corn, or seizing it in its progress from place to place shall be punished by imprisonment in the house of correction, § 1.—Persons convicted of such offence a second time, and persons destroying store-houses or carrying Corn away therefrom unlawfully, are punishable by seven years' transportation, § 2.—The hundred is made liable to damages (not exceeding 100*l.*) in case the offender is not convicted within twelve months, § 3—5.

The intercourse of corn between Great Britain and Ireland has been regulated by various acts since the Union. See 42 Geo. 3. c. 35. 43 Geo. 3. c. 14.; continued by various acts, till 36 Geo. 3. c. 97.; by which last act the free interchange of every species of grain (the product of either country, 47 Geo. 3. c. 7.) is permitted between the two countries without respect to the prices, and without any duties or bounties.

With respect to the exportation of certain quantities of corn annually to Guernsey, Jersey, &c. see 36 Geo. 3. c. 21. 38 Geo. 3, c. 29. 43 Geo. 3 c. 105. (made perpetual by 45 Geo. 3. c. 68. § 4.)—46 Geo. 3. c. 98. § 4.

CORNAGE, Cornagium, from the Lat. Cornu, a horn.] A kind of tenure in grand serjeanty; the service of which was to blow a horn when any invasion of the Scots was perceived: and by this tenure many persons held their lands Northward, about the wall commonly called the Picts Wall. Cambd. Britan. 609. This old service of horn-blowing was afterwards paid in money, and the sheriffs accounted for it under the title of Cornagium.—Sir Edward Coke in his first Institute, page 107. says cornage is also called in the old books Horngeld; but they seem to differ much. See Hornegeld.

CORNARE. To blow in the horn.—Matt. Paris, p. 181.

CORN-RENTS. By stat. 18 El. s. 6. on college leases, one third of the old rent shall be reserved in wheat or malt, &c. the invention of Lord Treasurer Burleigh, and Sir Thomas Smith, who observed the value of money to sink much, and the price of provisions to rise greatly, on our communication with the Indies: and therefore devised this method for upholding the revenues of the colleges. 2 Comm. 322.

CORNWALL. A royal dutchy belonging to the Prince of Wales, abounding with mines, and having Stannary courts, &c. It yields a great revenue to the Prince. How leases are to be made of lands in the dutchy of Cornwall, for three lives, or thirty-one years, under the ancient rents, &c. See stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 4. and 12 Ann. c. 22. 24 Geo. 2. c. 50. and 1 Geo. 3. c. 11. Assizes for Cornwall not confined to Launceston. 1 Geo. 1. c. 45. Leases by Prince of Wales of lands in Cornwall, where good. 10 Geo. 2. c. 29. § 9. 10. 11. 33 Geo. 3. c. 78. 50 Geo. 3. c. 6. What leases and grants by the king shall be good. 33 Geo. 2. c. 10. See title King.

CORODY, Corodium.] Signifies a sum of money or allowance of meat, drink, and clothing due to the king from an abbey, or other house of religion, whereof he was founder, towards the sustentation of such a one of his servants as he thought fit to bestow it upon. The difference between a corody and a pension seems to be, that a corody was allowed towards the maintenance of any of the king's servants in an abbey: a pension is given to one of the king's chaplains, for his better maintenance, till he may be provided of a benefice. And as to both these, see Fitz. Nat. Br. fol. 250. where are set down all the Corodies and pensions that our abbeys when they were standing, were obliged to pay to the king.

Corody is ancient in our laws: and it is mentioned in Staundf. Prærog. 44. And by the stat. of Westm. 2. c. 25. it is ordained, that an assize shall lie for a corody. It is also apparent by stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 26. that corodies belonged sometimes to bishops, and noblemen, from monasteries: and in the New Terms of Law, it is said that a corody may be due to a common person, by grant from one to another; or of common right to him that is a founder of a religious house, not holden in Frankalmoigne; for that tenure was a discharge of all corodies in itself: by this book it likewise appears, that a corody is either certain or uncertain, and may not be only for life or years, but in fee. Termes de Ley. 2 Inst. 630. See the Monasticon Anglicanum for the form of a grant of corody.

CORODIO HABENDO. A writ to exact a corody of an abbey or religious house. Reg. Orig. 264.

CORONA MALA, OR MALA CORONA. The clergy who abused their character, were formerly so called. Blount.

CORONARE FILIUM. To make one's son a priest. Anciently lords of manors, whose tenants held by villenage, did prohibit them coronare filios, lest such lords should lose a villein by their entering into holy orders: for ordination changed their condition, and gave them liberty, to the prejudice of the lord, who could before claim them as his natives or born servants.—Homo Coronatus was one who had received the first tonsure, as preparatory to superior orders; and the tonsure was in form of a corona, or crown of thorns. Cowel.

CORONER, CORONATOR, à Corona.] An ancient officer at the Common law. Mention is made of him in King Athelstan's charter to Beverley. Anno 905.

He is called Coroner, Coronator—because he hath principally to do with pleas of the crown, or such wherein the king is more immediately concerned. 2 Inst. 31. 4 Inst. 271. And in this light the Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench is the principal Coroner in the kingdom, and may (if he pleases) exercise the jurisdiction of a coroner in any part of the realm. 4 Rep. 57. But there are also particular coroners for every county of England; usually four, but sometimes six, and sometimes fewer. F. N. B. 163. This office is of equal antiquity with that of sheriff, and was ordained together with him to keep the peace, when the earls gave up the wardship of the county. Mirror, c. 1. § 3.

I. His election and removal.
II. 1. His Power and Duty; 2. His Fees for the Execution of his Duty; and 3. His Punishment for the Breach of it.

I. HE IS STILL CHOSEN by all the freeholders in the county-court; as by the policy of our ancient laws, the sheriff and conservators of the peace, and all other officers were who were concerned in matters that affected the liberty of the people. 2 Inst. 558. And as Verderors of the forests still are, whose business it is to stand between the prerogative and the subject in the execution of the forest laws. For this purpose there is a writ at common law de coronatore eligendo, F. N. B. 163. in which it is expressly commanded the sheriff, "quod talem eligi faciat, qui melius et sciat, et velit, et possit, officio illi intendere." See post. And in order to effect this the more surely, it was enacted by stat. Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 10. that none but lawful and discreet knights should be chosen; and there was an instance in the 5 Ed. III. of a man being removed from this office because he was only a merchant. 2 Inst. 32. But it seems it is now sufficient if a man hath lands enough to be made a knight; (which by the statutum de militibus, 1 Ed. II. were lands to the amount of 20*l. per annum*;) whether he be really knighted or not. F. N. B. 163, 4. For the Coroner ought to have an estate sufficient to maintain the dignity of his office, and answer any fines that may be set upon him for his misbehaviour. Ibid. And if he hath not enough to answer, his fine shall be levied on the county, as the punishment for electing an insufficient officer. Mirror, c. 1. § 3. 2 Inst. 175. Now indeed, through the culpable neglect of gentlemen of property, this office has been suffered to fall into disrepute, and get into low and indigent hands; so that although formerly no coroners would condescend to be paid for serving their country, and they were by the aforesaid stat. Westm. 1. expressly forbidden to take a reward, under pain of great forfeiture to the king; yet for many years past they have only desired to be chosen for the sake of their perquisites: being allowed fees for their attendance. See post, II. 2.

By stat. 28 Ed. 3. c. 6. it is enacted, "That all coroners of the counties shall be chosen in the full counties of the most mete and lawful people that shall be found in the same countids, to execute the said office: saved always to the King and other lords, who ought to make such coroners, their seignories and franchises."

The oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration, are to be taken, and then the oaths of office: when the coroner is elected, and sworn into his office, he is to remember the qualification-acts, and in due time, to take the sacrament and oaths of abjuration. Impey's Sheriff.

Some doubts and difficulties which existed as to the election of Coroners, (in England and Wales,) are obviated by stat. 58 Geo. 3. c. 95. by which it is enacted, that the sheriff shall hold his county-court for the election of coroners, at the usual place of election, at the county-court next after receipt of the writ de coronatore eligendo, (or within fourteen days after, if the court falls within six days of delivery of the writ,) giving ten days' notice. That if the election is not determined on view, a poll shall be taken, which shall be determined within ten days. That the voters (if required) shall swear they are bonâ fide freeholders (but the amount of the freehold is not specified). That mortgagors or cestui que trusts shall vote, (unless the mortagee or trustee be in actual possession, who may then vote.) That freeholds shall not be split by conveyance for creating votes: and that the expences of the poll shall be defrayed by the candidates.

The Coroner is chosen for life: but may be removed, by either being made sheriff, or chosen verderor, which are offices incompatible with the other: or by the King's writ de coronatore exonerando, for a cause to be therein assigned: as that he is engaged in other business, is incapacitated by years, or sickness, hath not a sufficient estate in the county, or lives in an inconvenient part of it. F. N. B. 163, 4. See post. And by stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 29. extortion, neglect or misbehaviour, are also made causes of removal. See post, II. 3.

There are Special Coroners, within divers liberties, as well as the ordinary officers in every county: as the Coroner of the Verge, which is a certain compass about the King's court; who is likewise called Coroner of the King's Household.—Cromp. Juris. 102.

The King's coroner shall execute his office within the verge. Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 10. sect. 7. Some corporations and colleges are licensed by charter to appoint their coroners within their own precincts. 4 Inst. 271. For what arises on the high sea, we read of coroners appointed by the King or his admiral. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 53. See post, Coroner of the King's Household.

It is said Coroners are of three kinds. 1. By virtue of an office. 2. By charter or commission. 3. By election.

1. The Chief Justice of K. B.—2. The Lord Mayor of London is by charter 18 E. IV. Coroner of London. See post. —The Bishop of Ely also hath power to make coroners, by a charter of Hen. VII.: and there are Coroners of particular lords of franchises and liberties who by charter have power to create their own coroners, or to be coroners themselves, especially in the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, as well as that of the verge above referred to.—3. The general coroners of counties.—See 1 Hale, 52. 4 Rep. 57. 1 Com. 384.

The Coroner of Portsmouth has jurisdiction on board a man of war lying in Portsmouth harbour; for though the Admiralty have a coroner of their own, he never takes inquisitions of felo de se. Stra. 1097. Andr. 231.

II. The Office of Coroners especially concerns the pleas of the crown; and they are conservators of the peace in the county where generally elected. Their authority is judicial and ministerial. Judicial where one comes to a violent death, and to take and enter appeals of murder, pronounce judgment upon outlawries, &c. And to inquire of lands and goods, and escapes of murderers, treasure-trove, wreck of the sea, deodands, &c. The ministerial power is where the Coroners execute the King's writs, on exception to the sheriff, as by his being party to a suit, kin to either of the parties, on default of the sheriff, &c. 4 Inst. 271. 1 Plowd. 73. And the authority of coroners does not determine by the demise of the King. 2 Inst. 174.

Where Coroners are empowered to act as judges, as in taking an inquisition of death, or receiving an appeal of felony, &c. the act of one of them is of the same force as if they had all joined; but after one of them has proceeded to act, the act of another of them will be void: And where they are authorised to act only ministerially, in the execution of a process directed to them upon the incapacity of the sheriff, their acts are void, if they do not all join. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 45. Hob. 70.

So that Coroners as ministers must all join; but as judges, they may divide. But two coroners ought to be judges in redisseisin; and though one serves to pronounce an outlawry, the entry ought to be in the name of all of them: And so of all processes directed to the coroners. Staundf. 53. Jenk. Cent. 85.

If the sheriff is either plaintiff or defendant, or one of the cognisees, the writ must be directed to the coroner. Cro. Car. 300. But the coroner is not the officer of B. R. but where the sheriff is improper; not where there is no sheriff; for if the sheriff die, the coroner cannot execute a writ. In case of two coroners, if one is challenged, the other may execute the writ, &c. yet both make but one officer: It is the same with two sheriffs of a city, &c. 1 Salk. 144. A venire facias shall go to the coroner, where the sheriff is a party, or the defendant is a servant to the sheriff, &c. But it ought to be on a principal challenge to the favour. Moor, 470.

On defaults of sheriffs, coroners are to impanel juries, and return issues on juries not appearing, &c. As the sheriff in his torn might enquire of all felonies by the common law, saving the death of a man; so the coroner can inquire of no felony but the death of a person and that super visum corporis. 4 Inst. 271. But in Northumberland the coroner by custom may inquire of other felonies. 35 H. 6. 27. But without custom no coroner is authorised to take any other inquisition than on death. 2 Hale, 65. See Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 9. § 35 n. By Magna Charta, cap. 17. no sheriff &c. or coroner shall hold pleas of the crown: But by stat. West. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 10. it is enacted, that the coroners shall lawfully attach and present pleas of the crown; and that sheriffs shall have counter-rolls with the coroners, as well of appeals, as of inquests, &c.

Coroners, before the stat. Magna Charta, might not only receive accusations against offenders, but might try them: But since that statute, they cannot proceed so far; and appeals before them are removable into B. R. &c. by certiorari, directed to the coroners and sheriffs, &c. Though process may be awarded by the sheriff and coroner, or the coroner only, in the county-court on appeals, till the exigent, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 41.

By the stat. de officio coronatoris, 4 Ed. 1. st. 2. the Coroner is to go to the place where any person is slain or suddenly dead, and shall by his warrant to the bailiffs, constables, &c. summon a jury out of the four or five neighbouring towns, to make inquiry upon view of the body; and the coroner and jury are to inquire into the manner of killing, and all circumstances that occasioned the party's death; who were present, whether the dead person was known, where he lay the night before, &c. Examine the body if there be any signs of strangling about the neck, or of cords about the members, &c. Also all wounds ought to be viewed and inquiry made with what weapons, &c. And the coroner may send his warrant for witnesses, and take their examination in writing: and if any appear guilty of the murder, he shall inquire what goods and lands he hath: and then the dead body is to be buried. A coroner may likewise commit the person to prison who is by his inquisition found guilty of the murder; and the witnesses are to be bound by recognisance to appear at the next assises, &c.

When the jury have brought in their verdict, the coroner is to inroll and return the inquisition, whether it be brought in murder, manslaughter, &c. to the justices of the next gaol-delivery of the county, or certify it into B. R. where the murderers shall be proceeded against. 2 Rol. Abr. 32. Upon an inquisition taken before the coroner, he must put into writing the effect of the evidence given to the jury before him; and bind them to appear, &c. which is to be certified to the court with the inquisition: and neglecting it the coroner shall be fined. 1 & 2 P. M. c. 13. 1 Lil. Abr. 317.

The word Murdravit is not necessary in a coroner's inquisition: though it is in an indictment for killing another person. 1 Salk. 377. It is not necessary that the inquisition be taken in the place where the body was viewed. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 25. But a coroner has no authority to take an inquisition of death, without a view of the body; and if the inquest be taken by him without such view, it is void. 2 Lev. 140.

The coroner may in convenient time take up a dead body that hath been buried, in order to view it; but if it be buried so long that he can discover nothing from the viewing it, or if there be danger of infection, the inquest ought not to be taken by the coroner, but by justices of peace, by the testimony of witnesses; for none can take it on view, but the coroner. Bro. Coron. 167. 173. If the body is buried, the town shall be amerced: as it shall be if the body is suffered to lie so long that it stinks. 2 Danv. Abr. 209. &c. Where the body hath lain for some time, that it cannot be judged how it came by its death, that must be recorded; that at the coming of the justices of assise, the town where, &c. may be amerced on sight of the coroner's rolls.

A coroner may find any nuisance by which the death of a man happens: and the township shall be amerced on such finding. 1 Nels. Abr. 536. If one is slain in the day, and the murderer escapes, the town where done shall be amerced, and the coroner is to enquire thereof on view of the body. Stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 1. A coroner may take an indictment upon view of the body; as also an appeal, within a year after the death of one slain. Wood's Inst. 491. But a coroner super visum corporis, cannot make an inquisition of an accessary after the murder; though he may of accessaries before the fact. Moor, 29.

Coroners ought to sit and inquire on the body of every prisoner that dies in prison: They have no jurisdiction within the verge of the King's courts; nor of offences, committed at sea, or between high and low water mark when the tide is in; though they have in arms and creeks of the sea. 3 Inst. 134. See ante I. ad finem.

Where a coroner's inquest is quashed, he must make a new one super visum corporis: And a coroner may attend and amend his inquisition in matters of form: But if he misbehaves himself, and a melius inquirendum is granted upon it, that inquisition must be taken by the sheriffs or commissioners, upon affidavits, and not super visum corporis; because none but a coroner can take inquisition super visum, &c. and he is not to be trusted again. 1 Salk. 190. 2 Danv. Abr. 210.

A coroner's inquisition being final, the coroner ought to hear counsel and evidence on both sides. 2 Sid. 90. 101. The coroner must admit evidence, as well against the King's interest, as for it; but it hath been held, that if a person be killed by another, and it is certainly known that he did it, the coroner's jury are to hear the evidence only for the King, and inquire whether the killing were by malice or without malice, &c. Per Hale, Ch. Just. Where a coroner would not admit of evidence against the King, to prove a felo de se to be non compos mentis, his inquisition was set aside: and a new inquisition taken whereby it was found that the party was non compos. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 60. If there be an inquisition of manslaughter or murder, and also an indictment by the grand jury against one, and he is arraigned, and found Not Guilty on the indictment; here it is necessary to quash the coroner's inquisition, or to arraign the party upon it, and acquit him on that also: For otherwise it stands as a record against him, whereon he may possibly be outlawed. 2 Hale, 65. And where a person found guilty by the coroner's inquest, pleads, and is acquitted by the petit jury; they must give in who it was that killed the man, which serves as an indictment against that other person; and if they cannot tell who, they may mention some fictitious name. Ibid.

The court of K. B. granted a criminal information for publishing in a newspaper, a statement of the evidence given before a coroner's jury, accompanied with comments; although the statement was correct, and it was not found that the party had any malicious motive in the publication. R. v Fleet, Hil. 58 Geo. 3. Term Rep. K. B. 379.

2. By the stat. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 10. Coroners shall demand or take nothing for doing their offices: And by the antient law of England, none having any office concerning the administration of justice, could take any fee for doing his office; and therefore this statute was only in affirmance of the Common Law. By stat. 3 Hen. 7. cap. 1. upon an inquisition taken on view of the body, the coroner shall have 13*s.* 4*d.* fee of the goods of the murderer; and if he be gone, then out of the amercement of the town for the escape. Though stat. 1 H. 8. c. 7. enacts, that where a person is slain by misadventure, the coroner is to take no fee, on pain of 40*s.* Justices of assise and of peace have power to inquire of and punish extortions of coroners, and also their defaults. Stat. Ibid.

By the stat 25 Geo. 2. c. 29. for every inquisition, not taken upon the view of a body dying in gaol, which shall be taken by any coroner in any township or place contributory to the rates directed by stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29. the sum of 20*s.* and for every mile which he shall travel from the place of his abode, the further sum of 9*d.* shall be paid him out of the money arising by the said rates. And for every inquisition taken upon the view of a body dying in gaol, so much money not exceeding 20*s.* shall be paid him as the justices at the sessions shall think fit to allow, out of the money arising from the said rates. Provided that over and above the recompence by the statute appointed, the coroner who shall take an inquisition upon the view of a body slain or murdered, shall have the fee of 13*s.* 4*d.* payable by stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 1. out of the goods of the slayer or murderer, or out of the amerciaments upon the township, if the slayer or murderer escape. Coroners taking further fees guilty of extortion.

Provided that no Coroner of the King's household, and of the verge of the King's palaces, nor any coroner of the Admiralty, nor of the County Palatine of Durham, nor of the city of London and borough of Southwark, or of any of the franchises belonging to the said city, nor any coroner of any city, borough, town, liberty or franchise not contributory to the rates directed by stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29. or within which such rates have not been usually assessed, shall be entitled to any fee, recompence or benefit given by this act.

Under this act a coroner is not entitled to any compensation for the miles travelled in returning from taking an Inquisition. R. v. Oxfordshire Just. M. 599. 3 T. R. K. B. 203.

The Coroners of franchises that do not contribute to the county rates, are not entitled to the fees given by the stat. 25 G. 2. c. 29. nor to any fees to be paid by the county. 7 East's Rep. 52. A mandamus to the Justices in session, to allow an item of charge in the coroner's account, refused, because the Justices were of opinion that under the circumstances there was no ground to suppose that the deceased had died any other than a natural though a sudden death, and therefore that the inquisition had not been duly taken: and the court of K. B. seeing no reason for interfering with that judgement. 11 East's Rep. 229.

By stat. 50 Geo. 3. c. 30. to regulate the fees payable to coroners in Ireland on attending inquisitions, grand juries are authorised to present five guineas for each inquest held, provided the account do not exceed forty guineas at each assise.

3. If a Coroner be remiss in coming to do his office, when he is sent for, &c. he shall be amerced by virtue of the above mentioned statute De coronatoribus. S. P. C. 51. Salk. 377. H. P. C. 170.

If a Coroner hath been guilty of any corrupt practice, bribery, &c. in taking the inquisition, a melius inquirendum may be awarded for taking a new one by special commissioners, &c. Coroners concealing felonies, &c. are to be fined, and suffer one year's imprisonment. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 9. Also for mismanagement in the coroner, the filing of the inquisition may be stopped. 1 Mod. 82. A coroner's inquisition is not traversable: If it be found before the coroner super visum corporis, that one was felo de se, the executors or administrators of the deceased, it is said, cannot traverse it. 3 Inst. 55. But it has been held that the inquest being moved into B. R. by certiorari, may be there traversed by the executor or administrator of the deceased. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 51. And it hath been adjudged, that the inquisition of felo de se is traversable; though fugam fecit is not. 2 Leo. 152.

If a Coroner be convicted of extortion, wilful neglect of duty or misdemeanor in his office, the court before whom he shall be so convicted, may adjudge that he shall be removed from his office. See stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 29.

For further matter on this subject, see 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. throughout.

Coroner of the King's Household. Hath an exempt jurisdiction within the verge, which the Coroner of the County cannot intermeddle with; as the Coroner of the King's House may not intermeddle within the county out of the verge. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 15.—If an inquisition be found before the coroner of the county, and the coroner of the verge, where the homicide was committed in the county, and it is so entered and certified, it will be error. 4 Rep. 45. But if murder be committed within the verge, and the King removes, before any indictment taken by the Coroner of the King's Household; the coroner of the county, and the Coroner of the King's House shall inquire of the same: And according to Sir Edw. Coke, the coroner of the county might inquire thereof at the Common law. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 15. 2 Inst. 550. If the same person be coroner of the county, and also of the King's House, an indictment of death taken before him as coroner, both of the King's House, and of the county, is good. 4 Rep. 46. 2 Inst. 134.

By the stat. 33 H. 8. c. 12. §§ 1. 3. it is ordained, That all inquisitions made upon the view of persons slain within any of the King's palaces or houses, or any other house or houses wherein his Majesty shall happen to be abiding in his royal person, shall be taken by the Coroner for the time being of the King's Household, without any assisting of another coroner of any shire within this realm; by the oaths of twelve or more of the yeoman officers of the King's Household, returned by the two Clerks Controllers, the Clerks of the Checks, and the Clerks Marshal, or one of them, of the said Household, to whom the said Coroner of the Household shall direct his precept; and the said Coroner shall certify under his seal, and the seals of such persons as shall be sworn before him, all such inquisitions before the Master or Lord Steward of the Household; who hath the appointment of such coroner, &c.

Coroner of London. By the charter of King Ed. IV. the mayor and commonalty of London may grant the office of coroner to whom they please; and no other coroner but he that belongs to the city, shall have any power there: Also the Lord Mayor, &c. may chuse two coroners in Southwark. When any one is killed, or comes to an untimely death in London, the coroner upon notice shall attend where the body is, and forthwith cause the beadles of the ward to summon a jury to make the necessary inquiry, how such person came by his death: And after inquisition taken, he shall give a certificate to the church-warden, clerk or sexton of the parish, to the intent the corpse may be buried: The coroner's fees here formerly amounted to 25*s.* now to above double that sum; unless the friends of the deceased are poor, and then he shall execute his office for nothing. Cit. Lib. 46. 47. The Coroners in London and Middlesex, and in other cities, &c. may bail felons and prisoners, in such manner as hath been heretofore accustomed. Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. s. 6. 1 Lil. Abr. 327.

What anciently belonged to Coroners, you may read at large in Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 5. 6. 7. & 8. Britton cap. 1. and Fleta, lib. 1. c. 18.

Coronatore Eligendo. A writ which lies on the death or discharge of any Coroner, directed to the Sheriff out of the Chancery, to call together the freeholders of the county, for the choice of a new coroner; and to certify into the Chancery, both the election and the name of the party elected, and also to give him his oath, &c. Reg. Orig. 177. F. N. B. 163. See title Coroner.

Coronatore Exonerando. A writ for the discharge of a coroner, for negligence, or insufficiency in the discharge of his duty: and where coroners are so far engaged in any other public business, that they cannot attend the office; or if they are disabled by old age or disease, to execute it; or have not sufficient lands, &c. they may be discharged by this writ. 2 Inst. 32. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 12. But if any such writ be grounded on an untrue suggestion, the coroner may procure a commission from the Chancery to inquire thereof; and if the suggestion be disproved, the King may make a supersedeas to the sheriff, that he do not remove the coroner; or if he have removed him that he suffer him to execute the office. Reg. Orig. 177. 178. F. N. B. 164. See title Coroner. As also the coroner's is an office of freehold, the court of Chancery, with whom the power of granting this writ resides, will not suffer it to issue, unless on affidavit, that the defendant has been served with notice of the petition for it. 3 Atk. 184. And on an election of a new coroner by a majority of the freeholders, the power and authority of the old one is ipso facto extinguished. See title Coroner.

CORONE, Fr.] All matters of the crown were heretofore reduced to this law head or title; they are the things that concern treason, felony, and divers other offences, by the Common law, and by statute. Shep. Epit. 367.

CORPORAL OATH. And how it is administered. See title Oath.

CORPORATION.

Corporatio.] A Body Politic or Incorporate; so called as the persons composing it are made into a body, and of capacity to take and grant, &c. Or, it is an assembly and joining together of many into one fellowship and brotherhood, whereof one is head and chief, and the rest are the body; and this head and body knit together, make the Corporation: also it is constituted of several members, like unto the natural body, and framed, by fiction of law, to endure in perpetual succession.

With respect to Corporations, or communities of old, the forming of cities into communities, corporations, or bodies politic, and granting them the privilege of municipal jurisdiction, contributed more than any other cause to introduce regular government, police and arts, and to diffuse them over Europe. Louis the Gross, in France, to counterbalance his potent vassals, conferred new privileges on the towns situated within his domaine, called Charters of community, and formed the inhabitants into corporations or bodies politic, to be governed by a council and magistrates of their own nomination. About the same period the great cities in Germany began to acquire like immunities; and the practice quickly spread over Europe, and was adopted in Spain, England, Scotland, and all the other feudal kingdoms. Robertson's Hist. Emp. C. V. 1 v. 32. 34. &c.

CORPORATION, I.

Of Corporations some are sole, some aggregate: sole, when in one single person, as the King, a Bishop, Dean, &c. Aggregate, which is the most usual, consisting of many persons, as Mayor and Commonalty, Dean and Chapter, &c. Likewise corporations are spiritual or temporal; spiritual, of Bishops, Deans, Archdeacons, Parsons, Vicars, &c. Temporal, of Mayors, Commonalty, Bailiffs and Burgesses, &c. Some Corporations are of a mixt nature, composed of spiritual and temporal persons, such as heads of colleges and hospitals, &c. All corporations are said to be Ecclesiastical or Lay.

Lay Corporations are of two sorts, civil and eleemosynary. The civil are such as are erected for a variety of temporal purposes. The King, for instance, is made a corporation to prevent in general the possibility of an interregnum, or vacancy of the throne, and to preserve the possessions of the Crown entire; for immediately upon the demise of one king, his successor is in full possession of the regal rights and dignity. Other lay corporations are erected for the good government of a town or particular district, as a mayor and commonalty, bailiff and burgesses, or the like: some for the advancement and regulation of manufactures and commerce; as the trading companies of London, and other towns: and some for the better carrying on of divers special purposes; as churchwardens, for conservation of the goods of the parish; the college of Physicians and company of Surgeons in London, for the improvement of the medical science; the Royal Society, for the advancement of natural knowledge; and the Society of Antiquaries for promoting the study of antiquities. And among these general corporate bodies, the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge must be ranked. 3 Burr. 1650.

The eleemosynary sort are, such as are constituted for the perpetual distribution of the free alms, or bounty, of the founder of them to such persons as he has directed. Of this kind are all hospitals for the maintenance of the poor, sick, and impotent: and all colleges, both in our Universities, and out of them. Such as at Westminster, Eaton, Winchester, &c. which colleges are founded for two purposes; 1. For the promotion of piety and learning, by proper regulations and ordinances. 2. For imparting assistance to the members of those bodies, in order to enable them to prosecute their devotion and studies with greater ease and assiduity. And all these eleemosynary corporations are, strictly speaking, lay, and not ecclesiastical, even though composed of ecclesiastical persons, and although they in some things partake of the nature, privileges, and restrictions of ecclesiastical bodies. 1 Ld. Raym. 6. They are, in fact, lay corporations, because they are not subject to the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts, or to the visitations of the Ordinary or Diocesan in their spiritual characters. 1 Comm. 471.

III. How far their Acts are binding.
IV. How they are visited.
V. How they are dissolved.

I. Bodies Politic or incorporate may commence and be established three manner of ways, viz. by prescription, by letters patent, or by act of parliament; but most commonly begin by patent or charter. 1 Inst. 250. 3 Inst. 202. 3 Rep. 73.

In making aggregate corporations, there must be, 1. Lawful authority. 2. Proper persons to be incorporated. 3. A name of incorporation. 4. A place, without which no corporation can be made. 5. Words sufficient in law to make a corporation. 10 Rep. 29. 123. 3 Rep. 73. The words incorpora, funda, &c. are not of necessity to be used in making corporations; but other words equivalent are sufficient; and of ancient time, the inhabitants of a town were incorporated, when the King granted to them to have Guildam Mercatoriam. 2 Danv. Abr. 214. He that gave the first possessions to the corporation, is the founder. The parishioners or townsmen of a parish or town; and tenants of a manor, are to some purposes a corporation. Co. Lit. 95. 342.

If the King grants lands to the inhabitants of B. their heirs and successors, rendering a rent, for any thing touching these lands, this is a corporation; though not to other purposes: but if the King grants lands to the inhabitants of B. and they be not incorporated before, if no rent be reserved to the King, the grant is void. 2 Danv. 214. If the King grants to the men of Islington to be discharged of toll, this is a good corporation to this intent: but not to purchase, &c. And by special words the King may make a limited corporation, or a corporation for a special purpose, Ibid.

London is a Corporation by prescription: but though a corporation may be by prescription, it shall be intended that it did originally derive its authority by grant from the King; for the King is the head of the commonwealth, and all the commonwealth, in respect of him, is but one corporation; and all other corporations are but limbs of the greater body. 1 Lil. Abr. 330. A mayor and commonalty or corporation, cannot make another corporation, or commonalty. 1 Sid. 290. The city of London cannot make a corporation, because that can only be created by the crown; but London or any other corporation, may make a fraternity. 1 Salk. 193.

The parliament, by its absolute and transcendent authority, may perform this, or any other act whatsoever: and actually did perform it to a great extent, by stat. 39 Eliz. c. 5. which incorporated all hospitals and houses of correction founded by charitable persons, without farther trouble: and the same has been done in other cases of charitable foundations. But otherwise it has not formerly been usual thus to intrench upon the prerogative of the Crown; and the King may prevent it when he pleases. And, in the particular instance before mentioned, it was done, as Sir Edward Coke observes, 2 Inst. 722. to avoid the charges of incorporation and licences of mortmain in small benefactions; which in his days were grown so great, that they discouraged many men from undertaking these pious and charitable works.

Where the words of a charter are doubtful they may be explained by contemporaneous usage. 3 T. R. 271. 288, n.

The constitution of a corporation, as settled by act of parliament, cannot be varied by the acceptance of any charter inconsistent with it. 6 T. R. 268.

The King (it is said) may grant to a subject the power of erecting corporations (Bro. Abr. tit. Prerog. 53. Viner, Prerog. 88. pl. 16. though the contrary was formerly held. Year Book. 2 Hen. 7. 13.); that is, he may permit the subject to name the persons and powers of the corporation at his pleasure; but it is really the King that erects, and the subject is but the instrument; for though none but the King can make a corporation, yet qui facit per alium, facit per se. 10 Rep. 33. In this manner the Chancellor of the University of Oxford, has power by charter to erect corporations; and has actually often exerted it, in the erection of several matriculated companies, now subsisting, of tradesmen subservient to the students.

When a corporation is erected, a name must be given to it; and by that name alone it must sue and be sued, and do all legal acts: though a very minute variation therein is not material. 10 Rep. 122. Such name is the very being of its constitution; and, though it is the will of the King that erects the corporation, yet the name is the knot of its combination, without which it could not perform its corporate functions. Gilb. Hist. C. P. 182. The name of incorporation, says Sir Edward Coke, is as a proper name, or name of baptism; and therefore when a private founder gives his college or hospital a name, he does it only as a godfather; and by that same name the King baptises the corporation. 10 Rep. 28.

And it may change its name, as corporations frequently do in new charters, and will still retain its former rights and privileges. 4 Co. 87.

No persons shall bear office in any corporation, &c. but such as have received the sacrament of the church, and taken the oaths. Stat. 13 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 1. But see the stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 6. confirming officers in corporations. See titles By Laws, Oaths, Nonconformists.

What persons are capable of being elected members of a corporation. See Hardw. 23.

II. When a corporation is duly created, all incidents, as to purchase and grant, sue and be sued, &c. are tacitly annexed to it; and although no power to make laws, statutes or ordinances, is given by a special clause to a corporation, it is included by law in the very act of incorporating. Co. Lit. 264. A new charter doth not merge or extinguish any of the ancient privileges of the old charter. And if an ancient corporation is incorporated by a new name, yet their new body shall enjoy all the privileges that the old corporation had. Raym. 439. 4 Rep. 37.

There are usually granted in charters to corporations, divers franchises; as felons' goods, waifs, estrays, treasure-trove, deodands, courts, and cognisance of pleas, fairs, markets, assise of bread and beer, &c. 4 Rep. 65. Actions arising in corporations may be tried in the corporation courts; but if they try actions which arise not within their jurisdictions, and encroach upon the Common Law, they shall be punished for it. Lutw. 1571. 1572. Actions triable there, must, in general, mean, those actions wherein the corporation is not interested.

There may be a corporation without a head: but where there is a head, all acts ought to be by and to the head; nor can they sue without such head; and if he dies, nothing can be done in the vacancy. 10 Rep. 30. 32. Co. Lit. 264. If land be given to a mayor and commonalty for their lives, they have an estate by intendment not determinable: so it is, if a feoffment be made of land to a dean and chapter, without mention of successors.

In a case of Sole Corporation, as bishop, dean, parson, &c. no chattel, either in action or possession, shall go in succession; but the executors or administrators of the bishop, parson, &c. shall have them: but it is otherwise of a corporation aggregate, as a dean and chapter, mayor and commonalty, and the like: for they in the judgment of law never die. But the case of the Chamberlain of London differs from all these; his successor, in his own name, may have execution of a recognisance acknowledged to his predecessor for orphanage money; and the reason is, because the corporation of the chamberlain is by custom, which hath enabled the successor to take and have such recognizances, obligations, &c. that are made to his predecessor. Terms de Ley.

Though a Sole Corporation cannot generally take in succession goods and chattels, &c. yet it may take a fee simple in succession, by the word Successors. Co. Lit. 8, 9. 46. Aggregate corporations may take not only goods and chattels, but lands in fee-simple, without the word Successors, for the reason before-mentioned. 4 Inst. 249. Succession in a body politic, is an inheritance in a body private. If a lease for years be made to a bishop and his successors, it is said his executors shall have it in auter droit; for regularly no chattel can go in succession in case of a sole corporation, no more than if a lease be made to a man and his heirs, it can go to his heirs. Co. Lit. 46.

Grants of corporations are to be by deed, under their common seal, and are good without delivery; for the common seal gives perfection to corporation deeds. Dav. 44.

But though the affixing of the common seal to the deed of conveyance of a corporation be sufficient to pass the estate without a formal delivery, if done with that intent, yet it has no such effect if the order for affixing the seal be accompanied by a direction to their clerk, to retain the conveyance till accounts were adjusted with the purchaser. 9 East's Rep. 360.

An obligation sealed with the common seal of a corporation, if the mayor signs it, he is suable, if the corporation be dissolved: but if two of the members sign it, the particular persons are not bound by it. 2 Lev. 137. Raym. 152. A release of a mayor for any sum of money due to the corporation, made in his own name, is not good in law; the corporation must join and do it by their common seal. Termes de Ley.

A Corporation which hath a head, may make a personal command without writing; but a corporation aggregate without a head cannot. Lutw. 1497. A corporation aggregate may employ any one in ordinary services, without deed; though not to appear for them, in any act which concerns their interest or title. 1 Ventr. 47. 48. Such a corporation may appoint a bailiff to take a distress, without deed or warrant. 1 Salk. 191. But cannot without deed command a bailiff to enter into lands for a condition broken; for such command without deed is void. Cro. 815.

Though a corporation cannot do an act in pais without their common seal, they may do an act upon record; and the reason is, because they are estopped by the record to say it is not their act. 1 Salk. 192. A promise to a corporation is good without deed. 2 Lev. 252. The head of a corporation aggregate may not be charged with the act of his predecessor if it be not by common seal, or for such things as come to the use of the whole body or society. 1 And. 23. 196.

A Corporation may do an act in that capacity, to one of themselves in his natural capacity; and any member in his natural capacity may perform an act to the corporation in his politic capacity; and so they may sue one another, in their distinct capacities. 1 Shep. Abr. 436. Trespass for an assault and battery, &c. will not lie against a corporation; but it must be brought against the persons that do the trespass by their proper names: though if the beasts of the corporation trespass on a man in his ground, action of trespass lies against them for this. Process of outlawry will not lie against a corporation; nor capias or exigent, but distress. 22 Ass. 67. 39 Ed. 3. 13. 21 Ed. 4.

A Corporation cannot sue, or appear in person, but by attorney: they cannot commit treason or felony, or be excommunicate, &c. They may not be executors, or administrators, be jointenants, trustees, &c. Nor shall the members of a corporation be regularly witnesses for the corporation. 10 Rep. 32. 11 Rep. 98. Co. Lit. 134. But they may be disfranchised, and then be witnesses; though not surrender by consent. Yet in some cases the judges now admit their testimony without disfranchisement where the interest is remote. Attachment doth not lie against a corporation. Raym. 152.

Trover lies against a corporation, and if it be essential to the conversion of the property, that they should have authorised it under their seal, such authority will be presumed after verdict; but it does not seem necessary that the act of detention done by their servants within the scope of their employment should be authorised under their seal. Yarborough v. Bank of England. 16 East's Rep. 6.

A charter granting jurisdiction to Borough Magistrates over a district not within the borough, does not exclude the county Justices, without express words. 3 T. R. 279.

Corporations may have power not only to infranchise freemen but to disfranchise a member, and deprive him of his freedom; if he doth any act to the prejudice of the body or contrary to his oath, &c. Though for conspiring to do any thing contrary to his duty, or for words of contempt against the chief officers, he may not be disfranchised; but he may be committed till he find sureties for his good behaviour. 11 Rep. 98. 5 Mod. 257. A corporation cannot disfranchise for breach of a bye-law. 1 Lil. 331. And one wrongfully disfranchised may be restored, and have his remedy by mandamus, &c. in B. R. An alderman or freeman of a corporation cannot be removed from his freedom or place without good cause and a custom to remove them ad libitum is void, because, the party hath a freehold therein. Cro. Jac. 510.

A bye-law made by a corporation may be good in part, and bad in part, where the two parts are entire and distinct from each other. 8 Term Rep. 356.

A corporation created by letters patent, with a power of making bye-laws, cannot make any laws to incur a forfeiture. Nor can they if created by act of parliament, unless such a power is given. 1 Term Rep. 118.

A bye-law made by a company in a corporation to restrain the number of apprentices to be taken by any of the members is void. 7 Term Rep. 543.

A bye-law made by a company carrying on trade in partnership, to prevent any one of the members carrying on a separate trade on his own account is good. 8 Term Rep. 352.

A power granted by charter to a company exercising a particular trade in a certain place to make bye-laws for the government of all persons exercising that trade in that place, enables it to make bye-laws binding as well on persons so exercising the trade, who are not members of the company, as on those who are. 1 H. Blackst. 370.

A person may be bound to the good behaviour for words spoke against mayors, &c. but he may not be indicted for it: and if justices of a corporation deny to do right, it is a forfeiture of their exemption from the inquiry of the justices of the county. Mod. Cas. 125. 164. Head officers of corporations are to redress abuses of merchant-strangers, &c. or the franchise shall be seized, stat. 9 Eliz. 3. § 1. and have authority in many cases by statute; for which see title Mayors.

No strangers shall sell by retail any woollen or linen cloth, or mercery wares, in corporate towns except at fairs, on pain of forfeiture, &c. But such persons may sell wares by wholesale, and cloth of their own making by retail. 1 & 2 P. & M. cap. 7. Bodies politic and ecclesiastical may make leases for three lives, or twenty-one years, under the restrictions in the acts 1 Eliz. c. 19. 13 Eliz. c. 20.—See title Leases. If land is given in fee to a dean and chapter, or to a mayor and commonalty, &c. and after, such body politic or incorporate is dissolved, the donor shall have the land again, and not the lord by escheat. Co. Lit. 31.

The Corporation of the city of London is to answer for all particular misdemeanors, which are committed in any of the courts of justice within the city; and for all other general misdemeanors committed within the city; so it is conceived of all other corporations. 1 Lil. Abr. 329. If a common officer of a town doth any thing for their common use, it is reasonable the corporate town should be answerable for it. 1 Leon. 215.

The stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 58. § 4. does not bind an officer of a corporation, having custody of the records, to permit any member of the corporation to inspect the order for the admission and swearing in of the freemen, &c. of the corporation; and therefore where the town-clerk offered to permit an inspection of the entries made upon stamps, of the admission and swearing in of burgesses, but refused an inspection of the common council book, in which it was usual to enter the order for the admission and swearing in of the burgesses, the court of K. B. held that he did not thereby incur a penalty. Davies v. Humphreys, Mich. 55 Geo. 3. Term Rep. K. B. 223.

III. A Corporation is properly an investing the people of the place with the local government thereof, and therefore their laws shall be binding to strangers: but a Fraternity is some people of a place united together in respect of a mystery and business into a company, and their laws and ordinances cannot bind strangers, for they have not a local power. Salk. 193.

No masters and wardens, &c. of any mystery, or other corporation, shall make any bye-laws or ordinances in diminution of the King's prerogative, or against the common profit of the people; except the same be approved by the Lord Chancellor, or Chief Justices, &c. on pain of 40*l.* And such bodies coporate shall not make any acts or ordinances for the restraining persons to sue in the King's courts for remedy, &c. under the like penalty. Stat. 19 Hen. 7. c. 7. Ordinances made by corporations, to be observed on pain of imprisonment, or of forfeiture of goods, &c. are contrary to Magna Charta. 2 Inst. 47. 54.

But penalties may be inflicted by bye-laws, which may be recovered by distress or action of debt: and a custom for the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London to commit a citizen for not accepting of the livery, &c. was held a good custom, being for the good government of the city. 5 Mod. 320.

Corporations may not, by bond, or otherwise, restrain any apprentice, &c. from keeping shop in the corporation, under the penalty of 40*l.* Stat 28 H. 8. c. 5.—See title Bye-laws.

In acts done by corporations, the consent of the major part shall be binding. Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 27.

This act clearly vacates all private statutes, both prior and subsequent to its date, which require the concurrence of more than a majority to give validity to any grant or election. Blackstone (1 Comm. 478.) is of opinion, that it has not affected the negative given by the statutes to the head of any society; but it seems that this opinion may be questioned; especially in cases where, in the first instance, he gives his vote with the members of the society. It is the usual language of college statutes to direct that many acts shall be done by guardianus et major pars sociorum, or magister, or præpositus et major pars; and it has been determined by the Court of King's Bench (Cowp. 377.) and by the visitor of Clare Hall, Cambridge, and also by the visitors of Dublin college, that this expression does not confer upon the warden, master, or provost, any negative; but that his vote must be counted with the rest, and he is concluded by a majority of votes against him.

IV. Corporations being composed of individuals, subject to human frailties, are liable, as well as private persons, to deviate from the end of their institution. And for that reason the law has provided proper persons to visit, inquire into, and correct all irregularities that arise in such corporations, either sole or aggregate, and whether ecclesiastical, civil, or eleemosynary. With regard to all ecclesiastical corporations, the Ordinary is their visitor, so constituted by the canon law, and from thence derived to us. The Pope formerly, and now the King, as supreme Ordinary, is the visitor of the archbishop or metropolitan; the metropolitan has the charge and coercion of all his suffragan bishops; and the bishops in their several dioceses are, in ecclesiastical matters, the visitors of all deans and chapters, of all parsons and vicars, and of all other spiritual corporations. With respect to all lay corporations, the founder, his heirs, or assigns, are the visitors, whether the foundation be civil or eleemosynary; for in a lay incorporation, the Ordinary neither can, nor ought to visit. 10 Rep. 31.

The founder of all corporations in the strictest and original sense is the King alone, for he only can incorporate a society; and in civil incorporations, such as mayor and commonalty, &c. where there are no possessions or endowments given to the body, there is no other founder but the king: but in eleemosynary foundations, such as colleges and hospitals, where there is an endowment of lands, the law distinguishes and makes two species of foundation; the one fundatio incipiens, or the incorporation, in which sense the King is the general founder of all colleges and hospitals; the other fundatio perficiens, or the dotation of it, in which sense the first gift of the revenues is the foundation, and he who gives them is in law the founder: and it is in this last sense that we generally call a man the founder of a college or hospital. 10 Rep. 33. But here the King has his prerogative: for, if the King and a private man join in endowing an eleemosynary foundation, the King alone shall be the founder of it. And in general the King being the sole founder of all civil corporations, and the endower the perficient founder of all eleemosynary ones, the right of visitation of the former results, according to the rule laid down, to the King; and of the latter to the patron or endower.

The King being thus constituted by law visitor of all civil corporations, the law has also appointed the place, wherein he shall exercise this jurisdiction: which is the court of King's Bench; where, and where only, all misbehaviours of this kind of corporations are inquired into and redressed, and all their controversies decided. However, though the court of King's Bench, upon a proper complaint and application, can prevent and punish injustice in civil corporations, as in every other part of their jurisdiction; it is not the language of the profession, to call that part of their authority a visitatorial power. 1 Comm. 481. n.

As to eleemosynary corporations, by the dotation, the founder and his heirs are of common right the legal visitors; but, if the founder has appointed and assigned any other person to be visitor, then his assignee so appointed is invested with all the founder's power, in exclusion of his heir. Eleemosynary corporations are chiefly hospitals, or colleges in the Universities; these were all of them considered by the popish clergy, as of mere ecclesiastical jurisdiction: however the law of the land judged otherwise; and, with regard to hospitals, it has long been held, (Y. B. 8 Ed. 3. 28. 8 Ass. 29.) that if the hospital be spiritual, the bishop shall visit; but if lay, the patron. This right of lay patrons was indeed abridged by stat. 2 Hen. 5. c. 1. which ordained, that the ordinary should visit all hospitals founded by subjects; though the King's right was reserved to visit by his commissioners such as were of royal foundation. But the subject's right was in part restored by stat. 14 Eliz. c. 5. which directs the bishop to visit such hospitals only, where no visitor is appointed by the founder thereof: and all hospitals founded by virtue of the stat. 39 Eliz. c. 5. are to be visited by such persons as shall be nominated by the respective founders. But still, if the founder appoints nobody, the bishop of the diocese must visit. 2 Inst. 575.

Colleges in the Universities (whatever the common law may now, or might formerly judge) were certainly considered by the popish clergy, under whose direction they were, as ecclesiastical, or at least as clerical corporations; and therefore the right of visitation was claimed by the ordinary of the diocese. This is evident, because in many of our most ancient colleges, where the founder had a mind to subject them to a visitor of his own nomination, he obtained for that purpose a papal bull, to exempt them from the jurisdiction of the ordinary; several of which are still preserved in the archives of the respective societies. And in some of our colleges, where no special visitor is appointed, the bishop of that diocese, in which Oxford was formerly comprised, has immemorially exercised visitatorial authority; (that is, the Bishop of Lincoln, from whose diocese that of Oxford was taken;) which can be ascribed to nothing else, but his supposed title as Ordinary to visit this, among other ecclesiastical foundations.

But, whatever might be formerly the opinion of the Clergy, it is now held as established Common Law, that colleges are lay corporations, though sometimes totally composed of ecclesiastical persons; and that the right of visitation does not arise from any principles of the canon law, but of necessity was created by the common law. Ld. Raym. 8. And yet the power and jurisdiction of visitors in colleges was left so much in the dark at common law, that the whole doctrine was very unsettled till the famous case of Philips v. Bury: (Lord Raym. 5. 4 Mod. 106.) In this the main question was, whether the sentence of the Bishop of Exeter, who (as visitor) had deprived Doctor Bury, the Rector of Exeter college, could be examined and redressed by the Court of King's Bench. And the three puisne judges were of opinion, that it might be reviewed, for that the visitor's jurisdiction could not exclude the common law; and accordingly judgment was given in that court. But Lord Chief Justice Holt was of a contrary opinion; and held that by the common law, the office of visitor is to judge according to the statutes of the college and to expel and deprive upon just occasions, and to hear all appeals of course: and that from him, and him only, the party grieved ought to have redress: the Founder having reposed in him so entire a confidence that he will administer justice impartially, that his determinations are final, and examinable in no other court whatever. And, upon this a writ of error being brought into the House of Lords, they concurred in Sir John Holt's opinion, and reversed the judgment of the Court of King's Bench. To which leading case all subsequent determinations have been conformable. But, where the visitor is under a temporary disability, there the Court of King's Bench will interpose, to prevent a defect of justice. Stra. 797. Also it is said, (2 Lutw. 1566.) that if a founder of an eleemosynary foundation appoints a visitor, and limits his jurisdiction by rules and statutes, if the visitor in his sentence exceeds those rules, an action lies against him; but it is otherwise, where he mistakes in a thing within his power.

No particular form of words is necessary for the appointment of a visitor. Sit visitator, or visitationem commendamus, will create a general visitor, and confer all the authority incidental to the office; (1 Burr. 199;) but this general power may be restrained and qualified, or the visitor may be directed by the statutes to do particular acts, in which instance he has no discretion as visitor; as where the statutes direct the visitor to appoint one of two persons, nominated by the fellows, to be the Master of a college, the Court of King's Bench will examine the nomination of the fellows, and, if correct, will compel the visitor to appoint one of the two. 2 Term Rep. 290. New ingrafted fellowships, if no statutes are given by the founders of them, must follow the original foundation, and are subject to the same discipline and judicature. 1 Burr. 203. It is the duty of the visitor, in every instance, to effectuate the intention of the founder, as far as he can collect it from the statutes, and the nature of the institution; and in the exercise of this jurisdiction, he is free from all control. Lord Mansfield has declared, that the visitatorial power, if properly exercised, without expence or delay, is useful and convenient to colleges; and it is now settled and established, that the jurisdiction of a visitor is summary, and without appeal from it. 1 Burr. 200.—See 1 Comm. 479. &c.

V. A Corporation may be dissolved, for it is created upon a trust; and if that be broken it is forfeited. 4 Mod. 58.

Corporations are dissolved by forfeiture of their charter, misuser, &c. upon the writ quo warranto brought: by surrender, or by act of parliament: and if they neglect to choose officers, or make false elections, &c. it is a forfeiture of the corporation. 4 Rep. 77.

Corporations may be dissolved in several ways, which dissolution is the civil death of the corporation: and in this case their lands and tenements shall revert to the person, or his heirs, who granted them to the corporation; for the law doth annex a condition to every such grant, that if the corporation be dissolved, the grantor shall have the lands again, because the cause of the grant faileth. Co. Lit. 13. The grant is indeed only during the life of the corporation, which may endure for ever: but, when that life is determined by the dissolution of the body politic, the grantor takes it back by reversion, as in the case of every other grant for life. The debts of a corporation, either to or from it, are totally extinguished by its dissolution; so that the members thereof cannot recover, or be charged with them, in their natural capacities. 1 Lev. 237.

A Corporation may be dissolved, 1. By act of parliament; which is boundless in its operations. 2. By the natural death of all its members, in case of an aggregate corporation. 3. By surrender of its franchises into the hands of the King, which is a kind of suicide. 4. By forfeiture of its charter, through negligence or abuse of its franchise: in which case the law judges that the body politic has broken the condition upon which it was incorporated, and therefore the incorporation is void. And the regular course is to bring an information in nature of a writ of quo warranto, to inquire by what warrant the members now exercise their corporative power, having forfeited it by such and such proceedings: The exertion of this act of law, for the purposes of the State, in the reign of King Charles and King James the Second, particularly by seizing the charter of the City of London, gave great and just offence, though perhaps, in strictness of law, the proceedings in most of them were sufficiently regular: but the judgment against that of London was reversed by act of parliament, stat. 2 W. & M. c. 8. after the revolution. And by the same stat. it is enacted, that the franchises of the City of London shall never more be forfeited for any cause whatsoever. And because by the Common Law corporations were dissolved, in case the mayor or head officer was not duly elected on the day appointed in the charter, or established by prescription, it is now provided by stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 4. that no corporation shall be dissolved, for any default to choose a mayor, &c. but the electors are still to proceed to election; and if no election be made, the court of King's Bench shall issue a mandamus requiring the electors to choose such mayor, &c.

The Proclamation of Jac. II. in the 4th year of his reign, for restoring corporations to their ancient charters, &c. operates (when accepted) as a grant of revival to such of the old corporations as had surrendered their corporate franchises to Car. II. (but which surrenders were not enrolled) who had granted new charters; and overturns such new charters. 3 T. R. 139.

When an integral part of a corporation is gone, and the corporation has no power to restore it or to do any corporate act, the corporation is so far dissolved, that the Crown may grant a new charter. 3 T. R. 199.

By stat. 2 An. c. 20. where persons intrude into the office of mayor, &c. of a corporation, a quo warranto shall be brought against the usurpers, who shall be ousted, and fined: and none are to execute an office in a corporation for more than a year. See further on this subject Kyd's Treatise on the Law of Corporations;—and see also particularly this Dict. titles Mortmain, Mandamus, Quo warranto.

To prevent improper conduct in trading corporations in elections, and in disposing of the joint stock, it is by stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 48. enacted, that no member of such corporations shall be admitted to vote in the general courts, until he shall have been six months in possession of the stock necessary to qualify him: unless it comes to him by bequest, marriage, succession, or settlement.—And by the same statute, only one half yearly dividend is to be made by one general court, five months at least from the preceding declaration of a dividend; and questions for increasing the dividend are to be decided by ballot. See title East India Company.

To facilitate the proceedings in cases of mandamus and quo warranto, and to prevent any undue advantage on either side, the stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 21. provides that where any person shall be entitled to be admitted a freeman, &c. of any corporation, &c. and shall apply to the proper officer to be admitted, and shall give notice of his intention to move the court of King's Bench for a mandamus, in case of refusal, the officer shall pay all the costs of the application.—And the same statute enacts, that the proper officer shall, on the demand of two freemen, permit them and their agents to inspect the entries of admission of freemen, and to take copies and extracts; under penalty of 100*l.*

CORPOREAL INHERITANCE. In houses, lands, &c. See title Inheritance.

CORPSE, stealing of. If any one in taking up a dead body, steals the shroud, or other apparel, it will be felony. 3 Inst. 110. 12 Rep. 113. 1 Hal. P. C. 515. But stealing the corpse itself, only, is not felony, but it is punishable as a misdemeanour by indictment at Common Law. 2 Comm. 236.

CORPUS CHRISTI DAY. A feast instituted in the year 1264, in honour of the blessed sacrament: to which also a college in Oxford is dedicated. It is mentioned in the stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 21.

CORPUS CUM CAUSA. A writ issuing out of the Chancery, to remove both the body and record, touching the cause of any man lying in execution upon a judgment for debt, into the King's Bench, &c. there to lie till he have satisfied the judgment. F. N. B. 251. See title Habeas Corpus.

CORRECTOR OF THE STAPLE. A clerk belonging to the staple, to write and record the bargains of merchants there made. See stat. 27 Ed. 3. stat. 2. cc. 22. 23.

CORREDIUM, CONREDIUM. The same with corrodium. See Corody.

CORRUPTION OF BLOOD, corruptio sanguinis.] An infection growing to the state of a man, and to his issue; and is where a person is attainted of treason or felony, by means whereof his blood is said to be corrupted, and neither his children, nor any of his blood, can be heirs to him or any other ancestor: also if he is of the nobility, or a gentleman, he and all his posterity by the attainder are rendered base and ignoble: but by pardon of the King, the children born afterwards may inherit the land of their ancestor, purchased at the time of the pardon or after; but so cannot they who were born before the pardon. Termes de Ley.

If a man that hath land in right of his wife hath issue, and his blood is corrupt by attainder of felony, and the King pardons him; in this case, if the wife dies before him, he shall not be tenant by the curtesy, for the corruption of the blood of that issue: though it is otherwise, if he hath issue after the pardon; for then he should be tenant by the curtesy, although the issue which he had before the pardon be not inheritable. 13 H. 7. 17.

A son attainted of treason or felony in the life of his ancestor, obtains the King's pardon before the death of his ancestor, he shall not be heir to the said ancestor, but the land shall rather escheat to the lord of the fee by the corruption of blood. 36 Ass. Pl. 32 H. 8.

If the father of a person attainted die seised of an estate of inheritance, during his life, no younger brother can be heir; for the elder brother, though attainted, is still a brother, and no other can be heir to his father, while he is alive; but if he die before the father, the younger brother shall be heir. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 49. § 49. See further Co. Lit. 8. 391. Dyer, 482. 3 Inst. 211.

Corruption of blood from an attainder is so high that it cannot be absolutely salved but by act of parliament: for the King's pardon doth not restore the blood so as to make the person attainted capable either of inheriting others or being inherited himself by any one born before the pardon. 1 Inst. 391, 392. 2 Hawk. ——. A statute which saves the corruption of blood, impliedly saves the descent of the land to the heir; and it prevents the corruption of blood so far: also it saves the wife's dower, &c. But nevertheless the land shall be forfeited for the life of the offender. 3 Inst. 47. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 41. § 5. By stat. 54 Geo. 3. c. 145. it is enacted that no future attainder for felony, except in cases of high treason, petit treason, or murder, or of abetting, procuring or counselling the same, shall extend to the disinheriting of any heir, nor to prejudice of the right or title of any person, other than the right or title of the offender during his natural life only: and that it shall be lawful to every person to whom the right or interest of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, after the death of any such offender, should or might have appertained if no such attainder had been, to enter into the same. See further titles Attainder, Forfeiture, Escheat, Tenure, &c.

CORSELET, Fr. in Lat. corpusculum.] A little body. The name of an ancient armour used to cover the body or trunk of a man: wherewith pikemen commonly set in the front and flanks of the battle were formerly armed, for the better resistance of the assaults of the enemy, and the surer guard of the soldiers placed behind; who were more slightly armed for their speedier advancing to and retreating from the attack. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 2.

CORSEPRESENT, from the Fr. corps present.] A mortuary: and the reason why it was thus termed seems to be, that where a mortuary became due on the death of any man, the best or second best beast was, according to custom, offered or presented to the priest, and carried with the corps. See stat. 21 H. 8. c. 6. and this Dict. title Mortuary.

CORSNED BREAD, panis conjuratus.] Ordeal bread. It was a kind of superstitious trial used among the Saxons, to purge themselves of any accusation, by taking a piece of barley bread, and eating it with solemn oaths and execrations, that it might prove poison, or their last morsel, if what they asserted or denied were not punctually true. These pieces of bread were first execrated by the priest, and then offered to the suspected person, to be swallowed by way of purgation: for they believed a person, if guilty, could not swallow a morsel so accursed; or if he did, it would choak him.

The form was thus: We beseech thee, O Lord, that he who is guilty of this theft, when the exorcised bread is offered to him in order to discover the truth, that his jaws may be shut, his throat so narrow that he may not swallow, and that he may cast it out of his mouth, and not eat it. Du Cange. The old form, or exorcismus panis hordeaci vel casei ad probationem veri, is extant in Lindenbrogius, page 107. And in the laws of king Canute, cap. 6. Si quis altari ministrantium accusetur, et amicis destitutus sit, cum sacramentales non habeat, vadat ad judicium, quod Anglicè dicitur corsned, et fiat sicut Deus velit, nisi super sanctum corpus Domini permittatur ut se purget.; from which it is conjectured, that corsned bread was originally the very sacramental bread, consecrated and devoted by the priest, and received with solemn adjuration and devout expectance that it would prove mortal to those who dared to swallow it with a lie in their mouths; till at length the bishops and clergy were afraid to prostitute the communion bread to such rash and conceited uses; when to indulge the people in their superstitious fancies, and idle customs, they allowed them to practise the same judicial rite, in eating some other morsels of bread, blest or curst to the like uses.

It is recorded of the perfidious Godwin, Earl of Kent, in the time of King Edward the Confessor, that on his abjuring the murder of the King's brother, by this way of trial, as a just judgment of his solemn perjury, the bread stuck in his throat, and choaked him. Ingulph. This, with other barbarous ways of purgation, was by degrees abolished: though we have still some remembrance of this superstitious custom in our usual phrases of abjuration; as, I will take the sacrament upon it:—May this bread be my poison;—or, May this bit be my last, &c. See title Ordeal.

CORTIS, curtis.] A court or yard before a house. Blount.

CORTULARIUM, curtilagium.] A yard adjoining to a country farm. Cartul. Glaston. MS. f. 42.

CORUS. A certain corn-measure heaped up, from the Hebr. cora, a hill: eight bushels of wheat in a heap, making a quarter, are of the shape of a little hill; and probably a corus of wheat was eight bushels; Decem coros tritici, sive decem quarteria. Bract. lib. 2. c. 6.

COSDUNA. Custom or tribute. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. p. 562.

COSENAGE or COSINAGE, Fr. cousinage,] i.e. kindred. cousinship. Is used for a writ that lies where the tresail, that is, the father of the besail, or great grandfather, being seised of lands and tenements in fee at his death, and a stranger enters upon the heir and abates; then shall his heir have his writ of *cosinage. ## COSTS.

EXPENSÆ LITIS.] In the prosecution and defence of actions, the parties are necessarily put to certain expences, or as they are commonly called Costs; consisting of money paid to the King and Government for fines and stamp duties: to the officers of the courts; and to the counsel and attornies for their fees, &c.

These costs may be considered either as between attorney and client; being what are payable in every case to the attorney, by his client, whether he ultimately succeed or not; or as between party and party, being those only which are allowed, in some particular cases, to the party succeeding against his adversary. As between party and party, they are interlocutory or final: the former are given on various interlocutory motions and proceedings in the course of the suit.—The latter (to which the term of costs is most generally applied, and the rules respecting which are of the most consequence) are not allowed till the conclusion of the suit.

Much of the following abstract of the law relating hereto is taken from Tidd's Law of Costs; a short and comprehensive abridgement; to which, and the various other productions on the subject, the practitioner must necessarily have frequent recourse in nice and particular cases.

It will be sufficient for the present purpose, to arrange the information on this subject in the following manner.

I. In what general cases Costs are given to the Plaintiff.
II. In what, to the Defendant.
III. Of double and treble Costs.
IV. Costs by particular statutes.
V. Of taxing and recovering Costs.

I. No costs were recoverable by the plaintiff or defendant at Common Law. 2 Inst. 288. Hardr. 152. But by the stat. of Gloucester (6 Edw. 1.) c. 1. § 2. it is provided, "that the demandant may recover against the tenant the costs of his writ purchased; (which, by a liberal interpretation, has been construed to extend to the whole costs of his suit, 2 Inst. 288;) together with the damages given by that statute, and that this act shall hold place in all cases where a man recovers damages." This was the origin of costs de incremento. Gilb. Eq. Rep. 195. And hence the plaintiff has, generally speaking, a right to costs, in all cases where he was entitled to damages, antecedent to, or by the provisions of the stat. of Gloucester; (10 Co. 116 a.) as in assumpsit, covenant, debt on contract, case, trespass, replevin, ejectment, &c.; or where, by a subsequent statute, double or treble damages are given, in a case where single damages were before recoverable; (10 Co. 116. a. 2 Inst. 289. Comp.) 368. as upon stat. 2 Hen. 4. c. 11. for suing in the Admiralty court; (10 Co. 116 a. b. Dyer, 159 b. Carth. 297.) upon stat. 8 Hen. 6. c. 9. for a forcible entry; (10 Co. 115 b. Co. Lit. 257 b. 2 Inst. 289. Cro. El. 582.) or upon stat. 2 & 3 W. & M. sess. 1. c. 5. for rescuing a distress for rent. (Carth. 321. 1 Salk. 205. 1 Ld. Raym. 19. Skin. 555. Holt. 172. S. C.) And he hath also a right to costs, in all cases where a certain penalty is given by statute to the party aggrieved; (Cro. Car. 560. 1 Rol. Abr. 574. Skin. 363. Carth. 230. 1 Salk. 206. 1 Ld. Raym. 172. Say. Costs, 11. H. Black. 10.) for otherwise the remedy might prove inadequate.

But the stat. of Gloucester did not extend to cases where no damages were recoverable at Common Law, as in scire facias, prohibition, (Comb. 20.) &c.; nor where double or treble damages were given by a subsequent statute, in a new case where single damages were not before recoverable; as in waste against tenant for life or years; (2 Hen. 4. 17. 9 Hen. 6. 66 b. 10 Co. 116 b. 2 Inst. 289.) upon the stat. of Gloucester, (6 Ed. 1. c. 5.);—for not setting out tithes, (Moor, 915. Noy, 136. Hurdr. 152.) upon stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 13.);—or for driving a distress out of the hundred, (2 Inst. 289. Dyer, 177.; but see Cro. Car. 560. 1 Roll. Abr. 574.) upon stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 12. Nor does this statute extend to popular actions, where the whole or part of a penalty is given by statute to a common informer; (1 Roll. Abr. 574. 1 Vent. 133. Carth. 231. 1 Salk. 206. 1 Ld. Raym. 172. Cas. Pr. C. B. 87. Barnes, 124. S. C. Comp. 366. 1 H. Black. 10. Bull. N. P. 333.); as upon stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. § 31. for exercising a trade, without having served an apprenticeship; or upon the stat. of Usury. 12 Ann. stat. 2. c. 16. In these and such like cases, therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to costs, unless they are expressly given him by the statute; but wherever they are so given, he is of course entitled to them.

Where single damages are given by a statute subsequent to the stat. of Gloucester, in a new case wherein no damages were previously recoverable, it has been doubted whether the plaintiff shall recover costs, if they are not mentioned in the statute. The rule in Pilford's case is, that he shall not; (10 Co. 116 a;) and accordingly it is holden, that he is not entitled to costs in quare impedit; (2 Hen. 4. 17. 27 Hen. 6. 10. 10 Co. 116 a. 2 Inst. 289. 362. Barnes, 140. and see Cro. Car. 360. Carth. 231. Comp. 367, 8.) wherein damages are given by the stat. of Westm. 2. (13 Edw. 1.) c. 5. § 3. But the rule in Pilford's case is contradicted by Lord Coke himself, (2 Inst. 289.) who says, that "this clause (respecting the st. of Gloucester's holding place, in all cases where a man recovers damages,) doth extend to give costs, where damages are given to any demandant or plaintiff in any action by any statute made after this parliament." And the rule has been since narrowed, by several modern decisions; from whence it may be collected, that the plaintiff is entitled to costs, in all cases where single damages are given by statute to the party grieved, although costs are not particularly mentioned in the statute. 2 Wils. 91. Barnes, 151. S. C. 3 Bur. 1723. 1 Term. Rep. 71. But see the opinion of Aston, Just. cont. Comp. 367, 8.

Wherever an action is given to the party grieved by an act since the stat. of Gloucester, he is entitled to costs if he succeed, though he had no remedy before such act. 7 Term Rep. 268.

In several of the foregoing cases, wherein costs were not recoverable by the plaintiff at Common Law, they are expressly given him by stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. by which it is enacted that, "in all actions of waste, and actions of debt upon the statute for not setting forth tithes, wherein the single value or damage found by the jury shall not exceed the sum of twenty nobles; and in all suits upon any writ or writs of scire facias, and suits upon prohibitions, the plaintiff obtaining judgment, or any award of execution, after plea pleaded or demurrer joined therein, shall likewise recover his costs of suit; and if the plaintiff shall become nonsuit, or suffer a discontinuance, or a verdict shall pass against him, the defendant shall recover his costs, and have execution for the same by capias ad satisfaciendum, fieri facias, or elegit."

This statute does not extend to a scire facias, to repeal a patent, prosecuted in the name of the King. 7 Term Rep. 367.

The plaintiff's general right to costs being thus settled and established, upon the footing of the stat. of Gloucester, has been since altered, restrained and modified by several subsequent statutes.

To prevent trifling and malicious actions for words, for assault and battery, and for trespass, it is enacted by stats. 43 Eliz. c. 6. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 9. § 136. that where the jury who try any of these actions, shall give less damages than 40*s.* the plaintiff shall be allowed no more costs than damages: unless the judge before whom the cause is tried, shall certify under his hand, on the back of the record, that an actual battery (and not an assault only) was proved; or that in trespass the freehold or title of the land came chiefly in question. Also by stats. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. if the trespass were committed in hunting or sporting by an inferior tradesman, or if it appear to be wilfully and maliciously committed, the plaintiff shall have full costs; though his damages, as assessed by the jury, amount to less than 40*s.*

If in an action on the case for an injury done to the plaintiff's right of common by digging turves there, the judge certify under the stat. of Eliz. that the damages did not amount to 40*s.* the plaintiff shall have no more costs: for the interest or title of the land does not necessarily come in question in this action; and did not in fact in this case, where the action was brought against another commoner for a mere wrongful act. 8 East's Rep. 294.

Where to trespass at A. and throwing down, burning, and totally destroying the plaintiff's hedge there then erected, &c. whereby &c. the defendant pleads the general issue, and justifies as to the throwing down the hedge, because it was erected on a common over which he prescribes for right of common, and issue is taken on such right, which is found for him, and a verdict for the plaintiff, for 20*s.* damages on the general issue; the facts stated in the special plea, and found, cannot be taken into consideration to shew that the title to the freehold could not come in question on the declaration; and as on the declaration the freehold might have come in issue, and the judge did not certify, the plaintiff is entitled to no more costs than damages. Stead v. Gamble, 7 East, 325.

The stat. 43 Geo. 3. c. 46. § 4. enacts that in all actions brought in England or Ireland, upon any judgment recovered, the plaintiff in such action shall not recover or be entitled to any costs of suit, unless the court, in which action on the judgment shall be brought, or some judge of the same court, shall otherwise order.—But this statute does not extend to an action brought to recover the costs of a judgment of Nonsuit. 14 East's Rep. 243.

If there be a certificate against any more costs than damages upon the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 6. § 2. the plaintiff shall not have the costs of the double pleas, on which all the issues were found for him; although the judge has not certified under the stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. § 5. that the defendant had probable cause to plead the several special matters; that section only applying to cases where one at least of the special pleas is found for the defendant, which would entitle him to the general costs. Richmond v. Johnson, 7 East, 583.

The Legislature has also been obliged to interfere still further, to guard against trifling and vexatious actions by means of what are commonly called the Court of Conscience Acts. Such are stats. 3 Jac. 1. c. 15. § 4. 14 Geo. 2. c. 10. Which provide that if an action be brought for less than 40*s.* against a defendant living in London, and liable to the jurisdiction of the Court of Requests there, the plaintiff shall not recover any costs, but shall pay them to the defendant.

The London Court of Requests has jurisdiction by the stat. 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. civ. over a contract for the retention of tythes by the tenant, the value of which was under 5*l.* and therefore if the vicar sue in the superior court for the same, and recover less than 5*l.* upon a count in assumpsit for a quantum valebant, the defendant may enter a suggestion on the roll, stating, that he was a freeman and inhabitant of the city of London, trading there at the time he was served with the writ, for the purpose of ousting the plaintiff of his costs under the twelfth section of the act. Sandby v. Miller, 5 East, 194.

Several other acts of parliament have been also made, establishing Courts of Conscience in various districts, in and about the metropolis; as in the town and borough of Southwark, &c. by stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 47; in the city and liberty of Westminster, and part of the Duchy of Lancaster, by stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 27. (explained and amended by stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 42.); and in the Tower-hamlets, by stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 30. And by stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 33. the county court of Middlesex was put on a different footing, for the more easy and speedy recovery of small debts. See titles County Courts, Courts of conscience.

When it was proved that a debt originally above, was reduced below 40*s.* by part payment before the action brought, held that the defendant was entitled to costs under the statutes establishing Courts of Conscience, in Southwark and London. 8 E. R. 28. 347. See 14 E. R. 344. S. P. and also 8 E. R. 239. 1 W. P. T. 60.

In general where the act is not pleaded, the proper mode to obtain the Costs, is for the defendant to apply to the court by affidavit, for leave to enter a suggestion on the roll, of the facts necessary to entitle him to the benefit of the act suited to his case; which suggestion may be traversed or demurred to.

These statutes might perhaps have been with equal propriety classed under the 2d division of this title; but are introduced here, as forming an exception to the general title of a plaintiff to Costs in the cases already instanced.

The principal statute, made for restraining the plaintiff's right to costs, is stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 9. (extended to Wales and the Counties Palatine, by stat. 12 & 12 W. 3. c. 9.); by which it is enacted, that "in all actions of trespass, assault, and battery, and other personal actions, wherein the judge, at the trial of the cause, shall not find and certify under his hand, upon the back of the record, that an assault and battery was sufficiently proved by the plaintiff against the defendant, or that the freehold or title of the land mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration was chiefly in question; the plaintiff, in case the jury shall find the damages to be under the value of forty shillings, shall not recover or obtain more costs of suit, than the damages so found shall amount unto." It seems to have been the intention of this statute, that the plaintiff shall have no more costs than damages, in any personal action whatsoever, if the damages be under forty shillings, except in cases of battery or freehold; and not even in these, without a certificate. And this construction was adopted, in some of the first cases that arose upon the statute. 3 Keb. 121. 247. But a different construction soon prevailed; and it is now settled, that the statute is confined to actions of assault and battery; and actions for local trespasses, wherein it is possible for the judge to certify, that the freehold or title of the land was chiefly in question. T. Raym. 487. T. Jon. 232. 2 Show. 258. S. C. 3 Mod. 39. 1 Salk. 208. 1 Str. 577. Gilb. Eq. Rep. 195. Barnes, 131. 3 Wils. 322. S. C. 1 H. Black. 294. Therefore it does not extend to actions of debt, covenant, assumpsit, trover, (3 Keb. 31. 1 Salk. 208.) or the like: or to actions for a mere assault; (3 T. R. 391.) or for criminal conversation; (3 Wils. 319.) or battery of the plaintiff's servant, (3 Keb. 184. 1 Salk. 208. 1 Stra. 192.) per quod consortium vel servitium amisit.—In all these cases, though the damages be under 40*s.* the plaintiff is entitled to full costs without a certificate.

The certificate required by this statute need not, it seems, be granted at the trial of the cause. 11 Mod. 198. And where the defendant lets judgment go by default, (Bull. N. P. 329.) or justifies the assault and battery, or pleads in such a manner, as to bring the freehold or title of the land in question, on the face of the record, or a view is granted, (1 Ld. Raym. 76. 2 Salk. 665.) a certificate is holden to be unnecessary; but it is necessary, where, to a plea of a right of way, there is a replication of extra viam. Cochran v. Harrison, T. 22 Geo. 3. But where, in an action for an assault and battery, the defendant justifies the assault only, (3 T. R. 391.) or an assault only is certified by the judge, (2 Lev. 102.) the plaintiff, recovering less than forty shillings, is not entitled to more costs than damages; though, in the latter case, to entitle him to full costs, the judge may certify, on stat. 8 & 9. W. 3. c. 11. that the assault was wilful and malicious. 3 Wils. 326.

None of the statutes, made for restraining the plaintiff's right to costs, extend to actions brought in an inferior court, and removed by the defendant into a superior one: (2 Lev. 124. 4 Mod. 378, 9. 1 Ld. Raym. 395.) and it has been holden, that stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. and stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 9. only restrain the Court from awarding more costs than damages; but the jury, not being restrained thereby, may give what costs they please.

It often happens that there are several counts or pleas, the issue upon which are some of them found for the plaintiff, and some for the defendant. In this case, in the court of C. P. where the declaration consists of several counts, and the plaintiff succeeds upon any one of them, he is entitled to the costs of the whole declaration, though the defendant succeed upon the other counts. Bull. N. P. 335. 2 Black. Rep. 800. 1199. But it is otherwise in the court of K. B. for there neither party is allowed costs as to those counts the issues upon which are found for the defendant. Say. Costs, 212. Doug. 8vo. 677. But see 1 Wils. 331. But if there be two distinct causes of action, in two separate counts, and as to one the defendant suffers judgment to go by default, and as to the other takes issue, and obtains a verdict, he is entitled to judgment for his costs on the latter count, notwithstanding the plaintiff is entitled to judgment and costs on the first count. 3 Term Rep. 654.

As to the certificate on the stat. 4 An. c. 16. allowing double pleas, (see title Pleading,) and costs thereon, where the judge refuses to grant the certificate, the court have not a discretionary power, whether they will allow the defendant any costs at all; but are bound by the statute to allow him some costs, though the quantum is left to their discretion. Barnes, 140. 2 Term Rep. 394, 5. The intention of the legislature was, that if there be several matters pleaded, some of which are found for the plaintiff, he shall be entitled to the costs of those, notwithstanding other matters are found for the defendant, which entitle him to judgment upon the whole record; unless the judge before whom the cause was tried, shall certify, that the defendant had a probable cause to plead the matters which are found against him.

II. It has already been observed, that no costs were recoverable by a defendant at common law: and the reason seems to be, that if the plaintiff failed in his suit, he was amerced to the King pro falso clamore, which was thought to be a sufficient punishment, without subjecting him to the payment of costs. The first instance of costs being given to a defendant was in a writ of right of ward by the statute of Marlberge. (52 Hen. 3. c. 6.) Afterwards, costs were given to the defendant in error by stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 10. and in replevin, by stat. 7 Hen. 8. c. 4. and stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 19, &c. But in one of these cases, the defendant is to be considered as an actor; and in the other of them, the provision is virtually for the benefit of the plaintiff in the original action. Say. Costs, 70.

In error brought by the defendant before execution, (Cro. Jac. 636.) or by the plaintiff upon a judgment for the defendant, if the judgment be affirmed, the writ of error discontinued, or the plaintiff in error nonsuited, the defendant in error is entitled to costs, by stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 10. and 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. § 2. upon the former of which statutes it has been holden, that costs are recoverable in error, for the delay of execution, although none were recoverable in the original action. Dyer, 77. Cro. Eliz. 617. 659. 5 Co. 101. S. C. Cro. Car. 145. 1 Str. 262. 2 Str. 1084.: but see Cro. Car. 425. 1 Lev. 146. 1 Vent. 38. 166. 4 Mod. 245. Carth. 261. S. C. semb. contra.

An avowant in replevin for rent in arrear, for whom verdict and judgment are given below, which are affirmed on a writ of error, is not entitled to his costs on stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. which is confined to judgments for defendants on demurrer. 10 E. R. 2.

A writ of error having been quashed because brought by a feme covert without her husband, the defendant in error is entitled to costs under the stat. 4 An. c. 16. § 25. 8 T. R. 302.

By stat. 13 Car. 2. stat. 2. c. 2. § 10. if the judgment be affirmed after verdict, the plaintiff shall pay to the defendant in error his double costs. And by stat. 4 An. c. 16. § 25. for preventing vexation, from suing out defective writs of error, it is enacted that "upon the quashing of any writ of error, for variance from the original record, or other defect, the defendant shall recover against the plaintiff in error his costs, as he should have had, if the judgment had been affirmed, and to be recovered in the same manner:" 2 Str. 834. Cas. temp. Hardw. 137. But none of the statutes before mentioned give costs, upon the reversal of a judgment. (1 Stra. 617.)

Where the plaintiff recovered a verdict at the trial, and had judgment in C. B. and upon a bill of exceptions returned into B. R. judgment was reversed, and the plaintiff took nothing by his writ, the defendant cannot have costs. Bell v. Potts, 5 East, 49.

When, upon setting aside a verdict for plaintiff, the costs are directed to abide the event, and then the plaintiff discontinues the action, the defendant is not entitled to the costs of the action. Howarth v. Samuel, Term Rep. K. B. E. 58 G. 3.

In replevin, or second deliverance, the defendant, making avowry, cognizance, or justification, for rents, customs, or services, or for damage feasant, is entitled to costs, by stat. 7 Hen. 8. c. 4. and stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 19. § 3. if the avowry, cognizance or justification be found for him, or the plaintiff be nonsuit or otherwise barred: which statutes extend to avowries, &c. made by an executor (2 R. Rep. 437.); or for an estray (Cro. Eliz. 330.); and, as it should seem, for an amercement by a court leet (Cro. Jac. 520. sed vide Cro. E. 300.); but not to pleas of prisel en auter lieu, upon which the writ is abated, (Com. Rep. 122.) or to pleas of property in the thing distrained. Hard. 153. By stat 17 Car. 2. c. 7. § 2. the defendant obtaining judgment thereon, for the arrearages of rent, or value of the goods distrained, is also entitled to his full costs of suit. And by stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 22. if the defendant avow, or make cognizance, according to that statute, upon a distress for rent, relief, heriot, or other service, and the plaintiff be nonsuit, discontinue his action, or have judgment against him, the defendant shall recover double costs of suit. But this latter statute does not extend to a seizure for a heriot custom.

At length costs were given to defendants by the stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 15. § 1. "in trespass upon stat. 5 Rich. 2. debt, covenant, detinue, account, trespass, on the case, or upon any statute for an offence or wrong personal, immediately supposed to be done to the plaintiff," in cases of nonsuit, or verdict for the defendant.

The stat. 13 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 2. § 10. giving double costs to the defendant in error, if judgment be affirmed after verdict, is confined to cases where the judgment so affirmed is for the plaintiff below, and not where the defendant below obtained judgment upon a special verdict. Baring v. Christie, 5 East, 545.

No costs are allowed on the stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 10. where a writ of error is nonprossed before the transcript of the record by the clerk of the errors of B. R. 7 East, 3. 110.

The King, and any person suing to his use, (stat. 24 H. 8. c. 8.) shall neither pay nor receive costs; for besides that he is not included under the general words of the statutes, as it is his prerogative not to pay them to a subject, so it is beneath his dignity to receive them. And it seems reasonable to suppose that the Queen consort has the same privilege: for in actions brought by her, she was not at the common law obliged to find pledges of prosecution, nor could be amerced in case there was judgment against her. F. N. B. 101. 1 Inst. 133. And on this principle of the King not paying or receiving costs, no costs are due on a certiorari removing summary proceedings; unless a recognizance be entered into at the time of removing the proceedings. 1 Term Rep. 82.

Paupers (that is such as will swear themselves not worth five pounds) are by stat. 11 H. 7. c. 12. to have original writs and subpœnas gratis, and counsel and attorney assigned them without fee; and are excused from paying costs when plaintiffs, by the stat. 23 H. 8. c. 15. § 2. but shall suffer other punishments at the discretion of the judges. And it was formerly usual on such paupers being nonsuited to give them their election either to be whipped or pay the costs; though that practice is now disused. 1 Sid. 261. 7 Mod. 114. Salk. 506. And in cases of misconduct, or in certain other circumstances, they may be dispaupered; that is, deprived of their privilege of suing as paupers. It seems however agreed that a pauper may recover costs, though he pays none: for the counsel and clerks are bound to give their labour to him, but not to his antagonists. 1 Eq. Ab. 125.

Executors and Administrators are not particularly excepted out of stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 16.; yet, as that statute only relates to contracts made with, or wrongs done to the plaintiff, (2 Stra. 1107.) it has been uniformly holden, (Cro. Eliz. 503. Cro. Jac. 229. 2 Bulst. 261. 1 Salk. 207. 313. 3 Burr. 1586. Say. Costs, 97.) that they are not liable to costs, upon a nonsuit or verdict, where they necessarily sue in their representative character, and cannot bring the action in their own right: as upon a contract entered into with the testator or intestate, (T. Jon. 47. 2 Ld. Raym. 1414. 1 Str. 682. S. C. Cas. Pr. C. B. 157. Pr. Reg. 118. S. C. Barnes, 141.) or for a wrong done in his life-time. (Barnes, 119.) But where the cause of action arises after the death of the testator or intestate, and the plaintiff may sue thereon in his own right, he shall not be excused from the payment of costs, though he bring the action as executor or administrator; as upon a contract, (6 Mod. 91. 181. 1 Salk. 207. S. C. 1 Ld. Raym. 436. 1 Str. 682. Barnes, 119. 2 Str .1106. 4 T. R. 277. 5 T. R. 234.) express or implied: or in trover (Com. Rep. 162. Cas. Pr. C. B. 61. Barnes, 132. Cas. temp. Hardw. 204. But see 3 Lev. 60. semb. contra,) for a conversion, after the death of the testator or intestate. 7 T. R. 358. An executor or administrator is liable to costs, upon a judgment of non pros. (Cas. Pr. C. B. 14. 157, 8. 3 Bur. 1585. 6 T. R. 654.)

But they are not liable to costs on judgment, as in case of a nonsuit under 15 G. 2. c. 17. 2 H. B. 277. But where an executor adds some count as executor, stating a cause of action for which he might declare in his own right, if he is nonsuited, he shall be liable to costs. 2 W. P. T. 116. And where he has knowingly brought a wrong action, or otherwise been guilty of a wilful default, he shall pay costs upon a discontinuance, (Cas. Pr. C. B. 79. 3 Bur. 1451. 1 Blac. Rep. 451. S. C.) or for not proceeding to trial according to notice; (Cas. Pr. C. B. 158. 3 Bur. 1585.) but otherwise he is not liable to costs, in either of these cases. (2 Str. 871. Barnes, 133. 4 Bur. 1927.) Nor, where he merely sues en auter droit, is he liable to costs, upon a judgment as in case of a nonsuit. 4 Bur. 1928.

Executors and administrators are liable to costs in error in cases where they would be liable in the original action. 1 H. B. 566.

No costs can be awarded on prohibition against executors, against whom judgment was obtained on demurrer, upon a question whether they were entitled to a general or limited probate. 3 E. R. 202.

Where plaintiff sued as executor, and was nonsuited, upon evidence at the trial that the supposed testator was still alive, the court refused to allow costs to the defendant, it appearing by affidavits on both sides to be still at least doubtful whether the supposed testator were living or not. Zachariah v. Page, Term Rep. K. B. Hil. 58 Geo. 3.

Where an executrix pleaded, 1st. Non-assumpsit; and, 3d. Plene administravit; and issues on the first pleas were found for plaintiff, and on the last for the defendant; it was holden that the last plea being a complete answer to the action, the defendant was entitled to the general costs of the trial. Edwards v. Bethel, Term Rep. K. B. H. 58 Geo. 3.

The stat. 23 H. 8. c. 15. only relates to cases where the plaintiff is nonsuited, or has a verdict against him. But by stat. 8 Eliz. c. 2. "upon process issuing out of the court of King's Bench, if the plaintiff do not declare in three days after bail put in, or if after declaration he do not prosecute his suit with effect, but willingly suffer the same to be delayed or discontinued, or he be nonsuited therein, the judges, by their discretions, shall award to the defendant his costs, damages, and charges in that behalf sustained."

The plaintiff, it has been observed, is not entitled to costs in a popular action, for the whole or part of a penalty given by statute to a common informer, unless they are expressly given him by the statute. Nor was the defendant entitled to costs in such an action, until they were given by the stat. 18 Eliz. c. 5. § 3. made perpetual by stat. 27 Eliz. c. 10.

There being still many cases in which the defendant was not aided by the provisions of the before mentioned statutes, the stat. 4 Jac. 1. c. 3. gives the defendant costs on a nonsuit or verdict in all cases where the plaintiff would have been entitled to them if he had obtained judgment.

When a defendant removes proceedings by a sc. fa. ro. from a county court into one of the superior courts, and signs judgment of non pros. in default of plaintiff's appearing, he is entitled to costs under this stat. 1 T. R. 372.

The stats. 13 C. 2. st. 2. c. 2. § 3. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. § 2. give costs to a defendant also in cases of non pros. and demurrer: and the latter stat. § 1. gives costs to one of several defendants in trespass, assault, false imprisonment, or ejectment acquitted; though the other defendants are convicted.

Though the defendant had judgment on demurrer in quare impedit, the court of C. P. held that he was not entitled to costs under § 2. of the last mentioned statute. 1 H. B. 590.

When a feigned issue is ordered by a court of law, whether it be in a civil or criminal proceeding, the costs always follow the verdict, and must be paid to the party obtaining it. 1 Lill. P. R. 344. Barnes, 130. 1 Wils. 261. 331. Say. Rep. 24. 1 Wils. 324. But when a feigned issue is ordered by a court of equity, the costs do not follow the verdict, as a matter of course; but the finding of the jury is returned back to the court which ordered it, and the costs there are in the discretion of the court. Where the issue is ordered by a court of law, on a rule for an information, (Say. Rep. 229. 1 Bur. 603.) or motion for an attachment, (Say. Rep. 253.) the costs of the original rule, or motion, do not in general follow the verdict, but only the costs of the feigned issue; which costs are to be reckoned, from the time when the feigned issue was first ordered and agreed to. 1 Burr. 604. Yet, where it was ordered, by the consent rule, that the costs should abide the event of the issue, the court directed the whole costs to be paid under it. 2 Burr. 1021.

If the plaintiff enter a noli prosequi, the defendant is entitled to costs under 8 Eliz. c. 2. § 2. 3 T. R. 511.

Where a plaintiff is put to declare in prohibition, and is nonsuited at the assizes, the defendant is only entitled to his single costs, under the stat. 8, 9 W. 3. c. 11. § 3. and not to double costs under 2, 3 Ed. 6. c. 13. § 4. 15 E. R. 574.

III. Where the plaintiff recovers single damages, he is only entitled to single costs; unless more be expressly given him by statute. But if double or treble damages be given by statute, in a case, wherein single damages were before recoverable, the plaintiff is entitled to double or treble costs, although the statute be silent respecting them; (Say. Costs, 228.) as in an action upon stat. 2 H. 4. c. 11. &c. In some cases, double and treble costs are expressly given to the plaintiff; as upon the game laws, by stat. 2 Geo. 3. c. 19. § 5. And wherever a plaintiff is entitled to double or treble costs, the costs given by the court de incrementento are to be doubled or trebled as well as those given by the jury. 2 Leon. 52. Cro. Eliz. 582. 3 Lev. 351. Carth. 297. 321. 2 Str. 1048. But see 1 Term Rep. 252. But double or treble costs are not to be understood to mean, according to their literal import, twice or thrice the amount of single costs. Where a statute gives double costs, they are calculated thus: 1. The common costs; and then half the common costs. If treble costs, 1. The common costs; 2. Half of these; and then half of the latter.

Double or treble costs are also in some cases expressly given to the defendant; as in actions against parish officers, by stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 19.—against justices of the peace, constables, &c. by stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 5.—for distresses for rents and services, by stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 21, 2.—and against officers of the excise or customs, by stats. 23 G. 3. c. 70. § 34. 24 Geo. 3. sess. 2. c. 47. § 35. In these, and such like cases, where it does not appear, on the face of the record, that the defendant is entitled to the benefit of the act, (as where he pleads the general issue,) and there is no particular mode appointed for recovery of the costs, the proper mode, after a nonsuit or verdict for the defendant, is to apply to the court, upon an affidavit of the facts, for leave to enter a suggestion on the roll. 1 Str. 49. 50. Cas. Pr. C. B. 16. Cas. temp. Hardw. 125. Id. 138. 2 Str. 1021. S. C. Say. Rep. 214. 3 Wils. 442. Cas. temp. Hardw. 125. But where a particular mode is appointed by statute, for the recovery of double or treble costs, as by the certificate of the judge who tried the cause, on stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 5. there that particular mode must be observed: (2 Vent. 45. Doug. 8vo. 307, 8. but see Doug. 8vo. 308. n.) so that if the judge certify, there is no need of a suggestion; and if he do not, it is useless, except where judgment goes by default. Cas. temp. Hardw. 138, 9.

IV. A party grieved by having his house set on fire is entitled to costs on stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. against the hundred, though the costs together with the damages may exceed 200*l.* 1 T. R. 71.

A party grieved who recovers damages against the sheriff for not taking bail under stat. 23 H. 6. c. 9. is entitled to costs. 9 T. R. 355.

A justice of the peace who has prosecuted a gaoler to conviction for suffering a prisoner to escape, committed by him on a charge of felony, is not entitled to the costs of the conviction under stat. 5, 6 W. & M. c. 11. § 3. 2 T. R. 47.

If a judge on the trial of an indictment for not repairing a road certify that the defence was frivolous, without also awarding costs in express terms under 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. the prosecutor is entitled to costs. 6 T. R. 344.

Justices of peace may give costs in all cases of convictions, by stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 19. 5 T. R. 356.

The prosecutor of a quo warranto information against a constable of Birmingham is not entitled to costs under stat. 9 An. c. 20. 5 T. R. 375.

Costs are due to the plaintiff who recovers treble damages in an action on 29 Eliz. c. 4. against the sheriff for taking more than the fee allowed by that statute on levying under an execution. 7 T. R. 267.

Persons dwelling near a steam engine which created a nuisance, and prosecuting an indictment for it, are parties grieved entitled to their costs under 5 W. & M. c. 11. § 3. upon removal of the indictment by certiorari into K. B. by the defendants, and their conviction there. 16 E. R. 194.

The prosecutor of an indictment for obstructing an highway must shew himself to be the party grieved in order to obtain costs. 1 Maul. & Selw. Rep. 268.

To entitle an officer defendant to double costs under the stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 5. there must be a certificate of the judge that the defendant was such an officer, and that the action was brought against him for something done by him in the execution of the office. 7 T. R. 443.

The above stat. and 21 Jac. 1. c. 12. § 3. giving double costs to parish officers sued, &c. extend not to actions against them for non-feasance, as for not paying over money, &c. 3 E. R. 92.

When in an action against officers of excise for seizing goods, they do not tender amends before action brought, but pay money into court, and afterwards gain a verdict, they are entitled only to single costs under the stat. 23 G. 3. c. 70. § 31. 1 H. B. 344.

In trespass against the owner of a house adjoining to the plaintiff's in the metropolis, for taking down his party wall and building on it, the defendant shewing at the trial that he was authorised in doing the thing complained of by the building act 14 Geo. 3. c. 78. is entitled to treble costs upon a nonsuit. 9 E. R. 322.

A person sued on stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 50. for shooting without a certificate is not entitled to treble costs on obtaining a verdict. 1 T. R. 252.

The statute 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 22. gives double costs against a plaintiff in replevin, only in three cases, viz. where he is nonsuit; discontinues his action; or has judgment given against him.—And therefore, where in replevin, the cause not being then at issue, the parties agreed by bond to submit the question to arbitration, the costs to abide the event, the arbitrator afterwards awarded in favour of the defendant, it was held that he is not entitled to double costs under the statute. Gurney v. Buller, Term Rep. K. B. T. 58 Geo. 3.

V. Costs are taxed, as between party and party, by the Master in the King's Bench, or by one of the Prothonotaries in the Common Pleas, upon a bill made out by the attorney for the party entitled; or frequently, without a bill, upon a view of the proceedings: and if there have been any extra expences, which do not appear on the face of the proceedings, there should be an affidavit made of such expences, to warrant the allowance of them; which is called an affidavit of increased costs. Imp. K. B. 348. It is usual among fair practisers, to give notice to the opposite attorney, of the time when the costs are intended to be taxed. Id. 349. But in order to enforce it, there must be a rule to be present at taxing costs: which rule is obtained from the clerk of the rules in the King's Bench, or one of the secondaries in the Common Pleas, and should be duly served; after which, if the costs are taxed without notice, the taxation is irregular, and the attorney liable to an attachment.

Where a party obtains leave by consent to examine witnesses abroad on depositions, he is not entitled to be allowed the expence of taking the depositions in the taxation of costs, though he succeed. 8 E. R. 393.

The means of recovering costs, as between party and party, are by action or execution, upon a judgment obtained for them; or by attachment, upon a rule of court. Thus in ejectment, where there is a verdict and judgment against the tenant, an action may be brought, or execution taken out thereon, for the costs. Run. Eject. 140. 141. But where the plaintiff is nonsuited, for not confessing lease entry and ouster, the lessor of the plaintiff must proceed by attachment, upon the consent rule. Id. ibid. 1 Salk. 259. Barnes, 182. And so where the nominal plaintiff is nonsuited upon the merits, or has a verdict and judgment against him, the only remedy is by attachment against the lessor of the plaintiff. Run. Ej. 142, 3. See title Attachment.

Besides the ordinary method of proceeding, there are certain auxiliary means for the recovery of costs, as between party and party. These means are by moving to stay the proceedings, until security be given for the payment of costs; or until the costs are paid of a former action for the same cause; or by deducting the costs of one action, from those of another. As examples of these means, it may be mentioned, that in ejectment, (1 Str. 681.) and actions qui tam, (Id. 697. 705. Barnes, 126.) where the plaintiff, or his lessor, is unknown to the defendant, and in case the plaintiff is a foreigner residing abroad, (1 Term Rep. 267. 362. 491.) the defendant may call for an account of his residence, or place of abode, from the opposite attorney; and if he refuse to give it, or give in a fictitious account of a person who cannot be found, the court will stay the proceedings, until security be given for the payment of costs.

The court of K. B. stated that in the following three instances only they would oblige the plaintiff to give security for costs. 1. When an infant sues. 2. When the plaintiff resides abroad. 3. When there has been a former ejectment. 1 T. R. 490.

The court of C. P. would not compel security for costs in error, because the plaintiff in error was a lunatic. 2 B. & P. 437. Nor from a plaintiff in a qui tam action, though it appeared he was insolvent. 2 K. B. 27.

After the defendant has agreed to take short notice of trial, the court will not compel the plaintiff, though a foreigner and resident abroad, to give security for costs. 2 K. B. 595.

If a foreigner sue two defendants, and only one of them puts in bail, that one may require the plaintiff to give security for costs. 6 T. R. 496.

Where a foreign seaman had brought an action for his wages against a foreigner, the court refused to compel the plaintiff to give security for costs on account of his being on a voyage on board an English ship. 2 H. B. 383. See also 1 B. & P. 96. 2 B. & P. 236. 2 W. P. T. 253.

The Court of K. B. required an uncertificated bankrupt, who brought trover for goods to give security for costs. 7 T. R. 296. But see 2 W. P. T. 61.

An application to make the plaintiff, who resided abroad, give security for the Costs, was refused after notice of trial given, as the defendant might have applied earlier after knowledge of the fact of the plaintiff's residence, and before so much of the Costs were incurred. Walters v. Frythall, 5 East, 338.

The court will compel security for costs where plaintiff resides abroad, without a previous application to his attorney: but they will not order a stay of proceedings, unless such application has been made. Baillie v. Bernales, Hil. 58 Geo. 3. Term Rep. K. B.

Where the plaintiff, after issue joined, had been convicted of felony, and received sentence of transportation, the court compelled him or his attorney to give security for costs retrospective and prospective. Harvey v. Jacob, M. 58 G. 3. Term Rep. K. B.

The practice of deducting or setting off the Costs in one action against those in another, however agreeable to natural justice, does not seem to have obtained till lately in the court of K. B. 2 Stra. 891. 1203. Bull. N. P. 336. 4 Term Rep. 124. But in C. P. it has been frequently allowed; and that not only where the parties have been the same, but also where they have been in some measure different. Barnes, 145. 2 Black. Rep. 826. Bull. N. P. 336.

The lien of the plaintiff's attorney upon the debt and costs recovered in the cause, after affirmance upon a writ of error, must be satisfied before the defendants are entitled to set them off against a judgment recovered by them in another cause against the plaintiff. 1 Maul. & Selw. Rep. 240.

As between Attorney and Client, the former may maintain an action against the latter for the recovery of his costs. Cro. Car. 159. 160.—But by the stat. 3. Jac. 1. c. 7. § 1. attornies and solicitors must deliver a bill to their clients before bringing an action: and by stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 23. § 23. (explained by stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 13. and made perpetual by stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 75.) no attorney nor solicitor shall commence any action, till the expiration of one month after the delivery of his bill; which is directed by the acts to be in a common legible hand, in English, except law-terms, and subscribed with the attorney's hand.

The said stat. 2 G. 2. c. 23. also directs the mode of taxation of attornies' bills by the officers of the several courts; and directs that if the bill taxed be less by a sixth part than the bill delivered, the attorney shall pay the costs of taxation: but if it shall not be less, the costs shall be in the discretion of the court.

If the whole bill be for conveyancing, or for business done at the quarter sessions, &c. it cannot be taxed. But where an attorney had delivered two separate bills, one of which was for fees and disbursements in causes, and the other for making conveyances, a rule was made for taxing both. And so, where it was moved, that the Master might be directed to tax those articles in an attorney's bill, which related to conveyancing and parliamentary business, the rest being for management of causes in the court of King's Bench, Lord Mansfield said, there was no doubt but the master might tax the whole. Barnes, C. B. 141, 2. 4 Term Rep. 124. Say. Rep. 233. Say. Costs, 310.

It is not necessary for the executor or administrator of an attorney, to deliver a bill of costs, for business done by his testator or intestate, before the commencement of an action; (Cas. Pr. C. B. 58.) the stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 23. § 23. being confined to actions brought by the attorney himself, and not extending to his personal representatives. And, in the court of Common Pleas, they will not suffer such a bill to be taxed; (Barnes, 119. 122.) but in the court of King's Bench it is otherwise; (2 Stra. 1056. Say. Costs, 324, 5. Imp. K. B. 482.;) for there, the bill may be referred to be taxed, on the defendant's undertaking to pay what is due.

If an attorney refuse to deliver a bill to his client, the latter may compel him, by taking out a summons before a judge; and if the attorney, on being served therewith, do not attend, an order will be made for delivering it, within a reasonable time. If he still neglect to deliver it, the order should be made a rule of court; and on serving the same, and making affidavit thereof, the court on motion will grant an attachment. Doug. 8vo. 199. in. n. Imp. K. B. 479. The bill being delivered, the client may apply for a judge's summons, to shew cause why it should not be referred to the proper officer to be taxed; upon which an order will be made, the client undertaking to pay what shall appear to be due upon such taxation. Imp. K. B. 479. 480. If the attorney do not attend, an order will be made of course. But the client cannot have a summons for delivery of the bill, and taxing it, together. Id. 480. Barnes. C. B. 126.

Costs in Equity, are allowed for failing to make an answer to a bill exhibited; or making an insufficient answer: and if a first answer be certified by a master to be insufficient, the defendant is to pay 40*s. Costs*; 3*l.* for a second insufficient answer; 4*l.* for a third, &c. But if the answer be reported good, the plaintiff shall pay the defendant 40*s. Costs.* An answer is not to be filed, (till when, it is not reputed an answer,) until Costs for contempt in not answering are paid. By stat. 4 & 5 An. c. 16. if a plaintiff in Chancery dismisses his own bill, or the defendant dismisses the same for want of prosecution, Costs are allowed to the defendant.

In other cases it seems that the matter of Costs to be given to either party is not in equity held to be a point of right, but merely discretionary, under stat. 17 R. 2. c. 6. according to the circumstances of the case. Yet the stat. 15 H. 6. c. 14. which requires surety to satisfy the party grieved his damages, on granting the subpœna, seems expressly to direct that, as well damages as costs shall be given to the defendant, if wrongfully vexed in this court.

In case of a great fraud, a person may be obliged to pay such Costs as shall be ascertained by the injured party's oath.—2 Vern. 123.

COT. In the old Saxon signifies cottage, and so is still used in many parts of England.

COTARIUS. A cottager: the cotarii, or cottagers, are mentioned in Domesday.

COTE AND COT. The names of places which begin or end with these words or syllables have the signification of a little house or cottage: there are likewise dove cotes, which are small houses or places for the keeping of doves or pigeons. See title Pigeon House.

COTELLUS, COTERIA. A small cottage, house, or homestall. Cowel.

COTERELLUS. Cotarius and coterellus, according to Spelman and Du Fresne, are servile tenants: but in Domesday and other ancient MSS. there appears a distinction as well in their tenure and quality, as in their name. For the cotarius held a free socage tenure, and paid a stated firm or rent in provisions or money, with some occasional customary services; whereas the coterellus seems to have held in mere villenage, and his person, issue and goods, were disposable at the pleasure of the lord. Paroch. Antiq. 310.

COTESWOLD. Is used for sheep-cotes and sheep feeding on hills: from the Sax. cote and wold, a place where there is no wood.

COTGARE. A kind of refuse wool, so clung or clotted together, that it cannot be pulled asunder. By stat. 13 R. 2. cap. 9. it is provided, that neither denizen nor foreigner shall make any other refuse of wools but cotgare and villein.

COTLAND AND COTSETHLAND. Land held by a cottager, whether in socage or villenage.—Paroch. Antiq. 532.

COTSETHLA, COTSETLE. The little seat or mansion belonging to a small farm. Cartular. Malmsbur. MS.

COTSETHUS. A cottage holder, who, by servile tenure, was bound to work for the lord. Cowel.—Cotsets are the meanest sort of men, now termed cottagers. And cotseti are those who live in cottages. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 30.

COTTAGE, cotagium.] A little house for habitation, without lands belonging to it.

By the stat. 31 Eliz. c. 7. cottages were prohibited to be erected without laying at least four acres of land to the same: and divers other restrictions were thereby injoined. But this was repealed by stat. 15 Geo. 3. c. 32. setting forth that the said stat. of 31 Eliz. had laid the industrious poor under great difficulties to procure habitations, and tended very much to lessen population; and in divers other respects was inconvenient to the labouring part of the nation in general.

COTTON LIBRARY. For better settling and preserving the Library kept in the house at Westminster, called Cotton-house, in the name and family of the Cottons for the benefit of the Public, a statute was made 12 W. 3. c. 7. See stats. 5 Ann. c. 30. 26 Geo. 2. c. 22.

COTTONS. Not within 27 Hen. 8. concerning the true making of cloth. 27 H. 8. c. 12. sect. 3. See titles Callico, Manufacturers, Navigation Acts.—Stealing cotton out of places used for whitening or dying it, felony without clergy. Stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 27.

COTUCA. Coat armour. Walsing. 114.

COTUCHANS. Boors or husbandmen, of which mention is made in Domesday.

COUCHER, OR COURCHER. A factor that continues abroad in some place or country for traffic; as formerly in Gascoign, for buying of wines. Stat. 37 Ed. 3. c. 16. This word is also used for the general book wherein any corporation, &c. register their particular acts. 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 10.

COVENABLE, Fr. convenable, Lat. rationabilis.] What is convenient or suitable.—Every of the same three sorts of goods, &c. shall be good and covenable, as in old time hath been used. Stat. 31 Ed. 3. cap. 2. Covenably indowed, that is, indowed as is fitting. St. 4 H. 8. c. 12. See Plowd. 472.

COVENANT.

Conventio.] The agreement or consent of two or more by deed in writing, sealed and delivered; whereby either, or one of the parties doth promise to the other that something is done already or shall be done afterwards: he that makes the covenant is called the covenantor: and he to whom it is made, the covenantee. See Shep. Touchst. 160. and on the whole of this subject at length.

I. The several Kinds of Covenants, and by what Words they are created.
II. What Covenants are good and binding, and by whom they may be made.
III. Who shall take Advantage of Covenants, and who are bound by them.
IV. What shall be a Performance, and what a Breach of Covenant.—And of Penalties for Non-performance.

I. A Covenant is generally either in fact or in law; in fact is that which is expressly agreed between the parties, and inserted in the deed; and in law, is that covenant which the law intends and implies, though it be not expressed in words; as if a lessor demise and grant to his lessee a house or lands, &c. for a certain term, the law will intend a covenant on the lessor's part, that the lessee shall, during the term, quietly enjoy the same against all incumbrances. 1 Inst. 384.

There is also a Covenant real, and Covenant personal: a covenant real is that whereby a man ties himself to pass a thing real, as lands or tenements; or to levy a fine of lands, &c. And covenant personal, is where the same is annexed to the person and merely personal; as if a person covenants with another by deed to build him a house, or to serve him, &c. F. N. B. 145. 5 Rep. 10.

Covenants are likewise inherent, that tend to the support of the land or thing granted; or are collateral to it; and are affirmative, where somewhat is to be performed; or negative; executed, of what is already done, or executory: a covenant being to bind a man to do something in future, is for the most part executory. 1 Vent. 176. Dyer, 112. 271.

A covenant to settle or convey particular lands, will not at law create a lien upon the lands; but in equity such a covenant, if for a valuable consideration, will be deemed a specific lien on the lands, and decreed against all persons claiming under the covenantor, except purchasers for valuable consideration, and without notice of such covenant. Finch v. Earl of Winchelsea, 1 P. Wms. 282. Freemoult v. Dedire, 1 P. Wms. 429. Coventry v. Coventry; best reported at the end of Francis's Maxims; for Equity considers that as done which, being distinctly agreed to be done, ought to have been done. Grounds and Rudiments of Law and Equity, p. 75.

A general covenant to settle lands of a certain value, without mentioning any lands in particular, will not create a specific lien on any of the lands of the covenantor, and therefore cannot be specifically decreed in equity. Freemoult v. Dedire, 1 P. Wms. 430. But if the covenantor expressly declares the settlement to be in execution of his power, though the particular lands to be charged be not specified, equity will ascertain them. Coventry v. Coventry, Francis's Maxims. Gilb. Rep. 160.

It is held in all cases where words that begin any sentence are conditional, and give another remedy, they shall not be construed a covenant; and yet if words of condition and covenant are coupled together in the same sentence, as Provided always, and it is covenanted, &c. in that case they may be adjudged both a condition and covenant. March, 103.

The law does not seem to have appropriated any set form of words, as absolutely necessary to be made use of in creating a covenant; and therefore it seems that any words will be effectual for that purpose, which shew the party's concurrence to the performance of a future act; as if lessee for years covenants to repair, &c. Provided always, and it is agreed, that the lessor shall find great timber, &c. this makes a covenant on the part of the lessor to find great timber, by the word agreed; and it shall not be a qualification of the covenant of the lessee. 1 New Abr. 527.—See 1 Burr. 290.

"The dependence or independence of covenants, is to be collected from the evident sense and meaning of the parties; and however transposed they may be in a deed, their precedency must depend on the order of time in which the intent of the transaction requires their performance." Per Lord Mansfield, Jones v. Berkley, Dougl. 665.—See also Hotham v. The East India Company, 1 Term Rep. 638. Where the participle doing, performing, paying, repairing, is prefixed to a covenant, it is clearly a mutual covenant, and not a condition precedent. Boone v. Eyre, 2 Black. Rep. 1312. Allen v. Babington, Sid. 280. Atkinson v. Morrice, 12 Mod. 503. But where the covenant goes to the whole consideration on both sides, there it is a condition precedent. Duke of St. Alban's v. Shore, 1 H. Black. Rep. 270.

If one makes a lease for years, reserving a rent, action of covenant lies for non-payment of the rent; for the reddendum of the rent is an agreement for payment of it, which will make a covenant. 2 Danv. 230. A lease is made to two, and one seals the deed, but the other doth not; if he accepts the estate and occupies the land, he is bound to perform the covenants for payment of the rent, reparations, and the like. 1 Shep. Abr. 458.

If one man covenants to pay another 20*l.* at a day; although he may have action of debt for the 20*l.* yet it is said he may have covenant at his election. 2 Danv. 229.

It is agreed that A. B. shall pay to C. D. 100*l.* for lands in E.; this is a mutual covenant, whereon action of covenant may be brought if C. D. will not convey. 1 Sid. 423. But where there are mutual covenants, and the one not to be performed before a precedent covenant, in such case one covenant is not suable till the other is performed: though if the covenants are distinct and mutual, several actions may be brought by and against the parties. 1 Lil. Abr. 350. 2 Mod. 74. In a covenant to pay another so much money, he making him an estate in such land, &c. it has been adjudged, that if he tender the covenantor a feoffment, and offer to make livery, he may have action of covenant for the money, as if he had made a title. 3 Salk. 107.

Where a man covenants that he hath power to grant, and that the grantee shall quietly enjoy notwithstanding any claiming under him; these are distinct covenants, for one goes to the title, and the other to the possession. 1 Mod. 101.

There is this difference however between a covenant and condition; a condition gives entry, and covenant gives an action only. Owen, 54. A person cannot have action of covenant upon a verbal agreement, for it cannot be grounded without writing, except by special custom. F. N. B. 145.

II. All covenants between persons must be to do what is lawful, or they will not be binding; and if the thing to be done be impossible, the covenant is void. Dyer, 112. But where the thing is lawful at the time of the covenant made, and afterwards the matter agreed to be done is prohibited by act of parliament, yet such covenant will be binding. 3 Mod. 39. And if a man covenants to do a thing before a certain time; and it becomes impossible by the act of God, this shall not excuse him, inasmuch as he hath bound himself precisely to do it. 2 Danv. Abr. 84.

Though a covenant to stand seised of lands to be after-purchased be void at law, unless there be some new act to be done; yet it seems, that a covenant to settle lands of such a value, will charge after-purchased lands, though the covenantor had none at the time of executing the covenant. Took v. Hastings, 2 Vern. 97.

If a person covenants expressly to repair a house, and it is burnt down by lightning, or any other accident, yet he ought to repair it; for it was in his power to have provided against it by his contract. Alleyn, 26. 27. 1 Lil. Abr. 149. But he is not so bound by covenant in law. Where houses are blown down by tempest, the law excuses the lessee in an action of waste; though in a covenant to repair and uphold, it will not. 1 Plowd. 29.

A lessee of a house who covenants generally to repair is bound to repair if it is burnt by an accidental fire. 6 T. R. 650.

On a covenant to build a bridge in a substantial manner, and to keep it in repair for a certain time, the party is bound to rebuild the bridge though broken down by an extraordinary flood. 6 T. R. 750.

If a lessee for years, rendering rent, covenants for him and his assigns to repair the house, and after the lessee assigns over the term, and the lessor accepts the rent from the assignee, and then the covenant is broken; notwithstanding acceptance of rent from the assignee, action of covenant lies against the first lessee, on his express covenant to repair: and this personal covenant cannot be transferred by the acceptance of the rent. 2 Danv. Abr. 240. See title Assignment, and post, III.

Action of covenant also lies on covenant for payment of rent against such lessee; but not action of debt after acceptance. 3 Rep. 24. In covenant upon a demise, rendering rent, the defendant cannot say, that part of it was to be allowed; for this is a covenant against a covenant. Comb. 21.

An infant within age may bind himself apprentice: but neither at Common Law nor by statute may be bound by covenant for his apprenticeship, so as to make him liable to an action of covenant, if he depart, &c. But by the custom of London he may bind himself by his covenant at fourteen years old. 1 Cro. 129. Winch. 63.

A covenant by a tenant to yield up in repair, at the expiration of his lease, all buildings which should be erected during the term upon the demised premises, includes buildings erected and used by the tenant for the purpose of trade and manufacture, if they be let into the soil or otherwise fixed to the freehold, but not where they rest merely upon blocks or pattens. 1 W. P. T. 19.

III. There may be an agreement and covenant, only to be performed by the parties themselves; and there are some covenants which none but the party and his heirs may take advantage of, being such as concern the inheritance, and descend to the heir, as knit to the estate: covenants in gross go to the executors, &c. 1 Rol. Abr. 520. 2 Danv. 235. Not only parties to deeds, but their executors and administrators, shall take advantage of inherent covenants, though not named; and every assignee of the land may have the benefit of such covenants: likewise executors and assigns are bound by them, although not named, as a covenant to repair, &c. 5 Rep. 16. 17. 1 Cro. 552. If a man covenants with another to do any thing, his heir shall not be bound, unless he be expressly named: and yet where a lessee covenants to repair, the heir shall have the benefit of the covenant, though not named, because it runs with the land. 2 Lev. 92. 5 Rep. 8.

The executors and administrators of the covenantor will be bound by the covenant, though not named, unless the covenant be of such a nature as not to allow of its being performed by any other person but the Covenantor. See Dyer, 14: pl. 69. 1 Roll. Abr. 519. l. 35. Hyde v. Dean & Canons of Windsor, Cro. Eliz. 553.

One who covenants for himself, his heirs, &c. and under his own hand and seal for the act of another, shall be personally bound by his covenant, though he describe himself in the deed as covenanting for and on the part and behalf of such other person. Appleton v. Binks, 5 East, 148.

Where the Assignees of a bankrupt advertised the lease of certain premises, of which the bankrupt was lessee, for sale by auction (without stating themselves to be the owners or possessed thereof), and no bidder offering, they never took possession in fact of the premises, held that this was no more than an experiment to ascertain the value, whether the lease was beneficial or not to the creditors, and did not amount to an assent on the part of the assignees to take the term; nor support an averment in a declaration in covenant against them by the landlord, that all the estate, right, title, interest, &c. of the bankrupt in the premises came to the defendants by assignment thereof. Turner v. Richardson and another, assignees of Barber, 7 East, 335.

All persons to whom the land descended were by the Common Law entitled to the benefit of covenants which run with the land; but grantees of the reversion were not. The stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 34. therefore enacted, "That all grantees, &c. of reversions, should have the like advantages against the lessees, their executors, &c. by entry for non-payment of the rent, or for doing waste, or other forfeiture; and the same remedy by action only, for not performing other conditions, covenants, or agreements contained in the leases, against the lessees, as the lessors or grantors had." The statute also gives the lessees the same remedy against the grantees of the reversion, which they might have had against their grantors. It must not, however, be understood from the general words of the statute, that the grantee of the reversion can take benefit of every forfeiture by force of a condition,

Lord Coke conceiving the operation of the statute to be confined to such conditions as are either incident to the reversion, as rent; or for the benefit of the State, as for not doing of waste, for keeping the houses in repair, for making of fences, or such like; and not for the payment of any sum in gross, delivery of corn, wood, or the like. See Co. Lit. 215. where a variety of resolutions upon this statute are stated, and the authorities referred to. See also 6 Vin. Ab. Covenant, [K. 3.] p. 397. Webb v. Russell, 3 T. R. 393.—See further Bac. Abr. Covenant, [E. 6.] Vin. Ab. Covenant, [K. 3.]

The liability of the assignee does not extend to covenants broken before the assignment; as a covenant to build within a certain time, which was past before the assignment. Grescott v. Green, 1 Salk. 199. St. Saviour's Southwark v. Smith, 3 Burr. 1271. 1 Black. R. 351. Nor is the assignee to be affected by any covenant broken after he has assigned over. Boulton v. Canon, 1 Freem. 336.

Upon a covenant to repair and keep in repair during the continuance of the term, an action may be maintained for breaches before the term has expired. Luxmore v. Robson, Term Rep. K. B. E. 58 G. 3.

A collateral covenant to be done upon the land, as to build de novo, shall bind the assignee by express words; in this case, the assignees are bound by the terms of the covenant, for unless named, they would not be bound by law; "for the covenant concerns a thing which was not in esse, at the time of the demise made; but to be newly built after, and therefore shall bind the covenantor, his executors, and administrators, and not the assignee; for the law will not annex the covenant to a thing which hath no being." Spencer's case, 5 Co. 16 b. But as the law would sustain such a covenant against the covenantor and his assigns, if expressly included in the covenant, and give damages for its non-performance, it should seem to follow, that the covenantee would be entitled in equity to a decree for the specific performance of such covenant to build; and of this opinion Lord Hardwicke appears to have been, in the case of the City of London v. Nash, 3 Atk. 515. 1 Vez. 12. But in the case of Lucas v. Commerford, 3 Bro. C. R. 166. Lord Thurlow, C. held, "That there could not be a decree to rebuild in pursuance of a covenant, for that he could no more undertake the conduct of a rebuilding than of a repair."

In a lease of ground with liberty to make a watercourse, and erect a mill, the lessee covenanted for himself, &c. and his assigns, not to have persons to work in the mill who were settled in other parishes, without a certificate. The court held that this covenant did not run with the land, or bind the assignee of the lessee. 10 E. R. 130.

At law the Assignee is liable only for the rent actually incurred, or covenants broken during his possession. Boulton v. Canon, 1 Frem. 336. If therefore he assign the very day before the rent becomes due, the lessor cannot maintain his action for it. Tovey v. Pitcher, Carth. 177. 4 Mod. 71. 3 Co. 22. 1 Salk. 81. 1 Freem. 326. Nor will the circumstance of such assignment being per fraudem, as to a beggar alter the case. Leroux v. Nash, Str. 1221. Buller's N. P. 159. But see Knight v. Freeman, 1 Vent. 329. 331. T. Raym. 303. T. Jones, 109. in which the validity of such assignment was denied. But whatever may be the rule of law upon this point, it seems to be now settled, that courts of equity will compel an assignee of a term to account for the rent the whole time he enjoyed the land. Treacle v. Coke, 1 Vern. 105. Whether equity will, in order to secure the future rents, under any circumstances, restrain an assignee from assigning to a beggar or insolvent person, was considered but not determined, in the case of Philpot v. Hoare, 2 Atk. 219. If the assignee offer to give up the possession to the lessor on reasonable terms, and the lessor refuse to accept such surrender, it were clearly too much for a court of equity, in restriction of a legal right, to prevent the assignment. Vaillant v. Dodomede, 2 Atk. 546. But supposing the lessor to be willing to accept of a surrender of the term, and the assignee wantonly to insist on his legal right to assign, when and to whom he pleased, it seems that, under certain circumstances, a court of equity might, without impropriety, interpose to prevent the abuse of such right: and this Lord Harwicke appears to admit, in Vaillant v. Dodomede; for having stated the legal right and the propriety of courts of equity in general, following the rule of law, he observes, "but it is true in some sort of assignments, made by tenants, the court has interposed;" nor does the difficulty reported to have occurred to Lord Hardwicke, in Philpot v Hoare, appear, upon examination, to have been entitled to much attention. His Lordship is reported to have said, "As to the accruing rents, it is a point of more difficulty; for the covenant in this lease not to assign, does not run with the land to the assignee, because assignees are not bound by name in the covenant." Whence it might be inferred, that if assigns had been expressly included in the covenant, his Lordship would have considered them bound by the covenant. But whether assignees be bound or not by a covenant, does not, (except in the case of a collateral covenant to be done upon the land,) depend upon their being named in the covenant; for if the covenant run with the land, assignees are bound, whether named or not; and if the covenant do not run with the land, but is a personal contract, or respect something to be done purely collateral to, and not on the land, they are not bound, though they be expressly named. See Spencer's case, 5 Co. 16 b. 17 a. Therefore, whether the assignee was named or not, was immaterial to the question, Whether the assignee was bound by the covenant not to assign without consent of the lessor? Nor does it appear as having been necessary in order to determine whether a court of equity should restrain an assignment to a beggar, previously to determine, whether the assignee was bound by the covenant not to assign; for supposing the assignee to be bound at law by the covenant, equity may restrain the wanton and fraudulent breach of a covenant; and supposing him not to be bound, yet he may be affected in conscience upon the same principle that the assignee of a merely personal covenant may be affected in conscience, though not bound at law. See City of London v. Richmond, 2 Vern. 421. Treat. of Equity, 350 in n.

An action of covenant lies against the assignee of a lessee of an estate, for a part of the rent, as in such case the action is brought on a real contract in respect of the land, and not on a personal contract, and in case of eviction the rent may be apportioned as in debt or replevin. Aliter in covenant against the lessee himself, who is liable on his personal contract. 2 E. R. 575.

The devisee of the equity of redemption, (the legal fee being in a mortgagee,) is not liable in covenant, as assignee of all the estate, right, title, and interest of the original covenantor. 3 E. R. 487.

A covenant in a lease that the lessee, his executors, and administrators, shall constantly reside upon the demised premises during the demise, is binding upon the assignee of the lessee, though he be not named, being quodam modo annexed and appurtenant to the thing demised. 2 H. B. 133.

The grantee of a reversion may bring action of covenant against a lessee, as well in the country where the demise was made, as in the county where the lands lie. Carthew, 183. A person covenants with another, to pay him money at a time to come, and doth not say to his executors, &c. if the covenantee die before the day, yet his executors or administrators shall have the money. Dyer, 112. 127. And in every case where the testator is bound by a covenant, the executor shall be bound by it; if it be not determined by his death. 48 Ed. 3. 2. 2 Danv. 232.

If A. seised of land in fee, conveys it to B. and covenants with B. his heirs and assigns, to make any other assurance upon request: and after B. conveys it to C. who conveys it to D. and then D. requires A. to make another assurance, according to the covenant: if he refuses, D. shall have an action of covenant against him, as assignee to B. 2 Danv. 236. A lessor made a lease of an house for years, excepting two rooms and free passage to them; the lessee assigned the term, and the lessor brought covenant against the assignee for disturbing him in his passage to those rooms; and adjudged, that the action lies: for the covenant as to the passage, goes with the tenement, and binds the assignee. 1 Salk. 196. If a man who leases for years, ousts the lessee, he shall have covenant against him. 48 Ed. 3. 2.—See 2 Danv. 234. A man grants a watercourse, and afterwards stops it; for this voluntary misfeasance, covenant lies. 1 Saund. 322. Though where the use of a thing is demised, and it runs to decay, so that the lessee cannot have the benefit of it, for this non-feasance no action of covenant lieth: nor may covenant be brought for a thing which was not in esse at the making of the lease. 2 Danv. 233.

If a person covenants that he hath good right to grant, &c. and he hath no right, it is a breach of covenant, for which action of covenant lies. 2 Bul. 12.

A covenant for the lessee to enjoy against all men: this extends not to tortious acts and entries, &c. for which the lessee hath his proper remedy against the aggressors. Vaugh. 111. 120.

Where there is a covenant to save harmless against a certain person, there the covenantor must save the covenantee harmless against the entry of that person, be it by wrong or rightful title: but if it be to save harmless against all persons, the entry and eviction must be by lawful title. Cro. Eliz. 213. Where the covenant is to do a thing, and no time appointed for performance, it must be done in convenient time. 2 And. 73. Dyer, 57. 150. Hob. 28.

But a covenant must wait upon and join with the grant; so that if it be to make such assurance as shall be reasonably devised, it must be of an assurance that differs not from the bargain: and when the estate to which a covenant is annexed is at an end, the covenant is gone. Hob. 276. 1 Leon. 179. In an indenture, the word covenant is the word both of lessor and lessee; and therefore if the lessee covenants to pay the rent, this is a reservation. Though when there is a covenant for a lessee to repair, and he makes an under-lease to one who is in possession, the under-lessee is not liable to that covenant, in law or equity. 1 Rol. Rep. 80. 1 Vern. 87.

If a lessor covenant with the lessee that he shall have housebote, &c. by assignment of his bailiff, this is a good covenant: and yet it doth not restrain the power that the lessee hath by law to take those things without assignment: but if a lessee covenants, that he will not cut any timber, without the leave or assignment of the lessor; by this he will be restrained.—Dyer, 19. 115.

Covenant lies by devisee of lands in fee, upon a covenant, made by defendant to the testator, to whom defendant conveyed the lands in fee, that the defendant was lawfully seised, &c. For such covenant runs with the land, and though broken in the life time of the testator, is a continuing breach in the life time of the devisee: and it is sufficient to alledge for damage, that thereby the lands are of less value to the devisee, and that he is prevented from selling them so advantageously as he otherwise might do. Kingdom v. Noble, E. 55 G. 3. T. R. K. B. 53.

Covenant lies by the heir, upon a covenant made to the ancestor and his heirs, to whom lands are conveyed in fee by husband and wife, that he and his wife will make further assurance upon request of the ancestor and his heirs: and the heir may well assign for breach that his ancestor requested the husband that he and his wife would levy a fine to pass the estate of the wife legally to him and his heirs, which they refused to do before their decease, per quod after the death of the ancestor, the devisee of the wife ejected the heir. Jones v. King, T. R. K. B. T. 55 G. 3.

IV. The most frequent use of a covenant, is to bind a man to do something in futuro, and therefore it is for the most part executory; and if the covenantor do not perform it, the covenantee may thereupon for his relief have an action or writ of covenant, against the covenantor, so often as there is any breach of the covenant. Shep. Touchst. 161. et seq.

Not any duty or cause of action arises on a covenant till it is broken: and as to breaches of covenant, if a person by his own act disables himself to perform a covenant, it is a breach thereof. 5 Rep. 21. Though there can be no covenant or breach, where a lease, &c. is void. Yelv. 18. 19. But here, although when a covenant concerns the interest of the lease, as where it is for paying rent, it is void, if the lease be so: yet where covenants are collateral to the lease and interest, though that be void, the covenants may be good. Owen, 136. And if a covenant to do a thing is performed in substance, and according to the intent, it is good, though it differs from the words; and on the other hand, although the covenantor performs the letter of his covenant, if he does not act to defeat the intent and use of it, he is guilty of a breach. Mod. Ent. Eng.

In covenant that a person shall hold land free from all incumbrances, and be kept indemnified from arrears of rent; there, till an action is brought, or distress made, he is not damnified; and a suit in chancery is no breach in such case; but where a jointure, or dower is recovered, it is. Skin. 397. Moor, 859. Palm. 339. When the intention of the parties can be collected out of a deed, for the doing or not doing of the thing, covenant shall be had thereupon. Chanc. Rep. 294. A covenant, being one part of a deed, is subject to the general rules of exposition of all parts of the deed: and in a covenant the last words, that are general, shall be expounded by the first words, which are special and particular. Vent. 218. Also a latter covenant cannot be pleaded in bar to a former.

When a covenant is to two persons jointly, one of them may not bring action of covenant, or plead alone, but both must join. 1 Nels. 558. If a man is bound to perform all the covenants in an indenture, and they are all in the affirmative, he may plead performance generally. Co. Lit. 303. Covenants in the negative must be pleaded specially. Ibid. 330. When some covenants are in the negative, and some in the affirmative, the defendant is to plead specially to the negative covenants, that he had not done the thing, and performance generally as to the affirmative: (sed qu. and vide post:) and where the negative covenants are against law, and the affirmative agreeable to law, performance generally may be pleaded. Moor, 856. If any of the covenants are in the disjunctive, so that it is in the election of the covenantor to perform the one or the other, the performance ought to be specially pleaded, that it may appear what part hath been performed. Cro. Eliz. 23. 1 Nels. 573. And commonly where an act is to be done, according to a covenant, he who pleads performance ought to do it specially. 1 Leon. 136.

In debt upon bond for performance of covenants, one whereof for peaceable enjoyment, and free from all incumbrances, and another for further assurance, &c. the defendant should plead specially, that the house was free from incumbrances at the time of the conveyance made, and not charged at any time since, and that no farther assurance had been required, or such an assurance which he had executed, &c. yet where a defendant pleaded generally, in this case it was held good. 1 Lutw. 603.

The plaintiff, in equity, if he has not performed his part of the agreement, must not only shew that he was in no default, in not having performed it, but must also alledge that he is still ready to perform it: whereas, at law, if the covenants be not precedent, but distinct and independent, the plaintiff need not alledge a performance of his covenants, to entitle him to recover against the defendant for the breach of his. Pordage v. Cole, 1 Sand. 320. Nichols v. Raynbred, Hob. 88. But see Calonel v. Briggs, 1 Salk. 112. Goodison v. Nunn, 4 Term Rep. 761.

Where the covenants are mutual and distinct, the defendant cannot plead a breach by the plaintiff, in bar of the plaintiff's action for a breach by the defendant: for the damage may be unequal, and therefore each party must recover against the other, the damages he sustained. Cole v. Shallett, 3 Lev. 41. Thompson v. Noel, 1 Lev. 16. Howlett v. Strictland, Cowp. 56. But see Calonel v. Briggs, 1 Salk. 122. Goodison v. Nunn, 4 Term Rep. 761.

When a breach is assigned, it must not be general, but must be particular; as in action of covenant for not repairing of houses, the breach ought to be assigned particularly, what is the want of reparation. Cro. Jac. 369.

But on mutual promise for one to do an act, and in consideration thereof another to do some act, as to sell goods, &c. for so much money, a general breach that the defendant hath not performed his part, is well assigned. 3 Lev. 319.

Breaches assigned ought to be according to the very words of the condition or covenant; when they may be well enough, though too general. 1 Lutw. 326.

Where a thing is to be done by a person of his assigns, the breach is to be, that it was not done either by the one or the other. 5 Mod. 133. If a person is to tender a conveyance, &c. to another, his heirs or assigns, breach assigned that the defendant did not tender a conveyance to the plaintiff, without the words, "his heirs or assigns," is good; but if the tender be to be made by another man, his heirs, &c. and not to him, it is otherwise. 1 Salk. 139.

When a lessee for years is to leave all the timber on the land, which was growing there at the time of the lease, and he cut down any trees, though he leaves the timber on the land at the end of his lease, this is a breach of covenant; for in contracts the intention of the parties is chiefly to be considered. Raym. 464. If several breaches are assigned, and the defendant demurs upon the whole declaration, the plaintiff shall have judgment for all that are well assigned, for they are as several actions. Cro. Jac. 557.

A lessor possessed of considerable freehold and leasehold property lying together, covenanted in a lease of parcel, that if he, his heirs or assigns, should, during the term, have any advantageous offer for the disposing of a certain adjoining freehold parcel, he, the lessor, his heirs or assigns, should not dispose of the same without previously making an offer of that parcel to the lessee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, at five per cent. less than that offer. The lessor sold his entire property, including the demised land and the adjoining parcel, for an entire consideration in one entire contract, without offering the parcel to the covenanter. Held that this was no breach of the covenant. Collinson v. Lettsom, 6 W. P. T. 224.

Covenants are generally taken most strongly against the covenantor, and for the covenantee. Plowd. 287. But it is a rule in law, that where one thing may have several intendments, it shall be construed in the most favourable manner for the covenantor. 1 Lut. 490. The common use of covenants is for assuring of land; quiet enjoyment free from incumbrances; for payment of rent reserved; and concerning repairs, &c. And in deeds of covenant, sometimes a clause for performance, with a penalty, is inserted in the body of the deed: at other times and more frequently, bonds for performance, with a sufficient penalty, are given separate; which last being sued, the jury must find the penalty; but on covenant, only the damages. Wood's Inst. 250. Vide the stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. And vide ante and post, and tit. Bond.

Covenant for non-payment of rent, was referred to the master as to the rent, and on payment thereof process to stay as to that, but there being another breach as to not repairing, the plaintiff might proceed for that. Anon. Wils. Rep. Par. 1. p. 75. In an action of covenant, it is not necessary to aver that the plaintiff performed his covenants. Joddrell v. Cowell, Rep. temp. Hardw. 343, 4.

By stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. in actions on bonds, for performance of covenants, plaintiff may assign as many breaches as he pleases, and the jury on the trial of the action, or on a writ of inquiry, may assess damages: on defendant's paying damages, execution may be stayed, but judgment shall remain to answer any farther breach, and plaintiff may have a scire facias against the defendant. See title Bond, VI.

"Where a penalty is intended, merely to secure the enjoyment of a collateral object, the enjoyment of the object is considered as the principal intent of the deed, and the penalty only as accessional, and therefore only to secure the damage really incurred." Per Thurlow, C. Sloman v. Walter, 1 Bro. Rep. 418. And upon this construction of a penalty, courts of equity will interpose, to restrain proceedings at law, to recover the penalty. But the principles of equal justice require, that courts of equity should enforce the specific performance of the act agreed to be done, or restrain from the doing of that, which was agreed should not be done. And upon this principle, wherever the primary object of the agreement be the securing of the specific subject of the covenant, the party covenanting is not entitled to elect whether he will perform his covenant, or pay the penalty. See Hobson v. Trevor, 2 P. Wms. 191. Parks v. Wilson, 10 Mod. 517. Chilliner v. Chilliner, 2 Vez. 528. But if the covenant be to do, or not to do, some particular act, or doing it or neglecting to do it, to pay a certain sum, by way of liquidated damages, courts of equity will not relieve against the payment of such damages. East India Company v. Blake, Finch's Rep. 117. Ponsonby v. Adams, 2 Bro. P. C. 431. Rolfe v. Peterson, 2 Bro. P. C. 436. (8vo. ed.) Lowe v. Peers, 4 Burr. 2228.—See also Small v. Lord Fitzwilliam, Pre. Ch. 102. And as courts of equity will not relieve against stipulated damages, they will not, in general, interpose to enforce the performance of the covenant, or to restrain its violation. Therefore, where the lessee covenanted not to plough certain land, or if he did to pay 20*s. per acre*, per ann. the court refused to restrain the lessee from ploughing. Woodward v. Gyles, 2 Vern. 119. But there are some circumstances which will induce the court to interfere, though stipulated damages be reserved; as where the lessee had covenanted not to plough ancient meadow, or if he did, to pay an increase of rent, the court upon his threatening to plough, appears to have granted an injunction. Webb v. Clarke, 8*th* of May, 1782. —See also Dulwich College v. Davis, M. 1787.

A covenant in a conveyance of lands in America, during the time of the rebellion in that country, that the grantor had a legal title, and that the grantee might peaceably enjoy without the let interruption, &c. of the grantor and his heirs, or of any other person whomsoever, is not broken by the States of America seizing the lands as forfeited, for an act done previous to the conveyance. 3 T. R. 564.

It is held an action of covenant may be laid in London, for non-payment of rent on a lease of lands in any other place. 1 Sid. 401. And if, in this action, a sum be miscast, either too little, or too much, it is amendable; and not like to the action of debt, which if alledged less than it is, without shewing the rest to be satisfied, it is ill. 3 Keb. 39. 2 Cro. 247. In action of covenant, the plaintiff must have recourse to the deeds or writings, and the circumstances of time, place, &c. and take notice what particular covenant in the deed it is best to insist upon, to lay a breach right, &c. The words of covenanting are, covenant, grant, promise, and agree, &c. but there needs no great exactness in words to make a covenant. See tit. Bonds, Leases, Agreements, Conveyances, &c. and ante 1.

The word Covenant is also taken for the Solemn League and Covenant; which was a seditious conspiracy, invented in Scotland, voted illegal by parliament, and against which provision is made by stat. 14 Car. 2. c. 4.

Covenant to stand seised to Uses. Is when a man that hath a wife, children, brother, sister, or kindred, doth by covenant in writing, under hand and seal, agree that for their or any of their provision or preferment, he and his heirs will stand seised of land to their use: either in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for life. The use being created by the stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10. which conveyeth the estate as the uses are directed, this covenant to stand seised is become a conveyance of the land since the said statute. The considerations of these deeds, are natural affection, marriage, &c. and the law allows in such cases consideration of blood and marriage, to raise uses, as well as money, and other valuable consideration when a use is to a stranger. Plowd. 302. There are no considerations now to raise uses upon covenants to stand seised, but natural love and affection, which is for advancement of blood; and consideration of marriage, which is the joining of the blood and marriage together: other considerations, as money, &c. for land, though the words in the deeds are stand seised, yet they are bargains and sales, and without enrolment they raise no use. Carter, 138. Lil. Abr. 353.

The usual covenant to stand seized to uses need not be by deed indented and inrolled. And where a man limits his estate to the use of his wife for life, this imports a sufficient consideration in itself; also if a person covenants to stand seized to the use of his wife, son, or cousin, it will raise an use without any express words of consideration; for sufficient consideration appears. 7 Rep. 40.

In case of a covenant to stand seized, so much of the use as the owner doth not dispose of remains still in him. 1 Vent. 374. And where a use is raised by way of covenant, the covenantor continues in possession; and there the uses limited, if they are according to law, shall rise and draw the possession out of him: but if they are not, the possession shall remain in him until a lawful use ariseth. 1 Leon. 197. 1 Mod. 159. 160.

If on a covenant to stand seised to uses, no use doth arise, yet it may be good by way of covenant and give remedy to the covenantee in an action; as if the covenant be future, that, in consideration of a marriage, lands shall descend or remain to a son and the heirs of his body on the body of his wife; in this case the covenantee may have writ of covenant upon the covenant against the covenantor. But if a covenant be that a man and his heirs, shall from henceforth stand and be seized to such and such uses, and the uses will not arise by law: here no action of covenant lies on the covenant; for this action will never lie upon any covenant; but such as is either to do a thing hereafter, or where the thing is already done, and not where it is for a thing present. Plowd. 307. 398. Finch's Law, 49.—See titles Conveyance, Use.

COVERT BARON. A feme covert baron, is a married woman. See titles Baron and Feme.

COVERTURE, Fr.] Any thing that covers; as apparel, a coverlet, &c. but it is by our law particularly applied to the state and condition of a married woman, who is sub potestate viri; and therefore disabled to contract with any, to the damage of herself or husband, without his consent and privity, or his allowance and confirmation thereof. Bract. lib. 1. c. 10. lib. 2. 15. &c. Bro. Abr. When a woman is married, she is called a Feme Covert; and whatever is done concerning her, during the marriage, is said to be during the coverture: all things that are the wife's are the husband's; nor hath the wife power over herself, but the husband: and if the husband alien the wife's land, during the coverture, she cannot avoid it during his life; but after his death, she may recover by cui in vita. Termes de Ley.—See titles Baron and Feme; Cui in vita.

COVIN, Covina.] A deceitful compact between two or more to deceive or prejudice others; as if tenant for life or in tail, conspires with another, that he shall recover the land which he the tenant holds, in prejudice of him in reversion. Plowd. 546. Covin is commonly conversant in and about conveyances of lands by fine, feoffment, recovery, &c. And then it tends to defeat purchasers of the lands they purchase, and creditors of their just debts; and so it is used in deeds of gift of goods: it may be likewise sometimes in suits of law, and judgments had in them. But wherever covin is, it shall never be intended, unless it appears and be particularly found: for covin and fraud though proved, yet must be found by the jury, or it will not be good. Brownl. 188. Bridgm. 112.

If one make a lease to a person by covin, and after grant another lease to another bonâ fide, but without any fine or rent; in this case the second lessee may not avoid the first lease, because he is not a purchaser that comes in for money. 3 Rep. 83. On recovery by a good title, there may be covin; as where tenant for life by assent, &c. suffers a recovery by Nil dicit, without making any defence: and if a man hath a rightful and just cause of action, and of covin and consent shall raise up a tenant by wrong against whom he may recover; the covin doth so suffocate the right, that the recovery, although it be upon good title, shall not bind. Bro. Covin, 47. Co. Lit. 357. 1 Shep. Abr. 365. A. is tenant for life, remainder in tail to B. and a præcipe is brought against them as joint-tenants, by covin between the demandant and A. and an answer procured for B. as joint-tenant, and they join the mise (or issue), and after make default, whereby final judgment is given; this shall not defeat the estate of B. who may bring a writ of disceit, and shall be restored to land. Rol. Abr. 621.

If a man that has a right to certain lands, by covin causes another to oust the tenant of the land, to the intent to recover it from him, and he recovers accordingly against him by action tried; yet he shall not be remitted to his ancient right; but is in, of the estate of him who made the ouster; and an assise lies against him. 2 Danv. Abr. 309. Land is aliened, pending a writ of debt, by covin, to avoid the extent thereof for the debt; the land so aliened shall be extended, when the covin appears upon the return of the elegit by the sheriff. Ibid. 311. If a man makes a deed of gift, &c. of his goods in his lifetime by covin, to oust his creditors of their debts, after his death the donee or vendee shall be charged for them. See the several statutes of Frauds. If goods are sold in market overt by covin, on purpose to bar him that hath right, this shall not bar him thereof. 2 Inst. 713. See title Frauds, &c.

COUNCIL. In the city of London, there are common-council-men chosen in every ward, at a court of wardmote held by the aldermen of the respective wards on St. Thomas's day yearly: they are so chosen out of the most sufficient men; and sworn to give true counsel for the common profit of the city, &c. Lex Londinum, 117. In the court of common-council, are made laws for advancement of trade; and committees yearly appointed, &c. But acts made by them are to have the assent of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, by stat. 21 Geo. 1. c. 11. See this Dict. title London.

COUNSELLOR, Consiliarius.] A person retained by a client to plead his cause in a court of judicature. A Barrister: See title Barrister.—To what is there noticed may be added —That by stat. 5 Eliz. c. 14. counsellors shall not be punished for shewing a false deed in evidence. No recusant convict, or non-conformist shall practise the law as a counsellor, or otherwise, under penalties. See stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. 7 W. 3. c. 24. 13 & 14 W. 3. c. 6. 1 Geo. 1. c. 13. See titles Oaths, Non-conformists.

COUNSEL, for Prisoners. See title Trial and 4 Comm. 355.

COUNT. The original declaration of complaint in a real action. As declaration is applied to personal, so count is applicable to real causes: but count and declaration are oftentimes confounded, and made to signify the same thing. F. N. B. 16. 60. In passing a recovery at the Common Pleas' bar, a serjeant at law counts upon the præcipe, &c. See titles Counters, Declarations, Pleading.

COUNTEE, Fr. Comte.] The most eminent dignity of a subject, before the conquest; and those who in ancient times were created countees, were men of great estate: for which reason, and because the law intends that they assist the king with their counsel for the public good and preserve the realm by their valour, they had great privileges; as they might not be arrested for debt or trespass; or be put on juries, &c. Of old the countee was præfectus, or præpositus comitatûs, and had the charge and custody of the county; but this authority the sheriff now hath. 9 Rep. 46. A countee or count, is an earl. Law Fr. Dict. See titles Earl, Sheriff.

COUNTENANCE. This word seems to be used for credit or estimation. Old Nat. Br. 111. And in the stat. 1 Ed. 3. c. 4. See Contenement.

COUNTER. Computatorium from the Lat. computare.] The name of two prisons in London, the Poultry counter, and Wood-street-counter, [now consolidated into one new-built prison] for the use of the city, to confine debtors, peace-breakers, &c. Cowel.

COUNTERFEITS. See title Cheats.

Counterfeiting the King's seal, or money, &c. is treason. See title Treason: and counterfeiting Exchequer bills, bank-bills, lottery-orders, &c. is felony. See titles Felony, Forgery, Fraud.

COUNTERMAND, Contramandatum.] Is where a thing formerly executed, is afterwards by some act or ceremony made void by the party that first did it. And it is either actual, by deed; or implied: actual, where a power to execute any authority, &c. is by a formal writing, for that very purpose put off for a time, or made void: and implied, is where a man makes his last will and testament, and thereby devises his land to A. B. if he afterwards enfeoffs another of the same land, here this feoffment is a countermand to the will, without any express words for the same, and the will is void as to the disposition of the land. Also if a woman seised of land in fee-simple, makes a will and deviseth the same to C. D. and his heirs, if he survive her; and after she intermarries with the said C. D. there, by taking him to husband, and coverture at the time of her death, the will is countermanded. Termes de Ley. But if a woman makes a lease at will, and then marries, this marriage is no countermand to the lease, without express matter done by the husband to determine the will.

Where land is devised, and after a lease made thereof for years only; it shall not be a countermand of the will, which is good notwithstanding, for the reversion after the lease for years is ended: but in case a man have a lease for years, and gives it by his will, and after surrenders it; it is a countermand of the devise, and the devisee shall not have his lease. Dyer, 47. Goldsb. 93. See title Devise. If a copyholder, like to die, do surrender his estate to the use of his wife or children, without any consideration of money, &c. and he recover before the presentment and admittance, it may be countermanded: it is otherwise if it be to the use of a stranger. Kitch. 82. If there be a feoffment with letter of attorney to make livery and seisin; and before it is made, the feoffor makes a feoffment, or bargain and sale of the land, or lease to another, it will be a countermand in law of the authority given by the letter of attorney. 2 Brownl. 291. A person may countermand his command, authority, licence, &c. before the thing is done; and if he dies, it is countermanded. There is also a countermand of notice of trial, &c. in law proceedings. See titles Trial, Process.

COUNTERPART. When the several parts of an indenture are interchangeably executed by the several parties, that part or copy which is executed by the grantor is usually called the original, and the rest are counterparts: though of late it is most frequent (and better) for all the parties to execute every part; which renders them all originals. 2 Comm. 296. See title Deeds.

COUNTERPLEA. Is when the tenant in any real action tenant by the curtesy, or dower, in his answer and plea, vouches any one to warrant his title, or prays in aid of another, who hath a larger estate; as of him in reversion, &c. Or where one that is a stranger to the action, comes and prays to be received to save his estate; then that which the demandant alledgeth against it, why he should not be admitted, is called a counterplea: in which sense it is used, stat. 25 Ed. 3. cap. 7. So that counterplea is in law a replication to Aid Prier; and is called counterplea to the voucher. But when the voucher is allowed, and the vouchee comes and demands what cause the tenant hath to vouch him, and the tenant shews his cause, whereupon the vouchee pleads any thing to avoid the warranty; that is termed a counterplea of the warranty. Termes de Ley. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 39. —There is also a counterplea to the plea of clergy; see title Clergy, Benefit of, II.

COUNTER-ROLLS. The rolls which sheriffs of counties have with the coroners of their proceedings, as well of appeals, as of inquests, &c. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 10.

COUNTORS, Fr. Contours.] Have been taken for such serjeants at law, which a man retains to defend his cause, and speak for him in any court, for their fees. Horn's Mirror, lib. 2. And as in the court of C. B. none but serjeants at law may plead; they were anciently called Serjeant counters, 1 Inst. 17.

COUNTY.

Comitatus.] Signifies the same with shire, the one coming from the French, the other from the Saxon. It contains a circuit or portion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided, for the better government of it, and the more easy administration of justice: so that there is no part of this kingdom that lies not within some county; and every county is governed by a yearly officer, the sheriff. Fortescue, cap. 24. Of these counties, the numbers have been different at different times; there are now in England forty, besides twelve in Wales, making in all fifty-two.—It seems that this division of the kingdom was made by King Alfred. See 4 Comm. 410. The names of these counties are as follows. In ENGLAND; Bedford, Berks, Bucks, Cambridge, Chester, Cornwall, Cumberland, Derby, Devon, Dorset, Durham, Essex, Gloucester, Hereford, Hertford, Huntingdon, Kent, Lancaster, Leicester, Lincoln, Middlesex, Monmouth, Norfolk, Northampton, Northumberland, Nottingham, Oxford, Rutland (the smallest), Salop (commonly called Shropshire), Somerset, Stafford, Suffolk, Surrey, Sussex, Southampton (Hants or Hampshire), Warwick, Westmorland, Worcester, Wilts, York (the largest), —In NORTH WALES; Anglesea, Caernarvon, Denbigh, Flint, Merioneth, and Montgomery—In SOUTH WALES; Brecknock, Cardigan, Caermarthen, Glamorgan, Pembroke and Radnor.

Three of the counties above enumerated, viz. Chester, Durham, and Lancaster, are called COUNTIES PALATINE. The two former are such by prescription or immemorial custom; or, at least as old as the Norman conquest; (Seld. tit. Hon. 2. 5. 8.) the latter was created by King Edward III. in favour of Henry Plantagenet, first Earl, and then Duke of Lancaster; (4 Inst. 204.) whose heiresses being married to John of Gaunt, the King's son, the franchise was greatly enlarged and confirmed in parliament to honour John of Gaunt himself, whom, on the death of his father-in-law, the King had also created Duke of Lancaster. Plowd. 215. T. Raym. 138.

COUNTIES PALATINE are so called à palatio; because the owners thereof, the Earl of Chester, the Bishop of Durham, and the Duke of Lancaster, had in those counties jura regalia as fully as the King hath in his palace: regalem potestatem in omnibus, as Bracton expresses it. lib. 3. c. 8. § 4. They might pardon treasons, murders, and felonies; they appointed all judges and justices of the peace; all writs and indictments ran in their names, as in other counties in the King's, and all offences were said to be done against their peace, and not, as in other places, contra pacem domini regis. 4 Inst. 204. And indeed by the ancient law, in all peculiar jurisdictions, offences were said to be done against his peace, in whose court they were tried; in a court-leet, contra pacem domini: in the court of a corporation, contra pacem ballivorum; in the sheriff's courts or towns, contra pacem vice-comitis. Seld. in Heng. Magna, c. 2.

The Palatine privileges, (so similar to the regal independent jurisdictions usurped by the great barons on the continent, during the weak and infant state of the first feodal kingdoms in Europe,) were in all probability originally granted to the counties of Chester and Durham, because they bordered upon inimical countries, Wales and Scotland: in order that the inhabitants, having justice administered at home, might not be obliged to go out of the country, and leave it open to the enemy's incursions: and the owners, being encouraged by so large an authority, might be the more watchful in its defence. And upon this account also there were formerly two other counties palatine, Pembrokeshire and Hexhamshire; the latter now united with Northumberland; but these were abolished by parliament, the former in 27 H. 8. the latter, in 14 Eliz. And in the time of H. 8. likewise, the powers beforementioned, of owners of counties palatine were abridged; stat. 27 H. 8. c. 24. the reason for their continuance in a manner ceasing, though still all writs are witnessed in their names, and all forfeitures for treason by the Common Law accrue to them. 4 Inst. 205.

Of these three, the county of Durham is now the only one remaining in the hands of a subject. For the earldom of Chester, as Camden testifies, was united to the crown by Hen. III. and has ever since given title to the King's eldest son. And the County Palatine, or Duchy of Lancaster, was the property of Henry Bolingbroke, the son of John of Gaunt, at the time when he wrested the crown from King Rich. II. and assumed the title of King Henry IV. But he was too prudent to suffer this to be united to the crown; lest if he lost one, he should lose the other also. For as Plowden (215.) and Sir Edward Coke (4 Inst. 245.) observe, "he knew he had the Duchy of Lancaster by sure and indefeasible title, but that his title to the crown was not so assured; for that after the decease of Richard II. the right of the crown was in the heir of Lionel Duke of Clarence, second son of Edward III. John of Gaunt, father to this Henry IV. being but the fourth son." And therefore he procured an act of parliament, in the first year of his reign, ordaining that the duchy of Lancaster, and all other his hereditary estates, with all their royalties, and franchises, should remain to him and his heirs for ever: and should remain, descend, be administered, and governed, in like manner as if he never had attained the regal dignity; and thus they descended to his son and grandson, Henry V. and Henry VI.; many new territories, and privileges being annexed to the duchy by the former. Parl. 3 Hen. 5. n. 30. 3 Hen. 5. n. 15.—Henry VI. being attainted in 1 Edw. IV. this duchy was declared in parliament to have become forfeited to the crown; (1 Ventr. 155.) and at the same time an act was made to incorporate the Duchy of Lancaster, to continue the county palatine; (which might otherwise have determined by the attainder. 1 Ventr. 157.) and to make the same parcel of the duchy: and, farther, to vest the whole in King Edward IV. and his heirs, Kings of England, for ever; but under a separate guiding and governance from the other inheritances of the crown. And in 1 Hen. 7. another act was made, to resume such part of the duchy lands as had been dismembered from it in the reign of Edward IV. and to vest the inheritance of the whole in the King and his heirs for ever; as amply and largely, and in like manner, form, and condition, separate from the crown of England and possession of the same, as the three Henries and Edward IV. or any of them, had and held the same.

The Isle of Ely is not a county palatine, though sometimes erroneously called so, but only a royal franchise, the bishop having, by grant of King Henry the First, jura regalia within the Isle of Ely; whereby he exercises a jurisdiction over all causes, as well criminal as civil. 2 Inst. 220.

The Counties Palatine are reckoned among the superior courts: and are privileged as to pleas, so as no inhabitant of such counties shall be compelled by any writ to appear or answer out of the same; except for error, and in cases of treason, &c. and the Counties Palatine of Chester and Durham are by prescription, where the King's writ ought not to come, but under the seal of the Counties Palatine; unless it be writs of proclamation. Cromp. Juris. 137. 1. Dany. Abr. 750.

But certiorari lies out of B. R. to justices of a County Palatine, &c. to remove indictments, and proceedings before them. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 23.

There is also a court of Chancery in the Counties Palatine of Lancaster and Durham, over which there are Chancellors; that of Lancaster called Chancellor of the Duchy, &c. See title Chancellor.—And there is a court of Exchequer at Chester, of a mixed nature, for law and equity, of which the Chamberlain of Chester is judge. There is also a Chief Justice of Chester; and other justices in the other Counties Palatine, to determine civil actions and pleas of the crown.

The bishop of Durham has that County Palatine: and if any erroneous judgment be given in the courts of the bishoprick of Durham, a writ of error shall be brought before the bishop himself; and if he give an erroneous judgment thereon, a writ of error shall be sued out returnable in B. R. 4 Inst. 218.

Infants in Counties Palatine enabled to convey by order of the respective courts belonging to those counties. 4 G. 3. c. 16.

The King may make a County Palatine by his letters patent without parliament. 4 Inst. 201.

As to further matter relative to the several Counties Palatine, see titles Chester, Durham, and Lancaster; and particularly as to Chester, stats. 43 Eliz. c. 15. (and this Dict. title Fines:) 22 Geo. 2. c. 46. 26 Geo. 2. c. 34. 27 Geo. 3. c. 43.

COUNTIES CORPORATE, are certain cities and towns, some with more, some with less territory annexed to them, to which out of special grace and favour, the Kings of England have granted the privilege to the counties of themselves, and not to be comprized in any other county; but to be governed by their own sheriffs and other magistrates, so that no officers of the county at large have any power to intermeddle therein.

The stat. 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. for the regulation of the office of sheriffs, enumerates 12 cities, and 5 towns, which are counties of themselves, and which have consequently their own sheriffs. The cities are, London, (by grant of Hen. 1.) [See 2 Inst. 230. that it is a corporation by prescription.—The office of sheriff of London, &c. is always united with that of Middlesex. See 2 Inst. 248.]—Chester, (42 Eliz.) Bristol, Coventry, Canterbury, Exeter, Gloucester, Litchfield, Lincoln, Norwich, Worcester, York (32 Hen. 8.)—The Towns are Kingston-upon-Hull, Nottingham, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Pool, Southampton. 1 Comm. 116—119. To these Cirencester is added in Impey's Sheriff; but on what authority does not clearly appear.

COUNTY-COURT, Curia Comitatûs.] Is by Lambert called Conventus, in his explication of Saxon words, and divided into two sorts; one retaining the general name, as the County-court held every month, by the sheriff or his deputy: the other called the turn, held twice in every year, viz. within a month after Easter and Michaelmas; of both which see Cromp. Jurisd. fol. 241. All administration of justice was at first in the King's hands; but afterwards when by the increase of the people the burden grew too great for him, as the kingdom was divided into counties, hundreds, &c. so the administration of justice was distributed amongst divers courts; of which the sheriff had the County-court for government of the county, and lords of liberties had their leets and law-days, for the speedier and easier administering justice therein, &c.

Before the courts at Westminster were erected, the County-courts were the chief courts of the kingdom; and among the laws of King Edgar it is ordained, that there be two County-courts kept in the year, in which there shall be a bishop and an alderman, or earl, as judges; one to judge according to the Common Law, and the other acccording to the Ecclesiastical Law; but these united powers of a bishop and earl to try causes, were separated by William the First, called the Conqueror; and soon after the business of ecclesiastical cognisance was brought into its proper courts, and the Common Law business into the King's Bench. Blount.

That the County-court, in ancient times, had the cognisance of pleas of the crown, indictments of felony, &c. appears by Glanv. lib. 1. cap. 2. 3. 4. by Bracton and Britton, in divers places, and Fleta, lib. 2. c. 62. But the power of this court was much reduced by Magn. Chart. c. 17. and by 1 Ed. 4. cap. 2. by the former of which it is expressly provided, that "no sheriff shall hold pleas of the crown." It had formerly, and now hath the determination of certain debts, &c. under 40*s.* Over some of which causes the inferior courts have by the express words of the stat. of Gloucester 6 E. 1. c. 8. a jurisdiction totally exclusive of the King's superior courts.

This Court may also hold plea of many real actions, such as dower, right patent, right of ward. 4 Inst. 266. 3 Inst. 312. And of all personal actions to any amount, by virtue of a writ of justices, which is in nature of a commission to the sheriff to do it. 4 Inst. 266. Here the plaintiff takes out a summons, and if the defendant do not appear, an attachment or distringas is to be made out against him; but if the defendant appears, the plaintiff is to file his declaration, and after the defendant is to put in his answer or plea; and the plaintiff having joined issue, the trial proceeds, &c. whereupon if verdict is given for the plaintiff, judgment is entered, and a fieri facias may be awarded against the defendant's goods, which may be taken by virtue thereof, and be appraised and sold to satisfy the plaintiff. But if the defendant hath no goods, the plaintiff is without remedy in this court; for no capias lies therein, but an action may be brought at Common Law, upon the judgment entered. Greenwood of Courts, p. 22. Finch, 318. F. N. B. 152.

No sheriff is to enter in the County-court, any plaint in the absence of the plaintiff; nor above one plaint for one cause, under penalties. The defendant in the County-court is to have lawful summons; and two justices of peace are to view the estreats of sheriffs, before they issue them out of the County-court, &c. By stat. 11 H. 7. c. 15. causes are to be removed out of the County-court, by recordare, pone, and writ of false judgment, into B. R. &c. The stats. 9 H. 3. c. 35. 2 E. 6. c. 25. enact, that no County-court shall be adjourned for longer than one month, consisting of 28 days.

All popular elections which the freeholders are to make, as formerly of sheriffs and conservators of the peace, and still of coroners, verderors and knights of the shire, must ever be made in full County-court.

As this court hath of ancient times belonged to the Sheriff, and is incident to his office, the King cannot grant by letters patent the office of County-clerk, nor the fees: but it of right belongs to the sheriff. 4 Co. Mitton's case.

See stats. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 25. as to the county courts in Yorkshire: and 27 H. 8. c. 26. 34 H. 8. c. 26. as to those in Wales. Blackstone (3 Comm. 82.) observes, on the late erection of numerous Courts of Conscience (see that title post) that it is to be wished that the proceedings in the County and Hundred-courts could be again revived and improved; an experiment that has been tried and succeeded in Middlesex. For by stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 33. it is enacted—1. That a special County-court shall be held, at least once a month, in every hundred of the county of Middlesex, by the County-clerk.—2. That twelve freeholders of that hundred, qualified to serve on juries, and struck by the sheriff, shall be summoned to appear at such court by rotation; so as none shall be summoned oftener than once a year.—3. That in all causes not exceeding the value of 40*s.* the County-clerk and twelve suitors shall proceed in a summary way, examining the parties and witnesses, on oath, without the formal process anciently used; and shall make such order therein as they shall judge to be agreeable to conscience.—4. That no plaints shall be removed out of this court, by any process whatsoever, but the determination herein shall be final.—5. That if any action be brought in any of the superior courts, against a person resident in Middlesex, where the jury shall find less than 40*s.* damages, the plaintiff shall not recover, but pay, costs. (See title Costs.)—6. Lastly, A table of very moderate fees is prescribed and set down in the act, which are not to be exceeded.

It seems indeed, as the learned commentator remarks, that this plan wants only to be generally known, to secure its universal reception.—See title Courts of Conscience.

COUNTY RATES. By stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 29. justices of peace at their quarter sessions, [and by stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 18. Justices of liberties and franchises not subject to the County commissioners.] may make one general rate, to answer all former distinct rates, which shall be assessed on every parish, &c. and collected and paid by the high constables of hundreds to treasurers appointed by the justices; which money shall be deemed the publick stock, and be laid out in repairing of bridges, gaols, or houses of correction, on presentment made by the grand jury at the assizes or quarter-sessions, of their wanting reparation; but appeal lies by the church-wardens and overseers of the poor of the parishes to the justices at the next sessions, against the rate on any particular parish. And as to this appeal see also stat. 22 Geo. 3. c. 17.

The stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 19. which enables the court in certain cases to make an order on the treasurer of the county, riding, or division, where the offence was committed, to pay the prosecutor and his witnesses their expences, extends to inferior districts, having jurisdiction to try felons, and raising their own rates similar to county rates. 6 T. Rep. 237.

Where, before the stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 29. the county rates had been assessed upon the district or place of H. within C. but the two townships of H. and C. separately maintained their own poor, and were used to contribute towards the county rates in certain fixed proportions, between themselves; yet, as that statute only establishes the accustomed proportions of contribution to the county rates, as between the entire districts which were before assessed to such rates, within the limits of the respective counties, &c. and does not meddle with the proportions which had been used to be observed as between the subdivisions of those districts, this case was held to fall within § 3. of the statute, which provides that where there is no poor's rate in the parish, township, or place, assessed to the county rates, (by which must be understood no entire poor's rate co-extensive with the place or district assessed to the county rates,) the county rates shall be raised by the petty constables, in such manner as by law the poor's rate is to be assessed and levied, that is, by an equal rate on all the inhabitants, &c. R. v. Yorkshire, W. R. Just. Hil. 50 G. 3. 13 East's Rep. 117.

A charter granting jurisdiction to borough justices, over a district not within the borough, without words of exclusive jurisdiction, was held not to exclude the county justices from rating the district to a county rate. Bates v. Winstanley, Mic. 56 Geo. 3. K. B. Term Rep. 429.

By stat. 52 Geo. 3. c. 110. for amending 12 Geo. 2. c. 29. and remedying defects in the laws relating to the repairing of county bridges, &c. the Quarter Sessions are empowered to appoint, annually at Easter, &c. two or more justices to superintend the occasional repairs of bridges; who may order any expenditure not exceeding 20*l.* for such repairs, which shall be paid by the sessions on certificate of the justices. Justices at sessions may contract with commissioners of turnpike roads for repair of bridges, &c. for any term not exceeding seven years.

By stat. 43 Geo. 3. c. 59. amended by 54 Geo. 3. c. 90. 55 Geo. 3. c. 143. Justices are empowered to purchase land, houses, &c. for the widening, altering, and improving of county bridges; and also of old bridges repaired by hundreds or general divisions of counties. See further title Bridges.

By stat. 55 Geo. 3. c. 51. additional provisions are made for the more equally and effectually making and levying the county rates.—By this act, justices in general or quarter sessions are empowered to make a fair and equal county rate in any county, whenever circumstances appear to require it.—For this purpose they may require church-wardens and overseers of the several parishes to make returns to the justices of the respective divisions in petty sessions, of the annual value of all rateable property, which such justices must certify to the quarter sessions, who may make the county rate thereon. By this act the treasurers of counties are required to publish an abstract of their receipts and expenditure yearly, as audited by the justices.—And the high-constable, employed in levying the rates, may be required by the quarter sessions to give security; and if he fails, the rates shall be paid directly to the treasurer.

By stat. 56 Geo. 3. c. 49. extra-parochial places are made rateable, and the sessions are empowered to ascertain boundaries, &c.—Stat. 57 Geo. 3. c. 94. regulates the mode of appeal against rates, which are to remain in force until quashed on such appeal, &c.

Several local acts have been passed for regulating the county rates in particular counties.

COURTS.

A COURT, Curia.] The King's palace, or mansion; but more especially the place where justice is judicially administered. Co. Lit. 58. The Superior Courts are those at Westminster; and of Courts, some are of record, and some not; which are accounted base Courts, in respect of the rest.

A Court of record is that Court which hath power to hold plea, according to the course of the Common Law, of real, personal, and mixed actions, where the debt or damage is 40*s.* or above; as the King's Bench, Common Pleas, &c. A Court, not of record, is where it cannot hold plea of debt or damages amounting to 40*s.* but of pleas under that sum: or where the proceedings are not according to the course of the Common Law, nor inrolled; as the County-court, and the Court-Baron, &c. 1 Inst. 117. 260. 4 Rep. 52. 2 Rol. Abr. 574. See Record.

Every Court of record is the King's Court, in right of his crown and dignity, though his subjects have the benefit of it; and therefore no other Court hath authority to fine and imprison: so that the very erection of a new jurisdiction, with power of fine or imprisonment, makes it instantly a court of record. Salk. 200. 12 Mod. 388. Finch. L. 231. The free use of all Courts of record and not of record is to be granted to the people: the leet and tourn are the King's Courts, and of record. 2 Danv. 259. The rolls of the superior Courts of record are of such authority, that no proof will be admitted against them; and these records are only triable by themselves. 3 Inst. 71. But as the County-court, Court-baron, &c. are not Courts of record, the proceedings therein may be denied, and tried by a jury; and upon their judgments, a writ of error lies not; but writ of false judgment. 1 Inst. 117. See post, Court-Baron, Record.

In the Courts at Westminster, the plaintiff need not show at large in his declaration, that the cause of action arises within their jurisdiction, it being general: inferior Courts are to show it at large, because they have particular jurisdictions. 1 Lil. Abr. 371. Also nothing shall be intended to be within the jurisdiction of an inferior Court, but what is expressly so alledged: and if part of the cause arises within the inferior jurisdiction, and part thereof without it, the inferior Court ought not to hold plea. 1 Lev. 104. 2 Rep. 16. See title Abatement, I. 1.

An inferior Court, not of record, cannot impose a fine, or imprison: but the courts of record at Westminster may fine, imprison, and amerce. 11 Rep. 43.

The King, being the supreme magistrate of the kingdom, and intrusted with the executive power of the law, all Courts, superior or inferior, ought to derive their authority from the crown. Staundf. 54. Though the King himself cannot now, as anciently, sit in judgment in any Court upon civil causes, nor upon indictments, because there he is one of the parties to the suit. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. § 1. 2. The King hath committed all his power judicial to one Court or the other. 4 Inst. 71. And by stat. 52 H. 3. c. 1. it is enacted, that all persons shall receive justice in the King's Courts, and none take any distress, &c. of his own authority, without award of the King's Courts.

It is said the customs, precedents, and common judicial proceedings of a Court, are a law to that Court; and the determinations of Courts, make points to be law. 2 Rep. 12. 4 Rep. 53. Hob. 298. All things determinable in Courts, that are Courts by the Common Law, shall be determined by the judges of the same Courts; and the King's writ cannot alter the jurisdiction of a Court. 6 Rep. 11. The Court of R. B. regulates all the inferior Courts of law in the kingdom, so that they do not exceed their jurisdictions, nor alter their forms, &c. And as the Court of King's Bench hath a general superintendency over all inferior Courts, it may award an attachment against any such Court, usurping a jurisdiction not belonging to it: but it is sometimes usual first to award a writ of prohibition, and afterwards an attachment, upon its continuing to proceed. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 25.

If a Court, having no jurisdiction of a cause depending therein, do nevertheless proceed, the judgment in such Court is coram non judice, and void; and an action lies against the judges who give the judgment, and any officer that executes the process under them: though where they have authority, and give an ill judgment, there the party who executes the process, &c. upon the judgment, shall be excused. 1 Lil. Abr. 370.

Judges of inferior Courts may be punished for misbehaviour either by information or attachment. Moravia's case, Hardw. 135. Any defects in the proceedings of an inferior Court cannot be amended by the return, which is not part of the record. The King v. Holmes, Id. 365. Where an inferior Court returns its proceedings, no diminution can be alleged. Ibid. Sayer v. Curtis, 367.

Action on the case lies against the plaintiff for suing one in an inferior Court, where the cause of action is out of its jurisdiction. 1 Vent. 369. And if a plaintiff on a contract for a large sum, splits it into several actions for small sums to give an inferior Court jurisdiction, a prohibition shall go. Mod. Cas. 90.

Striking in the Courts at Westminster, is punished by cutting off the right hand, and forfeiture of goods, &c. How contempts to Courts in general are punishable by fine and imprisonment, &c. see titles Attachment, Misprison. See further as to particular Courts, post, Court-Baron, &c. and under titles King's Bench, Chancery, Common Pleas, and Exchequer.

COURT OF ADMIRALTY. See title Admiralty.

COURT-BARON, curia baronis.] A court which every lord of a manor hath within his own precinct; it is an inseparable incident to the manor: and must be held by prescription, for it cannot be created at this day. 1 Inst. 58. 4 Inst. 268. A Court-baron must be kept on some part of the manor: and is of two natures;

1. By Common Law, which is the barons' or freeholders' court, of which the freeholders being suitors are the judges; and this cannot be a Court-baron without two suitors at least. The steward of this court is rather the register than the judge.

2. By custom, which is called the Customary-Court: and concerns the customary tenants and copyholders, whereof the lord or his steward, is judge. See title Copyhold.

The Court-baron may be of this double nature, or one may be without the other; but as there can be no Court-baron at Common Law without freeholders; so there cannot be a customary court without copyholders or customary tenants. 4 Rep. 26. 6 Rep. 11. 12. 2 Inst 119. See title Copyhold.

The Freeholders' court, whose most important business is to determine, by writ of right, all controversies relating to lands within the manor, and which hath also jurisdiction for trying actions of debt, trespasses, &c. under 40*s.* may be held every three weeks; and is something like a County-court, and the proceedings much the same: though on recovery of debt, they have not power to make execution, but are to distrain the defendant's goods, and retain them till satisfaction is made.

The proceedings on a writ of right may be removed into the County-courts by a precept from the sheriff called a tolt (quia tollit causam). 3 Rep. Pref. And the proceedings in all other actions, may be removed into the superior courts by the king's writs of pone, or accedas ad curiam, according to the nature of the suit. F. N. B. 4. 70. Finch L. 444, 5.

After judgment given also, a writ of false judgment lies to the courts at Westminster to re-hear and re-view the cause: and not a writ of error; for this is not a court of record: and therefore in some of these writs of removal, the first direction given is to cause the plaint to be recorded; recordari facias loquelam. F. N. B. 18.

The other Court-baron, for taking and passing of estates, surrenders, admittances, &c. is held but once or twice in a year, (usually with the court leet) unless it be on purpose to grant an estate; and then it is holden as often as requisite. In this court the homage jury are to inquire that their lords do not lose their services, duties, or customs; but that the tenants make their suits of court; pay their rents and heriots, &c. and keep their lands and tenements in repair; they are to present all common and private nuisances, which may prejudice the lord's manor; and every public trespass must be punished in this court, by amercement, on presenting the same. By Stat. Extent. Man. 4 E. 1. it shall be inquired of customary tenants, what they hold, by what works, rents, heriots, services, &c. And of the lord's woods, and other profits, fishing, &c.

COURT OF CHANCERY. See Chancery.

COURT OF CHIVALRY, curia militaris.] Otherwise called the Marshal court; the judges of it are the Lord High Constable of England, and the Earl Marshal: this court is said to be the fountain of the martial law, and the Earl Marshal hath both a judicial and ministerial power; for he is not only one of the judges, but to see execution done. 4 Inst. 123. See title Court Martial.

The Court of Chivalry is the only Court Military known to, and established by the permanent laws of the land; it was formerly held before the Lord High Constable and Earl Marshal of England, jointly, but since the extinguishment of the former office, it hath usually, with respect to civil matters, been before the Earl Marshal only. See title Constable.—From the sentence of this court an appeal lies immediately to the King in person. 4 Inst. 125. This court was in great reputation in times of pure Chivalry, and afterwards, during our connexions with the Continent, by the territories which our princes held in France: but is now grown almost entirely out of use, on account of the feebleness of its jurisdiction, and want of power to enforce its judgments. 3 Comm. 68.

The jurisdiction of this court is declared by stat. 13 R. 2. c. 2. to be this: "that it hath cognizance of contracts touching deeds of arms, or of war, out of the realm; and also of things which touch war within the realm, which cannot be determined or discussed by the Common Law; together with other usages and customs to the same matters appertaining." So that wherever the Common Law can give redress, this court hath no jurisdiction: which has thrown it entirely out of use, as to matters of contract, all such being usually cognizable in the courts of Westminster-hall, if not directly, at least by fiction of law: as if a contract be made at Gibraltar, the plaintiff may suppose it made at Westminster, &c. for the locality, or place of making it, is of no consequence with regard to the validity of the contract.

The words, "other usages and customs," support the claim of this court. 1. To give relief to such of the nobility and gentry as think themselves aggrieved in matters of honour: and 2. To keep up the distinction of degrees and quality. Whence it follows, that the civil jurisdiction of this court of Chivalry is principally in two points; the redressing injuries of honour, and correcting encroachments in matters of coat-armour, precedency, and other distinctions of families.

As a court of honour, it is to give satisfaction to all such as are aggrieved in that point; a point of a nature so nice and so delicate, that its wrongs and injuries escape the notice of the Common Law, and yet are fit to be redressed somewhere; such for instance, as calling a man coward, or giving him the lie; for which, as they are productive of no immediate damage to his person or property, no action will lie in the courts of Westminster; and yet they are such injuries as will prompt every man of spirit to demand some honourable amends, which by the ancient law of the land was appointed to be given in the court of Chivalry. Year Book, 37 Hen. 6. 21. Selden of Duels, c. 10. Hal. Hist. C. L. 37. But modern resolutions have determined, that how much soever such a jurisdiction may be expedient, yet no action for words will at present lie therein. Salk. 583. 7 Mod. 125. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 4. § 7. 8. And it hath always been most clearly holden, (Hal. Hist. C. L. 37.) that as this court cannot meddle with any thing determinable by the Common Law, it therefore can give no pecuniary satisfaction or damages, inasmuch as the quantity and determination thereof is ever of Common Law cognizance. And therefore this court of Chivalry can at most only order reparation in point of honour; to compel the defendant mendacium sibi ipsi imponere, to take the lie he has given upon himself, or to make such other submission as the laws of honour may require. 1 Ro. Ab. 128. Neither can this court, as to the point of reparation in honour, hold a plea of any such word, or thing wherein the party is relievable by the courts of Common Law. As if a man give another a blow, or calls him thief or murderer; for in both these cases the Common Law has pointed out his proper remedy by action.

As to the other point of its jurisdiction, the redressing of encroachments and usurpations in matters of heraldry and coat-armour; it is the business of this court, according to Sir Matthew Hale, to adjust the right of armorial ensigns, bearings, crests, supporters, pennons, &c. and also rights of place or precedence, where the King's patent or act of parliament (which cannot be over-ruled by this court) have not already determined it.

The proceedings in this court are by petition, in a summary way; and the trial not by a jury of twelve men, but by witnesses, or by combat. Co. Lit. 261. See title Battel. But as it cannot imprison, not being a court of record, and as by the resolutions of the superior courts, it is now confined to so narrow and restrained a jurisdiction, it has fallen into contempt and disuse. The marshalling of coat-armour, which was formerly the pride and study of all the best families in the kingdom, is now greatly disregarded; and has fallen into the hands of certain officers and attendants upon this court, called heralds, who consider it only as a matter of lucre and not of justice: whereby such falsity and confusion have crept into their records (which ought to be the standing evidence of families, descents, and coat-armour) that though formerly some credit has been paid to their testimony, now even their common seal will not be received as evidence in any court of justice in the kingdom. 2 Roll. Abr. 686. 2 Jon. 224. But their original visitation-books, compiled when progresses were solemnly and regularly made into every part of the kingdom, to inquire into the state of families, and to register such marriages and descents as were verified to them upon oath, are allowed to be good evidence of pedigrees. And it is much to be wished, that this practice of visitation at certain periods were revived; for the failure of inquisitions post mortem, by the abolition of military tenures, combined with the negligence of heralds in omitting their usual progresses, has rendered the proof of a modern descent, for the recovery of an estate or succession to a title of honour, more difficult than than that of an ancient. This will be indeed remedied for the future, with respect to claims of peerage, by a standing order (11th May, 1767) of the House of Lords; directing the heralds to take exact accounts, and preserve regular entries of all peers and peeresses of England, and their respective descendants; and that an exact pedigree of each peer and his family shall, on the day of his first admission, be delivered to the house by Garter, the principal King-at-arms. But the general inconvenience, affecting mere private successions, still continues without a remedy. 3 Comm. 103—6.

COURT-CHRISTIAN, Curia Christianitatis.] The ecclesiastical judicature, opposed to the civil court, or lay tribunal: and as in secular courts, human laws are maintained, so in the Court Christian, the laws of Christ should be the rule. And therefore the judges are divines: as archbishops, bishops, archdeacons, &c. 2 Inst. 488. See post, title Courts Ecclesiastical.

COURTS OF CONSCIENCE, Curiæ Conscientiæ.] Courts for the recovery of small debts by summary process before commissioners appointed for that purpose. In the 9th year of King Hen. 8. the Court of Conscience, or Court of Requests, in London was erected: there was then made an act of common council, that the Lord Mayor and Aldermen should assign monthly two Aldermen and four discreet Commoners, to be Commissioners to sit in this court twice a week, to hear and determine all matters brought before them between party and party, between citizens and freemen of London, in all cases where the debt or damage was under 40*s.* And this act of Common Council was confirmed by stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 14. which empowered the Commissioners of this court to make such orders between the parties touching such debts, as they should find stand to equity and good conscience. The stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 15. fully establishes this court; the course and practice whereof is by summons, to which if the party appear, the commissioners proceed summarily; examining the witnesses of both parties, or the parties themselves on oath, and as they see cause give judgment. And if the party summoned appear not, the commissioners may commit him to the Compter prison till he does; also the commissioners have power to commit a person refusing to obey their orders, &c.

By stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 10. the proceedings of the Court of Conscience are regulated; and in case any person affront or insult any of the commissioners, on their certifying it to the Lord Mayor, he shall punish the offender by fine, not exceeding 20*s.* or may imprison him ten days. See 25 Geo. 3. c. 45. 26 Geo. 3. c. 38. Debtors.

By 39, 40 Geo. 3. c. civ. (a local act) the acts 3 Jac. 1. c. 15. and 14 Geo. 2. c. 10. are explained and amended, and the jurisdiction of the London Court of Conscience extended to 5*l.* See 7 East, 47. 50. 14 E. R. 301.

A market-gardener renting a stand in Fleet-market at an annual rent, which he occupies three times a week on market days till ten in the morning only, does not keep a stand within the meaning of the London Court of Requests act, so as to be privileged to be sued there for a debt under 5l. 8 E. R. 336.

Courts of Conscience have been established in many parts of the kingdom by acts passed for that purpose. It has of late been the practice to extend the jurisdiction to 5l. and to direct that a larger number of commissioners shall be requisite when the demand exceeds 40*s.* than when it is within that value. See further title County Courts, Debtors, &c.

By stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 70. so much of all acts for recovery of small debts as authorises the arrest of a defendant for less than 10*l.* is repealed, § 3.—And by § 4. of the same act it is provided that in all cases when final judgment shall be obtained in any inferior court, and affidavit made thereof in any court of record at Westminster, and of execution being issued against the person or effects of the defendant; and that the same cannot be found within the jurisdiction of the inferior court; the record of such judgment may be removed into the superior court, and writs of execution issued to the sheriff of any county, &c. By 33 Geo. 3. c. 68. these provisions are extended to judgments in the courts of Great Sessions, and county courts in Wales, and to the courts of the counties Palatine of Chester, Lancaster, and Durham.

By 25 Geo. 3. c. 45. as to the Courts of Conscience in London, Middlesex, and Southwark, and by 26 Geo. 3. c. 38. which extends to all Courts of Conscience in the kingdom, the time of imprisonment of debtors in execution is regulated, so that it shall not last more than twenty days for debts not exceeding 20*s.* nor more than forty days for debts not exceeding 40*s.* Like limitations are made by subsequent local acts for the respective jurisdictions.

If a defendant lodge within the jurisdiction of the Southwark Court of Conscience, acts 22 Geo. 2. c. 47. 46 Geo. 3. c. 78. though he carry on his business, and the goods were delivered out of the jurisdiction, and the plaintiff had no knowledge of his lodging within it, till after the process was sued out, yet he is within the statutes. 15 E. R. 647.

Court, County. See title County Court.

Court of Delegates. See post, title Courts Ecclesiastical, 6.

Courts Ecclesiastical, curiæ ecclesiasticæ, Spiritual Courts.] Are those Courts which are held by the King's authority as supreme governor of the church, for matters which chiefly concern religion. 4 Inst. 321. And the laws and constitutions whereby the church of England is governed, are, 1. Divers immemorial customs. 2. Our own provincial constitutions; and the canons made in convocations, especially those in the year 1603. 3. Statutes or Acts of Parliament concerning the affairs of religion, or causes of ecclesiastical cognizance: particularly the rubricks in our Common Prayer Book, founded upon the statutes of uniformity. 4. The articles of religion, drawn up in the year 1562, Articuli Cleri. 9 E. 2. and established by 33 Eliz. cap. 12. And it is said, by the general Canon Law, where all others fail.

As to suits in spiritual or Ecclesiastical Courts, they are for the reformation of manners, or for punishing of heresy, defamation, laying violent hands on a clerk, and the like; and some of their suits are to recover something demanded, as tithes, a legacy, contract of marriage, &c. And in causes of this nature, the courts may give costs, but not damages: things that properly belong to these jurisdictions are matrimonial and testamentary; and such defamatory words, for which no action lies at law; as for calling one adulterer, fornicator, usurer, or the like. 11 Rep. 54. Dyer, 240.

The proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Courts are according to the Civil and Canon Law, by citation, libel, answer upon oath, proof by witnesses, and presumptions, &c. and after sentence, for contempt, by excommunication: and if the sentence is disliked, by appeal.

The jurisdiction of these courts is voluntary, or contentious; the voluntary is merely concerned in doing what no one opposes, as granting dispensations, licences, faculties, &c.

The punishments inflicted by these courts are censures, punishments pro salute animæ, by way of penance, &c. They are not courts of record. See further title Prohibition.

Much oppression having been exercised through the channel of these courts, on persons charged with trifling offences within their spiritual jurisdiction, the stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 44. limits the time of commencing suits for defamatory words to six months—and for incontinence and beating in the church-yard to eight months.—See titles Limitations, Fornication.

By stat. 53 Geo. 3. c. 127. for the better regulation of Ecclesiastical Courts in England, and the more easy recovery of church rates and tithes (and a similar act, 54 Geo. 3. c. 68. for Ireland), it is enacted, that Excommunication and all proceedings thereupon, in all cases (except on definitive sentences or decrees pronounced as spiritual censures for offences of ecclesiastical cognizance,) shall be discontinued; and instead thereof a writ de contumace capiendo (in the form required by the act,) shall issue to compel the party to obedience, and be executed in like manner as the writ de excom. cap. See title Excommunication, &c. By this act Justices of Peace are empowered to determine complaints respecting tithes, not exceeding 10*l.*; and in case of Quakers, not exceeding 50*l.* All suits for tithes must be brought within six years after they are due. Provisions are made for the recovery of church and chapel rates, before justices of the peace; and proctors are prohibited from practising in the several ecclesiastical courts, unless duly admitted and enrolled.

In briefly recounting the various species of Ecclesiastical Courts, or as they are often stiled, Courts Christian (curiæ christianitatis), we may begin with the lowest, and so ascend gradually to the supreme court of appeal.

1. The Archdeacon's Court is the most inferior court in the whole ecclesiastical polity. It is held in the Archdeacon's absence before a judge appointed by himself, and called his official: and its jurisdiction is sometimes in concurrence with, sometimes in exclusion of, the Bishop's Court of the diocese. From hence however, by stat. 24 Hen. 8. c. 12. an appeal lies to that of the bishop.

2. The Consistory Court of every diocesan bishop is held in their several cathedrals, for the trial of all ecclesiastical causes arising within their respective dioceses. The Bishop's Chancellor, or his Commissary, is the judge; and from his sentence an appeal lies, by virtue of the same statute, to the Archbishop of each province respectively.

3. As to The Court of Arches, see title Arches Court.

4. The Court of Peculiars is a branch of and annexed to the Court of Arches. It has a jurisdiction over all those parishes dispersed through the province of Canterbury in the midst of other dioceses, which are exempt from the Ordinary's jurisdiction, and subject to the Metropolitan only. All ecclesiastical causes, arising within these peculiar or exempt jurisdictions, are, originally, cognizable by this court; from which an appeal lay formerly to the Pope, but now by the stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19. to the King in Chancery.

5. The Prerogative Court is established for the trial of all testamentary causes, where the deceased hath left bona notabilia within two different dioceses. In which case the probate of wills belongs to the archbishop of the province, by way of special prerogative. And all causes relating to the wills, administrations, or legacies of such persons, are originally, cognizable herein, before a judge, appointed by the Archbishop, called the judge of the Prerogative Court, from whom an appeals lies by stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19. to the King in Chancery, instead of the Pope as formerly.

6. The Great Court of Appeal in all ecclesiastical causes, viz. the Court of Delegates, (judices delegati,) appointed by the King's commission under his Great Seal, and issuing out of Chancery, to represent his royal person, and hear all appeals made to him by virtue of the before mentioned stat. of Hen. 8. This commission is frequently filled with Lords, spiritual and temporal, and always with judges of the courts at Westminster, and Doctors of the Civil Law. Appeals to Rome were always looked upon by the English nation, even in the time of popery, with an evil eye; as being contrary to the liberty of the subject, the honour of the crown, and the independence of the whole realm; and were first introduced in very turbulent times in the sixteenth year of King Stephen (A. D. 1151); at the same period (Sir Henry Spelman observes) that the civil and canon laws were first imported into England. Cod. Vet. Leg. 315. But in a few years after, to obviate this growing practice, the constitutions made at Clarendon, 11 Hen. II. on account of the disturbances raised by Archbishop Beckett, and other zealots of the Holy See, expressly declare (chap. 8.) that appeals in causes ecclesiastical ought to lie, from the Archdeacon to the Diocesan; from the Diocesan to the Archbishop of the Province; and from the Archbishop to the King; and are not to proceed any farther without special licence from the crown. But the unhappy advantage that was given in the reigns of King John and his son Henry III. to the encroaching power of the Pope, who was ever vigilant to improve all opportunities of extending his jurisdiction hither, at length riveted the custom of appealing to Rome in causes ecclesiastical so strongly, that it never could be thoroughly broken off; till the grand rupture happened in the reign of Henry VIII. when all the jurisdiction usurped by the Pope in matters ecclesiastical was restored to the crown, to which it originally belonged; so that the stat. 25 Hen. 8. was but declaratory of the antient law of the realm. 4 Inst. 324. But in case the King himself be party in any of these suits, the appeal does not then lie to him in Chancery, which would be absurd; but by the stat. 24 Hen. 8. c. 12. to all the Bishops of the realm assembled in the upper house of Convocation.

7. A Commission of Review is a commission sometimes granted, in extraordinary cases, to revise the sentence of the Court of Delegates; when it is apprehended they have been led into a material error. This commission the King may grant, although the stats. 24 and 25 Hen. 8. before cited, declare the sentence of the delegates definitive; because the Pope as supreme head by the canon law used to grant such commission of review; and such authority as the Pope heretofore exerted, is now annexed to the Crown by stats. 26 H. 8. c. 1. and 1 Eliz. c. 1. But it is not matter of right, which the subject may demand ex debito justitiæ; but merely a matter of favour, and which therefore is often denied.

These are now the principal courts of ecclesiastical jurisdiction; none of which are allowed to be Courts of Record; no more than was another much more formidable jurisdiction, but now deservedly annihilated, viz. the Court of the King's High Commission in causes ecclesiastical. This court was erected and united to the regal power by virtue of the stat. 1 Eliz. c. 1. instead of a larger jurisdiction which had before been exercised under the Pope's authority. It was intended to vindicate the dignity and peace of the church, by reforming, ordering, and correcting the ecclesiastical state and persons, and all manner of errors, heresies, schisms, abuses, offences, contempts and enormities. Under the shelter of which very general words, means were found in that, and the two succeeding reigns, to vest in the High Commissioners extraordinary, and almost despotic powers of fining and imprisoning; which they exerted much beyond the degree of the offence itself, and frequently over offences by no means of spiritual cognizance. For these reasons, this Court was justly abolished by stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 2.—See 3 Comm. 64, & seq.

The wrongs or injuries cognizable by the Ecclesiastical Court not for the reformation of the offender himself, relate chiefly to the non-payment of Tithes or other ecclesiastical dues, and fees; for spoliations and dilapidations of church benefices, churches, &c.; matrimonial causes and testamentary causes: As to all these see the proper titles in this Dict.

COURTS OF EQUITY. See title Equity.

COURTS OF GUERRA. Costs holden upon Neighbour Feuds and Riots. Scotch Dict.

COURT OF HUSTINGS, curia hustingi.] The highest Court of Record, holden at Guildhall, for the City of London, before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, the Sheriffs and Recorder. 4 Inst. 247. This court determines all pleas real, personal, and mixt: and here all lands, tenements, and hereditaments, rents and services within the City of London and suburbs of the same, are pleadable in two Hustings; one called Hustings of plea of lands, and the other Hustings of common pleas. In this court the burgesses to serve for the city in Parliament, must be elected by the Livery of the respective companies.

In the Hustings of plea of lands, are brought writs of right patent directed to the sheriffs of London, on which writs the tenant shall have three summonses at the three hustings next following, and after the three summonses, there shall be three essoins at three other hustings next ensuing, and at the next hustings after the third essoin, if the tenant makes default, process shall be had against him by grand cape, or petit cape, &c. If the tenant appears, the demandant is to declare in the nature of what writ he will; without making protestation to sue in nature of any writ; then the tenant shall have the view, &c. and if the parties plead to judgment, the judgment shall be given by the Recorder: but no damages, by the custom of the city, are recoverable in any such writ of right patent.

In the Hustings of common pleas are pleadable, writs ex gravi querela, writs of gavelet, of dower, waste, &c. also writs of exigent are taken out in the hustings; and at the fifth hustings the outlawries are awarded, and judgment pronounced by the Recorder.

If an erroneous judgment is given in the hustings, the party grieved may sue a commission out of Chancery, directed to certain persons to examine the record, and thereupon do right. 1 Rol. Abr. 745.—See further the Privilegia Londini; and this Dict. title London.

COURT OF THE DUTCHY OF LANCASTER. See title Chancellor of the Dutchy, &c.

COURT-LEET; or LEET.

The word Leet is not to be found either in the Saxon law, or in Glanvil, Bracton, Britton, Fleta, or the Mirror, our most antient law writers: nor in any statute prior to stat. 27 E. 3. c. 28. though it is allowed to occur in the Conqueror's charter for the foundation of Battle Abbey, and not unfrequently in Domesday Book, Spelm v. Leta. It seems to be derived from the Saxon, leod, plebs; and to mean the populi curia, or folk-mote, as the sheriff's tourn or Leet of the county (at least) appears to have been once actually called (See Spelman in verb. Folkmote;) in contradiction, perhaps to the Halmote or Court Baron, which consisted of the free tenants only, who being few in number, might conveniently assemble in the Lord's Hall; whereas the Leet, which required the attendance of all the resiants, within the particular hundred, lordship, or manor, and concerned the administration of public justice, was usually held in the open air. Spelman in verb. Mallobergium. According to Hawkins (Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. 112. which see;) a Court-Leet is a Court of Record, having the same jurisdiction within some particular precinct, which the sheriff's tourn hath in the county. See also 4 Comm. 273.

The view of Frank-pledge, visus franciplegii, means the examination or survey of the free-pledges, of which every man, not particularly privileged, was antiently obliged to have nine, who were bound that he should be always forthcoming to answer any complaint. The better to understand this, we are to be informed, that the kingdom being divided by King Alfred into counties or shires, and each county into hundreds, and each hundred into tithings, each tithing containing ten families or households, the heads of these families were reciprocally bound and responsible for each other; so that, in fact, of every ten householders throughout the kingdom, each man had nine pledges or sureties for his good behaviour.

Leet is also a word used for a Law Day, in several of our antient statutes. See Dyer, 30 b.

That the Leet is the most antient court in the land (for criminal matters, the Court Baron being of no less antiquity in civil,) has been pronounced by the highest legal authority. 7 H. 6. 12 b. 1 Roll. Rep. 73. For though we do not meet with the word among the Saxons, there can be no doubt of the existence of the thing.

Lord Mansfield states that this court was co-eval with the establishment of the Saxons here, and its activity "marked very visibly both amongst the Saxons and the Danes." 3 Burr. 1860. In those times whoever possessed a vill or territory, with the liberties of soc, sac, &c. (a long string of barbarous words) was the lord of a manor, had a court-leet, court-baron, and in a word, every privilege which it seems to have been possible for the monarch to bestow, or for the subject to acquire. See Spelman in verb. Manerium.

The Leet is a Court of Record for the cognisance of criminal matters, or pleas of the crown, and necessarily belongs to the King; though a Subject, usually the Lord of a Manor, may be and is entitled to the profits, consisting of the essoign pence, fines and amerciaments.

It is held before the steward, (or was, in antient times, before the bailiff,) of the Lord; Mirror passim: Finch's Law, 248.—See also Kennet's P. A. 319. This officer who should be a barrister of learning and ability, is a judge of record, may take recognizance of the peace, may fine, imprison, and in a word, as to things to which his power extends, hath equal power with the justices of the Bench.—By stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 5. he is prohibited from taking to the value of 12*d.* for his own use, by colour of any grant of the profits of this court.

This court is held sometimes once, sometimes thrice, but most commonly twice in the year; that is, within a month after Easter, and a month after Michaelmas; and cannot, unless by adjournment, be held at any time not warranted by antient usage. See Mag. Char. c. 35. and Spelman in v. Leta; according to whom this court should be held regularly only once a year; though sometimes by custom twice, when it is called residuum letæ. As to the place in which it is held, that it has been said, may be any where within the precinct. 8 H. 7. 3. Owen 35. But more strictly speaking, ought to be certain and accustomed. Rastall's Entries 151.

All persons above the age of twelve years, and under sixty, except peers, clerks, women and aliens, resiant within the district, whether masters or servants, owe personal suit and attendance to this court, and ought to be here sworn to their fealty and allegiance. 2 Inst. 120. 121. And here also, by immemorial usage and of common right, that most ancient constitutional officer the constable, (4 Inst. 265.) and sometimes by prescription the mayor of a borough, (See stat. 2 Geo. 1. c. 4.) are elected and sworn.

The general jurisdiction of the court extends to all crimes, offences and misdemeanors at the Common Law, as well as to several others which have been subjected to it by act of parliament. These are inquired after by a body of the suitors, elected, sworn and charged for that purpose, who must not be less than twelve, nor more than twenty-three; and who, in some manors, continue in office for a whole year; while in others, they are sworn and discharged in the course of a day. Whatever they find they present to the steward; who, if the offence be treason or felony, must return the presentment, (in these cases called an indictment) to the King's justices of oyer and terminer, and gaol delivery. See stats. W. 2. c. 13. 1 E. 3. st. 2. c. 17. In all other cases he has power, upon the complaint of any party grieved, or upon suspicion of the concealment of any offence, to cause an immediate inquiry into the truth of the matter, by another jury. See stats. 33 H. 8. c. 6. and 1 Eliz. c. 17. § 10. But the presentment, being received, and the day passed, shall be held true, and unless it concern the party's freehold, shall not be shaken or questioned by any tribunal whatever. Hale. P. C. 153, 5. Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. 111. 112. and 11 Co. 44. Upon every presentment of the jury retained by the court, an amerciament follows of course, which is afterwards assessed in open court agreeable to Magna Charta, c. 14. by the pares curiæ, that is, the peers or equals of the delinquent; and affeered or reduced to a precise sum, by two or more suitors sworn to be impartial. 8 Rep. 39. See also stat. W. 1. c. 6. And that these statutes were in this particular but in affirmation of the Common Law, see 8 Rep. 39 b. 2 Inst. 27. The amerciaments thus ascertained are then estreated (or extracted) from the roll or book in which the proceedings are recorded and levied by the bailiff, by distress and sale of the party's goods, (8 Rep. 41.) by virtue of a warrant from the steward to that effect, or may be recovered by other means as by a process of levari facias, (Hardr. 471.) or action of debt. (Bull. N. P. 167.) No crime in those remote ages appears to have been punished by death; unless it were that of open theft, where the offender was taken with the mainour, that is, with the thing stolen upon him: and of this crime, and this only, the cognizance did not belong to the Leet. All other offences of what nature or degree soever, subjected the party to mulct or pecuniary fine, which was in many cases determined and fixed. This pecuniary composition, with respect to certain capital offences, was abrogated, and the punishment of death substituted in its place, by King Henry I. Spelman in v. Felo. Wilkins. LL. Sax. 304.

It is not improbable that the distinction of indictments for felonies, and presentments of inferior offences, owes its origin to the above measure.

It has been said, that by the clause nullus vicecomes, &c. in the Great Charter, c. 17. the jurisdiction of the Leet was abridged, and its power to hear and determine taken away; but this has been said and repeated without due attention either to the nature and constitution of the court, or to the law of the time. No offence, it is well known, is at this day, or, for aught that appears, ever was, heard and determined in the Leet, (nor before the period referred to, by any other criminal-court in the kingdom), otherwise than upon the presentment of twelve men, or what we now call in most courts the Grand Jury. This presentment, as has been already observed, found and established the fact; and judgment, whether of miscricordia, mutilation or death, followed as an incident or matter of course; precisely indeed, as the punishment does at this day on the verdict for the king of the petty jury. In fact, therefore, the jurisdiction of the Leet was not in the least abridged or affected by that charter; nor is it at all probable that the barons would either seek or suffer the diminution of their own privileges, of which on the contrary, there is an express saving.

That this court has no power to inquire of the death of a man, or of a rape, is a more ancient, but not less erroneous opinion. The contrary is most directly and expressly held in the Statutum Wallie, in Britton, Fleta, the Mirror, and the stat. of 18 E. 2. (which statute, though it enumerates certain particulars of the jurisdiction of the Leet, does not confine it to them only); all much older and better authorities than the book of Assises, 41 E. 3. p. 40. in which that opinion first appears.

The steward of a Leet may award to prison, persons either indicted or accused of felony before him, or guilty of any contempt in the face of the court. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 13. which however seems to apply, only to the sheriff's tourn. See Cromp. J. P. 92 b. Ow. 113.

See further for the whole of this subject, Com. Dig. title Leet.

The Court-Leet has now been for a long time in a declining way; its business as well as that of the tourn having for the most part gradually devolved on the quarter sessions. See 4 Comm. 274. 3 Burr. 1864.

This last circumstance is very pathetically lamented by the ingenious author from whom the above account of the Court-Leet is principally drawn; and to whom the editor of the present work is indebted for much of the information under title Constable. How far the restoration of the power of the Court-Leet in the present extensive deluge of crimes is advisable or not, is a question not to be determined in the compass here allotted to the subject. Every one desirous of being accurately informed of the foundations of the English law, will wish that the learned author from whom the above extracts have been made, would spend his time rather in examining the ancient, than condemning the present state of our jurisprudence. For the former task he is eminently qualified; the latter is only worthy of inferior talents.

COURT OF MARSHALSEA, curia palatii.] A court of record to hear and determine causes between the servants of the King's household and others within the verge; and hath jurisdiction of all matters within the verge of the court, and of pleas of trespass, where either party is of the King's family, and of all other actions personal, wherein both parties are the king's servants; and this is the original jurisdiction of the court of marshalsea. 1 Bulst. 211. But the curia palatii, erected by King Charles I. by letters-patent, in the 6th year of his reign, and made a court of record, hath power to try all personal actions, as debt, trespass, slander, trover, actions on the case, &c. between party and party, the liberty whereof extends twelve miles about Whitehall; stat. 13 R. 2. st. 1. c. 3. Which jurisdiction was confirmed by King Charles II.

The judges of this court are the steward of the King's household, and knight marshal for the time being, and the steward of the court, or his deputy, being always a lawyer. Crompt. Jurisd. 102. Kitch. 199, &c. 2 Inst. 548.

This court is kept once a week in Southwark: and the proceedings here are either by capias or attachment; which is to be served on the defendant by one of the knight-marshal's men, who takes bond with sureties for his appearance at the next court; upon which appearance, he must give bail, to answer the determination of the court; and the next court after the bail is taken, the plaintiff is to declare, and set forth the cause of his action, and afterwards proceed to issue and trial by a jury, according to the custom of the Common Law courts. If a cause is of importance, it is usually removed into B. R. or C. B. by an habeas corpus cum causa: otherwise causes are here brought to trial in four or five court-days. The inferior business of this court hath of late years been much reduced, by the new courts of conscience in and near London; for which the four counsel belonging to the court were indemnified by salaries during their lives, by stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 27.

By stat. 28 E. 1. c. 3. the steward and marshal of the King's house are not to hold plea of freehold, &c. Error in the Marshalsea court may be removed into the King's Bench. Stats. 5 E. 3. st. 2. c. 3. And the fees of the Marshalsea are limited by the stat. 2 H. 4. c. 23.—This Marshalsea is that of the household; not the King's Marshalsea, which belongs to the King's Bench. See Court of the Lord Steward, &c.

COURT-MARTIAL.

Curia Martialis.] A Court for trying and punishing the military offences of Officers and Soldiers.

I. Of the Origin,
II. Of the Jurisdiction, } Of Courts-Martial.

1. Though the authority of the Court of Chivalry, with regard to matters of war, &c. both within and without the realm, not determinable by the general municipal law, was first established by the Common Law, and afterwards confirmed by several statutes; and was never objected to, even in criminal cases, till the post of High Constable was laid aside: (See titles Constable, Court of Chivalry;) yet we find its jurisdiction encroached upon much earlier; for by the stat. 18 H. 6. c. 19. desertion from the King's army was made felony, and by stats. 7 H. 7. c. 1. 3 H. 8. c. 5. benefit of clergy is taken away, and authority given to justices of peace to inquire thereof, and hear and determine the same. And Rapin quotes an instance of H. VII. having ordered those accused of holding intelligence with the enemy after the battle of Stoke, 1487, to be tried by commissioners of his own appointing, or by Courts-Martial, according to the Martial Law; instead of the usual court of justice, which was not so favourable to his design of punishing them only by fines. This however seems to have been an avaricious, arbitrary and illegal exertion of power, not authorised by any law of the land.

From the time that the Court of Chivalry was abridged of its criminal jurisdiction, by the suppression of the post of High Constable until the Revolution, there appears to have been no regular established court for the administration of Martial Law. For although the Court of Chivalry still continued to be held from time to time by the Earl Marshal, its authority extended only to civil matters; and notwithstanding desertion was by stat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 2. made felony without benefit of clergy, and other military crimes were made punishable by fines, imprisonment, &c. and by stat. 39 Eliz. c. 17. idle and wandering soldiers and mariners were to be reputed as felons, and to suffer as in cases of felony, without benefit of clergy (with some exceptions); and the justices of assize and gaol-delivery were to hear and determine these offences; yet there are instances during this period, of other courts being erected for the administration of Martial Law; and not only military persons made subject to it, but many others punished thereby; some entirely at the discretion of the crown, and others by appointment of the parliament only; and it was a circumstance of nearly a similar nature that occasioned the enacting the Petition of Right, 3 C. 1. c. 1. one clause of which was, that the commissions for proceeding by Martial Law, should be dissolved and annulled: and no such commission be issued for the future.

Though undoubtedly these commissions were illegal, yet the necessity of subordination in the army, and the impossibility of establishing that subordination without Martial law, soon became apparent; and the two Houses of Parliament, in the beginning of their rebellion against Charles I. passed an Ordinance, appointing commissioners to execute Martial law; which was certainly at least as unconstitutional an act, without the assent of the King, as any proceedings of his had been without consent of Parliament. So true is it that necessity has no law; and that usurped power is always obliged to have recourse to means to support itself, at least as severe as, and generally more violent than, those which it previously condemns in a lawful government; which it may for a while succeed in overturning on false and specious pretexts of undefined liberty.

This ordinance was passed in 1644, and afterwards renewed by the parliament; and in process of time adopted as a model for the Mutiny Act passed after the Revolution: as many other regulations made during the powerful but tyrannical usurpation of sovereign authority, were afterwards modified to the true genius of the British constitution.

At the restoration, one of the first steps taken by the parliament was, to disband the army, and to regulate the militia, among whom a military subordination was established, whenever they were drawn out; and fines and imprisonments imposed on them for particular delinquencies. See title Militia.

Charles II. however kept up 5,000 regular troops, for guards and garrisons, by his own authority; which his successor, Jac. II. by degrees increased to 30,000, and more numerous armies were occasionally raised by authority of parliament; yet we find no statute for the government of these troops; nor was it till after the Revolution that a regular act of the whole legislature passed for punishing mutiny and desertion, &c. by Courts-Martial.

This act was first occasioned by a mutiny, in a body of English and Scots troops, upon their being ordered to Holland to replace some of the Dutch troops which Will. III. had brought over with him, and intended to keep in England. The King immediately communicated this event to the Parliament, who readily agreed to give their sanction to punish the offenders, and on the 3d April, 1689. (1 W. & M.) passed an act for punishing Mutiny and Desertion, &c. which was to continue in force only until November following.—It was however renewed again in January, and has with the interruption of about three years only, from April 1698, to February 1701, been annually renewed ever since, with some occasional alterations and amendments, as well in times of peace as war.

II. Martial Law, as formerly exercised at the discretion of the Crown, and too often made subservient to bad purposes, justly became obnoxious to the people; and not only the propriety but the legality of its being executed in times of peace, has been absolutely denied. It is laid down (3 Inst. 52.) that if a lieutenant or other, that hath commission of Martial-law, doth in time of peace, hang, or otherwise execute any man by colour of Martial-law, this is murder, for it is against Magna Charta.—And Hale (Hist. C. L. c. 2.) declares Martial-law to be in reality, no law, but something indulged rather than allowed as law: that the necessity of order and discipline is the only thing which can give it countenance; and therefore it ought not to be permitted in time of peace, when the King's courts are open for all persons to receive justice according to the laws of the land: and if a Court-martial put a man to death in time of peace, the officers are guilty of murder. See H. P. C. 46.

As future exigencies however have arisen in the State, it has become necessary to alter and amend the old laws and enact new ones; and since the custom of keeping up standing armies in time of peace as well as war has become prevalent and general throughout Europe, (a custom as it seems originally introduced by Charles VII. of France about 1445,) the Legislature of Great Britain has also judged it necessary, for the safety of the kingdom, the defence of its possessions, and the balance of power in Europe, (as the preamble to the Mutiny-act expresses it,) to maintain, even in times of peace, a standing body of troops; and to authorise the exercise of Martial-law among them.

A proper distinction then should be made between Martial law, as formerly executed, entirely at the discretion of the Crown, and unbounded in its authority, either as to persons or crimes, and that at present established, which is limited with regard to both.—Courts-martial are at present held by the same authority as the other courts of judicature, of this kingdom: and the King (or his Generals, when empowered to appoint them) has the same prerogative of moderating the rigor of the law, and pardoning and remitting punishments, as in other cases; but he can no more add to, nor alter the sentence of a Court-martial, than he can a judgment given in the courts of law. Martial-law is now exercised within its proper limits, by the advice and concurrence of parliament, and the condemnation of criminals by Courts-martial acting under such authority, cannot be regarded as illegal or contrary to Magna Charta; since during the existence of the statute by which these Courts are held, Martial-law, so modified and restrained, is as much part of the law of the land as Magna Charta itself.

Courts-Martial being established in this country by positive law, their proceedings and the relation in which they stand to the Courts of Westminster-hall, must depend upon the same rules with all other courts which are instituted and have particular powers given them, and whose acts therefore may become the subject of application to the courts at Westminster for a prohibition. 2 H. Blackst. 100.

Courts-Martial cannot sit before eight in the morning, or after three in the afternoon, except in cases which require an immediate example: the attendance therefore of the members does not exceed seven hours at a time: and they are at liberty to adjourn from day to day till they have fully considered the matter before them: and when they come to give their opinions, they are not under the necessity of being unanimous, but the prisoner is condemned or acquitted by a majority of voices; except in cases of death, where nine out of thirteen, or two-thirds, if there be more than thirteen, present, must concur in opinion. Articles of War, § 15 a. 8. 9.

As to general Courts-Martial, the Mutiny act and Articles of War are very explicit, both as to the number they shall consist of, and the rank of the officers who are to compose them.

The Crimes that are cognisable by a Court-martial, as repugnant to military discipline, are pointed out by the Mutiny-act, and Articles of War; which every military man is, or ought to be fully acquainted with, and therefore not necessary to be recited here: and as to other crimes which officers and soldiers being guilty of, are to be tried for in the ordinary course of law, it is needless to enter into a detail of them.

By the last article in the code of Military laws, Courts-martial are authorised to take cognizance of all crimes not capital, and all disorders and neglects which officers and soldiers may be guilty of, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, which are not enumerated in the preceding articles, and punish them at their discretion. Art. of War, § 20 a. 3. Upon the authority of this article it has been too much the custom in the army to try soldiers by Courts-martial, for thefts and other crimes cognisable before the courts of law. But it seems questionable, whether an exception might not in many such cases be made to their jurisdiction: for the Mutiny acts, and Articles of War, § 11 a. 1. expressly direct, that any officer, non-commissioned officer, or soldier who shall be accused of any capital crime, violence or offence, against the person, estate or property of any of his Majesty's subjects, punishable by the laws of the land, shall be delivered over to the civil magistrate by the commanding officer, under penalty of his being cashiered in case of refusal.—There was formerly an article, of late omitted, particularly authorising Courts-Martial to take cognisance of all soldiers accused of stealing from their comrades.

The Persons liable to Martial-law, are likewise enumerated in the Act and the Articles. The latter mention only officers, soldiers, and persons serving with the armies in the field. But Hale and others are of opinion, that aliens who in a hostile manner invade the kingdom, whether their king were at war or peace with ours, and whether they come by themselves, or in company with English traitors, cannot be punished as traitors, but must be dealt with by Martial-law. H. P. C. cc. 10. 15. 3 Inst. 11.—This however means Martial-law, in the strict sense of the word, in which it cannot be applied to proceedings under the Mutiny-act; and which kind of Martial-law is unknown in this kingdom.—The receiving pay as a soldier, subjects the receiver to military jurisdiction. The court of C. P. therefore refused to grant a prohibition to prevent the execution of the sentence of a Court-martial, passed against one who received pay as a soldier; but who assumed the military character merely for the purpose of recruiting, in the usual course of that service—and this, though the proceedings of the Court-martial appeared, in some instances, to be erroneous. Grant v. Sir Charles Gould, 2 H. Black. Rep. 69.

The Articles of War, in a few cases, point out the express Sentence to be passed on criminals, without any alternative: in some an optional power is given, of punishing with death or otherwise, and in others, offenders are punished at the discretion of the Court, omitting the word death; evidently meaning thereby to exclude the power of punishing capitally in such cases.

In cases where an optional power is vested in the Court to punish with death or otherwise, the question to follow that of guilty or not guilty, (upon the Court or the majority of it declaring for the former,) is, whether or not the prisoner shall suffer death? If two thirds of the Court do not concur in the affirmative, the votes of the affirmants are considered as void. A lesser number than two-thirds being, as was before said, incompetent to give judgment of death, another question becomes necessary to be proposed to every member, what punishment, other than death, shall the prisoner undergo? And each member gives his voice, de novo, on this question, wherein a majority is competent to determine.

The crimes cognisable by a Court-martial may be divided into felonies and misdemeanors; or more properly, into capital offences, and offences only criminal and not capital; and if on the evidence a prisoner does not appear guilty of a crime of so capital a nature, as is set forth in the charge, the Court may find him guilty in a less degree; but they cannot declare him guilty of a mutiny, or any other distinct crime or offence, unless it be likewise in the charge given against him, before the trial commences.

By stat. 37 G. 3. c. 140. His Majesty is enabled more easily and effectually to grant conditional pardons to persons under sentence by Naval Courts-martial, and to regulate imprisonment under such sentences, viz.

By sect. 1. if his Majesty shall extend his mercy to persons liable to death by the sentence of a Naval Court-martial, a Justice of the King's Bench, &c. may on notification from the Secretary of State, allow the benefit of such conditional pardon as if it had passed under the Great Seal, and shall make orders accordingly.

The Justice or Baron allowing the pardon, shall direct the notification, and order it to be filed with the clerk of the crown of the Court of King's Bench, § 2.—Like provisions are made with respect to the army by the annual Mutiny Acts.

The Judgments of Courts-martial, besides being open to the disapprobation of the King, or his commanders in chief, are liable like those of other courts, to be taken cognisance of, and the members punished for illegal proceedings; for the Court of King's Bench being the supreme court of Common Law, hath not only power to reverse erroneous judgments given by inferior courts, but also to punish all inferior magistrates, and all officers of justice, for all wilful and corrupt abuses of authority against the known, obvious, and common principles of justice. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 3. § 10.; c. 27. § 22.—The Mutiny act directs, that every action against any member or minister of a Court-martial, in respect to any sentence, shall be brought in some of the courts of record at Westminster, &c. § 63. And there have been many instances of actions of this nature in Westminster-hall. See Navy, III. ad finem.—An officer on a Court-martial however is not liable to be punished for mere mistakes which an honest well-meaning man may innocently fall into. And if the plaintiff or prosecutor becomes nonsuited, or the defendant has a verdict, he shall recover treble costs. Mutiny-act, § 62.—There is also another tribunal before which the proceedings of Courts-martial are liable to censure at least, namely, the House of Commons.

Courts-martial are bound by the same rules of evidence as the courts of Common Law; and their general proceedings, where not otherwise regulated by act of parliament, must follow the same course. 1 East, 313.

It is enacted by the Mutiny-acts, that no officer or soldier being acquitted or convicted of any offence, shall be liable to be tried a second time by the same or any other Court-martial, for the same offence, unless in the case of an appeal from a regimental to a general Court-martial; and by the Articles of War "If upon a second hearing the appeal shall appear to be vexatious and groundless, the person so appealing shall be punished at the discretion of the General Court-martial."—No sentence given by any Court-martial, and signed by the President, is liable to be revised more than once. And this may be rather deemed an appeal to the same court than a new trial; since in this case the same persons only are to re-consider what they have already done, without any new judges being added to them, or any new witnesses produced.

A distinction is made in the Oath taken by the President and Members of a Court-martial, and that of the Judge Advocate. The former are sworn, not only to conceal the vote or opinion of each particular member, but also the sentence of the Court, until it shall be approved by his Majesty, or by some person duly authorised by him; the latter is only sworn not to divulge the opinion of any particular member of the Court-martial.

For further particulars, see Adye's Treatise on Courts-Martial; from whence most of the above is abridged. See also this Dict. title Soldiers.—And as to Naval Courts-martial, title Navy. See also M'Arthur on Courts-martial, 2 Edit. 1805.

Court of Piepowder, curia pedis pulverisati.] Is a court held in fairs, to do justice to buyers and sellers, and for redress of disorders committed in them: so called, because they are most usual in Summer, when the suitors to the court have dusty feet; and from the expedition in hearing causes proper thereunto, before the dust goes off the feet of the plaintiffs and defendants. 4 Inst. 272. Or from Pied poudreaux a pedlar. Barrington, Anc. stats. 337. It is a court of record incident to every Fair; and to be held only during the time that the Fair is kept. Doct. & Stud. c. 5. As to the jurisdiction, the cause of action for contract, slander, &c. must arise in the fair or market, and not before at any former fair, nor after the fair: it is to be for some matter concerning the same fair or market; and must be done, complained of, heard and determined the same day. Also the plaintiff must make oath that the contract, &c. was within the jurisdiction and time of the fair. See stats. 17 Ed. 4. c. 2. 1 Rich. 3. c. 6.

The Court of Piepowder may hold a plea of a sum above 40*s.* and it is said, judgment may be given at another fair, at a court held there, and a writ of error lies upon a judgment given. Dyer, 133. F. N. B. 18. This court may not meddle with any thing done in a market, without a special custom for it; but for what is done in a fair only: and not there for slanderous words, unless they concern matters of contract in the fair; as where it is for slandering the wares of another, and not of his person in the same fair. Moor. Ca. 854. The steward before whom the court is held, is the judge: and the trial is by merchants and traders in the fair; and the judgment against the defendant shall be quod amercietur. If the steward proceeds contrary to the stat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 2. he shall forfeit 5*l.*

From this court a writ of error lies in the nature of an appeal to the courts at Westminster. Cro. Eliz. 773.—And those courts are now bound by the stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 70. to issue writs of execution in aid of its process, after judgment, where the person or effects of the defendant are not within the limits of this inferior jurisdiction. See Piepowder.

Court of Requests, curia requisitionum.] Was a court of equity, of the same nature with the court of Chancery, but inferior to it; principally instituted for the relief of such petitioners, as in conscionable cases addressed themselves by supplication to his majesty. Of this court, the Lord Privy Seal was Chief Judge, assisted by the Master of Requests; and it had beginning about the 9 H. 7. according to Sir Julius Cæsar's Tractate on this subject: though Mr. Gwyn in his Preface to his Readings, saith it began from a commission first granted by King Hen. VIII.

This court having assumed great power to itself, so that it became burdensome, Mich. anno. 40 & 41 Eliz. in the court of Common Pleas, it was adjudged, upon solemn argument, that the Court of Requests, was no court of judicature, &c. And by the stat. 16 & 17 Car. 1. c. 10. it was taken away. 4 Inst. 97.—See title Courts of Conscience.

Court of Session in Scotland. See the acts 48 Geo. 3. c. 151. 50 Geo. 3. c. 112. and 53 Geo. 3. c. 64. for the better regulation of this court.

Court of the Lord Steward of the King's House. The Lord Steward, or, in his absence, the treasurer and controller of the King's house, and Steward of the Marshalsea, may inquire of, hear and determine in this court, all treasons, murders, manslaughter, bloodsheds, and other malicious strikings, whereby blood shall be shed, in any of the palaces and houses of the King; [or within the limits i. e. 200 feet from the gate, 4 Comm. 276.] or in any other house where his royal person shall abide. And this jurisdiction was given by the stat. 33 H. 8. c. 12. 3 Inst. 140. But this court was at first intended only to inquire of and punish felonies, &c. by the King's servants against any lord or other person of the King's council. 3 H. 7. c. 14. See 4 Comm. 276.

Court of Star-Chamber, Curia cameræ stellatæ.] A Court of very ancient original, but new-modelled by stats. 3 H. 7. c. 1. 21 H. 8. c. 20. which ordained, That the Lord Chancellor, Treasurer, and Lord Privy Seal, calling a Bishop, and Lord of the King's Council, and the two Chief Justices to their assistance, on bill or information might make process against maintainors, rioters, persons unlawfully assembling, and for other misdemeanors, which, through the power and countenance of such as did commit them, lifted up their heads above their faults, and punish them as if the offenders had been convicted at law, by a jury, &c. But this act was repealed, and the Court dissolved by stat. 16 & 17 Car. 1. c. 10. having been used to oppress the subject, particularly in matters of state.

Courts of Universities.] These are the Chancellor's courts in the two Universities of England, Oxford and Cambridge. Which two learned bodies enjoy the sole jurisdiction, in exclusion of the King's courts, over all civil actions and suits whatsoever, when a scholar or privileged person is one of the parties; excepting in such cases where the right of freehold is concerned. And these, by the University charter, they are at liberty to try and determine, either according to the Common Law of the land, or according to their own local customs, at their discretion; which has generally led them to carry on their process in a course much conformed to the civil law.

These privileges were granted, that the students might not be distracted from their studies by legal process from distant courts, and other forensic avocations.—The oldest charter, it appears, containing this grant to the University of Oxford, was 28 Hen. 3. A. D. 1244. And the same privileges were confirmed and enlarged by almost every succeeding prince, down to King Henry VIII. in the fourteenth year of whose reign the largest and most extensive charter of all was granted. One similar to which was afterwards granted to Cambridge in the third year of Queen Elizabeth. But yet, notwithstanding these charters, the privileges granted therein, of proceeding in a course different from the law of the land, were of so high a nature, that they were held to be invalid; for though the King might erect new courts, yet he could not alter the course of law by his letters patent. Therefore in the reign of Queen Elizabeth a statute was passed, (13 Eliz. c. 29.) confirming all the charters of the two Universities, and those of 14 Hen. 8. and 3 Eliz. by name. Which statute established this high privilege without any doubt or opposition. Jenk. Cent. 2. pl. 88. Cent. 3. pl. 33. Hard. 504. Godb. 201. Hist. C. L. 33.

This privilege, so far as it relates to civil causes, is exercised at Oxford in the Chancellor's court; the judge of which is the Vice-chancellor, his deputy, or assessor. From his sentence an appeal lies to delegates appointed by the congregation; from thence to other delegates of the house of Convocation; and if they all three concur in the same sentence it is final: at least by the statutes of the University. (Tit. 21. § 18.) according to the rule of the civil law (Cod. 7. 70, 1.) But, if there be any discordance or variation in any of the three sentences, an appeal lies in the last resort to judges delegates, appointed by the Crown under the great seal in Chancery. 3 Comm. 83—5. See 2 Ld. Raym. 1346. that it is the same at Cambridge.

Courts of Wales. Curiæ principalitatis Walliæ.] The Courts of the Principality of Wales.

These Courts upon the thorough reduction of that principality, and the settling of its polity in the reign of Hen. VIII. were erected all over the country; principally by the stat. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 26. though much had before been done, and the way prepared by the stat. of Wales, 12 Ed. 1. and other statutes. By the stat. of Hen. 8. before mentioned, courts-baron, hundred, and county-courts are there established as in England. A Session is also to be held twice in every year in each county, by judges, (See stat. 18 Eliz. c. 8.) appointed by the King. This Session is to be called the Great Session of the several counties in Wales; in which all pleas of real and personal actions shall be held, with the same form of process, and in as simple a manner as in the courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas, at Westminster. See, for farther regulation of the practice of these courts, stat. 5 Eliz. c. 25. 8 Eliz. c. 20. 8 Geo. 1. c. 25. § 6. 6 Geo. 2. c. 14. 13 Geo. 3. c. 51. Writs of error shall lie from judgments in this great sessions, it being a court of record, to the Court of King's Bench at Westminster. But the ordinary original writs of process from the King's courts at Westminster, do not run into the principality of Wales, (2 Rol. Rep. 141.) though process of execution does; (2 Bulst. 1. 6. 2 Sand. 193. Raym. 206.) as do also prerogative writs, as writs of certiorari, quo minus, mandamus, and the like. Cro. Jac. 484.—And even in causes between subject and subject, to prevent injustice through family factions or prejudices, it is held lawful (in causes of freehold at least, and it is usual in all others) to bring an action in the English courts, and try the same in the next English county, adjoining to that part of Wales where the cause arises, and wherein the venue is laid. Vaugh. 413. Hardr. 66. But, on the other hand, to prevent trifling and frivolous suits, it is enacted by stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 51. that in personal actions, tried in any English county, where the cause of action arose, and the defendant resides in Wales, if the plaintiff shall not recover a verdict for 10*l.* he shall be nonsuited, and pay the defendant's costs; unless it be certified by the judge that the freehold or title came principally in question, or that the cause was proper to be tried in such English county. And if any transitory action, the cause whereof arose, and the defendant is resident in Wales, shall be brought in any English county, and the plaintiff shall not recover a verdict for 10*l.* the plaintiff shall be nonsuited, and shall pay the defendant's costs, deducting thereout the sum recovered by the verdict.

By stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 9. it is enacted that sheriffs in Wales shall not hold to bail, on process issuing out of any of his Majesty's courts of record at Westminster, unless the debt be sworn to be under 20*l.*

For further satisfaction, as to the several Courts within this kingdom, see 4 Inst. and the Commentaries.

COURT-LANDS. Domains, or lands kept in the lord's hands, to serve his family. See Curtiles Terræ.

COUSENAGE. See Cosenage.

COUTHUTLAUGH. From the Sax. couth, i. e. sciens, and utlaugh, exlex.] A person that willingly and knowingly receives a man outlawed, and cherishes or conceals him: for which offence he was, in antient times, to undergo the same punishment as the outlaw himself. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 13.

COWS. See title Cattle.

CRAIERA, crayer.] A small vessel of lading; a hoy or smack. Pat. 2. R. 2. Stat. 14 Car. 2. c. 27.

CRAIL. An engine made use of to catch fish. Blount.

CRANAGE, cranagium.] A liberty to use a crane for drawing up of goods and wares of burden from ships and vessels, at any creek of the sea or wharf, unto the land, and to make profit of it: it also signifies the money paid and taken for the same. Stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 11.

CRANNOCK. An ancient measure of corn. Cartular. Abbot. Glaston. MS. f. 39.

CRASPISCIS. A whale, viz. piscis crassus. Blount.

CRASRINO SANCTI VINCENTII. The morrow after the feast of St. Vincent the Martyr, i. e. the 22d of January: which is the date of the statutes made at Merton, anno 20 H. 3. There are likewise certain return days of writs in terms, in the courts at Westminster, beginning with Crastino, &c. as Crastino Animarum, the Morrow of All Souls, in Michaelmas term; Crastino Purificationis beatæ Mariæ Virginis, in Hilary term; Crastino Ascensionis Domini, in Easter term; and Crastino Sanctæ Trinitatis, in Trinity term. See stats. 51 H. 3. st. 2 & 3. 32 H. 8. c. 21. 16 Car. 1. c. 6. 24 Geo. 2. c. 48. —See Days in Bank; Terms.

CRATES, Lat.] An iron grate before a prison, used in the time of the Romans. 1 Vent. 304.

CRAVARE. To impeach. Si homicida divadietur ibi vel cravetur, &c. Leg. H. 1. c. 30.

CRAVEN, OR CRAVENT. The word of obloquy, where in the ancient trial by battel, the victory should be proclaimed, and the vanquished acknowledged his fault, or pronounce the word cravent, in the name of Recreontisse, &c. and thereupon judgment was given forthwith: after which the recreant should become infamous, &c. 2 Inst. 248. If the appellant joined battel, and cried cravent, he should lose liberam legem; but if the appellee cried out cravent, he was to be hanged. 3 Inst. 221.—See titles Battel, Champion.

CREAMER. A foreign merchant; but generally taken for one who hath a stall in a fair or market. Blount.

CREANSOR, CREDITOR, from Fr. croyance.] Signifies him that trusts another with any debt, money, or wares; in which sense it is used in Old Nat. Br. 66. and 38 Ed. 3. c. 5.

CREAST, OR CREST, crista.] Any imagery, or carved work, to adorn the head of wainscot, &c. like our modern cornice; but this word is now applied by the heralds to their devices set over a coat of arms. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 573.

CREATION-MONEY. This is mentioned in stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 1. See 1 Inst. 836. in n. and this Dict. title Peers.

CRECHE. A drinking-cup. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. p. 104.

CREDITORS. Shall recover their debts of executors or administrators, who in their own wrong, waste, or convert to their use the estate of the deceased, &c. Stat. 30 Car. 2. c. 7. Wills and devises of lands, &c. as to creditors on bonds or other specialties, are declared void: and the creditors may have actions of debt against the heir at law and devisees. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 14.—See titles Assets, Copyhold, Executor, Fraud.

CREEK, creca, crecca.] A part of a haven where any thing is landed from the sea: so that it is observed, if when you are out of the main sea within the haven, you look round and see how many landing places there are, so many creeks may be said to belong to that haven. Cromp. Jurisd. fol. 110. It is also said to be a shore or bank whereon the water beats, running in a small channel from any part of the sea; from the Lat. crepido. This word is used in the stats. 4 Hen. 4. c. 20. 5 Eliz. c. 5.—See title Navigation Acts.

CREMENTUM COMITATUS. The sheriffs of counties anciently answered in their accounts for the improvement of the King's rents, above the antient vicoatiel rents, under the title of Crementum [incrementum, increase] Comitatus, or Firma de Cremento Comitatus. Hale's Sher. Acco. p. 36.

CREPARE OCULUM. To put out an eye; which had a pecuniary punishmeat of 60*s.* annexed to it. Leg. H. 1.

CREST. See Creast.

CRETINUS, cretena.] A sudden stream or torrent. Histor. Croyland contin. 485. 617.

CRIMINAL CONVERSATION. See titles Adultery, Baron and Feme.

CROCARDS. A sort of old base money. See Pollards, and title Coin.

CROCIA. The crosier or pastoral staff, so called a similitudine crucis which bishops, &c. had the privilege to carry as the common ensign of their religious office; being invested in their prelacies by the delivery of such a crosier: hence the word crocia did sometimes denote the collation to, or disposal of bishopricks and abbies, by the donation of such pastoral staff: so as when the King granted large jurisdictions, exceptis crociis, it is meant, except the collation or investure of episcopal fees, &c. Addit. to Cowel.—See title Bishops.

CROCIARIUS. The crociary or cross-bearer, who like our verger, went before the prelate and bore his cross. Liber de Miraculis Tho. Episc. Heref. M.S. anno 1290.

CROFT, Sax. croftum and crofta.] A little close adjoining to a dwelling house and enclosed for pasture or arable, or any particular use. In some old deeds crufta occurs as the Latin word for a croft; but cum toftis et croftis, is most frequent. Ingulph. It seems to be derived from the old English word creaft, signifying handy-craft; because such grounds are usually manured and extraordinarily drest by the hand and skill of the owner.—See Toft.

CROISES, and croisado. See Croyses.

CROK, crocus.] Turning up the hair into curls or croks; whence comes crook, crooked, &c. Pat. 21 H. 3.

CROP, croppa.] The seeds or products of the harvest in corn, &c. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 82.

CROSS-BOWS. None shall shoot in, or keep any cross-bow, hand-gun, hagbut, &c. but those who have lands of the value of 100*l.* per annum; and no person shall travel with a cross-bow bent, or gun charged, except in time of war; or shoot within a quarter of a mile of any city, or market town, unless for defence of himself or his house, or at a dead mark, under the penalty of 10*l.* stat. 33 H. 8. cap. 6.—See titles Arms, Game.

CROSSES. By stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2. Crosses, beads, &c. used by the Roman Catholicks, are prohibited to be brought into this kingdom, on pain of a præmunire, &c. In ancient times, it was usual for men to erect crosses on their houses, by which they would claim the privileges of the Templars to defend themselves against their rightful lords; but this was condemned by the stat. Westm. 2. c. 37. It was likewise customary in those days to set up crosses in places where the corps of any of the nobility rested, as it was carried to be buried, that à transeuntibus pro ejus anima deprecetur. Walsing. anno 1291. There were several of these crosses erected over England, especially in honour of the resting places of our Kings, on their bodies being transmitted to any distant place for burial: but these superstitions sunk in this kingdom with the Romish religion.

CROY. Marsh land. Ingulphus, p. 853.—Blount.

CROYSES, cruce signati.] Is used by Britton for pilgrims, because they wear the sign of the cross upon their garments. Of these and their privileges, Bracton hath treated lib. 5. part 2. cap. 2. part 5. cap. 9. Under this word are also signified the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, created for the defence of pilgrims; and likewise all those persons who in the reigns of K. Hen. II.; Ric. I.; Hen. III.; and Ed. I. cruce signati, took upon them the croisado, dedicating and listing themselves to the wars, for the recovery of Jerusalem and the Holy Land. Greg. Syntag. lib. 15. cap. 13. 14. See a general account of the croisades in Robertson's Hist. Emp. C. V. vol. 1. p. 22, &c.

CROWN. See title King.

CROWN OFFICE. An office belonging to the court of King's Bench, of which the King's Coroner or Attorney there is commonly Master. The Attorney General, and Clerk of the Crown exhibit informations in this office, for crimes and misdemeanours; the one ex officio, and the other usually by order of court; and here informations may be laid for offences and misdemeanours at Common Law, as for batteries, conspiracies, libelling, nuisances, contempt, seditious words, &c. wherein the offender is liable to pay a fine to the King. Finch. 340. Show. 109.

By stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. the Clerk of the Crown, in B. R. is not to receive or file any information for trespass, battery, &c. without express order of court: nor to issue any process, without taking a recognisance in 20*l.* penalty to prosecute with effect; and if the party appear, and the plaintiff do not procure a trial in a year, or if verdict pass for the defendant, &c. the court shall award the defendant costs; but this act doth not extend to informations in the name of the King's Coroner or Attorney, &c.

When a battery is committed privately, so that the person injured can make no proof thereof by witnesses at law; it is usual to bring an information in this office, or to prefer an indictment, the most legal method, where the party may be a witness for the King, it being his suit. See titles Indictment, Information, King's Bench, Quo Warranto, &c.

CRUSTUM. Was a garment of purple, mixed with many colours. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. page 210.

CRY DE PAIS. On a robbery or other felony done, hue and cry may be raised by the country in the absence of the constable, which is called cry de pais. 2 Hale's Hist. P.C. 100. See title Hue and Cry.

CRYPTA. A chapel or oratory under ground, or under a church or cathedral. Du Cange.

CUCKING STOOL. See title Castigatory.

CUDE. A cude cloth is a chrysom or face-cloth for a child baptized. Vide Chrismale.

CUI ANTE DIVORTIUM. A writ for a woman divorced from her husband to recover her lands and tenements which she had in fee-simple, or in tail, or for life, from him to whom her husband did alienate them during the marriage, when she could not gainsay it. Reg. Orig. 233. F. N. B. 240. And the heir shall have a sur cui ante divortium, where the wife dieth before the action brought; as well as he shall have a sur cui in vita. F. N. B. 193. But if an estate tail, the heir shall not have sur cui in vita, or ante divortium, but shall be put to his formedon in the descender. New. Nat. Br. 454.—See title Entry.

CUI IN VITA. A writ of entry, for a widow against him to whom her husband aliened her lands or tenements in his life-time; which must contain in it, that during his life she could not withstand it. Reg. Orig. 232. F. N. B. 193. If husband and wife be jointenants before the coverture, and the husband alieneth all the land, and dieth, she shall have a cui in vita for a moiety and no more; but if they are joint purchasers during the coverture, and he alien all the land and dieth, his wife shall have a cui in vita of the whole land; because that during the coverture, as to purchase, they are but one person in law. F. N. B. 187. And for this reason, if husband and wife, and a third person, purchase jointly, and the husband alieneth all in fee, and dieth, the wife shall have a cui in vita of a moiety. Ibid.

Where the husband and wife exchange the lands of the wife for other lands, if the wife agree unto the exchange after the husband's death, she shall not have a cui in vita. Also if the wife do accept of parcel of the land in dower, of which she hath a cui in vita, by that acceptance she shall be barred of the residue. New Nat. Br. 430. If the husband and wife lose by default the wife's lands, after the death of her husband, she shall have a cui in vita to recover those lands so lost by default. F. N. B. 187. By stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 3. Cui in vita is given to the wife where the deceased husband lost her lands by default in his life-time: and she shall be admitted to defend her right during his life, if she come in before judgment. Likewise if tenant in dower, by the curtesy, or for life, do make default, &c. the heirs and they to whom the reversion belongeth shall be admitted to their answer, if they come before judgment: and if on default judgment happen to be given, such heirs, &c. shall have a writ of entry for recovery of the same after the death of such tenants. See Booth on real actions, and F. N. B.

CULAGIUM. The laying up of a ship in the dock to be repaired. MS. Arth. Trevor. Arm. de Plac. Edw. 3.

CULM. See Coal.

CULPRIT. A prisoner accused for trial. The word arose originally from the reply of the proper officer in behalf of the King, affirming a criminal to be guilty, after he hath pleaded Not Guilty, without which the issue to be tried is not joined: it is compounded of two words, viz. Cul. and prit; the one an abbreviation of culpabilis, and the other derived from the French word prest, i. e. ready; and it is as much as to say that he is ready to prove the offender guilty. See 4 Comm. 339.

CULREACH. A caution given by a lord of regality, to punish a malefactor, whom he replevied from the sheriff.—Scotch Dict.

CULTURA. A parcel of arable land. Blount.

CULVERTAGE, Culvertagium.] Is said by some persons to be derived from Culum and vertere, to turn tail: and in this sense, sub nomine culvertagii, was taken to be on pain of cowardice, or being accounted cowards. And in this sense Spelman in voc. Niderling derives it from Culver, a dove. But in the opinion of others, it rather signifies some base slavery, or the confiscation of an estate; being a feudal term for the lands of the vassal forfeited and escheating to the lord: and sub nomine culvertagii in this signification, was under pain of confiscation. Mat. Paris, anno 1212.

CULWARD AND CULVERD. A coward, or cowardice. Chart. Temp. E. 1. See the preceeding word.

CUNA-CERVISIÆ. A tub of ale. Domesday. But this word is truly Cuva.

CUNEUS. A mint or place to coin money: Coneum Monetum signifies the King's stamp for coinage; and from the word cune, is derived coin. See Coin.

CUNTEY-CUNTEY. A kind of trial, as appears by Bracton. Bract. lib. 4. tract. 3. c. 18. where it seems to intend the ordinary jury.

CORAGULUS. One who taketh care of a thing. Mon. Ang. Tom. 2.

CURATE, Curator.] He who represents the incumbent of a church, parson or vicar, and takes care of divine service in his stead: in case of pluralities of livings, or where a clergyman is old and infirm, it is requisite there should be a Curate to perform the cure of the church. He is to be licensed and admitted by the bishop of the diocese, or by an Ordinary, having episcopal jurisdiction: and when a curate hath the approbation of the bishop, he usually appoints the salary too; and in such case, if he be not paid, the Curate hath a proper remedy in the ecclesiastical court, by a sequestration of the profits of the benefice: but if he hath no licence from the bishop, he is put to his remedy at Common Law, where he must prove the agreement, &c. Right Clerg. 127.

By stat. 28 H. 8. c. 11. such as serve a church during its vacancy, shall be paid such stipend as the Ordinary thinks reasonable out of the profits of the vacancy; or, if that be not sufficient, by the successor, within fourteen days after he takes possession.

By stat. 12 Ann. c. 12. where Curates are licensed by the bishop, they are to be appointed by him at a stipend not exceeding 50*l. per ann.* nor less than 20*l.* a year, according to the value of the livings, to be paid by the rector or vicar: and the same may be done on any complaint made.

By stat. 36 Geo. 3. c. 83. § 1. the bishop or ordinary may appoint a stipend to Curates of 75*l. per ann.* with the use of the parsonage house, or allowance for it where the rector or vicar does not personally reside.

Churches augmented by Queen Anne's bounty shall be deemed benefices presentive, and the officiating Curate may have a like stipend. Id. §§ 3. 4.

Bishop or Ordinary may apportion the stipend to officiating Curates, of perpetual curacies not augmented. Id. § 5.

Ordinary may license Curates employed though no nomination shall have been made to him by the incumbent, and may revoke any licence subject to appeal to the archbishop of the province. Id. § 6.

§§ 3 & 4 of this act, 36 Geo. 3. c. 83. were by the 47 G. 3. stat. 2. c. 25. suspended, (so far as related to the avoidance of benefices by the acceptance of augmented curacies). But this act of suspension was repealed by stat. 48 Geo. 3. c. 5.

Certain provisions were made by stat. 53 Geo. 3. c. 149. for the support, &c. of stipendiary Curates. These were repealed, and more effectual regulations made by 57 Geo. 3. c. 99. §§ 1, 48. &c. Under this latter act, the bishops are empowered to license Curates and to assign them salaries, in no case less than 80*l.* a year, and increasing up to 150*l.* according to the population of the parish, &c. The occupation of the parsonage house may in certain cases be assigned to the Curate, who is not to quit his curacy without three months notice to the incumbent and the bishop. These regulations are to operate on persons having become incumbents after 20th July, 1813; and in case only of the non-residence of the incumbent on his living for more than three months in the year. See further Parson, Residence.

One person cannot be Curate in two churches, unless such may satisfy the law, by reading both morning and evening prayers at each place: nor can he serve one cure on one Sunday and another cure on the next; for he must not neglect to read morning and evening prayer in his church every Lord's day; if he doth he is liable to punishment. Comp. Incumb. 572. But it is otherwise where a church or chapel is a member of the parish church; and where one church is not able to maintain a curate. Can. 48. See now stat. 57 Geo. 3. c. 99.

A Curate having no fixed estate in his curacy, not being instituted and inducted, may be removed at pleasure by the bishop or incumbent. Noy. But there are perpetual curates, as well as temporary, who are appointed where tithes are impropriate, and no vicarage endowed: these are not removeable: and the impropriators are obliged to find them, some whereof have certain portions of the tithes settled on them.—Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 8. See title Parson.

It was provided in 1603 by Can. 33. that if a bishop ordains any person not provided with some ecclesiastical preferment, except a fellow or chaplain of a college, or a Master of Arts of five years standing, who lives in the University at his own expense, the bishop shall support him till he prefer him to a living. 3 Burn. Eccl. L. 28. The bishops before they confer orders require either proof of such a title as is described by the canon, or a certificate from some Rector or Vicar, promising to employ the candidate for orders bonâ fide as a curate, and to grant him a certain allowance till he obtains some ecclesiastical preferment, or shall be removed for some fault. In a case where the Rector of St. Anne, Westminster, gave such a title, and afterwards dismissed his curate without assigning any cause, the curate recovered in an action of assumpsit the same salary for the time after his dismission which he had received before. Cowp. 437. When the rector had vacated St. Anne's by accepting the living of Rochdale, the curate brought another action to recover his salary after the rector left St. Anne's; but the Court of K. B. held that that action could not be maintained; as these titles are only binding upon those who give them, while they continue incumbents in the church for which such curate is appointed. Doug. 137.

No Curate (or Minister) ought to perform the duties of any church, before he has obtained a licence from the bishop. 2 Burn. 58.

The Bishop cannot increase the salary of the curate, where there is a specific agreement between the incumbent and the curate. Freem. 70.

Every clergyman that officiates in a church, (whether incumbent or substitute) is in our liturgy called a curate. Curates must subscribe the declaration, according to the act of Uniformity, or are liable to imprisonment, &c. See titles Clergyman, Parson, Advowson, Chaplain, &c.

CURFEU, Fr. Couvrir, to cover; Feu. fire.] A bell which rang at eight o'clock in the evening, in the time of William the Conqueror: by which every person was commanded to rake up or cover over his fire, and put out his light; and in many places of England at this day, where a bell is customarily rung towards bed-time, it is said to ring curfew. Stowe's Annals.

In the Welch language, curfa signifies a beating: also a stroke. Richards's Antiquæ Linguæ Britannicæ Thesaurus.

CURIA, Court.] Applied to all Courts of Justice, &c. It is sometimes taken for the persons, as feudatory and other customary tenants, who did their suit and service at the court of the lord. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 139. And it was usual for the Kings of England, in antient times, to assemble the bishops, peers, and great men of the kingdom to some particular place, at the chief festivals in the year; and this assembly is called by our historians Curia. And it was called Solemnis Curia, Augustalis Curia, Curia Pullica, &c. See titles Court, Witenagemote.

CURIA ADVISARE VULT. Is a deliberation which a court of judicature sometimes takes, where there is any point of difficulty, before they give judgment in a cause. New Book, Entr. And when judgment is staid, upon motion to arrest it, then it is entered by the judges curia advisare vult. Shep. Epit. 682.—See title Judgment.

CURIA CURSUS AQUÆ. A court held by the lord of the manor of Gravesend for the better management of barges and boats using the passage on the river Thames from thence to London, and plying at Gravesend bridge, &c. mentioned in stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 26.

CURIA CLAUDENDA. A writ to compel another to make a fence or wall, which he ought to make between his land and the plaintiff's, on his refusing or deferring to do the same. Reg. Orig. 155. This writ doth not lie but against him who hath a close adjoining to the plaintiff's land, who is obliged to inclose it; and it lieth not but for him who hath a freehold, &c. It may be sued before the sheriff in the county-court, or in the common pleas; and the judgment is to recover the inclosure and damages. New. Nat. Br. 282. 283. But if the occupier of a close adjoining to mine, ought to repair the fence between the closes, and do not, and his cattle stray into my close and do damage, I may distrain them damage feasant, or drive them out, and bring an action of trespass. If my cattle stray into his close and do damage, he has not a right to distrain them, nor can he support trespass against me for the same. Should my cattle after straying into his close, stray out of the same into any highway, or other place, and be lost, or trespass in the grounds of a third person, and be by him distrained damage feasant, and kept till replevied, or I have made satisfaction, I may maintain an action against the defaulter, i. e. against the occupier of the adjoining close, for not repairing his fence, whereby such damage hath happened to me. The writ of curia claudenda therefore is grown out of use. See title Trespass.

CURIA DOMINI. The lord's house, hall or court, where all the tenants attend at the time of keeping courts.

CURIA PENTICIARUM. Is a court held by the sheriff of Chester, in a place there called the Pendice, or Pentice: and it is probable its being originally kept under a pent-house, or open shed covered with boards, gave it this denomination.—Blount.

CURNOCK. A measure containing four bushels, or half a quarter. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 12.

CURRICULUS. The year or course of a year. Actum est hoc annorum Dominicæ incarnationis quatuor quinquagenis et quinquies, quinis lustris, et tribus curriculis. This is the year 1028: for four times 50 make 200, and five times 200 make 1000. Then five lustra are twenty-five years, and three Curriculi, three years; making in all the very year. Blount.

CURRIERS. Persons that curry and dress leather. No currier shall use the trade of a butcher, tanner, &c. or shall curry skins insufficiently tanned, or gash any hides of leather, on pain of forfeiting for every hide or skin 6*s.* 8*d.* And person in London putting leather to be curried to any but freemen of the Curriers' Company; and such curriers not currying the leather sufficiently, shall forfeit the ware or the value, &c. stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 22. The clause relating to freemen is repealed; but if any currier do not curry leather sent him, within sixteen days between Michaelmas and Lady-day, and in eight days at other times, on conviction before a justice, he shall forfeit 5*l.* to be levied by distress, &c. yet subject to mitigation. 12 Geo. 2. c. 25. Curriers and such as deal in leather, may cut and sell it in small pieces in their shops to any persons whatsoever. Ibid. See titles Leather, Skins, &c.

CURSING. See Swearing.

CURSITORS, Clerici de Cursu.] Clerks belonging to the Chancery, who make out original writs; and are called Clerks of Course, in their oath appointed, 18 Ed. 3. stat. 5. There are of these clerks twenty-four in number, which make a corporation of themselves: and to each clerk is allotted a division of certain counties, in which they exercise their functions.—2 Inst. 670. See title Process.

CURSONES TERRÆ. Ridges of land.

CURTESY OF ENGLAND, Jus Curialitatis Angliæ.] Is where a man taketh a wife seised in fee-simple, or fee-tail general, or as heiress in special tail, and hath issue by her, male or female, born alive, which by any possibility may inherit, and the wife dies: the husband holds the lands during his life; and is called Tenens per legem Angliæ, or Tenant by the curtesy of England. See title Tenures, III. 9. Though this is called the curtesy of England, it appears to have been the established law of Scotland, where it was called Curialitas. It is likewise used in Ireland, by virtue of an ordinance of H. III. So that probably the word curtesy is in this sense understood rather to signify an attendance upon the lord's courts, than to denote any peculiar favour. See 2 Com. 126.

Four things are requisite to give an estate by the curtesy, viz. Marriage, seisin of the wife, issue, and death of the wife. Co. Lit. 30. If the land descend to the wife after the husband hath issue by her; or if the issue be dead at the time of her death, being born alive; the husband shall be tenant by the curtesy. Also if a child is born alive, it is not material whether it is baptised, or ever heard to cry, to make the husband tenant by the curtesy: for if it is born alive, it is enough.—Dy. 25. 8 Rep. 34.

The words in the general editions of Littleton, 1 Inst. 29. are oyes ou vife, but in Lettou and Michlinia's edition they are neez vif, and are translated by Lord Coke, born alive.—May not the word vife in the first instance have been an error for vise, meaning thereby that the issue must be heard or seen: so as to ascertain its being alive?

But the child must be such as by possibility may inherit; and therefore if land be given to a woman, and the heirs male of her body, and she takes husband and hath issue a daughter, and dies, as this issue cannot possibly inherit, the husband shall not be tenant by the curtesy. Termes de Ley.

If the child is ripped forth of the mother's belly, after her death, though it be alive, it will not cause tenancy by the curtesy; for this ought to begin by the issue, and be consummate by the death of the wife, and the estate of tenant by the curtesy, should avoid the immediate descent. Ibid. A man shall not be tenant by the curtesy of a bare right, title, use, reversion, &c. expectant upon an estate of freehold, unless the particular estate is determined during the coverture; nor of a seisin in law: but if a wife dies before a rent becomes due; or in the case of an advowson, before the church becomes void; the husband shall be tenant by the curtesy, though the wife had only a seisin in law; for in this case no other seisin could be attained. F. N. B. 149. Co. Lit. 29. 30. 40.

Though in strictness of law there cannot be curtesy of Trusts, yet since Lord Coke's time our courts of equity have allowed curtesy, both of trusts and other interests which, though in law mere rights and titles, are deemed estates in equity; and made to conform to many of the rules and consequences incident to estates in law. See in 1 Atk. 603. the case of Cashbourn v. English, in which Hardwicke, C. decreed curtesy of an equity of redemption. See S. C. more fully reported in Vin. tit. Curtesy, (E.) pl. 23. However, a wife may in point of benefit have a trust of inheritance, which may be so declared as to prevent curtesy; as by directing the profits, during the wife's life, to be paid for her separate use; for in such case the intention to exclude the husband from curtesy is manifest, and he cannot have an equitable seisin. 3 Atk. 715. It is also proper to remark that though curtesy out of a trust is allowed, yet dower has been refused; a distinction not easily reconcileable with reason, however settled by the current of authorities. See 1 Inst. 29 a.; n. 6.

As to Curtesy in Titles and Offices of honour, see 1 Inst. 29. b. and Mr. Hargrave's learned notes there, by which it seems that no such curtesy can take place; though the question appears not to be settled, a decision having been repeatedly avoided thereon.

There is no tenancy by the curtesy of copyhold lands, except there be a special custom for it. But in gavelkind lands, a husband may be tenant by the curtesy without having issue. 1 Inst. 30. But it is only of a moiety of the wife's land, and ceases if the husband marries again. Robins. Gavelk. l. 2. c. 1. Where a husband is entitled to this tenancy, if after the wife is an ideot, and her estate in the land found: when she dies, he shall not be tenant by the curtesy, for the King's title by relation prevents it. Plowd. 263. If the wife be seized in fee of lands, and attaint of felony, but have issue by her husband, and she is hanged, &c. it is said the husband shall be a tenant by the curtesy; but yet the land will be forfeited; according to Kitch. 159. 21 Ed. 3. 49.

A woman seised of land had two daughters, and covenanted to stand seised to the use of E. her eldest daughter in tail; on condition that she should pay to her other daughter within a certain time 300*l.* And if E. made default, or died without issue before such payment, then the land to go to the second daughter; the mother dying, E. took a husband, and had issue, and died afterwards without any issue living, before the day of payment: it was here held, that her husband should be tenant by the curtesy. 1 Leon. ca. 233.—See Kitch. 159.

CURTEYN, Curtana.] The name of King Edward the Confessor's sword; which is the first sword carried before the Kings of England at their coronation: and it is said the point of it is broken as an emblem of mercy. Mat. Paris in Hen. III.

CURTILAGE, Curtilagium, from the Fr. Cour, Court, and Sax. Leagh, locus.] A court-yard, back-side, or piece of ground lying near and belonging to a dwelling-house. See stats. 4 Ed. 1. c. 1. 35 H. 8. c. 4. 39 Eliz. c. 10. 6 Rep. 64. and Spelm. And though it is said to be a yard or garden, belonging to a house; it seems to differ from a garden, for we find, cum quodam gardino et curtilagio. 15 Ed. 1. n. 34.

CURTILES TERRÆ. Court Lands. It is recorded that among our Saxon ancestors, the Thanes or nobles who possessed Bockland, or hereditary lands, divided them into Inland and Outland: the Inland was that which lay most convenient for the lord's mansion house; and therefore the lords kept that part in their own hands, for the support of their families, and for hospitality: afterwards the Normans called these lands Terras Dominicales, the demains, demesnes, or lord's lands: the Germans termed them Terras Indominicatas, lands in the lord's own use: and the Feudists, Terras Curtiles, lands appropriate to the court or house of the lord. Spelm. of Feuds, c. 5.

CUSTANTIA, Custagium:] Costs.

CUSTODE ADMITTENDO, CUSTODE AMOVENDO. Writs for the admitting or removing of Guardians. Reg. Orig.

CUSTODES LIBERTATIS ANGLIÆ AUTHORITATE PARLIAMENTI. The style in which writs and all judicial process were made out during the grand rebellion, from the murder of King Charles I. till the Usurper Oliver was declared Protector, &c. mentioned and declared traiterous, by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 3.

CUSTOM, consuetudo.] Is a law not written, established by long usage, and the consent of our ancestors. No law can oblige a free people without their consent: so wherever they consent and use a certain rule or method as a law, such rule, &c. gives it the power of a law; and if it is universal, then it is common law: if particular to this or that place, then it is custom. 3 Salk. 112. As to the rise of customs, when a reasonable act once done, was found to be good and beneficial to the people, then they did use it often, and by frequent repetition of the act, it became a custom; which being continued without interruption time out of mind, it obtained the force of a law, to bind the particular places, persons, and things concerned therein. Thus a custom had beginning and grew to perfection.

To make a particular custom good, the following are necessary requisites.

1. Antiquity.—That it have been used so long, that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. So that, if any one can show the beginning of it, within legal memory, that is within any time since the first year of Richard I. it is no good custom. For which reason no custom can prevail against an express act of parliament, since the statute itself is a proof of a time when such a custom did not exist. Co. Lit. 113. Therefore a custom that every pound of butter sold in a certain market, should weigh eighteen ounces, is bad; being directly contrary to stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 26. which directs it to contain 16 oz. 3 Term Rep. 271.

2. It must have been continued. Any interruption would cause a temporary ceasing: the revival gives it a new beginning, which will be within time of memory, and thereupon the custom will be void. But this must be understood with regard to an interruption of the right; for an interruption of the possession only, for ten or twenty years will not destroy the custom. Co. Lit. 114. As if the inhabitants of a parish have a customary right of watering their cattle at a certain pool, the custom is not destroyed, though they do not use it for ten years; it only becomes more difficult to prove: but if the right be any how discontinued for a day, the custom is quite at an end.

3. It must have been peaceable, and acquiesced in; not subject to contention and dispute. Co. Lit. 114. For as customs owe their original to common consent, their being immemorially disputed, either at law or otherwise, is a proof that such consent was wanting.

4. Customs must be reasonable, (Litt. § 212.;) or rather, taken negatively, they must not be unreasonable. Which is not always, as Sir Edward Coke says, (1 Inst. 62.) to be understood of every unlearned man's reason, but of artificial and legal reason, warranted by authority of law. Upon which account a custom may be good, though the particular reason of it cannot be assigned; for it sufficeth, if no legal reason can be assigned against it. Thus a custom in a parish, that no man shall put his beasts into the common till the third of October, would be good; and yet it would be hard to show the reason why that day in particular is fixed upon, rather than the day before or after. But a custom, that no cattle shall be put in till the lord of the manor has first put in his, is unreasonable, and therefore bad; for peradventure the lord will never put in his; and then the tenants will lose all their profits. Co. Copyh. § 33.

5. Customs ought to be certain. A custom, that lands shall descend to the most worthy of the owner's blood, is void: for how shall this worth be determined? But a custom to descend to the next male of the blood, exclusive of females, is certain, and therefore good. 1 Rol. Abr. 565. A custom to pay two-pence an acre in lieu of tithes, is good; but to pay sometimes two-pence, and sometimes three-pence, as the occupier of the land pleases, is bad, for its uncertainty. Yet a custom to pay a year's improved value for a fine on a copyhold estate, is good: though the value is a thing uncertain; for the value may be ascertained at any time; and the maxim of law is, id certum est, quod certum reddi potest.—A custom that poor house-keepers shall carry away rotten wood in a chase is bad; being too vague. 2 Term Rep. 758.

6. Customs, though established by consent, must be (when established) compulsory; and not left to the option of every man, whether he will use them or no. Therefore a custom that all the inhabitants shall be rated toward the maintenance of a bridge, will be good; but a custom that every man is to contribute thereto at his own pleasure is idle and absurd; and indeed no custom at all.

7. Lastly, customs must be consistent with each other: one custom cannot be set up in opposition to another. For if both are really customs, then both are of equal antiquity, and both established by mutual consent: which to say of contradictory customs is absurd. Therefore if one man prescribes that by custom he has a right to have windows looking into another's garden, the other cannot claim a right by custom to stop up or obstruct those windows: for these two contradictory customs cannot both be good, nor both stand together. He ought rather to deny the existence of the former custom. 9 Rep. 58. See Doug. 190.

As to the Allowance of special customs. Customs in derogation of the Common Law must be construed strictly. This rule is founded upon the consideration that a variety of customs in different places upon the same subject is a general inconvenience: the courts therefore will not admit such customs, but upon the clearest proofs. 1 Term. Rep. 466. Thus by the custom of gavelkind, an infant of fifteen years may by one species of conveyance (called a deed of feoffment) convey away his lands in fee-simple. Yet this custom does not empower him to use any other conveyance, or even to lease them for seven years, for the custom must be strictly pursued. Co. Cop. § 33.—And moreover all special customs must yield to the King's prerogative. Therefore if the King purchases land of the nature of gavelkind, where all the sons inherit equally; yet on the King's demise, his eldest son shall succeed to those lands alone. Co. Lit. 15.

A custom contrary to the public good, or injurious to a multitude, and beneficial only to some particular persons, is repugnant to the law of reason, and consequently void. 2 Danv. 424. 427. Customs ought to be beneficial to all, but may be good where against the interest of a particular person if for the public good. Dyer, 60. A custom is not unreasonable for being injurious to private persons or interests, so as it tends to the general advantage of the people. 3 Salk. 112.

A custom alleged by churchwardens of a parish to set up monuments, &c. in a church, without the consent either of the rector or ordinary, declared to be illegal. Beckwith v. Harding, T. R. K. B. E. 58 Geo. 3.

A custom may be good in some cases where a prescription is not: but customs that are good for the substance and matter of them, may yet be bad for the manner: if they are uncertain, or mixed with any other custom that is unreasonable, &c. 2 Bulst. 166. 2 Brownl. 198.

Custom is, and must always be alleged to be in many persons; and so it may be claimed by copyholders, or the inhabitants of a place, and when it is claimed, it must be as within such a county, hundred, city, borough, manor, parish, hamlet, &c. Co. Lit. 110. 113. 4 Rep. 31. A good custom or prescription hath the force of a grant; as where one and his ancestors have had a rent time out of mind, and used to distrain, &c. But a custom that begins by extortion of lords of manors, is judged wanting a lawful commencement, and therefore void: and where custom is amongst many, and they are all dead but one, the custom is gone. Plowd. 322. Dyer, 199.

General Customs which are used throughout England, and are the Common Law, are to be determined by the judges: but particular customs, such as are used in some certain town, borough, city, &c. shall be determined by a jury. Doct. & Stud. c. 7. 10. 1 Inst. 110. Consuetudo pro lege servatur, &c.: saith Bracton, lib. 3. c. 3. And custom is said to be altera lex: but the judges of the court of B. R. or C. B. can over-rule a custom though it be one of the customs of London, if it be against natural reason, &c. 1 Mod. 212.

The law takes particular notice of the custom of Gavelkind and Borough English; (Co. Litt. 175.) and there is no occasion to prove that such customs actually exist, but only that the lands in question are subject thereto. All other private customs must be particularly pleaded; (Lit. § 265.) and as well the existence of the custom must be shewn, as that the thing in dispute is within the custom alledged. The trial in both cases is by a jury of twelve men, and not by the judges, except the same particular custom has been before tried, determined and recorded in the same court. Doct. & Stud. 1. 10. 1 Comm. 76.

See further title Prescription, and as to particular customs relative to Inheritance, Dower, &c. see titles Copyhold, Gavelkind, &c.

The Customs of London differ from all others in point of trial, for if the existence of the custom be brought in question, it shall not be tried by a jury, but by certificate of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, by the mouth of the Recorder. Cro. Car. 516. Unless it be such a custom as the Corporation itself is interested in, as a right of taking toll, &c. for then the law permits them not to certify in their own behalf. Hob. 85.—And when a custom has once been certified by the Recorder, the judges will take notice of it, and will not suffer it to be certified a second time. Dougl. 365.—As to the form in which the recorder shall certify a custom, see 1 Burr. 248. and title Certificate.

These Customs of London relate to divers particulars, with regard to trade, apprentices, widows, orphans, &c. As to the custom relative to the distribution of a freeman's estate, and which now in consequence of stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 18. § 17. extends only to cases of intestacy, or express agreements made in consideration of marriage, see title Executor, V. 9. —As to the custom of Foreign Attachment, see title Attachment Foreign.—As to the custom of a feme covert being a sole trader, see titles Baron & Feme, Bankrupt.—And further in more particular detail, as to the general and local customs of London, see this Dict. under title London.

It is said, 1 Ro. Rep. 106. that the courts at Westminster of course take notice of the customs of London, but not of any other place.—But this is only where they have been certified. See ante title Custom.

The customs of London are confirmed by act of parliament. 8 Rep. 126. Cro. Car. 347.

The Custom of Merchants, Lex Mercatoria.] A particular system of customs used only among one set of the King's subjects; which, however different from the rules of the Common Law, is yet ingrafted into it, and made part of it: being allowed for the benefit of trade, to be of the utmost validity in all commercial transactions; for it is a maxim in law that cuilibet in arte suâ credendum est. 1 Comm. 75.

It seems that this Custom of Merchants is only so far considered as law, that it affords the rule of construction in cases of contracts, agreements, &c. and other transactions in Trade and Commerce. Mr. Christian, in his note on the above passage of the Commentaries, truly remarks, that the lex mercatoria, like the lex et consuetudo parliamenti, describes only a great division of the law of England. The laws relating to bills of exchange, insurance, and all mercantile contracts, are as much the general law of the land, as the laws relating to marriage or murder.—And the opinion of Mr. Justice Foster is, that the Custom of Merchants is the general law of the kingdom, and therefore ought not to be left to a jury after it has been settled by judicial determination. 2 Burr. 1226.

The Custom of Merchants is likewise understood to comprehend the Usage of Merchants, which generally governs mercantile questions, where no positive law points out the rule for decision: and therefore the Courts at Westminster have frequently granted a new trial where the verdict of a jury has militated against the custom or usage of merchants. Rex v. Miller, 6 Term Rep 268.

See further more particularly as to the effect and influence of this Custom of Merchants, under Bankrupt, Bill of Exchange, Factor, Insurance, Partnership, and other titles in this Dictionary.

CUSTOMS ON MERCHANDISE. These are enumerated, (1 Comm. 313.) among the perpetual taxes; and are there explained to be the Duties, Toll, Tribute or Tariff payable upon merchandise exported and imported.

The considerations, says the Commentator, upon which this revenue, or the more antient part of it which arose only from exports, was invested in the King, were said to be two. —1. Because he gave the subject leave to depart the kingdom, and to carry his goods along with him.—2. Because the King was bound of common right to maintain and keep up the ports and havens, and to protect the merchants from pirates. Dyer, 165.—Some have imagined they were called with us customs, because they were the inheritance of the King, by immemorial usage, and the Common Law, and not granted him by any stat. Dy. 43. pl. 24.—But Sir Edward Coke, 2 Inst. 58, 9. hath clearly shewn that the King's first claim to them was, by grant of parliament. 3 E. 1. And indeed this is in express words confessed by stat. 25 E. 1. c. 7. wherein the King promises to take no customs from merchants without the common assent of the realm, "saving, to us and our heirs, the customs on wool, skins and leather formerly granted to us by the commonalty aforesaid." These were formerly called the hereditary Customs of the Crown, and were due on the exportation only of the said three commodities, and of none other: which were styled the staple commodities of the kingdom, because they were obliged to be brought to those ports where the King's staple was established, in order to be there first rated and then exported. Danv. 9. They were denominated in the barbarous Latin of our ancient records, custuma; not consuetudines, which is the language of our law, whenever it means merely usages. The duties on wool, sheep skins, or wool-fells, and leather, exported, were called custuma antiqua sive magna: and were payable by every merchant, as well native as stranger; with this difference, that merchant-strangers paid an additional toll viz. half as much again as was paid by natives. The custuma parva et nova were an impost of 3*d.* in the pound, due from merchant-strangers only, for all commodities as well imported as exported; which was usually called the aliens' duty, and was granted in 31 Edw. 1. 4 Inst. 29. But these ancient hereditary customs, especially those on wool and wool-fells, came to be of little account, when the nation became sensible of the advantages of a home manufacture, and prohibited the exportation of wool by st. 11 Ed. III. c. 1.

There is also another very ancient hereditary duty belonging to the crown, called the prisage or butlerage of wines; which is considerably older than the customs, being taken notice of in the great roll of the Exchequer, 8 Ric. 1. still extant. Madox, Hist. Exch. 526. 532. Prisage was a right of taking two tons of wine from every ship (English or Foreign) importing into England twenty tons or more; one before, and one behind, the mast: which by charter of Edw. 1. was exchanged into a duty of 2*s.* for every ton imported by merchant strangers, and called butlerage, because paid to the King's butler. Dav. 8. 2 Bulst. 254. Stat. Esta. 16 Edw. 2. Com. Journ. 27 Apr. 1689.

Other Customs payable upon exports and imports were distinguished into subsidies, tonnage, poundage, and other imposts. Subsidies were such as were imposed by parliament upon any of the staple commodities before mentioned over and above the custuma antiqua et magna: tonnage was a duty upon all wines imported, over and above the prisage and butlerage aforesaid: poundage was a duty imposed ad valorem, at the rate of 12*d.* in the pound on all other merchandise whatsoever, and the other imposts were such as were occasionally laid on by parliament, as circumstances and times required. Danv. 11. 12.

These distinctions are now in a manner forgotten, except by the officers immediately concerned in this department; their produce being in effect all blended together, under one denomination of THE CUSTOMS.

By these we understand at present a duty or subsidy paid by the merchant, at the quay, upon imported as well as exported, commodities, by authority of parliament; unless where, for particular national reasons, certain rewards, bounties or drawbacks, are allowed for particular exports or imports. Those of tonnage and poundage, in particular, were at first granted, as the old statutes (and particularly 1 Eliz. 19.) express it, for the defence of the realm, and the keeping and safeguard of the seas, and for the intercourse of merchandise safely to come into and pass out of the same. They were at first usually granted only for a stated term of years, as, for two years in 5 Ric. II. Dav. 12. but in Henry the Sixth's time, they were granted him for life by a statute in the thirty-first year of his reign; and again to Edward IV. for the term of his life also: since which time they were regularly granted to all his successors for life, sometimes at the first, sometimes at other subsequent parliaments, till the reign of Charles the First.

Upon the Restoration, this duty was granted in England to King Charles the Second for life, and so it was to his two immediate successors; and by three several stats. 9 Ann. c. 6. 1 Geo. 1. c. 12. 3 Geo. 1. c. 7. it was made perpetual and mortgaged for the debt of the Public. [As to the customs in Ireland, see Irish act. 14, 15 Car. 2. c. 9.] The customs thus imposed by parliament were, till the stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13. contained in two books of rates, set forth by parliamentary authority; stat. 12 Car. II. c. 4. 11 Geo. 1. c. 7. Aliens used to pay a larger proportion than natural subjects, generally called the aliens' duty; now repealed by stat. 24 Geo. III. sess. 2. c. 16. except as to scavage duties granted to the city of London.

By stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13. called the Consolidation Act, all the former statutes imposing duties of customs and excise were repealed with regard to the quantum of the duty; and the two books of rates above-mentioned were declared to be of no avail for the future; but all the former duties were consolidated, and were ordered to be paid according to a new book of rates annexed to that statute. The like plan has been followed in subsequent acts. See 43 Geo. 3. c. 68. 49 Geo. 3. c. 98. the last general act of that nature; and as to Ireland, 54 Geo. 3. c. 129; and as to customs on East India goods, 54 Geo. 3. c. 36. 103. 55 Geo. 3. c. 10.; and as to the Isle of Man, 50 Geo. 3. c. 42. 51 Geo. 3. c. 52. [the acts in force while this was passing through the press. Jan. 1819.]

Bullion, Wool, and some few other commodities, may be imported duty-free. All the articles enumerated in the tables or book of rates pay upon importation or exportation, the sum therein specified, according to their weight, number or measure. And all other goods and merchandise, not being particularly enumerated or described, and permitted to be imported and used in Great Britain, shall pay upon importation a certain duty ad valorem, or for every 100*l.* of the value thereof; but subject to a drawback upon exportation. Very few commodities pay a duty upon exportation; but where that duty is not specified in the tables, and the exportation is not prohibited, all articles may be exported without payment of duty, provided they are regularly entered and shipped; but on failure thereof, they are subject to a duty ad valorem. And to prevent frauds, in the representation of the value, a very simple and equitable regulation is prescribed, viz. the proprietor shall himself declare the value, and if this should appear not to be a fair and true estimate, the goods may be seized by the proper officer; and four of the commissioners of the customs may direct that the owner shall be paid the price, which he himself fixed upon them, with an advance of 10*l. per cent.* besides all the duty which he may have paid; and they may then order the goods to be publickly sold, and if they raise any sum beyond what was paid to the owner, and the subsequent expences, one half of the overplus shall be paid to the officer who made the seizure, and the other half to the publick revenue.

A very great number of Acts of Parliament have been passed to prevent frauds in this branch of the revenue, as well as in the Excise; and it is more to be wished than hoped, that the measure, pursued respecting the quantum of the duties, by the Consolidation Act, could be followed by a general act restraining every fraud, and containing every regulation, with a precise statement of the punishment for each offence. But while the dishonest are ingenious to find out means of evading the most explicit laws, the honest part of the community must forgive the length and intricacy of statutes which ultimately secure their liberty and property.

The following are short extracts of such statutes as seem most material to the present purpose; besides those already mentioned.

By stat. 14 R. 2. c. 10. no Customer or Comptroller of the customs, shall have any ships of his own, or meddle with the freight of ships. And by stat. 20 H. 6. c. 5. no searcher, surveyor, &c. or their clerks, deputies, or servants, may have any such ships of their own; nor shall use merchandise, keep a wharf, inn or tavern, or be factor, attorney, &c. to a merchant, under the penalty of 40*l.*—By stat. 3 H. 6. c. 3. customers, collectors, or comptrollers, shall not conceal customs duly entered and paid, on pain to forfeit the treble value of merchandise so customed, and to make fine and ransom to the king. By stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. § 19. If any persons employed about the customs and subsidies take a bribe, or connive at any false entry, they shall forfeit 100*l.* and be incapable of any employment under the king; and the person giving the bribe shall forfeit 50*l.*—By stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 11. § 24. &c. if an officer of the revenue shall make any collusive seizure of foreign goods, to the intent the same may escape payment of the duties, he is to forfeit 500*l.* and be incapable of serving his Majesty: and the importer and owner shall forfeit treble the value of the goods so collusively seized, &c.—By stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 28. § 7. officers of the customs, &c. are not to trade in brandy, coffee, &c. or any exciseable liquor, on pain of 50*l.* and forfeiture of offices.

Officers of the customs may search ships, 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. § 4. Having writ of assistance, may search houses, § 4. The penalty of abusing officers, § 6. Keepers of wharfs, quays, &c. landing or shipping goods, without the presence of some officer of the customs, shall forfeit 100*l.*

By stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 21. where officers of the Customs are hindered in the execution of their duty by persons armed to the number of eight, the offenders are to be transported for seven years.

By stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. 18. if any goods are put into any vessel to be carried beyond sea: or be brought from beyond sea, and unshipped to be landed, the duties not being paid nor agreed for at the Custom house; the same shall be forfeited, one moiety to the king, the other to the seizer, &c. And by subsequent statutes, foreign goods taken in at sea, by any coasting vessel, &c. shall be forfeited, and treble value.

By stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 35. where three persons are assembled and armed with fire arms, &c. to be assisting in the running of goods, they shall be guilty of felony and transported, and 50*l.* be paid for apprehending such offenders: also the like reward to any of them for discovering others. All persons two or more in company, found passing within five miles from the sea-coasts, with any horses, carts, &c. wherein are put above six pounds of tea, or five gallons of brandy, or other foreign goods of 30*l.* value, landed without entry, and not having permits, and who shall carry offensive weapons, &c. or assault any of the officers of the Customs, shall be adjudged runners of goods, and be transported as felons, and all the goods to be seized and forfeited: and suspected persons lurking near the coasts, not giving a good account of themselves, may be sent by a justice to the house of correction for a month; and informers to have 20*s.* for every offender so taken.

If any person offers any tea, brandy, &c. to sale, without a permit, the persons to whom offered may seize and carry it to the next warehouse belonging to the Customs or Excise; and the seizers shall have a third part, &c. And watermen, carmen, porters, &c. in whose custody run goods are found, shall forfeit treble value, or be commited for three months.

Ships and vessels from foreign parts, having on board tea, or brandy, rum, &c. in casks under sixty gallons, (except for the use of seamen) found at anchor or hovering near any port, or within two leagues [increased to eight leagues by subsequent acts] of the shore, and not proceeding in their voyages, unless in cases of unavoidable necessity, all such tea, &c. shall be forfeited.

Persons offering any bribe to officers of the Customs, to connive at the running of goods to forfeit 50*l.* and obstructing such officer in entering or searching ships, incurs a forfeiture of 100*l.* And if an officer be wounded or beaten on board a ship, the offenders to be transported, &c.

By stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 34. (made perpetual by 43 Geo. 3. c. 157.) if any persons, to the number of three, or more, armed with offensive weapons, shall be assembled in order to be aiding in the illegal exportation of goods prohibited to be exported, or the running uncustomed goods, or the illegal relanding any goods, or rescuing the same, after seizure, from any officer, or from the place where they shall be lodged, or in the rescuing any person apprehended for any offence made felony by any act relating to the Customs or Excise, or preventing the apprehending any person guilty of any such offence; or in case any persons to the number of three, or more, so armed, shall be so assisting, or if any person shall have his face blacked, or wear any mask, or other disguise, when passing with such goods, or shall forcibly hinder, obstruct, assault, oppose, or resist any officer of his Majesty's revenue, in seizing such goods, or shall maim, or dangerously wound any such officer in his attempting to go on board any vessel, or shoot at or dangerously wound any such person when on board and in the execution of his office, every such person shall be guilty of felony, and suffer death. § 1.

On information on oath of any person's being guilty of any of the above offences, the justice may certify the information to one of the Secretaries of State, who is to lay it before his Majesty; whereupon his Majesty may make an order, requiring the offender to surrender himself in forty days after publication thereof in the Gazette: and in default thereof, the order being published twice in the Gazette, and proclaimed in two markets near where the offence was committed, and a copy thereof affixed in some public place there, the offender shall be attainted of felony, and suffer death. § 2. Any person harbouring or aiding any such offender after the time for his surrender expired, knowing him to have been so required to surrender, being prosecuted within a year, shall be transported for seven years. § 3. Offences made felony by this act, may be sued in any county. § 5.

If any officer, &c. in the seizing, &c. such goods, or in the endeavouring to apprehend any such offender, shall be beat, wounded, maimed, or killed, or the goods be rescued, the inhabitants of the rape, lath or hundred, unless the offender be convicted within six months, shall forfeit 100*l.* to the executors of any officer killed; and pay damages to any officer beat, &c. not exceeding 40*l.* and for any goods rescued, not exceeding 200*l.* § 6. A reward of 500*l.* for apprehending any offender; a person wounded in apprehending an offender to have 50*l.* extraordinary, and the executors of a person killed, to have 100*l.* § 10.

By stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. ships and vessels outward-bound are not to take in any goods, till the vessel, &c. is entered with the collectors of the Customs; and before departure, the contents of the lading are to be brought in under the hands of the laders, &c. Also when ships arrive from beyond sea, the masters are to make a true entry upon oath, of the lading, goods, ship, &c. under the penalty of 100*l.* And if any concealed goods are found after clearing for which the duties have not been paid, the master of the vessel shall be subject to the like penalty.

By 46 G. 3. c. 82. (and see 48 G. 3. c. 9.) for the Port of London (extended to the whole kingdom, by 47 G. 3. st. 1. c. 51.) the fees of officers of the Customs in Great Britain are abolished, and their time of attendance, &c. regulated.—By 46 G. 3. c. 150. some salutary checks are imposed on the office of Receiver General of the Customs in Great Britain, so as to prevent any danger of the misapplication of the immense revenues which pass through his hands. See 47 G. 3. stat. 1. c. 12. for abolishing and regulating certain offices in the Customs of Ireland: and 48 Geo. 3. c. 56. abolishing the fees of officers of the Customs there, and regulating their hours of attendance.

By 49 G. 3. c. 65. jurisdiction is given to two justices of the peace for the recovery of penalties not exceeding 50*l.* against the laws of customs in Great Britain.

By 51 Geo. 3. c. 71. several offices in the Customs of England were abolished or regulated.

As to the superannuation fund, see stat. 51 G. 3. c. 55. for England, and 52 G. 3. c. 60. for Scotland.

By 54 G. 3. c. 171. the Treasury are empowered to restore seizures, or remit or mitigate fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred by laws relating to the Customs [Excise or Navigation] Laws of Great Britain.

By 56 G. 3. c. 93. officers of Customs at creeks and harbours in Great Britain are empowered to take entries of ships and goods to and from Ireland. See further titles Smuggling, Navigation.

CUSTOMS AND SERVICES, belonging to the tenure of lands, are such as tenants owe unto their lords; which being with-held from the lord, he may have a writ of customs and services. See titles Consuetudinibus & Servitiis.

Customary Freehold. See title Copyhold.

CUSTOS BREVIUM. A principal clerk belonging to the Court of Common Pleas, whose office is to receive and keep all the writs returnable in that court, and put them upon files, every return by itself; and to receive of the prothonotaries all the records of nisi prius, called the Posteas; for they are first brought in by the clerk of assise of every circuit to the prothonotary, who enters the issue in the causes, to enter the judgment: and four days after the return thereof, the prothonotary enters the verdict and judgment thereupon, into the rolls of the court; whereupon he afterwards delivers them over to the custos brevium who binds them into a bundle. He makes entry likewise of all writs of covenant, and the concord upon every fine; and maketh forth exemplifications, and copies of all writs and records in his office, and of all fines levied.

The Fines after they are engrossed are divided between the custos brevium and the chirographer; the chirographer always keeps the writ of covenant and the note, and the custos brevium the concord and the foot of the fine; upon which foot of the fine the chirographer causeth the proclamations to be indorsed, when they are proclaimed. This officer is made by the king's letters patent; and in the court of King's Bench, there is also a custos brevium et rotulorum, who fileth such writs as are in that court filed, and all warrants of attorney, &c. and whose business it is to make out the records of nisi prius, &c. See titles Chirographer, Common Pleas.

Custos Placitorum Coronæ. An officer which seems to be the same with him we now call custos rotulorum. Bract. lib. 2. c. 5.

Custos Rotulorum, Keeper of the rolls or records of the county. The officer who hath the custody of the rolls or records of the sessions of the peace, and also of the commission of the peace itself. He is always a justice of the peace of the quorum in the county where appointed, and usually some person of quality; but he is rather termed an officer or minister than a judge. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 4. cap. 3. p. 373. By stat. 37 H. 8. c. 1. (altered by stat. 3 & 4 E. 6. c. 1. but restored by 1 W. & M. c. 21.) the Custos rotulorum in every county is appointed by a writing signed by the King's hand, which shall be a warrant to the Lord Chancellor to put him in commission: and he may execute his office by deputy: and hath power to appoint the clerk of the peace, &c. See title Clerk of the Peace. The Custos rotulorum, two justices of the peace, and the clerk of the peace, are to inroll deeds of bargain and sale of lands of papists, &c. by 3 Geo. 1. cap. 18. See title Papists.

Custos of the Spiritualities. } See Guardian.
Custos of the Temporalities. }

CUT-PURSE. If any person clam et secretè, and without the knowledge of another, cut his purse or pick his pocket, and steal from thence to the value of 12*d.* it is felony without benefit of clergy. Stat. 8 Eliz. c. 4. See title Felony.

CUTTS. Flat-bottomed boats, built low and commodiously, used in the channel for transporting of horses. Stow. Annal. p. 412.

CUTTER of the Tallies. An officer in the Exchequer, to whom it belonged to provide wood for the tallies, and to cut the sum paid upon them, &c. See title Exchequer.

CUVE, Fr.] A keeve, from whence comes keever, a tub or vat for brewing. Cowel.

CYCLAS. A long garment close upwards, and open or large below. See Matt. Paris. Anno 1236.

CYNEBOTE. A mulct anciently paid, by one who killed another, to the kindred of the deceased. Spelman. Blount.

CYRICBRYCE, Sax.] Irruptio in ecclesiam. Leg. Eccl. Canuti Regis. See title Sacrilege.

D.

D A

DA, Fr.] A word affirmative for yes. Law. French Dict.

DAG. A gun; un dagg, a small gun, or hand gun. See Haque.

DAGENHAM-BREACH. A duty is granted on coals imported into London, to repair the walls and banks thereof; to be collected and disposed by trustees, &c. Stats. 12 An. stat. 2. c. 17. 7 Geo. 1. c. 20. sec. 32.

DAGUS OR DAIS. The chief or upper table in a monastery; from a cloth called dais, with which the tables of kings were covered.

DAKIR. See Dicker.

DALMATICA. A garment with large open sleeves, at first worn only by bishops, though since made a distinction of degrees: so called, because it came originally from Dalmatia.

DALUS, DAILUS, DAILIA. A certain measure of land.—Et totam Dailiam marisci tam de rossa, quam de prato, &c. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. p. 211. In some places it is taken for a ditch or vale, whence comes dale. The dali prati have been esteemed such narrow slips of pasture as are left between the ploughed furrows in arable land: which in some parts of England are called doles: the present Welch use this word for low meadow by the river side. And this seems to be the original name and nature of Deal, in Kent, where Cæsar landed, and fought the Britons: Cæsar ad Dolam bellum pugnavit.—Cowel.

DAMAGES.

DAMNA.] This term signifies generally any hurt or hindrance that a man receives in his estate: but particularly a part of what the jurors are to enquire of and bring in, when an action passeth for the plaintiff: for after verdict given on the principal cause, the jury are asked touching costs and damages, which comprehend a recompense for what the plaintiff hath suffered, by means of the wrong done him by the defendant. Co. Lit. 257. This word damage is taken in law, in two several significations, the one properly and generally, the other relatively; properly, as it is in cases wherein damages are founded upon the statutes where costs are included within the word damages, and taken as damages.

But when the plaintiff declares for the wrong done to him, to the damage of such a sum, this is to be taken relatively for the wrong which passed before the writ brought, and is assessed by reason of the foregoing trespass, and cannot extend to costs of suit, which are future, and of another nature. 10 Rep. 116. 117. See title Costs.

I. In what Actions Damages may be recovered, and against whom.

II. How Damages are to be assessed, increased and mitigated.

I. In personal and mixed actions, damages were recovered at Common Law: but in real actions, no damages were recoverable, because none were demanded by the count or writ. Whereas in actions personal, the plaintiff counts ad dampnum for the injury; and if he recovers no damages, he hath no costs. 10 Rep. 111. 117. In a personal action, the plaintiff shall recover damages only for the tort done before the action brought; and therein he counts for his damages: in a real action, he recovers his damages pending the writ; and therefore never counts for his damages. 10 Rep. 117. By the stat. of Glous. 6 Ed. 1. cap. 1. damages are given in real actions, assises of novel disseisin, mort d'ancestor, &c. and shall be recovered against the alienee of a disseisor, as well as against the disseisor himself; and the demandant shall have of the tenant likewise costs of suit; but not expences for trouble and loss of time. 2 Inst. 288. See further the said stat. 6 Ed. 1. c. 1. Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 10. 2 Inst. 284. 286. 2 Danv. Abr. 448.

No damages could be recovered at the Common Law, but against the wrong doer, and by him to whom the wrong was done. 2 Inst. 284.

Any person, who, in the exercise of a public function void of emolument, (which he is compellable to execute, acting without notice, and according to his best skill and diligence, with the best information he can obtain,) does an act which occasions consequential damages, is not liable to an action for such damages. Therefore where the Trustees of a turnpike road, empowered to make watercourses to prevent the road from being overflowed, directed their surveyor to present a plan for carrying off the water of an adjacent brook, and on his recommendation ordered him to make a wide channel from the road, gradually narrowing, and conducting the water into the ordinary sluice ditches of the plaintiff's land, which were insufficient to discharge it, and his land was consequently overflowed, it was held by the court of C. P. that no action lay against the chairman of the trustees who signed the order for cutting the trench. Sutton v. Clarke, 6 W. P. Taunton, 29.

Damages shall be recovered in writ of admeasurement of dower; but not in a writ of admeasurement of pasture. 2 Danv. 457. In writ of partition, by one co-parcener against another, it is said no damages shall be had. In a formedon, no damages shall be recovered: so in a nuper obiit, writ of account, writ of execution, &c. Ibid. 455. 456. Damages and costs are due in a writ of annuity; and if the jury find for the plaintiff, and do not assess damages, it will be error; though he may after verdict release the damages, and take judgment for the annuity. 11 Rep. 56. Dyer, 320. 369.

In battery, imprisonment, and taking of goods, against three persons; one commits the battery, another the imprisonment, the third takes the goods, all at one time, all are guilty of the whole, and to be charged in damages. 3 Lev. 324. See 10 Rep. 66. 69.

II. In real actions, damages are assessed by writ of inquiry; when the jury find the issue for the plaintiff, they are to assess the damages. And in actions upon the case, &c. where damages are uncertain, it is left to the jury to inquire of them: In debt, which appears certain to the court what it is, the damages assessed by the jury are small, in fact only nominal, as one shilling; and the master in B. R. taxeth the costs; which are added thereto, and called damages. 1 Lill. 390. When judgment is given by default, in action of debt, the court is to assess the damages, and not the jury; so if judgment by nil dicit, in action of debt.

Where excessive damages have been given, or there hath been any misdemeanour in executing a writ of inquiry; the court hath sometimes relieved the defendant by a new writ of inquiry. 2 Danv. 464. And where damages are excessive, on motion, the defendant may have a new trial. Style, 465. 1 Nels. Abr. 587. In trespass against two, one comes and pleads Not guilty, and it is found against him; and afterwards another comes and pleads the like, and is found Guilty by another inquest; in this case, the first jury shall assess all the damages for the trespass. New. Nat. Br. 256. Trespass against divers defendants, they plead Not guilty severally, and the jury finds them all Guilty: the jury must assess the damages jointly, for it is but one entire trespass, and made joint by the declaration. 11 Rep. 5.

If action is brought for two several causes of action, one of which is not actionable, if intire damages are given, the verdict is void: contra if the damages are severed. And where damages are entirely assessed, and they ought not to be given for some part; no judgment can be given on the verdict. 10 Rep. 130. Where damages are awarded for delay of execution, and being kept out of the money, they are usually assessed by allowing the party what lawful interest he might have. 1 Salk. 208.

For money lent, interest shall be given from the time the money was payable, to the time of liquidating the debt, by the court's giving judgment. 2 Burr. 1081, 6.—So on a bill of exchange, it is usual to calculate the interest up to the time when judgment may be entered up. And it is now settled as a general rule, that where a new action may be brought, and a new satisfaction obtained on that, for duties or demands arisen since the commencement of the depending suit, these shall not be included in the judgment on the former action. But where the interest is an accessory to the principal, and the plaintiff cannot bring a new action for interest grown due between the commencement of the action and judgment, it shall be included. Id. 1086, 7.—As to interest from the time of the original judgment to the affirmance in case of a writ of error, see Doug. 752 in n. 2 Term. Rep. 57. 59. 78. and the stat. 3 H. 7. c. 10.—A jury may, and now frequently do, give interest on book-debts in the name of damages. See Doug. 676.

In what case the plaintiff shall have no more costs than damages, unless the jury finds more than 40*s.* See title Costs.

In action upon the case the jury may find less damages than the plaintiff lays in his declaration: but ought not to find more, though costs may be increased beyond the sum mentioned in the declaration for damages. The plaintiff may release part of the damages, upon entering up his judgment. 10 Rep. 115. If he does not, but takes judgment for damages (exclusive of costs) to a larger amount than laid in the declaration, it is error, and not within any of the statutes of amendment or jeofails. Sandiford v. Been. In debt against a sheriff or gaoler for an escape, the jury cannot give a less sum than the creditor would have recovered against the prisoner, viz. the sum indorsed on the writ and the legal fees of execution. 2 Term. Rep. 126.

In actions upon any bond, &c. for non-performance of covenants, the jury shall assess damages for those the plaintiff proves broken: and the plaintiff may assign as many breaches as he thinks fit. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. See titles Bond, Covenants. In debt for a penalty in articles the jury ought to assess damages on the breach assigned, under this statute, and shall not find the debt. 2 Wils. 377.

Damages are not to be given for that which is not contained in the plaintiff's declaration; and only for what is materially alleged. 1 Lill. 381.

When damages double or treble are given in an action newly created by statute; if no damages were formerly recoverable, there the demandant or plaintiff shall recover those damages only, and shall not have costs, being a new creation in recompence where there was none before. As upon stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 12. for driving of distresses out of the hundred, &c. whereby damages are given, the plaintiff shall recover no costs, only his damages, because this action is newly given. But in an action upon the stat. 8 H. 6. c. 9. of forcible entry, which giveth treble damages, the plaintiff shall recover his damages and his costs to the treble amount, by reason he was entitled to single damages before by the Common Law; and the statute, as part of the damages, increases the costs to treble; and when a statute increases damages, costs shall likewise be increased. 2 Inst. 289. 10 Rep. 116.

Double, treble damages, &c. are allowed, in several cases, by a very great variety of statutes; as for not setting forth tithes; distresses wrongfully taken; rescous; though if it be not found by the jury, that the plaintiff hath sustained some damage, in cases where treble damages, &c. are inflicted by law, no damages can be awarded. See the several acts.

How damages given to a person sued for an act done in the execution of his office, are to be assessed and recovered, see Valentine and Fawcet, Hardw. 138, 139.

Plaintiff may take judgment de melioribus damnis where several damages are given, or enter a remittitur. Sabin v. Long, 1 Wils. par. 1. fo. 30.

The court in their discretion may increase the damages in Mayhem. Brown v. Seymour, Wils. par. 1. fo. 5. and vide 3 Salk. 115. 2 Inst. 200. See Mayhem.

See further as to Damages in general, Com. Dig. title Damages.

DAMAGE CLEER, damna clericorum.] Was a fee assessed of the tenth part in the Common Pleas, and the twentieth part in the King's Bench and Exchequer, out of all damages exceeding five marks, recovered in those courts, in actions upon the case, covenant, trespass, battery, &c. wherein the damages were uncertain; which the plaintiff was obliged to pay to the prothonotary, or the chief officer of the court wherein recovered, before he could have execution for the damages: this was originally a gratuity given to the prothonotaries and their clerks, for drawing special writs and pleadings; but it is taken away by statute, and if any officer in the King's courts, take any money in the name of damage cleer, or any thing in lieu thereof, he shall forfeit treble the value. Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 6.

DAMAGE-FEASANT, or faisant.] Is when a stranger's beasts are found in another person's ground without his leave or licence, and without the fault of the possessor of the close, (which may happen from his not repairing his fences,) and there doing damage, by feeding, or otherwise, to the grass, corn, woods, &c. In which case, the tenant whom they damage, may distrain and impound them, as well by night as in the day, lest the beasts escape before taken; which may not be done for rent, services, &c. only in the day time. Stat. 51 H. 3. stat. 4. 1 Inst. 142. If a man take my cattle, and put them into the land of another, the tenant of the land may take these cattle damage-feasant, though I who am the owner, was not privy to the cattle's being there damage-feasant; and he may keep them against me till satisfaction of the damages. 2 Danv. Ab. 364.

But if one comes to distrain damage-feasant, and to seize the cattle, and the owner drives them out before they are taken, he cannot distrain them damage-feasant, but is put to his action of trespass; for the cattle ought to be actually upon the land damage-feasant, at the time of the distress. 1 Inst. 161. 9 Rep. 22. He that hath but the possession of, and no title to the land, may justify taking a distress damage-feasant. Plowd. 431. If a man puts cattle to pasture at so much a week with another, who after gives notice that he will not have them there any longer; in this case the owner of the ground may distrain them damage-feasant, though the cattle be in lawfully at first: so where a lessee holds after his estate is ended. 43 Ed. 3. Keilw. 69. But the owner of the cattle should have proper notice and reasonable time allowed for taking away his cattle.

Beasts belonging to the plough, or beasts of husbandry, sheep, horses joined to a cart, may be distrained damage-feasant, though not for rent. 1 Sid. 422. 440. But the owner may tender amends, before the cattle are impounded; and then the detainer is unlawful: also if when impounded the pound door is open, the owner may take them out. 5 Rep. 76. See further title Distress.

A greyhound may be taken damage-feasant, running after conies in a warren: so a man may take a ferret that another hath brought into his warren, and taken conies with. If a person bring nets and gins through my warren, I cannot take them out of his hands. 2 Danv. 633. But if men are rowing up my water, and endeavouring with nets to catch fish in my several piscary, I may take their oars and nets, and detain them as damage-feasant, to stop their further fishing; though I cannot cut their nets. Cro. Car. 228. See titles Distress, Trespass.

DAM. A boundary, or confinement; as to dam up or dam out: infra damnum suum, within the bounds or limits of his own property or jurisdiction. Bract. lib. 2. c. 37.

DAMISELLA. A light damosell or miss. Stat. 12 Ed. 1: See Pimp Tenure.

DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIA. If one man keeps a school in such a place, another may do so likewise in the same place, though he draw away the scholars from the other school; and this is damnum absque injuria, a loss without an injury; but he must not do any thing to disturb the other school. 3 Salk. 10.

DAN. Anciently the better sort of men in this kingdom had the title of Dan; as the Spaniards Don, from the Lat. Dominus.

DANEGELT, OR DANE GELD, danegildum.] Is compounded of the words dane and gelt, money or tribute, and was a tax of 1*s.* and after of 2*s.* upon every hide of land through the realm, laid upon our ancestors the Saxons by the Danes, when they lorded it here. Camd. Brit. 83. 142. According to some accounts, this tax was levied for clearing the seas of Danish pirates; which heretofore greatly annoyed our coasts: but King Ethelred being much distressed by the continual invasions of the Danes, to procure peace, was compelled to charge his people with very heavy payments, called danegelt, which he paid to the Danes at several times. Hoveden par. post. Annal. 344. Ingulph. 510. Selden's Mare Claus. 190. This danegelt was released by Edward the Confessor; but levied again by William the First and Second: then it was released again by King Henry the First, and finally by King Stephen.

DANELAGE. The law of the Danes, when they governed a third part of this kingdom. See further, titles Merchenlage, Common Law.

DANGERIA. A payment in money made by forest tenants, that they might have liberty to plough and sow in time of pannage or mast feeding. Manw. For. Laws.

DAPIFER, à dapes ferendo.] Was at first a domestic officer, like unto our Steward of the Household; or rather Clerk of the Kitchen: but by degrees it was used for any fiduciary servant, especially the chief steward or head bailiff of an honour or manor. There is mention made in our ancient records of dapifer regis; which is taken for Steward of the King's Household. Cowel.

DARDUS, i. e. A dart. In Wales an oak is called a dar.

DARE AD REMANENTIAM. To give away in fee or for ever. Glanv. lib. 7. cap. 1. This seems to be only of a remainder.

DARREIN. Is a corruption from the Fr. dernier, viz. ultimus, the last; in which sense we use it: as darrein continuance, &c.

DARREIN PRESENTMENT. Last Presentation.] See title Advowson, III. An assise of Darrein Presentment lies when a man, or his ancestors, under whom he claims, having presented a clerk to a benefice, who is instituted; afterwards upon the next avoidance a stranger presents a clerk, and thereby disturbs him that is real patron; in which case the patron shall have this writ, (F. N. B. 31.) directed to the sheriff to summon an assise or jury to inquire who was the last patron that presented to the church now vacant, of which the plaintiff complains that he is deforced by the defendant: and, according as the assise determines that question, a writ shall issue to the Bishop, to institute the clerk of that patron, in whose favour the determination is made, and also to give damages, in pursuance of stat. West. 2. (13 E. 2. c. 5.) This question it is to be observed, was, before the stat. 7 Ann. c. 18. entirely conclusive, as between the patron or his heirs and a stranger: for, till then, the full possession of the advowson was in him who presented last, and his heirs; unless since that presentation, the clerk had been evicted within six months, or the rightful patron had recovered the advowson in a writ of right; which is a title superior to all others. But that statute having given a right to any person to bring a quare impedit, and to recover (if his title be good) notwithstanding the last presentation by whomsoever made; assises of darrein presentment, now not being in anywise conclusive, have been totally disused; as indeed they began to be before; a quare impedit being a more general, and therefore a more usual, action. For the assise of darrein presentment lies only where a man has an advowson by descent from his ancestors; but the writ of quare impedit is equally remedial, whether a man claims title by descent or by purchase. 2 Inst. 355. See title Quare Impedit.

DATE OF A DEED. Is the description of the time, viz. the day, month, year of our Lord, year of the reign, &c. in which the deed was made. 1 Inst. 6. But the ancient deeds had no dates, only of the month and the year; to signify that they were not made in haste, or in the space of a day; but upon longer and more mature deliberation. Blount. If in the date of a deed, the year of our Lord is right, though the year of the King's reign be mistaken, it shall not hurt it. Cro. Jac. 261. A deed was dated 30th March 1701, without anno Domini and anno Regni; and it was adjudged that both the year of the Lord and of the King were implicitly in the deed. 2 Salk. 658. A deed is good, though it hath no date of the day or place, or if the date be mistaken, or though it hath an impossible date, as the 30th of February, &c. But he that doth plead such a deed, without any date, or with an impossible date, must set forth the time when it was delivered. 2 Rep. 5. 1 Inst. 46. If no date of a deed be set forth, it shall be intended that it had none; and in such case it is good from the delivery; for every deed or writing hath a date in law, and that is the day in which it is delivered: and a deed is no deed till the delivery, and that is the date of it. Mod. Ca. 244. 1 Nels. Abr. 525.

An impossible date of a bond, &c. is no date at all; but the plaintiff must declare on the bond as made at a certain time: and if the express date be insensible, the real date is the delivery. 2 Salk. 463. Where there is none or an impossible date, the plaintiff may count of any date. 1 Lill. Abr. 293. If there be a mistaken date, or a date be impossible, &c. the plaintiff may surmise a legal date in the declaration, whereupon the defendant is to answer to the deed, and not to the date. Yelv. 194. If a deed bears date at a place out of the realm, it may be averred that the place mentioned in the deed is in some county in England; and here the place is not traversable; without this the deed cannot be tried. 1 Inst. 261. A deed may be dated at one time, and sealed and delivered at another: but every deed shall be intended to be delivered on the same day it bears date, unless the contrary is proved. 2 Inst. 674. Though there can be no delivery of a deed before the day of the date; yet after, there may. Yelv. 138. So that a deed may be dated back on a time past, but not at a day to come. See title Deed.

DATIVE, OR DATIF, dativus.] Signifies that which may be given or disposed of at will and pleasure. Stat. 9 R. 2. c. 4.

DAVATA TERRÆ, DAWACH. A portion of land so called in Scotland. Skene.

DAY, dies.] A certain space of time, containing twenty-four hours; and if a fact be done in the night, you must state it in law proceedings, in the night of the same day. The natural day consists of twenty-four hours, and contains the solar day and the night: and the artificial day begins from the rising of the sun, and ends when it sets. See 1 Inst. 135. Day, in legal understanding, is the day of appearance of the parties, or continuance of the suit where a day is given, &c. And there is a day of appearance in court by the writ and by the roll; by writ, when the sheriff returns the writ; by roll, when he hath a day by the roll, and the sheriff returns not the writ, there the defendant, to save his freehold, and prevent loss of issues, imprisonment, &c. may appear by the day he hath by the roll. Co. Lit. 135.

In real actions there are dies communes, common days; and in all summonses there must be fifteen days after the summons before the appearance; and before the statute of articuli super chartas, in all summons and attachment in plea of land, there should be contained fifteen days. Co. Lit. 134.

As to offences in B. R. if the offence be committed in another county than where the court sits, and the indictment be removed by certiorari, there must be fifteen days between every process and the return thereof; but if it be committed in the same county where the bench sits, they may sit de die in diem; but this they will very rarely do. Ibid. There is a day called dies specialis, as in an assise in the King's Bench or Common Pleas, the attachment need not be fifteen days before the appearance; otherwise it is before justices assigned; but generally in assises the judges may give a special day at their pleasure, and are not bound to the common days; and these days they may give as well out of term as within.

There is also a day of grace, dies gratiæ; and generally this is granted by the court at the prayer of the demandant or plaintiff, in whose delay it is; but it is never granted where the King is party, by aid prior of the tenant or defendant; nor where any lord of parliament, or peer of the realm is tenant or defendant.

And sometimes the day that is quarto die post, is called dies gratiæ, for the very day of return is the day in law, and to that day the judgment hath relation, but no default shall be recorded till the fourth day be past; unless it be in a writ of right, where the law alloweth no day but the day of the return. Co. Lit. 135.—See titles Judgment, Term.

There are several return-days in the terms; and if either of them happen upon a Sunday, the day following is taken in-instead of it; for Sunday is dies non juridicus; and so is Ascension day in Easter term, St. John Baptist in Trinity term, All Saints and All Souls, in Michaelmas term, and the Purification of the Virgin Mary in Hilary term. 2 Inst. 264.—See title Term.

Days in Bank are days set down by statute, or order of the court, when writs shall be returned, or when the party shall appear upon the writ served. See stat. 51 H. 3. stat 2. & 3. [or rather of uncertain time.] 32 Hen. 8. cap. 21. 16 Car. 1. c. 6. and 24 Geo. 2. c. 48. And by the statute de anno bissextili, 21, [or 40, or 44] H. 3. the day increasing in the leap year, and the day next going before are to be accounted but one day.

It is commonly said that the day of Nisi prius, and the day in Bank, is all one day; but this is to be understood as to pleading, not to other purposes. 1 Inst. 135. But after issue found for the plaintiff at the Nisi prius, if a day be given in Bank, and the defendant makes default, judgment shall be given against him. 2 Danv. Abr. 477. and vide Id. 476.

To be dismissed without day, is to be finally dismissed the court: and when the justices before whom causes were depending, do not come on the day to which they were continued, whether such absence be occasioned by death or otherwise, they are said to be put without day: but may be revived, or recontinued by re-summons, re-attachment, &c. See stat. 1 E. 6. c. 7. Also by the Common Law, all proceedings upon any indictment, &c. whereon no judgment had been given, were determined by the demise of the King, and nothing remained but the indictment, original writ, &c. which were put without day, till re-continued by re-attachment to bring in the defendants, to plead de novo: though this is remedied by stats. 4 & 5 W. 3. c. 18. 1 An. c. 8. by which such process, &c. are to continue in the same force after the King's demise, as they would have done if he had lived. See titles Discontinuance, Process, King.

In action of trespass, if the day laid in the declaration be either before or after the actual day on which the trespass is committed, it is not material, if a trespass be proved. Co. Lit. 283. a. But N. B. The day laid must be before the first day of that term of which the declaration is intituled, or if the trespass be committed within the term, there must be a special memorandum of some particular day, (if by bill) or of some general return day, (if in C. P. or B. R. by original writ) subsequent to the day whereon the trespass was committed: and so as to other actions, where the cause of action arises within the term. See titles Declaration, Pleading.

DAY-LIGHT. See titles Burglary, Robbery.

DAY-RULE. See Day-Writ.

DAYWERE OF LAND, Diurnalis Diurturna.] As much arable land as could be ploughed up in one day's work; or one journey, as the farmers still call it.

DAY-WRIT, OR RULE. A rule or order of court, permitting a prisoner in custody in the King's Bench prison, &c. to go without the bounds of his prison for one day. By a rule of the Court of K. B. Easter 30 Geo. 3. a prisoner shall not have day rules above three days in each term; and shall return to prison before nine in the evening.

But by a rule of that court in Michaelmas, 37 G. 3. if any person state, by affidavit, any special cause, to the satisfaction of the Court, for having an additional day-rule, it may be granted accordingly.

However by rule of Hil. 45 G. 3. it was ordered, that the rules of East. 30 G. 3. and Michaelmas, 37 G. 3. should both be repealed, except as to the regulation that every prisoner, having a day-rule, should return within before nine in the evening. See Debtors.

The King may grant writ of warrantia diei to any person, which shall save his default for one day, be it in plea of land or other action, and be the cause true, or not; and this by his prerogative, quod nota.

It is against law to grant liberty to debtors in execution by other writs than day writs (or rules). Chan. Rep. 67.

No prisoner committed by B. R. ought to have the benefit of the day-rule of going abroad in term time; for their imprisonment is their punishment for their contempt, or misbehaviour. 2 Show. 88. pl. 80.

One in execution had a habeas corpus from the Lord Keeper (which they call a day writ) returnable three or four days after its teste. By virtue of this writ, he went to the wine-licence office, but never to any inn of court or Chancery, or to the Lord Keeper's, and this in the vacation. Per Pemberton, Ch. J. This is a habeas out of Chancery, which they may send at any time, and by virtue of the King's writ, the party was brought out of the prison-house, and that is justifiable. Then all the day, so long as there was a keeper with him, he was in custody still, and returning to prison at night, it is well enough, and no escape; though Chancery may examine the contempt, that is nothing to B. R. 2 Show. 298.

A prisoner taken on an escape-warrant before the sitting of the court the same day, shall be discharged, if his name was entered with the clerk the night before; but not if it was entered the same morning only. 8 Mod. 80.

DAYERIA, Dairy, from day, dieie, Sax. dag.] Was at first the daily yield of milch cows, or profit made of them. In Lorrain and Champaign they use the word dayer, for the meeting of the day-labouring people to give an account of their daily work, and receive the wages of it. A dairy in the North is called milkness; as the dairy-maid is in all parts a milk-maid: she is termed androchia by Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 87. and see Paroch. Antiq. 548.

DAYS-MAN. In the North of England, an arbitrator, or elected judge, is usually termed a dies-man, or days-man: and Dr. Hammond says, that the word day in all idioms signifies judgment.

DEADLY FEUD. Is a profession of an irreconcileable hatred, till a person is revenged even by the death of his enemy. It is mentioned in stat 43 El. c. 13. And such enmity and revenge were allowed by the old Saxon law; for where any man was killed, if a pecuniary satisfaction was not made to the kindred of the slain, it was lawful for them to take up arms against the murderer, and revenge themselves on him: and this is called deadly feud; which it is conjectured was the original of an appeal. Blount.—See stat. 43 Eliz. c. 13. and this Dict. titles Feud, Malicious Mischief, Felony.

DEAD PLEDGE, mortuum vadium.] A pledge of lands or goods. See Mortgage.

DEAD'S PART. The remainder of the defunct's moveables, beside what is due to the wife and children. Scotch Dict. See title Executor.

DEAF, DUMB, AND BLIND. A man who is born deaf, dumb, and blind, is looked upon by the law in the same state as an idiot: he being supposed incapable of any understanding; as wanting all those senses which furnish the human mind with ideas. 1 Comm. 304. See F. N. B. 233. See titles Idiot, Lunatic.

A man who could neither speak nor hear committed felony, and was arraigned, and therefore was commanded to prison. Br. Corone, pl. 216. cites 26 Edw. 3. See Thel. Dig. 6. lib. 1. c. 7. and this Dictionary, title Mute.

One who had made his will, and became ill, and (as it seems) had lost his speech; the same will was delivered into his hands, and it was said to him, that he should deliver it to the vicar, if it should be his last will, otherwise he should retain it; and he delivered it to the vicar, and this was held a good will. Thel. Dig. 6. lib. 1. cap. 7. § 8. cites 44 Ass. 36.—See title Will.

It appearing by oath, that the defendant was both senseless and dumb, and therefore could not instruct his counsel to draw his answer: it was ordered that no attachment, or other process of contempt, should be awarded against the defendant for not answering, without special order of the court. Cary's Rep. 132. cites 22 Eliz. Altham v. Smith.

One that is deaf and wholly deprived of his hearing cannot give, and so one that is dumb and cannot speak. Yet (according to the opinion of some) they may consent by signs; but it is generally held, that he that is dumb cannot make a gift, because he cannot consent to it. 1 Inst. 107.

If, however, a blind man has understanding, he may deliver a deed sealed by him. Jenk. 222. pl. 75.

The lord shall have the custody of a copyholder that is deaf and dumb; for else he shall be prejudiced in his rents and services; and adjudged for the grantee of the lord against the prochein amy of the copyholder. Cro. Jac. 105.

One born deaf and dumb, who signified by signs that she understood what she was about to do, was allowed to levy a fine of lands. Cart. 53.

DEAFFORESTED, OR DISAFFORESTED, Deafforestatus.] Discharged from being forest; or freed and exempted from the forest laws. 17 Car. 1. c. 16. There is likewise dewarrenata, as well as deafforestata; which is when a warren is diswarrened or broke up and laid in common.

DEAN, Decanus; from the Greek Δέκα, decem.] An ecclesiastical governor or dignitary, so called, as he presides over ten Canons or Prebendaries at the least. And we call him a Dean, that is next under the bishop, and chief of the chapter, ordinarily in a cathedral church; the rest of the society being called capitulum, the chapter. As there are two foundations of cathedral churches in England, the old and the new, the new erected by King Hen. VIII. so there are two means of creating these Deans: for those of the old foundation, as the Dean of St. Pauls, York, &c. are exalted to their dignity much like bishops; the King first sending out his congé d'elire to the chapter to choose such Dean, and the chapter then choosing, the King afterwards yielding his royal assent, and the bishop confirming him, and giving his mandate to instal him.

Those of the new foundation, whose deaneries were translated from priories and convents, to Dean and Chapter, are donative, and installed by a shorter course, by virtue of the King's letters-patent, without either election or confirmation; and are visitable only by the Lord Chancellor, or by special commission from the King: but the letters-patent are presented to the bishop for institution, and a mandate for installment goes forth. 1 Inst. 95. Davis, 46, 47.

The new Deaneries and Chapters to old bishopricks are eight, viz. Canterbury, Norwich, Winchester, Durham, Ely, Rochester, Worcester, and Carlisle. The new Deaneries and Chapters to new bishopricks are five, Peterborough, Chester, Gloucester, Bristol, and Oxford. 1 Inst. 95. a. n. 3.

Of the four Welsh Cathedrals, two are without Deans; or rather the dignities of Bishop and Dean unite in the same person, the bishop being deemed quasi decanus; and having, it is said, both an episcopal throne, and a decanal stall allotted to him in the choir. Of this kind are the Cathedrals of St. David's and Llandaff.—St. Asaph and Bangor, the two other Welsh Cathedrals have the dignity of Dean distinct from that of Bishop, but the patronage of both Deaneries is in the respective bishops, they being neither elective by the Chapter, nor donative in the Crown. 1 Inst. 95. a. n. 4.

In Ireland it seems that the King appoints to Deaneries, as to bishopricks, by letters-patent. Id. ib.

Various kinds of Deans, besides Deans of Chapters, are known to our law; and several divisions seem necessary to distinguish them properly.

Considered in respect of the difference of office, Deans are of six kinds. 1. Deans of Chapters, who are either of cathedral or collegiate churches; though the members of churches of the latter sort may more properly be denominated colleges than chapters. See title Chapters.—2. Deans of Peculiars; who have sometimes both jurisdiction and cure of souls, as the Dean of Battel in Sussex; and sometimes jurisdiction only, as the Dean of the Arches in London; (See title Arches Court) and the Deans of Bocking, in Essex, and of Croydon, in Surrey.—3. Rural Deans, who had first jurisdiction over deaneries, as every diocese is divided into archdeaconries and deaneries; but afterwards their power was diminished, and they were only the bishops' substitutes to grant letters of administration, probate of wills, &c. And now their office is wholly extinguished, for the archdeacons and chancellors of bishops execute the authority which Rural Deans had through all the dioceses of England. 1 Nels. Abr. 596, 597. and see 1 Comm. 383.—4. Deans in the Colleges of our Universities; who are officers appointed to superintend the behaviour of the members, and to enforce discipline.—5. Honorary Deans; as the Dean of the Chapel-Royal at St. James's, who is so stiled on account of the dignity of the person over whose chapel he presides. As to the chapel of St. George, Windsor, there being Canons as well as a Dean, it is something more than a mere chapel, and except in name, resembles a collegiate church.—6. Deans of Provinces; or as they are sometimes called, Deans of Bishops. Thus the Bishop of London, is Dean of the Province of Canterbury; and to him as such, the Archbishop sends his mandate for summoning the Bishops of his Province when a Convocation is to be assembled; which may perhaps account for calling him Dean of the Bishops; what the other parts of his office are, the books do not explain, nor do they mention whether there is a Dean for the Province of York. See Lyndw. Gibs. 1 Inst. 95. (a) in n.

Another division of Deans, arising from the nature of their office, is into Deans of Spiritual promotions, and Deans of Lay promotions. Of the former kind are Deans of Peculiars, with cure of souls, Deans of the Royal Chapels, and Deans of Chapters; though as to these last, a contrary opinion formerly prevailed. Perhaps too, Rural Deans might be added to the number. Of the latter kind are Deans of Peculiars, without cure of souls, who therefore may be, and frequently are, persons not in holy orders.

In respect of the manner of appointment, Deans are—1. Elective; as Deans of Chapters of the old foundation; though they are only so (like Bishops) nominally, and in form; the King, being in fact the real patron.—2. Donative, as those Deans of Chapters of the New Foundation, who are appointed by the King's letters-patent, and are installed, under his command to the Chapter, without resorting to the Bishop either for admission, or for a mandate of installment; if that mode of promoting still prevails in respect to any of the new deaneries. Deans of the Royal Chapels are also donative, the King appointing to them in the same way. So too may Deans of Peculiars, without cure of souls, be called; as the Dean of the Arches, who is appointed by commission from the Archbishop of Canterbury; but this must be understood in a large sense of the word Donative, it being most usually restrained to spiritual promotions.—3. Presentative; as some Deans of Peculiars with cure of souls, and the Deans of some chapters of the New Foundation, if not all. Thus the Dean of Battel is presented by the patron to the Bishop of Chichester, and from him receives institution. This Deanery was founded by William the Conqueror. He hath ecclesiastical jurisdiction within the liberty of Battel, and is presentable by the Duke of Montague, and though instituted and inducted by the Bishop of Chichester, is not subject to his visitation. 1 Nels. Abr. Thus too the Dean of Gloucester is presented by the King to the Bishop, with a mandate to admit him, and to give orders for his instalment.—4. By virtue of another office; as the Bishop of London is Dean of the Province of Canterbury; and the Bishop of St. David's is Dean of his own Chapter.

As to further particulars relative to the manner of coming to the possession of Deaneries, see a long and learned historical account in 1 Inst. 95. (a) n. 4. from which it appears that the right to appoint Deans of Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, and the mode of appointing them, must generally depend almost wholly upon charters, usage, or acts of parliament; and if a case should, by bare possibility, arise, where neither of those rules could be had recourse to, foundership seems the only true criterion of patronage.

In respect of the manner of holding, Deans are either absolute or in commendam. But this applies only to Spiritual Deaneries. It is said there are also Deputy Deans. A commendatory Dean may, with the Chapter, choose a bishop. And if a Dean be elected bishop, and before consecration doth obtain dispensation to hold his deanery in commendam, such Dean may well confirm, &c. for his old title remains, and therefore confirmations, and other acts done by him as Dean, are good in law. Latch. 237. 250. Palm. Rep. 460.

A Dean and Chapter are the bishop's council, to assist him in the affairs of religion, &c. to consult in deciding difficult controversies, and consent to every grant which the bishop shall make to bind his successors, &c.

A Dean that is solely seised of a distinct possession, hath an absolute fee in him as well as a bishop. 1 Inst. 125. A Deanery is a spiritual promotion, and not a temporal one, though the Dean be appointed by the King; and the Dean and Chapter may be in part secular, and in part regular. Dyer, 10. Palm. 500. As a Deanery is a spiritual dignity, a man cannot be Dean and Prebendary in the same church. Dyer, 273.

DEATH OF PERSONS. There is a natural death of a man, and a civil death: natural where nature itself expires, and extinguishes; and civil, is where a man is not actually dead, but is adjudged so by law; as where he enters into religion, &c. By stat. 19 C. 2. c. 6. if any person for whose life any estate hath been granted, remain beyond sea, or is otherwise absent seven years, and no proof made of his being living, such person shall be accounted naturally dead; though if the party be after proved living at the time of the eviction of any person, then the tenant, &c. may re-enter, and recover the profits. And by stat. 6 An. c. 18. persons in reversion or remainder, after the death of another, upon affidavit that they have cause to believe such other dead, may move the Lord Chancellor to order the person to be produced; and if he be not produced, he shall be taken as dead; and those claiming may enter, &c. See further titles Occupancy, Life-Estate, Reversion.

A man seised in fee of lands, made a lease in reversion to L. D. for ninety-nine years, to commence after the deaths of J. D. and E. D. who had then a lease in possession for the like term, if they or either of them so long lived: the plaintiff positively proved the death of J. D. but as to the death of E. D. the proof was that he had been reputed dead, and no body had heard of him for fifteen years past; and the defendant not being able to prove that he was alive at any time within seven years, this case was adjudged within the stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 6. Carthew, 246.

In law proceedings, the death of either party, between the verdict and judgment, shall not be error; so as judgment be entered in two terms. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 8. See titles Amendment, Error.

DE BENE ESSE. To take or do any thing de bene esse, is to accept or allow it as well done for the present; but when it comes to be more fully examined or tried, to stand or fall according to the merit of the thing in its own nature. As in Chancery, upon motion to have one of the less principal defendants in a cause examined as a witness, the Court (not then thoroughly examining the justice of it, or not hearing what may be objected on the other side) will often order such a defendant to be examined de bene esse, viz. that his depositions shall be taken, and allowed or suppressed at the hearing of the cause, upon the full debate of the matter, as the Court shall think fit; but in the interim they have a well-being, or conditional allowance. 3 Cro. 68.

Where a complainant's witnesses are aged, or sick, or going beyond sea, whereby the plaintiff thinks he is in danger of losing their testimony, the Court will order them to be examined de bene esse; so as to be valid, if the plaintiff hath not an opportunity of examining them afterwards; as if they die before answer, or do not return, &c. In either of which cases, the depositions may be made use of in the court of Chancery, or at law: but if parties are alive and well, or do return, &c. after answer, these depositions are not to be of force, for the witnesses must be re-examined.

So also at Common Law, the judges frequently take bail de bene esse, that is, to be allowed or disallowed upon the exception, or approbation of the plaintiff's attorney; however, in the interim, they are good, or have a conditional allowance. Cowel. Declarations likewise are sometimes delivered de bene esse. See titles Declaration, Practice, Process, &c.

DEBENTURE. An instrument in the nature of a bond or bill, to charge Government, &c. There are custom-house debentures, &c. the forging of which is single felony by 41 Geo. 3. (U. K.) c. 75. § 7.

DEBET ET DETINET. See title Debt, II.

DEBET ET SOLET. If a person sues to recover any right, whereof his ancestor was disseised by the tenant of his ancestor, then he useth the word debet alone in his writ, because his ancestor only was disseised, and the estate discontinued: but if he sue for any thing that is now first of all denied him, then he useth debet et solet, by reason his ancestor before him, and he himself usually enjoyed the thing sued for, until the present refusal of the tenant. Reg. Orig. 140. The writ of secta ad molendinum is a writ of right, in the debet et solet, &c. F. N. B. 98.

DEBT.

Debitum.] In common parlance is a sum of money due from one person to another. And if an action be brought, and the plaintiff recovers judgment, he may by law take either the person, or his real or personal estate in execution, i. e. the moiety of his real estate, or the whole of the personal, if not more than sufficient for payment of the sum recovered and charges.

In the legal sense of the word, debt is said to be an action which lieth where a man oweth another a certain sum of money, either by a debt of record, by specialty or by simple contract; as on a judgment, obligation, or bargain for a thing sold, or by contract, &c. and the debtor will not pay the debt at the day agreed; then the creditor shall have action of debt against him for the same. See 2 Comm. 464. If a man contract to pay money for a thing which he hath bought; and the seller takes bond for the money, the contract is discharged, so that he shall not have action of debt upon the contract, but on the bond. New Nat. Br. 268.

I. In what Cases Action of Debt will lie; and how and by whom, and against whom it may be brought.
II. Where it shall be brought in the debet and detinet, and where in the detinet only.
III. How it may be extinguished.

I. The legal acceptation of debt, is a sum of money due by certain and express agreement: as, by a bond for a determinate sum; a bill, or note; a special bargain; or rent reserved on a lease; where the quantity is fixed and specific, and does not depend upon any subsequent valuation to settle it. The non-payment of these is an injury, for which the proper remedy is by action of debt, (F. N. B. 119.) to compel the performance of the contract, and recover the specific sum due. This is the shortest and surest remedy; particularly where the debt arises upon a specialty, that is, upon a deed or instrument under seal. So also, if I verbally agree to pay a man a certain price for a certain parcel of goods, and fail in the performance, an action of debt lies against me; for this is also a determinate contract; but if I agree for no settled price, I am not liable to an action of debt, but a special action on the case, according to the nature of my contract. And indeed actions of debt are now seldom brought but upon special contracts under seal; wherein the sum due is clearly and precisely expressed; for, in case of such an action upon a simple contract, the plaintiff labours under two difficulties; First, the defendant has here the same advantage, as in an action of detinue, that of waging his law, or purging himself of the debt by oath, if he thinks proper. 4 Rep. 94. Secondly, in an action of debt, the plaintiff must prove the whole debt he claims, or recover nothing at all. For the debt is one single cause of action, fixed and determined; and which therefore, if the proof varies from the claim, cannot be looked upon as the same contract, whereof the performance is sued for.—But in actions of debt, where the contract is proved or admitted, if the defendant can shew that he has discharged any part of it, the plaintiff shall recover the residue. 1 Rol. Rep. 257. Salk. 664. 3 Comm. 154.

When also the damages can be reduced by the averment to a certainty, debt will lie; as on a covenant to pay so much per load for wood, &c. So if in an action, in which the plaintiff can only recover damages, there be judgment for him, he can afterwards bring debt for those damages. Bull. N. P. (8vo.) 167.—And as to cases in which on actions of debt it is not necessary to prove the exact sum laid in the declaration, see at large Doug. 6. 732. in n.

If one binds himself in a single obligation, or with condition, to pay money at a day; or to deliver corn, or the like, and do not perform it accordingly, the obligee may bring action of debt for it. F. N. B. 120. A man acknowledges by deed, that he hath so much of the money of J. S. due to him in his hands; here debt may be brought: and debt will lie on a talley sealed. F. N. B. 122. 1 H. 6. 55. A. delivers 20*l.* to B. to buy goods, and B. gives a receipt to A. testifying the delivery and receipt of the 20*l.* but doth not promise to deliver the goods, &c. A. may maintain debt upon this receipt. Dyer, 20. 2 Bulst. 256. If one binds himself to pay A. B. 10*l.* at one day, and 10*l.* at another, after the first day action of debt lies for 10*l.* being a several duty. 2 Danv. Abr. 501. The nature of the bond, and of the condition, (if there is any) must be carefully attended to, to see if by non-payment of the first sum the bond is forfeited. Vide Co. Lit. 292 b.

Action of debt lies upon a parol contract, and so doth action on the case. 1 Lil. 403. And vide 9 Rep. 87. If goods or money are delivered to a third person for my use, I may have action of debt or account for them. 2 Danv. 404. Where money is delivered to a person, to be re-delivered again, the property is altered, and debt lies: but where a horse, or any goods are thus delivered, there detinue lies, because the property is not altered; and the thing is known, whereas money is not. Owen. 86. 1 Nels. Abr. 603.

Action of debt lies against the husband, for goods which were delivered or sold to the wife, if they come to the use of the husband. 1 Lil. 400. If one delivers meat, drink, or clothes, to an infant, and he promises to pay for them, action of debt, or on the case, will lie against the infant. Though debt may not be brought on an account stated with an infant: and what is delivered must be averred to be for the necessary use of the infant. 1 Lil. Abr. 401.—See title Infant. An attorney shall have action of debt against his client, for money, which he hath paid to any person for the client, for costs of suit, or unto his counsel, &c.

An heir mediate may be sued in debt as if he were immediate heir, &c. The heir may not bring action of debt for a debt due to his ancestor; though it be by specialty, by which the party is bound to pay it to him and his heirs: the executor shall nevertheless have the action. Dyer, 368. F. N. B. 120. Action of debt lies not against executors, upon a simple contract made with the testator. 9 Rep. 87. and see 5 W. P. Taunton, 665.

Before the stat. 32 H. 8. c. 37. the heirs of executors of a man seised of a rent-service, rent-charge, &c. in fee simple, or fee-tail, had no remedy for the arrearages incurred in the life time of the owner of such rents: but by that statute, the executors and administrators of tenants in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for life, of any rent, shall have action of debt for all arrearages of rent due in the life of the testator. 1 Inst. 162. 2 Danv. 492.

A feme sole seised of a rent in fee, &c. which is behind and unpaid, takes husband, and the rent is behind again, and then the wife dieth, by the said stat. 32 H. 8. c. 37. the husband shall have the arrears due before marriage, and he hath a double remedy for the same. 1 Inst. 162.

But by stat. 8 Ann. c. 14. any person having rent in arrear upon any lease for life or lives, may bring action of debt for such rent, as where rent is due on a lease for years. Action of debt will lie against a lessee, for rent due after the assignment of the lease; for the personal privity of contract remains, notwithstanding the privity of estate is gone. 3 Rep. 22. But after the death of the lessee, it is then a real contract, and runs with the land. Cro. Eliz. 555. When a lease is ended, the duty in respect of the rent remains, and debt lieth by reason of the privity of contract between lessor and lessee. 2 Cro. 227. 1 Nels. Abr. 604. If debt be brought by an executor for arrears of rent ended, it is local still, and must be laid where the land lies. Hob. 37. Action of debt may be had against the lessee in any place; but if it be brought against an assignee, it must be where the land lieth; and upon the privity of contract, it is to be brought against the lessee where the land is. Latch. 197. 271. 2 Leon. c. 28.

Debt does not lie at the Common Law, nor by stat. 8 Ann. c. 14. for the arrear of an annuity or yearly rent, payable to A. during the life of B. out of lands devised to B. for life. Webb v. Jiggs & Ux. Term Rep. K. B. Hil. 55 Geo. 3. 113.

Debt lies for use and occupation generally, without stating the place where the premises lie, or any of the particulars of the demise. King v. Fraser, 6 East's Rep. 348. See also Wilkins v. Wingate, 6 Term. Rep. 62. and Stroud v. Rogers, Hil. 32 Geo. 3. cited ibid.

Debt for rent on a lease against assignee is local. Barker v. Dormer, 1 Show. 191.

In an action of debt for rent, without showing in what parish the lands were situate, and a particular of the plaintiff's demand describing them in a wrong parish, yet the court of K. B. held that the plaintiff might recover; it not appearing that any misrepresentation was intended, or that defendant had held more than one parcel of land of plaintiff so as to be misled by such inaccuracy. Davies v. Edwards, Term Rep. K. B. Hil. 55 G. 3. 380.

In some cases action of debt will lie, although there be no contract betwixt the party that brings the action, and him against whom brought; for there may be a duty created by law, for which action will lie. 2 Saund. 343. 366. Debt lieth against a sheriff, for money levied in execution. 1 Lil. Abr. 403. Action of debt lies against a gaoler for permitting a prisoner committed in execution, to escape; because thereupon the law makes the gaoler debtor; but where the party is not in execution, there action on the case only lies for damages suffered by the escape. 1 Saund. 218. 1 Lil. Abr. 402.

A person may have debt upon an arbitrament: also debt lies for money recovered upon a judgment, &c. And upon a recovery in the superior courts at Westminster, the plaintiff must bring the action in Middlesex, the record being there; but a sci. fa. to execute judgment, must be where the original was, and follow it. New Nat. Br. 267. 268. &c.

When judgment is bad in the King's Bench, and a writ of error brought in the Exchequer chamber, or in Parliament; yet an action of debt will lie on the judgment: in this case, if the plaintiff levies part of his money, by elegit, he may likewise bring debt for the residue. 1 Sid. 184. 236.

Whatever the laws order any one to pay, that becomes instantly a debt, which he hath before-hand contracted to discharge. And this implied agreement it is, that gives the plaintiff a right to institute a second action, founded merely on the general contract, in order to recover such damages or sum of money, as are assessed by the jury, and adjudged by the court to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff in any former action. So that if he hath once obtained a judgment against another for a certain sum, and neglects to take out execution thereupon, he may afterwards bring an action of debt upon this judgment; (1 Rol. Abr. 600, 1.) and shall not be put upon the proof of the original cause of action; but upon shewing the judgment once obtained, still in full force, and yet unsatisfied, the law immediately implies, that by the original contract of society the defendant hath contracted a debt, and is bound to pay. This method seems to have been invented, when real actions were more in use than at present, and damages were permitted to be recovered thereon; in order to have the benefit of a writ of capias, to take the defendant's body in execution for those damages: which process was allowable in an action of debt, (in consequence of the stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 17.) but not in an action real. Wherefore, since the disuse of those real actions, actions of debt upon judgment in personal suits have been pretty much discountenanced by the courts, as being generally vexatious and oppressive, by harassing the defendant with the costs of two actions instead of one. 3 Comm. 160.

Debt will lie upon the judgment of a Foreign Court, and the plaintiff need not shew the ground of the judgment; but it is not to be declared on as a matter of record, for it is here but of the nature of a simple contract debt; therefore in such case the judgment is sufficient only to establish a demand, and put the defendant to impeach the justice of it, or show the same to have been unduly or irregularly obtained. And as it is but a simple contract, assumpsit will also lie on it.—Walker v. Witter, Doug. 1—6.; in which several other cases on the same point are also cited and reported.

If a man recovers debt or damages in London, on action brought there by the custom of the city, which lies not at Common Law; when it is become a debt by the judgment, action of debt lies in the courts at Westminster upon this judgment. 2 Danv. 449.

Action of debt will lie for breach of a by-law; or, for amercement in a court-leet, &c. 1 Lil. 400. 5 Rep. 64. Hob. 259. And action of debt is sometimes grounded on an act of parliament; as upon stat. 2 Ed. 6. c. 13. for not setting out tithes: stat. 27 El. c. 13. against the hundred for a robbery, &c. Against physicians in London, for practising without licence, by stat. 14 & 15 H. 8. c. 5.—By assignees of a commission of bankrupt, stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 15, &c.—A college shall have action of debt for commons of any student; adjudged, Pasch. 9 Jac. B. R.—And in general, all the cases show that wherever indebitatus assumpsit is maintainable, debt also is. Doug. 6. per Buller, J.

For debt to a bishop or parson, after his death, his executors shall have the action; but of a dean and chapter, mayor and commonalty, &c. the successors are entitled to the action of debt. F. N. B. 120. Action of debt lies on a recognisance; so upon a statute merchant, it being in nature of a bond or obligation: but it is otherwise in case of a statute staple. 2 Danv. 497.

In bringing this action, it is a general rule, that the party himself, to whom the debt is originally due, whilst he doth live, must bring the action; and after his death, his executors, &c. And the action must be brought against the party himself that doth originally owe the debt, whilst he is living; and after his death, it may be brought against the executor, if he make any; or otherwise against the administrator; and if the Ordinary appoint none, against the Ordinary himself; and if he die possessed of the goods, against his executor, &c. And also against executors of executors in infinitum. Dyer, 24. 471. 3 Rep. 9. 2 Brownl. 207.

Action of debt for 100*l.* lies in stat. 19 G. 2. c. 34. § 6. against the inhabitants of a Lath in Kent, by the executors of a revenue officer, who being in a boat between high and low water mark in pursuit of a smuggling boat, in which were offenders against that act, received a mortal wound by a shot fired by a person on the shore within the Lath: though the officer afterwards died on the high sea beyond the low water mark, and consequently out of the Lath.—Ellis's Executors v. St. Augustine's Lath, Kent, 12 East's Rep. 244.

II. The form of the writ of debt is sometimes in the debet & detinet, and sometimes in the detinet only; that is, the writ states, either that the defendant owes, and unjustly detains the debt or thing in question, or only that he unjustly detains it. It is brought in the debt, as well as detinet, where sued by one of the original contracting parties who personally gave the credit, against the other who personally incurred the debt, or against his heirs, if they are bound to the payment; as by the obligee against the obligor, the landlord against the tenant, &c. But, if it be brought by, or against an executor for a debt due to or from the testator, this, not being his own debt, shall be sued for in the detinet only. F. N. B. 119. So also if the action be for goods, for corn, or an horse, the writ shall in the detinet only; for nothing but a sum of money, for which I (or my ancestors in my name) have personally contracted, is properly considered as my debt. And indeed a writ of debt in the detinet only, for goods and chattels, is neither more nor less, than a mere writ of detinue; and is followed by the very same judgment. Rast. Entr. 174. 3 Comm. 156.

In debt, if it be demanded by original, the process is summons, attachment and distress; and upon a default of sufficiency, on a nihil returned, process to the outlawry, &c. And the judgment in debt, where the demand is in the debet & detinet, is to recover the debt, damages and costs of suit; and the defendant in misericordia. 1 Shep. Abr. 523. Where the plaintiff in debt declares on some specialty, or contract for a sum of money, it must be certainly demanded, and no other; and the demand cannot be of a lesser sum, but it must be shewn how the remainder was satisfied: but in an action upon a statute, that gives a certain sum for the penalty, though less be recovered than the plaintiff lays, it will be good. Cro. Jac. 498. If action of debt is brought on a specialty, bill, bond, lease, &c. the several writings must be well considered by which the plaintiff warrants his action, and the sum due is to be rightly set forth; and if it be debt for rent, the time of commencement, and ending, &c. In debt on single bill or upon judgment, the defendant may plead payment (before the action brought) in bar; and pending an action, on bond, &c. the defendant may bring in principal, interest and costs; and the court shall give judgment to discharge the defendant. Stat. 4 & 5 An. c. 16. See title Bond.

If the action be brought for money, it must be in the debet & detinet; but if goods or chattels, it must be in the detinet only. 50 Ed. 3. 16. 1 Rol. Abr.—If an executor brings debt for any thing in right of his testator, it must be in the detinet only. Moor, 566. 1 Rol. Abr. 602, 603.

If an executor brings an action upon an obligation made to the testator, where the day of payment incurred after the death of the testator, yet the writ shall be in the detinet only, for he brings the action as executor. Lane, 80. S. P. 20 H. 6. 5. 1 Rol. Abr. 602. S. C.

So if a man binds himself to the testator to pay him 100*l.* when such a thing shall happen; if it happens after the death of the testator, yet the writ by the executor shall be in the detinet only. 20 H. 6. 6. 1 Rol. Abr. 602.

If in an account an executor recovers a debt due to his testator, in action for the arrearages thereupon, the writ shall be in the detinet only, for though the action is converted into a debt by the account, yet it is the same thing which was received in the life of the testator. Cro. Eliz. 326. Cro. Jac. 545. 5 Co. 31.

If the executor sells the goods of the testator for a certain sum, he shall have action for this in the debet & detinet. 1 Rol. Abr. 602.

If an executor having lands by an extent upon a statute made to the testator, and naming himself executor, by deed leases them for three years, rendering rent, &c. if an action is afterwards brought by him for his rent, it must be in the debet & detinet, because it is founded upon his own contract. Lane, 80. Cro. Jac. 685. Brown, 205. 1 Mod. 185.

So an executor, being lessee for years of a rectory in the right of the testator, may have action upon 2 Ed. 6. c. 13. for not setting out tithes in the debet & detinet, because founded upon a wrong in his own time, and by the statute it is given to the party grieved. Cro. Jac. 545.

Also action against an executor shall be in the detinet only, for he is chargeable no farther than he has assets. 11 H. 4. 16. 1 Rol. Abr. 603.

In an action against an executor for rent, incurred in the life of the testator, the writ shall be in the detinet only. 11 H. 6. 36. 1 Rol. Abr. 603.

But if an action be brought against an executor for the arrearages of a rent, reserved upon a lease for years, and incurred after the death of the testator, the writ shall be in the debet & detinet, because the executor is charged of his own possession. 1 Rol. Abr. 603. Cro. Eliz. 711. Moor, 566. 1 Brownl. 56. Cro. Jac. 411. And the declaration is against him as assignee, not as executor.

If an action is brought against baron and feme, upon an obligation entered into by the feme before marriage, it shall be in the debet & detinet; for by the marriage all the personal goods and power of disposing of the real estate are by law given the husband, which he has to his own use, and not as executors, who have them only to the use of another. 5 Co. 36. 3 Leon. 206. S. C.

So if an action is brought upon a bond against the heir of the obligor, it shall be in the debet & detinet, because he hath the assets in his own right. 5 Co. 36.

Debt lies by the assignees of a replevin-bond against one of the sureties in the detinet only. Wilson v. Hobday, Term Rep. K. B. 55 G. 3. 120.

III. If a man accepts an obligation for a debt due by simple contract, this extinguishes the contract, but the acceptance of an obligation, for a debt due by another obligation, is no bar of the first obligation. 13 H. 4. c. 1. 1 Rol. Abr. 604. i. e. if between the same parties. See title Bond, V. Acceptance, Payment.

In debt upon an obligation, the defendant cannot plead nil debet, but must deny the deed by pleading non est factum for the seal of the party, continuing, it must be dissolved eo ligamine quo ligatum est. Hard. 332.

But if the debt be due by simple contract, then he may plead nil debet, for it does not appear that there is any debt continuing. Hob. 218.

In debt for rent, if it be by deed, the proper plea is non est factum; but if it be without deed, the defendant may plead non demisit, nothing in arrear, or that he never entered. 2 Inst. 651. Hard. 332.

In debt for the arrears of an annuity granted for life nil debet is no good plea, for the action is merely founded upon the deed, for without it no action can be maintained, and though by the death of the grantee the nature of the action is changed, the annuity being determined; yet this proves not but that the action is founded upon the deed. Keilw. 147.

But in debt for the arrears of a rent-charge, by will devised to the plaintiff's wife for life; against the administrator of the occupier of the land, nil detinet is a good plea, for the will is no deed, nor wants any delivery; adjudged, and said the action was not so much grounded upon the will itself as upon the statute, by which men are enabled by will to dispose of their lands and rents issuing out thereof. Hard. 322.

In debt upon stat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 13. for not setting forth tithes. Not guilty, or nil debet are good issues: 2 Inst. 651. Cro. Eliz. 621. S. P.; because by the action the defendant is charged with a tort, and if he is not guilty of the tort, he does not owe the debt.

In debt upon a contract, the defendant cannot plead the contract was for a less sum, or otherwise than the plaintiff has declared, and traverse the contract in the declaration laid, but may wage his law. Moor. 49. See further Com. Dig. title Debt, and this Dictionary titles Action, Assumpsit, Information, &c. And as to setting off mutual debts, see title Set off.

DEBT TO THE KING. The King's debt is to be satisfied before that of a subject, and until his debt be paid, he may protect the debtor from the arrest of others. By the Common Law, the King for his debt had execution of the body, lands and goods of the debtor. By Magna Charta, 9 H. 3. c. 8. the King's debt shall not be levied on lands, where the goods and chattels of the debtor are sufficient to levy the debt. Also pledges shall not be distrained, when the principal is sufficient. Sheriffs having received the King's debt, upon their next account are to discharge the debtors, on pain to forfeit treble value; and the sheriffs are to give tallies to the King's debtors on payment. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 19. By stat. 33 H. 3. c. 39. all obligations made to the King shall have the same force as a Statute-Staple: 1 Inst. 130. But by stat. 25 E. 3. st. 5. c. 19. notwithstanding the King's protection, creditors may proceed to judgment against their debtors, with a cesset executio till the King's debts be paid. Lands, &c. of the King's debtor and accountant, may be sold as well after his death, as in his life-time: but if the accountant or debtor to the King had a quietus during his life, his heir shall be discharged of the debt. Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 3. See also stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 35. regulating the sale of extended estates, on motion to the Court of Exchequer, by the Attorney General. DEBTEE-EXECUTOR. See title Executor.

DEBTORS. A Work of the nature of this Dictionary is by no means adapted to political disquisitions on the propriety of imprisonment for debt—nor to historical details of the proceedings of foreign nations on the subject. The Legislature, who are the proper, and indeed the only legal judges, of what regulations on the subject are necessary, have repeatedly interfered for the relief of honest, unfortunate debtors, (too generally a small part of the number confined,) by Insolvent acts; and the liberty of the subject in this particular, has in the present reign been much favoured by the laws relative to Arrests.—See titles Arrest, Prisoners, Execution, Insolvent.

By stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 45. for the Courts of Conscience in London, Middlesex, and Southwark, the provisions of which are extended by stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 38. nearly totidem verbis, to ALL Courts for the recovery of small debts;—no debtor committed to gaol by such Court for a debt not exceeding 20*s.* shall be kept in custody on any pretence whatsoever, more than twenty days—nor for a debt between that and 40*s.* more than forty days—then to be discharged without payment of fees, on forfeiture by the gaoler of 5*l.*—In case only of fraudulent concealment of money or goods by the debtor, the time of confinement may be enlarged, in the first instance to 30 days, and in the latter to 60.

By a temporary Act, 41 G. 3. (U. K.) c. 64. § 1. Creditors were allowed to discharge Debtors without losing the benefit of the Judgment upon which the execution issued, except that the Debtor should not be again liable to be arrested for the same Debt, nor the bail be proceeded against.

As to the general relief of the persons of Insolvent Debtors surrendering their effects, see the temporary acts, 53 Geo. 3. cc. 102. 138. and 54 Geo. 3. cc. 23. 114. passed for England and Ireland respectively, and this Dict. title Insolvents.

DEBTS, PRIORITY OF. See titles Assets, Executor, Mortgage.

DECEIT, Deceptio.] A subtle trick or devise, whereunto may be referred all manner of craft and collusion, used to deceive and defraud another, by any means whatsoever, which hath no other or more proper name than deceit to distinguish the offence. West. Symb. sect. 68.

There is a writ called a WRIT OF DECEIT that lies for one that receives injury or damage from him that doth any thing deceitfully in the name of another person; by which he is deceived or injured; which writ is either original or judicial. Reg. Orig. 112. Old Nat. Br. 50.

Deceit is an offence at Common Law, and by statute: and all practices of defrauding or endeavouring to defraud another of his right, are punishable by fine and imprisonment; and if for cheating, by pillory, &c. See title Cheats. Serjeants, counsellors, attornies, and others doing any manner of deceit, are to be imprisoned a year and a day; also pleaders by deceit shall be expelled the court. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 29.

If a fine be levied by deceit, or if one recover land by deceit, the fine, and the recovery, shall be void. 3 Rep. 77. And if a man be attorney for another in a real action against the demandant, and afterwards by covin between such attorney and the demandant, the attorney makes default, by which the land is lost, the tenant who lost the land shall have a writ of deceit against the attorney. F. N. B. 96. So writ of deceit lies to set aside a fine and recovery in C. B. of lands in ancient demesne. 2 Wils. 17.

In a præcipe quod reddat, if the sheriff return the tenant summoned, where he was not summoned, by which the defendant loseth his land by default at the grand cape returned; the tenant shall have a writ of deceit against him who recovered, and against the sheriff for his false return; and by that writ the tenant shall be restored unto his land again: and the sheriff shall be punished for his falsity. F. N. B. 97. If a man bring a writ of deceit against him that recovers in the first action, and the sheriff return him summoned, upon which for non-summons in that action on finding the same the recovery is reversed: in this case the defendant shall not have writ of deceit to recover the land again, if he were not summoned: but he shall have his remedy against the sheriff. Rol. Abr. 621. And where debt was brought, and the defendant pleaded in abatement, and the plea was overruled, the attornies on both sides by deceit between them, to the end the plaintiff might recover his debt, entered another judgment when it should have been a respondeas ouster; and it was held that the writ of deceit would not lie to reverse the record, but only to recover damages. Ibid. 622.

If in a suit or action, another person shall come into court and pretend he is party to the suit, and so let judgment be had, or some other damage done to the party himself; or if one have cause to have an action, and another brings it in his name, and lets judgment go by nonsuit, or the like, the injured party may have this writ of deceit. F. N. B. 96. March, 48.

If any one forge a statute, &c. in my name, and sueth a capias thereupon, for which I am arrested; I shall have a writ of deceit against him that forged it, and against him who sued forth the writ of capias, &c. And if a person procure another to sue an action against me to trouble me, I shall have a writ of deceit. F. N. B. 96.

There are many frauds and deceits provided against by statute, relating to artificers, bakers, brewers, victuallers, false weights and measures, &c. which are liable to penalties and punishment in proportion to the offence committed. And writ of deceit lies in various cases, for not performing a bargain; or not selling good commodities, &c. 1 Inst. 357.

On almost all occasions, where a person is deceived or injured, and where anciently remedy was sought by the writ of deceit, an action on the case for damages, in nature of a writ of deceit, is now more usually brought. And indeed it is the only remedy for a lord of a manor in or out of ancient demesne, to reverse a fine or recovery had in the king's court, of lands lying within his jurisdiction, which would otherwise be thereby turned into frank-fee. And this may be brought by the lord against the parties and cestui que use of such fine and recovery; and thereby he shall obtain judgment not only for damages (which are usually remitted) but also to recover his court and jurisdiction over the lands, and to annul the former proceedings. 3 Lev. 415. 419. Lutw. 711. 749.

A count for a deceit, averring that the defendant represented to the plaintiff that his lessor required 150*l.* premium for a lease, whereas he required only 100*l.* whereby defendant fraudulently obtained from plaintiff and converted to his own use 50*l.* is sufficient. Pewtriss v. Austin, 6 W. P. Taunton, 552.

DECENNARY. A town or tithing consisting (originally) of ten families of freeholders. Ten tithings composed an hundred. The institution of decennaries (or frank pledges) is imputed to Alfred. In these decennaries the whole neighbourhood or tithing of freemen were mutually pledges for each other's good behaviour. 1 Comm. 114. See Deciners.

DECEM TALES. When a full jury doth not appear at a trial at bar, then a writ goes to the sheriff apponere decem tales, &c. whereby a supply is made of jurymen to proceed in the trial. See titles Jury, Tales.

DECIES TANTUM. A writ under stat. 38 E. 3. c. 12. against a juror, who hath taken money of either party for giving his verdict, to recover ten times as much as the sum taken. See title Jury. This writ also lies against embraceors that procure such an inquest; who shall be further punished by imprisonment for a year. Reg. Orig. 188. F. N. B. 171. Stat. 38 Ed. 3. cap. 12.

DECIMATION, Decimatio.] The punishing every tenth soldier by lot, was termed decimatio legionis: it likewise signifies tithing, or paying a tenth part. There was a decimation during the time of the Usurper, 1655.

DECINERS, DECENNIERS, OR DOZINERS, Decennarii.] In our ancient law, such as were wont to have the oversight of the Friburghs or views of frank-pledge, for the maintenance of the King's peace; and the limits or compass of their jurisdiction was called Decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households; as every person, bound for himself and his neighbours to keep the peace, was stiled Decennier. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 15.

These seem to have had large authority in the time of the Saxons, taking knowledge of causes within their circuits, and redressing wrongs by way of judgment, and compelling men thereunto, as appears in the laws of King Edward the Confessor. Lambard, Numb. 32. But of late decennier is not used for the chief man of a dizein, or dozein; but he that is sworn to the king's peace, and by oath of loyalty to the prince, is settled in the society of a dozein.

A dozein seemed to extend so far as a leet extendeth; because in leets the oath of loyalty is administered by the steward, and taken by all such as are twelve years old, and upwards, dwelling within the precinct of the leet where they are sworn. F. N. B. 161. There are now no other dozeins but leets; and there is a great diversity between ancient and modern times, in this point of law and government. 2 Inst. 73. See 1 Comm. 114. 4 Comm. 252. and ante Decennary.

DECLARATION.

Declaratio, Narratio.] A legal specification, on record, of the cause of action, by a plaintiff against a defendant.

In the King's Bench, when the defendant is brought into court by bill of Middlesex, upon a supposed trespass, in order to give the court a jurisdiction, the plaintiff may declare in whatever action, or charge the defendant with whatever injury, he thinks proper, unless he has held him to bail by a special ac etiam; which the plaintiff is then bound to pursue. And so also, in order to have the benefit of a capias to secure the defendant's person, it was the ancient practice, and is therefore still warrantable, in the Common Pleas, to sue out a writ of trespass quare clausum fregit, for breaking the plaintiff's close: and when the defendant is once brought in upon this writ, the plaintiff declares in what action the nature of his true injury may require; as in an action of covenant or on the case for breach of contract, or other less forcible transgression. (2 Ventr. 159.): unless, by holding the defendant to bail on a special ac etiam, he has bound himself to declare accordingly. 3 Comm. 295. See Ac etiam, Capias.

In either case, the declaration should correspond with the process, in the names and descriptions of the parties: for if there be a material variance, the court will set aside the proceedings, unless where the process is taken out against the defendant by a wrong name, and he appears by his right name, there the plaintiff may declare against him by the name in which he appears, stating that he was arrested by the other name: for by appearing, the defendant admits himself to be the person sued; and so the variance is immaterial. 3 Term Rep. 611.

The substantial rules of pleading according to which declarations are to be drawn are founded in strong sense and the soundest and closest logic, and so appear when well understood and explained; though by being misunderstood and misapplied, they are often made use of as instruments of chicane. 1 Burr. 319.

Rules respecting the form of the Declaration.—The parties plaintiff or demandant, defendant or tenant, ought to be well named.—The time of a matter charged in the declaration ought to be certainly alledged: and therefore in assumpsit, the day being omitted on which the promise is made, it is bad. Yel. 94. Pl. Com. 24.—A certain place ought to be alledged where every fact material and traversable was done. Kitch. 226.—The gist, and every thing that is of the essence of the plaintiff's action, must be set forth in the declaration. That seems properly to be the essence of the action without which the court could have no sufficient grounds to give judgment. Doct. Pl. 85.—If the declaration be not sufficient on which to found a judgment, this may be moved in arrest of judgment after verdict. Ibid.—The declaration must shew a title in the plaintiff, see Cro. Eliz. 325. Moor, 598.—In all cases where an interest or estate commences upon condition, the plaintiff ought to shew it in his declaration, and aver the performance of it; but when the interest of the estate passes presently, and vests in the grantee, and is to be defeated by condition; there the plaintiff may count generally, and the condition shall be pleaded by him who is to take advantage of it. 7 Co. 10. Lil. Reg. 418.

The declaration must contain such certain affirmation that it may be traversed; for if there be no certain affirmation to make the declaration itself traversable, it will not be cured after a verdict, because it is a defect in substance. Co. Lit. 30. Cro. Jac. 361. 2 Bulst. 214. Cro. Eliz. 33. 441. 2 Saund. 319. —If a declaration be good in part, though bad as to another part, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment for so much as is well alledged, especially if it be not of an entire demand. 10 Co. 115. Rol. Abr. 784, 5. 2 Show. 103. 1 Salk. 138. Vide 3 Burr. 1235.

DECLARATION.

For preventing unnecessary length of declarations, it has been specially ordered, that in actions of covenant, the declaration is not to repeat more of the deed than is necessary for the assignment of the breach, and not to repeat the covenant in the conclusion.—In actions of slander, long preambles to be forborne, and no more inducement than what is necessary for the maintenance of the action; but when it requires a special inducement or colloquium.—In actions upon general statutes, the declaration not to repeat the statute, but to conclude 'against the form of the statute in such case made and provided.'—In actions of debt upon judgment had in the Courts at Westminster, to recite only the judgment; but if on a judgment had by, or against an executor or administrator, then the action of debt upon that judgment to repeat the declaration and judgment. R. M. 1654. § 13.—In a declaration on action founded on a deed, the plaintiff need not set forth more than that part which is necessary to entitle him to recover. Cowp. 665. And it will be sufficient to state the substance and legal effect even of such part; which is shorter, and not liable to mis-recitals and literal mistakes. The distinction is between that which may be rejected as surplusage (which might have been struck out on motion), and what cannot: where the declaration contains impertinent matter foreign to the cause, and which the Master on a reference to him would strike out (irrelevant covenants for instance), that will be rejected by the Court and need not be proved. But if the very ground of the action is mis-stated, as where the plaintiff undertakes to recite that part of a deed on which the action is founded, and it is mis-recited, that will be fatal: for then the case declared on is different from that which is proved, and he must recover secundum allegata et probata. Doug. 665. Bristow v. Wright and another; and the notes there.

Of Declarations, in Chief, De bene esse, and By-the-by.—There are two ways in which the plaintiff may declare, the one on the return-day of the writ, which is called, de bene esse, conditionally, until special, or common bail be filed; the other after the day for filing common bail, or when the defendant has justified his bail, which is called in chief. If to speed the cause, the former is the best way of proceeding. And a rule to plead may be given on the same day.—When a Declaration is filed de bene esse, till common bail or appearance entered, or till special bail be filed, notice that it is so filed must be given to the defendant in writing. Impey, K. B.

The plaintiff cannot declare in chief, unless common bail be filed by the defendant, or plaintiff has done it for him. Smith v. Painter, 2 Term Rep. 719. 1 Term Rep. 635. Cooke v. Raven. And it must be filed the term the writ is returnable. Hardw. 138.

When the defendant has filed common or special bail for himself, any person may deliver or file a Declaration against him by-the-by, at any time during the term wherein the process against the defendant is returnable, sedente curiâ; and the practice hath been, that the plaintiff, at whose suit the process is, might declare against the defendant in as many actions as he thinks fit, before the end of the next term, after the return of the process. Impey, K. B. 177. See 4 Burr. 2180.

Of the time of declaring.—The plaintiff must declare before the end of the term next after the return of the process; or the defendant may sign a non-pros (except in replevin) without entering any rule to declare, and the defendant shall have costs taxed as usual. Stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 2. § 5. And no rule to declare need be given in K. B. either by bill or original.

By the general rules of law, a plaintiff must declare against a defendant within twelve months after the return of the writ. But by the rules of the court, if he do not deliver his Declaration within two terms, the defendant may sign judgment of non-pros. Though unless he takes such advantage of the plaintiff's neglect, the plaintiff may still deliver a Declaration within the year. 2 Term Rep. 112. 3 Term Rep. 123.

Where a writ is returnable on the last return-day of one term, the plaintiff, who is not bound to declare de bene esse, is under no compulsion to declare before the essoign day of the next term; and therefore the defendant is not entitled to an imparlance. Kent v. Yates, 6 W. P. Taunton, 261.

Where the court on demurrer gives leave to amend, by stating particularly that which before was stated too generally, plaintiff may add new counts, though more than two terms have elapsed from the commencement of the suit, if they contain no new cause of action. Brown v. Crump, C. P. 6 W. P. Taunton, 300.

The defendant cannot sign a non-pros, unless he enter his appearance within the term the writ is returnable. Hardw. 138. 2 Term. Rep. 719. To prevent a non-pros being signed, the plaintiff may get a side-bar rule, if the defendant is not in custody, the last day of the second term, for time to declare, until the first day of the next term; and he may have as many rules as he likes, from term to term, but there must be two in a term, viz. one from the first day of the term to the last day, and the other from the last day to the first day of the next term. But the defendant may, if he thinks proper, move the court, that the last rule may be peremptory. Impey, K. B.

The delivery of a declaration against a prisoner, though within two terms, is a nullity if there were no bill filed before; and he is entitled to his discharge under the rule of court. 5 W. & M. Nowell v. Bingham, 4 East's Rep. 16.

In all Notices of Declarations, care is to be taken that the cause be properly named, as well as the court in which the suit is instituted; and in notices of Declaration, the nature of the action is to be expressed, and at whose suit prosecuted, and the time limited to plead to such declaration. R. T. 1 G. 2.

Serving notice of a declaration filed together with the writ at the same time is irregular. Steward v. Lund, K. B. H. 50 G. 3. 12 East's Rep. 116.

Of entitling, and laying the day and place in Declarations.—It is usual when the cause of action will admit of it, to entitle the Declaration generally, of the term in which the writ is returnable: but it should always be entitled, after the time when the cause of action is stated to have accrued: therefore where the cause of action is stated to have accrued after the first day of the term in which the writ is returnable, the Declaration should be entitled of a subsequent day in that term, and not of the term generally; for as a general title refers to the first day of the term, upon such a title it would appear, that the action was commenced before the cause of it accrued. Yet where the cause of action was stated to have accrued on the first day of the term, the court on demurrer held, that the declaration might be entitled of the term generally, for the delivery of the declaration is the act of the party, and in ancient times it could not have been delivered till the sitting of the court; so that the cause of action might well have accrued, before the actual delivery of the Declaration. 1 Term Rep. 116. Vide 2 Lev. 176. and 3 Term Rep. 624.

If the cause of action arises within the term the Declaration is of, then do not entitle it as of the term generally, but make a special day after the cause of action accrued, as, "Thursday next after the Morrow of all Souls, in Michaelmas Term, in the 32d year of the reign of King George 3." instead of "Michaelmas Term" generally.

If the plaintiff declares on a note, the day is material, and an essential part of the agreement, from which he cannot vary; so on a bond or other writing; but in the case of a common assumpsit, the day is alledged only for form, and therefore the defendant cannot confine the plaintiff to the day alledged in the Declaration. Str. 21. Vide Co. Lit. 283. Plowd. Com. 24 a.

In other cases, as in trespass, assault, battery, &c. the day is immaterial, but is in general laid after the cause of action accrued, and before the term or time of which the Declaration is entitled.

In local actions, where possession of land is to be recovered, or damages for an actual trespass, or for waste, &c. affecting land, the plaintiff must lay his Declaration, or declare his injury to have happened in the very county and place where it really did happen; but in transitory actions, for injuries that might have happened any where, as debt, detinue, slander, and the like, the plaintiff may declare in what county he pleases, and then the trial must be had in that county in which the Declaration is laid. 3 Comm. 294. See titles Action, Venue.

In a qui-tam action, if the declaration do not on the record appear to be filed within a year of the writ, it is necessary to connect it with the writ by evidence of the time when the Declaration was filed, and stating the writ to be continued on the roll down to that time.—In C. P. the placitum being always intituled of the term in or after which the trial takes place, it furnishes no evidence of the date of the Declaration. Thistlewood v. Craycraft, 6 W. P. Taunton, 141.

In action of debt, upon a bond, the plaintiff in his declaration must alledge a place where the bond was made, because the jury should come from that place; and if this be omitted, the declaration is ill. Dyer, 15, 39. 1 Nels. Abr. 619.

It is good to lay large and sufficient damages in declarations: and damages shall not be given for that which is not contained in the declaration, and only for what is materially alledged. 10 Rep. 115. 1 Lill. Abr. 381.

Where a Declaration is defective, it is aided by the statutes of amendments and jeofails when on record; but this was heretofore allowed only in matters of form, not of substance unless the justice of the case required it. 2 Barnard, K. B. 153. 2 Str. 1162. 1202. 1 Wils. 173. Say. Rep. 150. 294. 2 Burr 1098. But by the liberality of modern practice, amendments have been allowed even in matters of substance, not only while the proceedings were on paper, but even in some cases when on record. See 7 T. R. 132. 447. (d.) 698. 2 Str. 890. Fitzgib. 193. 1 Barnard, 408. 418. 2 Saund. 402. 1 East. 372. Whilst the proceedings are in paper the amendment is at Common Law, and not within any of the statutes of amendments which relate only to proceedings on record. 1 Salk. 47. 3 Salk. 31. And there is no difference, as to the doctrine of amending at Common Law, between civil and criminal cases. 1 Salk. 51. 2 Lord Raym. 1038. 6 Mod. 285. *S. On filing Declarations, copies thereof are served on the defendants or their attornies, &c. And by an order of all the judges (12 W. 3.) the plaintiff's attorney is not obliged to deliver the defendant's attorney the original Declaration; but instead of it is to deliver a true copy of the Declaration; upon delivery or tender whereof, the defendant's attorney shall pay for such copy after the rate of 4d. per sheet, &c. and if any person refuse to pay for the copy tendered, the said copy is to be left in the office, with the clerk that keeps the files of Declarations, and thereupon the plaintiff's attorney giving rule to plead, may, for want of a plea, sign judgment; and before any plea shall be received, the defendant's attorney is to pay for the copy of the Declaration.

And by another order (Trin. 2 Geo. 2.) in every cause, where special or common bail is filed, and notice given to the plaintiff, a copy of the Declaration shall be delivered to the attorney for the defendant, who shall pay for it according to the usual rate; but if the defendant's attorney, or his clerk in his absence, refuses to pay for such copy; or if it happens the habitation of the attorney for the defendant be unknown to the attorney for the plaintiff; then it shall be lawful to leave the copy with the officer of the court appointed for filing Declarations, which shall be good, giving notice, &c.—There are several other rules of Court as to the filing and delivering Declarations, &c. for which see the several books of Practice, and further this Dict. titles Practice, Process, Prisoner, &c. Declarations and Issues are not now paid for on delivery, but are allowed in Costs afterwards.

DECLARATOR. Is an action, whereby we pray something to be declared in our favours. Scotch Dict.

DECLARATOR OF PROPERTY. Is when the complainer narrating his right to lands, desires he should be declared sole proprietor, and all others discharged to molest him any way. Scotch Dict.

DECLARATOR OF REDEMPTION. Is, when after a process before the Lords against the wadsetter, who refuses to renounce after the order of redemption is used, the Lords force him to renounce, and by a decreet declare the lands redeemed. Scotch Dict.

DECLARATORY ACTIONS. Are these wherein the right of the pursuer is craved to be declared: but nothing claimed to be done by the defender. Scotch Dict.

DECREE. The judgment of a court of equity on any bill preferred. See title Chancery.

A decree in Chancery is of the like nature with a judgment at Common Law. Chan. Rep. 234.

Several questions and disputes were heretofore warmly agitated, as to the authority of the Master of the Rolls to hear and determine causes; and as to his general power in the Court of Chancery: to quiet which, it was declared by stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 30. that all orders and decrees by him made, except such as by the course of the court were appropriated to the great seal alone, should be deemed to be valid, subject nevertheless to be discharged or allowed by the Lord Chancellor; and so as they shall not be enrolled till the same are signed by his Lordship.

If either party to the suit thinks himself aggrieved by a decree, he may petition the Chancellor for a re-hearing, whether it was heard before the Chancellor himself or any of the judges sitting for him, or before the Master of the Rolls. For in all cases it is the Chancellor's decree, and must be signed by him before it is enrolled; which is done of course, unless a re-hearing be desired. Every petition for a re-hearing must be signed by two counsel, usually such as have been concerned in the cause; certifying that they apprehend the cause is proper to be re-heard. And upon the re-hearing, all the evidence taken in the cause, whether read before or not, is then admitted to be read; because it is the decree of the Chancellor himself, who only sits to hear reasons why it should not be enrolled and perfected, at which time all omissions of either evidence or argument may be supplied. Gilb. Rep. 151, 2.—But after the decree is once signed and enrolled, it cannot be re-heard or rectified but by Bill of Review, or by appeal to the House of Lords.

A Bill of Review, may be had upon apparent error in judgment, appearing upon the face of the decree; or by special leave of the court, upon oath made, of the discovery of new matter or evidence, which could not possibly be had or used at the time when the decree passed. But no new evidence or matter then in the knowledge of the parties, and which might have been used before, shall be a sufficient ground for a Bill of Review. 3 Comm. 454. See further this Dict. title Chancery; and Vin. title Decree.

DECREET COGNITIONIS CAUSA. Is when the apparent heir is called to hear the debt constitute, it not being already clearly constitute by writ; and the appearing Heir renounces, being charged to enter Heir. Scotch Dict.

DECREET COGNITIONIS CAUSA, against Executors, is when the nearest of kin are pursued by the Executor Creditor, who hath no writ to instruct his Debt to hear the Debt constitute. Scotch Dict.

DECREET OF COMPRISING. Is when at the day appointed in the Letters, the Debitor being called, the messenger offers him his lands for the money; which if he have not ready, the Inquest declares the lands to belong to the Creditor for his payment. Scotch Dict.

DECREET OF EXONERATION. Is a decreet of the Commissars against the Creditors or nearest of kin; wherein it is proven, that the Executor hath executed the whole testament, and that all is exhausted by lawful sentences. Scotch Dict.

DECREET OF LOCALITY. Is a decreet modifying a stipend for a minister, dividing and proportioning the same among the heretors. Scotch Dict.

DECREET OF MODIFICATION. Is that which modifies a stipend to a minister, but doth not divide and proportion it among the heretors. Scotch Dict.

DECREET OF VALUATION. Is a sentence of the Lords (who are now in the place of the Commission) determining the extent and value of teinds. Scotch Dict.

DECRETALS, Decretales.] A volume of the Canon Law, so called as containing the decrees of sundry Popes; or a Digest of the canons of all the councils that pertained to one matter under one head. See title Canon Law.

DECURIARE. To bring into order. Mon. Ang. Tom. p. 243.

DEDBANA, Ded-bane, Sax.] An actual homicide, or manslaughter. Leg. H. 1. c. 85.

DEDI, [I have given]. This word amounts to a warranty in law; as if it be said in a deed or conveyance, That A.B. hath Given, &c. to C. D. it is a warranty to him and his heirs. Co. Lit. 304. Also dedi imports a power of giving any thing. Hob. 12. See titles Conveyance, Deed.

DEDICATION-DAY, Festum Dedicationis. The feast of dedication of churches, or rather the feast-day of the Saint and Patron of a church; which was celebrated not only by the inhabitants of the place, but by those of all the neighbouring villages, who usually came thither; and such assemblies were allowed as lawful: it was usual for the people to feast and drink on those days; and in many parts of England, they still meet every year in villages for this purpose, which days are called Feasts or Wakes. Cowel.

DEDIMUS POTESTATEM. A Writ or Commission given to one or more private persons, for the speeding some act appertaining to a judge, or some court: and it is granted most commonly upon suggestion, that the party who is to do something before a judge, or in court, is so weak that he cannot travel; as where a person lives in the country, to take an answer in Chancery; to examine witnesses in a cause depending in that court; to levy a fine in the Common Pleas, &c.—On renewing the commission of the peace, there cometh a writ of dedimus potestatem out of Chancery, directed to some ancient justice to take the oath of him, which is newly inserted. See title Justices of Peace.

DEDIMUS POTESTATEM DE ATTORNATO FACIENDO. As the words of writs do command the defendant to appear, &c. anciently the judges would not suffer the parties to make attornies in any action or suit without the King's writ of Dedimus Potestatem, to receive their attornies: but now by statutes, the plaintiff or defendant may make attornies in suits without such writs. New. Nat. Br. 55, 56. See title Attornies.

DEED,

FACTUM.] An instrument in parchment, or paper, but chiefly in parchment, comprehending a contract or bargain between party and party; or an agreement of the parties thereto, for the matters therein contained: and it consists of three principal points, writing, sealing and delivery; writing, to express the contents; sealing, to testify the consent of the parties; and delivery, to make it binding and perfect. Termes de Ley.

I. What a Deed is.
II. The Requisites to make a good Deed.
III. How a Deed may be avoided..
IV. Of the inrolling, exposition, and pleading of Deeds.

I. A Deed is a Writing sealed and delivered by the parties. 1 Inst. 171. It is sometimes called a charter, charta, from its materials; but most usually, when applied to the transaction of private subjects, it is called a deed, in Latin factum, because it is the most solemn and authentic act that a man can possibly perform, with relation to the disposal of his property; and therefore a man shall always be estopped by his own deed, or not permitted to aver or prove any thing in contradiction to what he has once so solemnly and deliberately avowed. Plowd. 434. If a deed be made by more parties than one, there ought to be regularly as many copies of it as there are parties, and each should be cut or indented (formerly in acute angles, instar dentium, like the teeth of a saw, but at present in a waving line) on the top or sides to tally, or correspond with each other; which deed so made, is called an Indenture. Formerly when deeds were more concise than at present, it was usual to write both parts on the same piece of parchment, beginning at the middle and continuing to the contrary ends, with some word or letters of the alphabet written between them; through which the parchment was cut either in a straight or indented line, in such a manner as to leave half the word on one part, and half on the other. Deeds thus made were denominated syngrapha by the canonists, and with us chirographa, or hand-writings, Mirror, c. 2. § 27.; the word cirographum or cyrographum being usually that which is divided in making the indentures of a fine. See title Chirograph.—But at length indenting only has come into use, without cutting through any letters at all; and it seems at present to serve for little other purpose, than to give name to the species of the deed. See further 1 Inst. 229. (a) in n. —When the several parts of an indenture are interchangeably executed by the several parties, that part or copy which is executed by the grantor is usually called the Original, and the rest are Counterparts; though of late it is most frequent for all the parties to execute every part, which renders them all originals. A deed made by one party only is not indented, but polled or shaved quite even; and therefore called a deed-poll, or a single deed. Litt. § 371, 2.

A deed-poll is said to be a deed testifying that only one of the parties to the agreement hath put his seal to the same, where such party is the principal or only person, whose consent or act is necessary to the deed; and it is therefore a plain deed, without indenting, and is used when the vendor, for example, only seals, and there is no need of the vendee's sealing a counterpart, because the nature of the contract is such, as to require no covenant from the vendee, &c. Co. Lit. 55.

The several parts of deeds by indenture are belonging to the feoffor, grantor, or lessor, who have one; the feoffee, grantee, or lessee, who have another; and some other persons, as trustees, a third, &c. and the deed poll which is single, and of but one part, is delivered to the feoffee, or grantee, &c.

All the parts of a deed indented, in judgment of law, make but one entire deed; but every part is of as great force as all the parts together, and they are esteemed the mutual acts of either party, who may be bound by either part of the same, and the words of the indenture are the words of either party, &c. But a deed-poll is the sole deed of him that makes it, and the words thereof shall be said to be his words, and bind him only. Plowd. 134. 421. Lit. s. 370.

II. 1. The first requisite of a Deed is, that there be persons able to contract and be contracted with, for the purposes intended by the deed; and also a thing, or subject-matter to be contracted for; all which must be expressed by sufficient names. Co. Lit. 35. So as in every grant, there must be a grantor, a grantee, and a thing granted; in every lease, a lessor, a lessee, and a thing demised.

Some persons are disabled to contract by Common Law, and some by statute; some absolutely, and some secundum quid only; as in case of infants, feme coverts, ideots, persons non compos mentis, aliens, tenants in tail, ecclesiastical persons, and others; some of which may not make any deeds or estates by them at all, others but so and so limited and qualified. Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 28.—See title Leases.

Disabilities to make Deeds, &c. are chiefly amongst persons of non-sane memory, infants, aliens, women who have husbands, men who have wives, &c. persons born deaf and dumb, persons attaint of treason or felony, or, in a præmunire, clerks convict, tenant in tail, ecclesiastical persons, as bishops, parsons, and the like, with respect to lands, &c. which they hold as such; joint-tenants, tenants in common, coparceners, disseissors, disseissees, &c. See these several titles.

He who has only an estate for his own or another's life, or a lease for years of land, may give, grant, or charge it at his pleasure, for so long as his estate lasts; and it will be good to all purposes, and against all persons for that time.

And a man who has an estate in land to him and his wife, and his heirs, may make what estate he will of it, and this will be good against all but his wife, and that for her life only. 7 Co. 12. Co. Lit. 42. Perk. § 182.

The King, for the greatness of his person, is disabled to take by deed in pais; and therefore if a feoffment be made to him there, and livery of seisin be made upon it, this will be void; but he is to take by matter of record, which is of an higher nature than a deed. Fitz. Fait and Feoffment, 21.

Leases made to the King by colleges, deans and chapters, or any other, having a spiritual or ecclesiastical living, against the stat. 13 Eliz. c. 10. are restrained by the same act, as well as leases made to common persons. 5 Co. 14.

The names of the parties to deeds serve to distinguish persons, and to make the person intended certain; yet mistakes in this, unless they be very gross, will not hurt: nihil facit error nominis cum de corpore constat. Bulst. 21, 22. 2 Bulst. 302, 303. Co. Lit. 3. Perk. § 36.

But if the name of baptism or surname be mistaken, as John for Thomas, &c. this is dangerous. Moor, 407. 897. And see 2 Bulst. 70. Perk. § 39.

It is also prudent to add the addition of each party, as the place of residence, with his or her degree, profession, or mystery.

There are many descriptions of grantors and grantees; as (1.) Proper names of baptism and surnames, and the names of corporations, or bodies politic or corporate. (2.) Names of dignities, office, and the like. And these (of both sorts) will admit a description made good by reputation. And so land will pass to one, by the name of a son, who is a bastard; so to one by the name of a wife, who is not a wife, 27 Ed. 3. 85. Bulst. 3. if they be reputed or known by that name. Hob. 32.

There must be such a person in esse at the time of the deed made as is named, and the parties must be able to give, and capable to receive, that which is given or granted by the deed. Plowd. 345. Co. Lit. 2, 3. Perk. 43. 52.

And therefore if an annuity be granted to the right heirs of J. S. he being then living, this is void; for there is none such, nor can be whilst he lives. Perk. § 52. See Cro. Car. 22.

If a man gets another name by common esteem than his right name, and he is known by his other name, his deed made by this other name may be good. 6 Co. 36. Co. Lit. 3. Perk. § 41.

The mistake is less dangerous where any other part of the deed, or some other addition, shall make the person intended certain. 6 Co. 36. Co. Lit. 3. Perk. § 40.

As to the subject-matter of Contracts, Grants, &c. See this Dict. title Grant, and other proper titles.

2. The deed must be founded upon good and sufficient consideration. Not upon an usurious contract (stat. 13 Eliz. c. 8.); nor upon fraud or collusion, either to deceive purchasers bonâ fide (stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4.); or just and lawful creditors (stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5.); any of which bad considerations will vacate the deed, and subject such persons, as put the same in ure, to forfeitures, and often to imprisonment. A deed also or other grant, made without any consideration, is as it were of no effect; for it is construed to inure, or to be effectual only to the use of the grantor himself. Perk. § 533. The consideration may be either a good or a valuable one. See further title Consideration, and post, III.

In deeds, the consideration is a principal thing to give them effect: and the foundation of deeds ought always to be honest. That a deed was executed upon a corrupt agreement, dehors the deed, may be averred in pleading. See the case of Collins and Blantern, a new and very peculiar case. 2 Wils. 341. &c.

3. The deed must be written, or (as is the case at present with many instruments, such as Bonds, Policies of Insurance, &c.) printed; for it may be in any character, or any language; but it must be upon paper or parchment. For if it be written on stone, board, linen, leather, or the like, it is no deed. Co. Lit. 229. F. N. B. 122.

All the matter and form of a deed must be written before the sealing and delivery of it; for if a man seals and delivers an empty piece of parchment or paper, although he therewithal gives commandment that an obligation or other matter shall be written in it, which is done accordingly, yet this will not make it a good deed. Co. Lit. 171. Perk. § 118. 119. See Moor, 28. Hetley, 136, 7.

A deed may be written in any hand, as in text, court or Roman hand; or in any language, as in Latin or French, and is as good as a deed written in English, and in a secretary hand. 2 Co. 3.

It may be written either in a piece of loose paper or parchment, or in a paper or parchment sewed in a book. Bro. Oblig. 67. Co. Lit. 137. 139.

A deed must also have the regular Stamps, imposed on it by the several statutes, for the increase of the public revenue; else it cannot be given in evidence. See post, 7.

Formerly many conveyances were made by parol, or word of mouth only, without writing; but this giving a handle to a variety of frauds, the stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. enacts, that no lease, estate, or interest in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, made by livery of seisin, or by parol only, (except leases not exceeding three years from the making, and whereupon the reserved rent is at least two thirds of the real value,) shall be looked upon as of greater force than a lease or estate at will; nor shall any assignment, grant, or surrender of any interest in any freehold hereditaments be valid; unless in both cases the same be put in writing, and signed by the party granting, or his agent, lawfully authorised in writing. See title Frauds.

4. The matter written must be legally and orderly set forth; that is, there must be words sufficient to specify the agreement, and bind the parties; which sufficiency must be left to the courts of law to determine. Co. Lit. 225. For it is not absolutely necessary in law, to have all the formal parts that are usually drawn out in Deeds, so as there be sufficient words to declare clearly and legally the party's meaning. But, as these formal and orderly parts are calculated to convey that meaning in the clearest, distinctest, and most effectual manner, and have been well considered and settled by the wisdom of successive ages, it is prudent not to depart from them without good reason or urgent necessity; therefore they shall be recapitulated in their usual order. See 1 Inst. 6.

It may in the first place be generally observed with regard to the words requisite in a deed; that they depend upon the estate intended to be conveyed. If a man would purchase lands or tenements in fee-simple, it behoves him to have these words in his purchase, To have and to hold to him and to his heirs; for these words, his heirs, (only) make the estate of inheritance, in all feoffments and grants. But this is to be understood of natural bodies: for if lands be given to a sole body politic or corporate, (as to a bishop, parson, vicar, master of an hospital, &c.) there, to give him an estate of inheritance in his politic or corporate capacity, he must use these words, To have and to hold to him and his successors. Co. Lit. 8. &c.

If an estate tail is intended to be created, the words must be, To have and to hold to him and to the heirs of his body. See title Fee.

The insertion of the word heirs or successors, as the case requires, is therefore absolutely necessary in conveyances of estates of inheritance; for if a man purchase lands by these words, To have and to hold to him for ever, he has but an estate for term of life. See Co. Lit. 8. b. &c.

We may now proceed more particularly to observe on the formal and orderly parts of a Deed.

The Premises are used to set forth the number and names of the parties, with their additions or titles. They also contain the recital, if any, of such deeds, agreements, or matters of fact, as are necessary to explain the reasons upon which the present transaction is founded; and herein also is set down the consideration upon which the deed is made. And then follows the certainty of the grantor, grantee, and thing granted. See title Premises.

Next come the Habendum and Tenendum. The office of the habendum is properly to determine what estate or interest is granted by the deed; though this may be performed, and sometimes is performed in the premises. In which case the habendum may lessen, enlarge, explain, or qualify, but not totally contradict or be repugnant to the estate granted in the premises. As if a grant be "to A. and the heirs of his body," in the premises, habendum "to him and his heirs for ever," or vice versa, here A. has an estate tail, and a fee-simple expectant thereon. Co. Lit. 21. 2 Roll. Rep. 19. 23. Cro. Jac. 476. But, had it been in the premises, "to him and his heirs," habendum, "to him for life," the habendum would be utterly void, 2 Rep. 23. 8 Rep. 56.; for an estate of inheritance is vested in him before the habendum comes, and shall not afterwards be taken away, or devested, by it. See title Habendum. The tenendum, "and to hold," is now of very little use, and is only kept in by custom. It was sometimes formerly used to signify the tenure, by which the estate granted was to be holden; viz. "tenendum per servitium militare, in burgagio, in libero socagio, &c." But, all these being now reduced to free and common socage, the tenure is never specified. Before the statute of quia emptores, 18 Ed. 1. st. 1. it was also sometimes used to denote the lord of whom the land should be holden; but that statute directing all future purchasers to hold, not of the immediate grantor, but of the chief lord of the fee; this use of the tenendum hath been also antiquated; though for a long time after we find it mentioned in ancient charters, that the tenements shall be holden, de capitalibus dominis feodi, but, as this expressed nothing more than the statute had already provided for, it gradually grew out of use. See title Tenure.

Next follow the Terms of stipulation, if any, upon which the grant is made: the first of which is the reddendum, or reservation, whereby the grantor doth create or reserve some new thing to himself out of what he had before granted. As "rendering therefore yearly the sum of ten shillings, or a pepper-corn, or two days' ploughing, or the like." Under the pure feodal system, this render, reditus, return, or rent, consisted in chivalry, principally of military services; in villenage, of the most slavish offices; and in socage it usually consists of money, though it may still consist of services, or of any other certain profit. To make a reddendum good, if it be of any thing newly created by the deed, the reservation must be to the grantors, or some, or one of them, and not to any stranger to the deed. Plowd. 13. 8 Rep. 71. But if it be of ancient services or the like, annexed to the land, then the reservation may be to the lord of the fee. See Reddendum.

Another of the terms upon which a grant may be made is a Condition; as to which see fully title Condition.

Next may follow the clause of Warranty.

This was anciently inserted in deeds to secure the estate to the grantee and his heirs, &c. and was a covenant real, annexed to the land granted, by which the grantor and his heirs were bound to warrant the same to the grantee and his heirs, and that they should quietly hold and enjoy it; or upon voucher, &c. the grantor should yield other lands, to the value of what should be evicted. See further title Warranty.

After warranty usually follow Covenants, or conventions; which are clauses of agreement contained in a deed, whereby either party may stipulate for the truth of certain facts, or may bind himself to perform, or give, something to the other. Thus the grantor may covenant that he hath a right to convey; or for the grantee's quiet enjoyment; or the like; the grantee may covenant to pay his rent, or keep the premises in repair, &c. If the covenantor covenants for himself and his heirs, it is then a covenant real, and descends upon the heirs, who are bound to perform it, provided they have assets by descent, but not otherwise: if he covenants also for his executors and administrators, his personal assets, as well as his real, are likewise pledged for the performance of the covenant; which makes such covenant a better security than any warranty. It is also in some respects a less security, and therefore more beneficial to the grantor; who usually covenants only for the acts of himself, and his ancestors, whereas a general warranty extended to all mankind. For which reasons the covenant has in modern practice totally superseded the other. See fully this Dict. titles Assets, Covenant, Assignment, Heir.

Lastly, comes the Conclusion, which mentions the execution and date of the deed, or the time of its being given or executed, either expressly, or by reference to some day or year before-mentioned. Not but a deed is good, although it mention no date: or hath a false date, or even if it hath an impossible date, as the 30th of February, provided the real day of its being dated or given, that is delivered, can be proved. Co. Lit. 46. Dyer, 28.—See further title Date.

5. A fifth requisite for making a good deed is the reading of it. This is necessary, wherever any of the parties desire it, and, if it be not done on his request, the deed is void as to him. If he can, he should read it himself; if he be blind or illiterate, another must read it to him. If it be read falsely, it will be void; at least for so much as is misrecited; unless it be agreed by collusion, that the deed shall be read false, on purpose to make it void; for in such case it shall bind the fraudulent party. 2 Rep. 3. 9. 11 Rep. 27.

6. It is requisite that the party or parties, whose deed it is, should seal, and now in most cases should sign it also. The use of seals, as a mark of authenticity to letters and other instruments in writing, is extremely ancient. We read of it among the Jews and Persians in the earliest and most sacred records of history. But in the times of our Saxon ancestors, they were not much in use in England. The method of the Saxons was for such as could write to subscribe their names, and, whether they could write or not, to affix the sign of the cross; which custom our illiterate vulgar do, for the most part, to this day keep up; by signing a cross for their mark, when unable to write their names. In like manner, the Normans, at their first settlement in France, used the practice of sealing only, without writing their names: which custom continued, when learning made its way among them, though the reason for doing it had ceased; and hence the charter of Edward the Confessor to Westminster-Abbey, himself being brought up in Normandy, was witnessed only by his seal, and is generally thought to be the oldest sealed charter of any authenticity in England. Lamb. Archeion, 51.—At the Conquest, the Norman lords brought over into this kingdom their own fashions; and introduced waxen seals only, instead of the English methods of writing their names, and signing with the sign of the cross. Ingulph. And in the reign of Edward I. every freeman, and even such of the more substantial villeins as were fit to be put upon juries, had their distinct particular seals. Stat. Exon. 14 Ed. 1. Coats of Arms were not introduced into seals, nor indeed into any other use, till about the reign of Richard I. who brought them from the Croisade in the Holy Land.

The signing is of great use, for the subscribing witnesses to the deed may be dead, when proving their death, and the hand-writing of the party executing the deed, will be sufficient to establish the same. If a writing is not sealed, it cannot be a deed. 3 Inst. 169. 5 Rep. 23. See further, 2 Rep. 3. 2 Rol. Abr. 28. 12 Rep. 90. Hob. 96.

If two make a deed, and one of them seals it at one time, and the other at another time; this is as good as if they sealed it together. Lane, 32.

If A. executes a deed for himself and his partner, by the authority of his partner, and in his presence, it is a good execution though only sealed once. 1 Term Rep. 313.

A person executing a deed for his principal under a power of attorney should sign in the name of the principal. 6 Term Rep. 176. See 2 Term Rep. 142.

The neglect of signing, and resting only upon the authenticity of seals, remained very long among us; for it was held in all our books that sealing alone was sufficient to authenticate a deed: and hence the common form of attesting deeds, "sealed and delivered," notwithstanding the stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. before mentioned, revives the Saxon custom, and expressly directs the signing, in all grants of lands, and many other species of deeds: in which therefore signing seems to be now as necessary as sealing, though it hath been sometimes held that the one includes the other. 3 Lev. 1. Stra. 764.

By stat. 54 Geo. 3. c. 168. to amend the laws respecting the attestation of instruments of appointment and revocation made in exercise of certain powers in deeds or wills, after reciting that powers, authorities, and trusts are in many cases required to be executed by deeds signed by or under the hands of the persons executing or consenting thereto, and it has been the ordinary practice in the memorandum of attestation of deeds to express the facts of sealing and delivering only, and that the omission of the word signed in such attestation might affect titles under such deeds although actually signed by the parties; it is enacted, that every deed or instrument then already made with intent to execute any power, &c. shall if duly signed, &c. be from the date thereof of the like validity as if a memorandum of signature had been subjoined by the attesting witnesses.

Since the passing of this act the practice has been, in cases not only of deeds for execution of powers but generally of other deeds, to insert in the memorandum of the attestation the words "signed, sealed and delivered," and this is the safest and properest way.

7. A seventh requisite to a good deed is, that it be delivered by the party himself or his certain attorney: which therefore is also expressed in the attestation, "sealed and delivered." A deed takes effect only from this tradition or delivery; for if the date be false or impossible, the delivery ascertains the time of it. And if another person seals the deed, yet if the party delivers it himself, he thereby adopts the sealing; Perk. § 130. and by a parity of reason the signing also, and makes them both his own. A delivery may be either absolute, that is, to the party or grantee himself; or to a third person, to hold till some condition be performed on the part of the grantee; in which last case it is not delivered as a deed, but as an escrow; that is, as a scrowl or writing, which is not to take effect as a deed, till the condition be performed, and then it is a deed to all intents and purposes. Co. Lit. 36.

If I have sealed my deed, and after I deliver it to him to whom it is made, or to some other by his appointment, and say nothing, this is a good delivery.

So if I take the deed in my hand, and use these, or the like words, here take him; or, this will serve; or, I deliver this as my deed; or I deliver him you; these are deliveries.

So if I make a deed of land to another, and being upon the land, I deliver the deed to him in the name of seisin of the land; this is a good delivery.

So if the deed be sealed, or lying in a window, or on a table, and I use these, or the like words, There he is, take it as my deed: this is a good delivery, and perfects the deed; for, as a deed may be delivered by words without acts, so may it also be delivered by acts without words. 9 Co. 137. Dyer, 167. 192. Co. Lit. 36. 49. 35 Ass. pl. 6. Contra, if the party to whom made takes it without any act done purporting to be a delivery. But where parties have come for the purpose, and done every thing but delivery, it has been adjudged a good delivery. Cro. Eliz. 7. 1 Leon. 140.

Regularly there may not be two deliveries of a deed, for where the first doth take effect, the second is void: unless it be where the deed is delivered to a stranger as an escrow; or, when a deed, good at first, becomes void afterwards; or, a feme covert seals a deed, and after being sole, delivers it again, &c. Perk. sect. 154. Co. Lit. 48. 5 Rep. 119.

The stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 60. § 17. avoids a bill of sale of a registered ship, which does not truly and accurately recite the certificate of registry: where parties by mistake mis-recited in a bill of sale the certificate of registry, by stating Guernsey as the port where the certificate was granted instead of Weymouth, which mistake was rectified when discovered, by consent of all parties and the deed delivered de novo, the court of K. B. held that no new stamp was necessary on such re-delivery or re-execution: the deed taking no effect from its first delivery, and the defect arising not from intention but from mistake, and the alteration merely making the contract what it was originally intended to have been. Cole v. Parkin, T. 50 G. 3. 12 East's Rep. 471.

The delivery of a deed may be alledged at any rate after the date; but not before. Dyer, 315. A deed may be good without all the orderly and formal parts: but without delivery, it is no deed. 1 Inst. 35. 2 Rep. 5.

8. The last requisite to the validity of a deed is, the attestation, or execution of it in the presence of witnesses: this however is necessary, rather for preserving the evidence, than for constituting the essence of the deed. And as to such attestation so far as relates to signing and sealing, see ante, II. 6. Our modern deeds are in reality nothing more than an improvement or amplification of the brevia testata mentioned by the feodal writers; (Feud. l. 1. t. 4.) which were written memorandums, introduced to perpetuate the tenor of the conveyance and investiture, when grants by parol only became the foundation of frequent dispute and uncertainty. To this end they registered in the deed the persons who attended as witnesses, which was formerly done without their signing their names, (that not being always in their power) but they only heard the deed read; and then the clerk or scribe added their names, in a sort of memorandum, "hiis testibus," &c. This like all other solemn transactions, was originally done only coram paribus, (Feud. l. 2. t. 32.) and frequently when assembled in the court-baron, hundred, or county-court, which was then expressed in the attestation, teste comitatu, hundredo, &c. Spelm. Gloss. 228. Madox Formul. N. 221. 322. 660.—Afterwards the attestation of other witnesses was allowed, the trial in case of a dispute being still reserved to the pares; with whom the witnesses (if more than one) were associated and joined in the verdict; (Co. Lit. 6.) till that also was abrogated by the stat. of York, 12 Edw. 2. st. 1. c. 2. And in this manner, with some such clause of hiis testibus, are all old deeds and charters, particularly Magna Charta, witnessed. And in the time of Sir Edward Coke, creations of nobility were still witnessed in the same manner. 2 Inst. 77. But in the King's common charters, writs, or letters-patent, the stile is now altered: for at present the King is his own witness, and attests his letters-patent thus, "witness ourself at Westminster, &c." a form which was introduced by Richard I. but not commonly used till about the beginning of the fifteenth century; nor the clause of hiis testibus entirely discontinued till the reign of Henry VIII. which was also the æra of discontinuing it, in the deeds of subjects, learning being then revived, and the faculty of writing more general; and therefore ever since that time the witnesses have usually subscribed their attestation, either at the bottom, or on the back of the deed. 2 Inst. 78.

III. From what has been before laid down, it will follow, that if a deed wants any of the essential requisites beforementioned; either, 1. Proper parties, and a proper subject matter.—2. A good and sufficient consideration.—3. Writing on paper or parchment, duly stamped.—4. Sufficient and legal words, properly disposed.—5. Reading if desired before the execution.—6. Sealing; and, by the statute, in most cases signing also;—or 7. Delivery, it is a void deed ab initio. It may also be avoided by matter ex post facto, as 1. By rasure, interlining, or other alteration in any material part; unless a memorandum be made thereof at the time of execution and attestation. 11 Rep. 27.—2. By breaking off, or defacing the seal. 5 Rep. 23.—3. By delivering it up to be cancelled; that is, to have lines drawn over it in the form of a lattice work or cancelli; though the phrase is now used figuratively for any manner of obliteration or defacing it.—4. By the disagreement of such, whose concurrence is necessary, in order for the deed to stand; as a husband where a feme covert is concerned; an infant, or person under duress, when those disabilities are removed; and the like.—5. By the judgment or decree of a court of judicature. This was anciently the province of the court of Star-chamber, and now of the Chancery; when it appears that the deed was obtained by fraud, force, or other foul practice: or is proved to be an absolute forgery. Toth. 24. 1 Ventr. 348. In any of these cases the deed may be avoided, either in part or totally, according as the cause of avoidance is more or less extensive.

More particularly.—If there be any alteration, rasure, or interlining made in any part of the deed before the delivery of it, this will not hurt the deed.

But in such cases it is policy to make a memorandum of it upon the back of the deed, and to give the witnesses notice of it, (this is now usually done in the attestation of the deed thus: Sealed and delivered, the word—being first interlined, &c.) For otherwise, if it be in any place material, as in the name of the grantor, grantee, in the limiting of the estate, or the like, and it cannot be proved to be done before the sealing and delivery of it, especially if it be a deed poll, it is very suspicious. Co. Lit. 37. 225. Perk. § 125, 126, 127, 128. 155.

Where an estate cannot have its essence without a deed, there, if the deed is rased in any material part, after the delivery, it makes the estate void: but if the estate may have essence without a deed, then, notwithstanding it is created by deed, and that deed is rased, it shall not destroy the estate, but the deed. 1 Nels. Abr. 625.

When a chose in action is created by deed, the destruction of such deed is the destruction of the duty itself; as in case of a bond, bill, &c. though it is not so, where an estate or interest is created by a deed. 3 Salk. 120.

If a deed be suppressed, on proof made that it came to the party's hands, and of its contents, the person injured will have the same benefit to hold the estate, as if the deed could be produced. 2 Vern. 280. A person committed for burning a deed, see 2 Vern. 561. Abr. Cas. Eq. 169. An indorsement on a deed, at the time of the sealing and delivery, is a part of the same: but if an indorsement be after the delivery, it is a new deed. Mod. Cas. 237.

Deeds, if fraudulently made; when got by corrupt agreement, as on usurious contract; and when made by force or duress, &c. are void: so they are for uncertainty, and by reason of infancy, coverture, or other disability in the makers, &c. 2 Rol. Abr. 28. 1 Inst. 253. 11 Rep. 27.

A deed may be good in part, and void in part; or good against one person, and void as to another: if all the parts of a deed may by law stand together, no one part shall make the whole void. And if a deed by any construction of law be construed to have legal operation, the law will not make it utterly void, though it may not operate according to the purport of the deed: also the law will transpose and marshal clauses in deeds, to come at their true meaning; but not to confound them. Where the words of a deed may have a double intendment, one standing with law, and the other contrary to it, the intendment that standeth with law shall be taken. 1 Lil. Abr. 421. 1 Inst. 42. 217. 1 Shep. Abr. 540.

IV. Deeds of Bargain and Sale are to be inrolled, by stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 16. A copy of a bargain and sale inrolled, shall be as sufficient as the original deed, by stat. 10 An. c. 18. sect. 3. But estates in fee are now generally granted and conveyed by indentures of lease and release. All deeds are to be registered in the counties of York and Middlesex. Stat. 2 & 3 An. c. 4. 5 An. c. 18. 6 An. c. 35. 7 An. c. 20. 8 Geo. 2. c. 6. 25 Geo. 2. c. 4. And it is much to be wished that registers were universally established throughout the kingdom. See further titles Bargain and Sale, Conveyance, Inrollment, &c.

It may here be cursorily observed, that of conveyances by the Common Law, some may be called original, or primary conveyances; which are such by means whereof the benefit or estate is created, or first arises: others are derivative, or secondary; whereby the benefit or estate, originally created, is enlarged, restrained, transferred, or extinguished.

Original conveyances are,—1. Feoffment;—2. Gift;—3. Grant;—4. Lease;—5. Exchange;—6. Partition.—Derivative, are,—7. Release;—8. Confirmation;—9. Surrender;—10. Assignment;—11. Defeasance.—See those titles, and also particularly title Conveyance, and 2 Comm. 295. 310.

There are four grounds for the exposition of deeds. 1. That they may be beneficial to the taker. 2. That where the words may be employed to some intent, they shall never be void. 3. That the words be construed according to the intention of the parties, and not otherwise; and the intent of the parties shall take effect, if it may possibly stand with law. 4. That they are to be consonant to the rules of the law. And deeds shall have a reasonable exposition, without injury against the grantor, to the greatest advantage of the grantee. They are to be expounded upon the whole, and if the second part contradicts the first, such second part shall be void; but if the latter part expounds or explains the former, which it may do, both of them shall stand. Plowd. 160. Raym. 142. 6 Rep. 36. 1 Inst. 313. 1 Rol. Rep. 375.

If a deed correctly describe land by its quantities and occupiers, though it describe it as being in a parish in which it is not, the land shall pass by the deed. 5 W. P. T. 207.

The first deed of a person, and last will stand in force. In deeds indented, all parties are estopped, or concluded, to say any thing against what is contained in the deed. 1 Inst. 45. And where a deed is by indenture between parties, none can have an action upon that deed, but he who is a party to it; but where it is a deed poll, one may covenant with another who is not a party to it, to do certain acts, for the non-performance whereof he may bring an action. 2 Lev. 74.

Where an interest is the same as that secured by a deed, assumpsit will not lie, but the remedy is upon the deed. 1 Maul. & Selw. Rep. 573.

Where a man justifies title under a deed, he is to produce the deed: if a deed is alledged in pleading, it must be shewed to the court that the court may judge of the validity of it, and whether there are sufficient words to make a good contract; and when it is shown to the court, the deed shall remain in court all the term, in the hands of the custos brevium; but at the end of the term, it shall be delivered to the party. If the deed is denied, it must remain in court till the plea is determined. 10 Rep. 88. Wood, 235. A deed set forth with a profert hic in curia, remains in court in judgment of law all that term, and any person may, during that term, have benefit by it, though he hath it not ready to shew: the adverse party may take any advantage by the deed that it will afford him. 5 Rep. 74. 1 Nels. 625.

Where two parts of an indenture of charter-party were supposed to have been interchangeably executed, and the part, of which the master of the chartered vessel had the custody, was lost at sea with the ship, the court of C. P. would not compel the charterer, being sued thereon, to grant inspection and a copy of the other part, for the purpose of the plaintiff's declaring with certainty. Street v. Brown, 6 W. P. Taunton, 302.

Deeds are not now actually brought into court, but generally remain in the hands of the party's attorney, who gives oyer and copy of them to the attorney of the other party, if demanded. See title Oyer.

DEEDS, stealing of. At Common Law, bonds, bills, and notes, which concern mere choses in action, were held not to be such goods whereof larceny might be committed: but by stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25. they are put upon the same footing, with respect to larcenies, as the money they were meant to secure. See titles Felony, Robbery.

DEEMSTERS, from the Sax. dema, a judge or umpire.] Are a kind of judges in the Isle of Man, who, without process, or any charge to the parties, decide all controversies in that island; and they are chosen from among themselves. Cam. Brit.

DEER FALD. A park, or deer fold; Sax. deer, fera, and fald, stabulum. Cowel.

DEER HAYES. Are engines or great nets made of cords to catch deer; and no person not having a park, &c. shall keep any of these nets under the penalty of 40*s.* a month. Stat. 19 H. 7. c. 11. See title Game.

DEER STEALERS. Much of the law relating to these offenders is implicated in the general rules relative to hunting in forests, &c. for which see this Dict. title Game, more at large.

Several ancient statutes have been made to punish Deer-stealers; and a very severe one 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. known by the name of the Black Act, against those and other offenders. See title Black Act.

See the statutes 3 E. 1. c. 20. against trespassers in parks: 21 Ed. 1. st. 2. de malefactoribus in parcis. 1 H. 7. c. 7. of unlawful hunting in parks by night. 1 Jac. 1. c. 27. against sellers and buyers of deer who are to forfeit 40*s.* stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 28. by which wounding or killing deer in a park is punishable with transportation.

The above and all former statutes except 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. (Black Act) are repealed by stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 30. which though like some others of the game laws inaccurately penned, or copied on record, is now generally pursued for the punishment of Deer-stealers. See Will's Reports, 49 in n.

By this stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 30. if any persons shall hunt or take in a snare, or kill or wound any red or fallow deer in any forest, chase, &c. whether inclosed or not: or in any inclosed park, paddock, &c. without the consent of the owner, or be aiding in such offence, they shall forfeit 20*l.* for the first offence; and also 30*l.* for each deer wounded, killed or taken. A game-keeper offending to forfeit double.—For a second offence offenders shall be transported for seven years. § 1.—Justices to transmit convictions to the sessions. § 2.—Justices may grant warrants to search for heads, skins, &c. of stolen deer, and for toils, snares, &c. and persons having such in their possession to forfeit from 30*l.* to 10*l.* at the discretion of the justices. §§ 4, 5, 6.—Persons unlawfully setting nets or snares, to forfeit for the first offence from 10*l.* to 5*l.*—And for every other offence 20*l.* to 10*l.* § 7.—Persons pulling down pales or fences of any forest, chase, park, paddock, wood, &c. subject to the penalties annexed to the first offence for killing deer. § 8.—Dogs, guns and engines may be seized by park-keepers; and persons resisting shall be transported for seven years. § 9.—Penalties may be levied by distress; in default of which offenders to be committed for twelve months. § 11, &c.—No certiorari to be allowed, unless the party convicted become bound to the prosecutor in 100*l.* to pay him all costs and damages, and to the Justice in 60*l.* to prosecute the certiorari with effect. § 19, 20.; and see § 23. by which later § it seems that convictions are not removable by certiorari on mere points of informality, in case the facts alleged are sufficient to support the conviction.—See Burn's Just. tit. Game, V. 1. ii.—1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 60. and this Dict. title Certiorari.—Appeal given to the sessions. § 21, &c.—Prosecutions limited to twelve months from the time of the offence committed. § 25.

By stat. 42 G. 3. c. 107. 'more effectually to prevent the stealing of deer,' persons who shall illegally course, hunt, snare, kill, wound, or shoot at, destroy, or carry away, any red or fallow deer in any inclosure for deer, without consent of the owner, are declared guilty of felony punishable by seven years transportation. § 1.—Persons committing such offences in uninclosed grounds shall forfeit 50*l.* (which by stat. 51 Geo. 3. c. 120. may be mitigated to 20*l.*) and keepers or persons intrusted with deer so offending, shall forfeit double. 42 Geo. 3. c. 107. § 2.—Persons convicted of a second finable offence are declared felons, and transportable for seven years. § 4.—This Act does not extend to Scotland or Ireland. § 7.—The powers of 16 G. 3. c. 30. are extended to this act, and in default of payment of penalties offenders may be imprisoned for six months. § 3.—§ 1. of 16 G. 3. c. 30. (as far as relates to fallow deer) is repealed by this act 42 Geo. 3. c. 107. See § 6.

By stat. 28 Geo. 2. c. 19. destroying goss, furze, and fern, in forests and chases, being the covert for deer, subjects the offenders to a penalty from 5*l.* to 40*s.* or to three months imprisonment.

For the provisions of stat. 57 Geo. 3. c. 90. for preventing persons going armed by night in forests, &c. for the destruction of game, see this Dict. title Game.

DE ESSENDO QUIETUM DE TOLONIO. A writ that lies for those who are by privilege free from the payment of toll; on their being molested therein. F. N. B. 226. See titles Corporation, Toll.

DE EXPENSIS MILITUM. A writ commanding the sheriff to levy the expences of knights of the shire for attendance in parliament, [being 4*s. per diem.*] There is a like writ de expensis civium et burgensium, to levy the expences of every citizen and burgess of parliament, [2*s. per diem.*] See stats. 12 Rich. 2. c. 12. 23 Hen. 6. cap. 10. 4 Inst. 46. and further title Parliament.

DE FACTO. Signifies a thing actually done; that is done in deed. A king de facto (in fact) is one that is in actual possession of a crown, and hath no lawful right to the same; in which sense it is opposed to a king de jure (of right), who hath right to a crown, but is out of possession. 3 Inst. 7. See title King.

DEFAMATION, defamatio.] Is when a person speaks scandalous words of another, as of a magistrate, &c. whereby they are injured in their reputation; for which the party offending shall be punished according to the nature and quality of his offence: sometimes by action on the case at Common Law, sometimes by statute, and sometimes by the ecclesiastical laws.

Defamation is also punishable by the spiritual courts; in which courts it ought to have three incidents: viz. First, It is to concern matters spiritual, and determinable in the ecclesiastical courts, as for calling a man heretick, schismatick, adulterer, fornicator, &c. Secondly, that it be a matter spiritual only; for if the defamation concern any thing determinable at the Common Law, the ecclesiastical judges shall not have conusance thereof. And Thirdly, although such defamation be merely spiritual, yet he that is defamed cannot sue for damages in the ecclesiastical courts; but the suit ought to be only for punishment of the fault, by way of penance. Termes de Ley. See titles Action, Courts-Ecclesiastical, Prohibition.

DEFAULT, Fr. defaut.] Is commonly taken for non-appearance in court, at a day assigned; though it extends to any omission of that which we ought to do. Bract. lib. 5. tract. 3. Co. Lit. 259. If a plaintiff makes default in appearance in a trial at law, he will be non-suited; and where a defendant makes default, judgment shall be had against him by default. See titles Judgment, Nonsuit.

Tenant in tail, tenant in dower, by the curtesy or for life, losing their lands by default, in a præcipe quod reddat brought against them; they are to have remedy by the writ quod ei deforciat, &c. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 4. And in a quod ei deforciat, where the tenant joined issue upon the mere right, and the jury appearing, the defendant made default; it was adjudged, that in such case final judgment shall be given: but if the tenant had made default, it would be otherwise, for then a petit cape must issue against him, because it may so happen that he may save his default. 1 Nels. Abr. 627.

By default of a defendant, he is said to be generally out of court to all purposes, but only that judgment may be given against him: and no judgment can be afterwards given for the defendant. Ibid. 628.

When two are to recover a personal thing, the default of one is the default of the other: contra, where they are to discharge themselves of a personalty: where the default of the one is not the default of the other. 6 Rep. 25. 1 Lill. Abr. 425. In an action against two, if the process be determined against one, and the other appears; he shall be put to answer, notwithstanding the default of his companion. 3 Danv. Abr. 480. Where the baron is to have a corporal punishment for a default, there the default of the wife shall not be the default of the husband: but otherwise it is where the husband is not to have any corporal punishment by the default. Ibid. 472. 473.

If a defendant imparl to another day in the same term and make default at the day, this is a departure in despite of the court: and when the defendant after appearance, and being present in court upon demand makes departure, it is in despite of the court. Co. Lit. 139.

Suffering judgment to go by default is an admission of the contract declared on. Stra. 612. After the inquest is taken by default, the defendant can make no suggestion on the roll. Str. 46.

Default and saver of default made a large title in the old books of law. See stats. 52 H. 3. cc. 9. 13. 18. 24. 3 E. 1. c. 1. 42. &c. and titles Amendment, Trial.

DEFAULT IN CRIMINAL CASES. An offender indicted appears at the capias, and pleads to issue, and is let to bail to attend his trial, and then makes default; here the inquest in case of felony shall never be taken by default, but a capias ad audiendam juratem shall issue, and if the party is not taken, an exigent; and if he appear on that writ, and then make default, an exigi facias de novo may be granted: but whereupon the capias or exigent the sheriff returns cepi corpus, and at the day hath not his body, the sheriff shall be punished, but no new exigent awarded, because in custody of record. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 202.

DEFAULT OF JURORS. If jurors make default in their appearance for trying of causes, they shall lose and forfeit issues, unless they have any reasonable excuse proved by witnesses, in which case the justices may dischage the issue for default. Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 6. See title Jury.

DEFEASANCE, from the Fr. defaire, to defeat or undo.] Is of two sorts. 1. A collateral deed made at the same time with a feoffment or other conveyance, containing certain conditions, upon the performance of which the estate then created may be defeated or totally undone. In this manner mortgages were in former times usually made; the mortgagor enfeoffing the mortgagee, and he at the same time executing a deed of defeasance, whereby the feoffment was rendered void, on repayment of the money borrowed at a certain day. And this, when executed at the same time with the original feoffment, was considered as part of it by the ancient law; and therefore only indulged: no subsequent secret revocation of a solemn conveyance, executed by livery of seisin, being allowed in those days of simplicity and truth; though when uses were afterwards introduced, a revocation of such uses was permitted by courts of Equity. But things that were merely executory or to be compleated by matter subsequent, (as rents of which no seisin could be had till time of payment; annuities, conditions, warranties and the like,) were always liable to be recalled by defeasances made subsequent to the time of their creation.—2. A Defeasance on a bond, recognisance, or judgment recovered, is a condition which when performed defeats that, in the same manner as the foregoing Defeasance of an estate. It differs only from the common condition of a bond, in that the one is always inserted in the deed or bond itself, the other is made between the same parties by a separate, and frequently by a subsequent deed. This like the condition of a bond when performed, discharges and disincumbers the estate of the obligor. 2 Comm. 327. 342. See 1 Inst. 236, 7. 2 Sand. 47.

The Defeasance may generally (as in the case of a bond, &c.) be indorsed on the back of the deed.

To make a good Defeasance it must be, 1. By deed; (in the case of indorsement by a deed-poll;) for there cannot be a Defeasance of a deed without deed; and a writing under hand doth not imply it to be a deed. 2. It must recite the deed it relates to, or at least the most material part thereof; or in case of indorsement refer thereto. 3. It is to be made between the same persons that were parties to the first deed. 4. It must be made at the time, or after the first deed, and not before. 5. It ought to be made of a thing defeasible. 1 Inst. 236. 3 Lev. 234.

Inheritances executed by livery, such as estates in fee, or for life, cannot be subject to Defeasance afterwards, but at the time of making the feoffment, &c. only: but executory inheritances, such as leases for years, rents, annuities, conditions, covenants, &c. may be defeated by Defeasance made after the things granted. And it is the same of obligations, recognisances, statutes, judgments, &c. which are most commonly the subject of Defeasance, and usually made after the deed whereto they have relation. Plowd. 137. 1 Rep. 113.

Where a proviso goes by way of Defeasance of a covenant, it must be pleaded on the other side, otherwise, where by way of exclamation, or restriction of the covenant. 2 Salk. 574. See further, titles Conveyance, Deed, Mortgage.

DEFENCE. In its true legal sense, signifies, not a justification, protection, or guard, which is now its popular signification; but merely an opposing or denial [from the French defendre,] by the defendant of the truth or validity of the plaintiff's complaint. It is a general assertion that the plaintiff hath no ground of action, which assertion is afterwards extended and maintained in the defendant's plea. For it would be ridiculous to suppose that the defendant comes and defends (or in the vulgar acceptation, justifies) the force and injury, in one line, and pleads that he is not guilty of the trespass complained of, in the next. And therefore in actions of dower, where the demandant does not count of any injury done, but merely demands her endowment, (Rastal. Entr. 234.) and in assises of land, where also there is no injury alledged, but merely a question of right stated for the determination of the recognitors or jury, the tenant makes no such defence. Booth of Real Actions, 118. In writs of entry, where no injury is stated in the count, but merely the right of the demandant and the defective title of the tenant, the tenant comes and defends or denies his right, jus suum, that is, (as it seems though with a small grammatical inaccuracy) the right of the demandant, the only one expressly mentioned in the pleadings; or else denies his own right to be such, as is suggested by the count of the demandant. And in writs of right the tenant always comes and defends the right of the demandant and his seisin jus prædicti S. et seisinam ipsius, (Co. Entr. 182.) or else the seisin of his ancestor, upon which he counts, as the case may be, and the demandant may reply, that the tenant unjustly defends [i. e. denies] his, the demandant's right, and the seisin on which he counts. Nov. Narr. 230. edit. 1534. All which is extremely clear, if we understand by defence an opposition or denial, but it is otherwise inexplicably difficult. The true reason of this, says Booth, unaccountably, I could never yet find. Booth on Real Act, 94. 112.

The Courts were formerly very nice and curious with respect to the nature of the defence, so that if no defence was made, though a sufficient plea was pleaded the plaintiff should recover judgment. Co. Lit. 127. And therefore the book entitled Novæ Narrationes or the The New Talys, [edit. 1534.] at the end of almost every count, narratio, or tale, subjoins such defence as is proper for the defendant to make. For a general defence or denial was not prudent in every situation, since thereby the propriety of the writ, the competency of the plaintiff, and the cognizance of the court, were allowed. By defending the force and injury the defendant waved all pleas of misnomer; by defending the damages, all exceptions to the person of the plaintiff; and by defending either one or the other when and where it should behove him, he acknowledged the jurisdiction of the court. But of late years these niceties have been very deservedly discountenanced: though they still seem to be law, if insisted on. 3 Comm. 296—8.

The maxim that a defendant cannot plead any plea, before he hath made a defence, must not be intended absolutely, for in a scire facias, a defence is never made. 3 Lev. 182.

DEFENCE OF THE REALM. Several temporary Acts of Parliament have been from time to time passed, with a view to securing the kingdom in time of war against the attacks of foreign enemies. Though these acts were made to continue only during the war, which produced the necessity of them, a short sketch of their provisions may be useful.

By 43 G. 3. c. 55. (amended by 44 G. 3. c. 95.) to enable his Majesty more effectually to provide for the defence and security of the realm during the war, and for indemnifying persons who might suffer in their property, by such measures as might be necessary for that purpose, returns were directed to be made in Great Britain and Ireland of all males from 15 to 60, and general powers were given for training all such as should be desirous of offering their services in defence of the kingdom in case of invasion, &c. upon the same principles as the Militia are trained and exercised.—In case of invasion or apprehension thereof, horses, waggons, provisions, boats, &c. might be removed or destroyed, and the inhabitants ordered to remove themselves also.—Ground might be taken where necessary for the public service, due compensation being made to the owners, tenants, &c.—See also stats. 43 G. 3. cc. 96. 120. 46 G. 3. c. 90. for training and exercising a proportion of the subjects (in England.)—The purposes of all these acts were to call forth occasionally the strength of the country, in its defence, by enrolling certain numbers, who, being trained and exercised, should on invasion be liable to be called on for military service.

Several acts were also passed for raising and maintaining a permanent additional force, but after a few years' trial, repealed. —See the Acts 43 G. 3. c. 82. 44 G. 3. c. 56. for England; 43 G. 3. c. 83. 44 G. 3. c. 66. for Scotland: all repealed by 46 G. 3. c. 51.—43 G. 3. c. 85. 44 G. 3. c. 74. for Ireland, repealed by 46 G. 3. c. 63.—43 G. 3. c. 101. 44 G. 3. c. 96. for London; repealed by 46 G. 3. c. 144. See this Dictionary, title King.

DEFEND, defendere.] In our ancient laws and statutes signifies to forbid; and there is a statute intitled, Statutum de defensione portandi arma, &c. 7 Ed. 1. In divers parts of England we commonly say, God defend, instead of God forbid. Blount.

DEFENDANT, defendens.] The party sued in a personal action; as tenant is he that is sued in an action real.

DEFENDEMUS. An ordinary word used in grants and donations; and hath this force, that it binds the donor and his heirs to defend the donee, if any one go about to lay any incumbrance on the thing given, other than what is contained in the deed of donation. Bract. lib. 2. c. 16. See title Warranty.

DEFENDER OF THE FAITH, fidei defensor.] A peculiar title belonging to the King of England, as Catholick, to the King of Spain; and Most Christian to the King of France, &c. These titles were given by the Popes of Rome; and that of Defensor Fidei was first conferred by Pope Leo the Tenth on King Henry the Eighth, for writing against Martin Luther, and the bull for it bears date quinto Idus Octob. 1521. Lord Herbert's Hist. Hen. VIII. 105. The Pope on King Henry's suppressing the houses of religion, at the time of the Reformation, futilely sentenced him to be deprived of this title, and deposed from his crown. In the 35th year of his reign this title, &c. was acknowledged by parliament; and hath continued to be used by all succeeding Kings to this day. Lex Constitutionis, 47, 48.

DEFENDERE SE per Corpus suum. To offer duel or combat as a legal trial and appeal. Bract. lib. 3. cap. 26. See title Battel.

DEFENDERE UNICA MANU. Words signifying to wage law, and a denial of the accusation upon oath. See Manus, Wager of Law.

DEFENSA. A park or place fenced in for deer, and defended as a property for that use and service. H. Knighton, sub. ann. 1352.

DEFENSIVA. A Lord or Earl, of the Marches; who were the wardens or defenders of their country. Cowel.

DEFENSO. That part of any open field or place that was allotted for corn and hay, and upon which there was no common or feeding, was anciently said to be in defenso: so of any meadow ground, that was laid in for hay only. It was likewise the same of a wood, where part was inclosed and fenced up, to secure the growth of the underwood from the injury of cattle. Mon. Angl. tom. 3. p. 306.—Cowel.

DEFENSUM. An inclosure of land, or any fenced ground. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 114.

DEFORCEMENT, Deforciamentum.] A species of injury by ouster or privation of the freehold, where the entry of the present tenant or possessor was originally lawful, but his detainer is now become unlawful. 3 Comm. 172.

For that at first the with-holding was with force and violence, it was called a deforcement of the lands or tenements: But now it is generally extended to all kind of wrongful withholding of lands or tenements from the right owner.—There is a writ called a quod ei deforciat, which lieth where tenant in tail, or tenant for life, loseth by default, by the stat. Westm. 2. c. 4. he shall have a quod ei deforciat against the recoveror; and yet he cometh in by course of law. 1 Inst. 331, b. See title Quod ei deforciat—and as to entries with actual force, tit. Forcible Entry.

Deforcement in its most extensive sense, is nomen generalissimum signifying the holding of any lands or tenement to which another person hath a right. Co. Lit. 277. So that this includes as well an abatement an intrusion, a disseisin, or a discontinuance, as any other species of wrong whatsoever, whereby he that hath right to the freehold is kept out of possession. But, as contradistinguished from these, it is only such a detainer of the freehold, from him that hath the right of property, but never had any possession under that right, as falls not within any of those terms. As in case where a lord has a seignory, and lands escheat to him propter defectum sanguinis, but the seizin of the lands is with-held from him; here the injury is not abatement, for the right vests not in the lord as heir or devisee; nor is it intrusion, for it vests not in him who hath the remainder or reversion; nor is it disseisin, for the lord was never seised; nor does it at all bear the nature of any species of discontinuance; but being neither of these four, it is therefore a deforcement. F. N. B. 143. If a man marries a woman, and during the coverture is seised of lands, and aliens, and dies; is disseised, and dies; or dies in possession: and the alienee, disseisor, or heir, enters on the tenements, and doth not assign the widow her dower; this is also a Deforcement to the widow, by with-holding lands to which she hath a right. F. N. B. 147. In like manner, if a man lease lands to another for term of years, or for the life of a third person, and the term expires by surrender, efflux of time, or death of the cestuy que vie; and the lessee or any stranger, who was at the expiration of the term in possession, holds over, and refuses to deliver the possession to him in remainder, or reversion, this is likewise a Deforcement. Finch L. 263. F. N. B. 201. 5, 6, 7.

Deforcements may also arise upon the breach of condition in law; as if a woman gives lands to a man by deed, to the intent that he marry her, and he will not when thereunto required, but continues to hold the lands; this is such a fraud on the man's part, that the law will not allow it to devest the woman's right of possession, though his entry being lawful, it does devest the actual possession, and thereby becomes a Deforcement. F. N. B. 205.

Deforcements may also be grounded on the disability of the party deforced: as if an infant do make an alienation of his lands, and the alienee enters and keeps possession; now, as the alienation is voidable, this possession as against the infant (or, in case of his decease, as against his heir) is after avoidance wrongful, and therefore a Deforcement. Finch L. 264. F. N. B. 192. The same happens, when one of non-sane memory aliens his lands or tenements, and the alienee enters and takes possession, this may also be a Deforcement. Finch L. 264. F. N. B. 202.

Another species of Deforcement is, where two persons have the same title to land, and one of them enters and keeps possession against the other, as where the ancestor dies seised of an estate in fee-simple, which descends to two sisters as coparceners, and one of them enters before the other, and will not suffer her sister to enter and enjoy her moiety; this is also a Deforcement. Finch L. 293, 4. F. N. B. 197.

Deforcement may also be grounded on the non-performance of a covenant real; as if a man seised of lands, covenants to convey them to another, and neglects or refuses so to do, but continues possession against him; this possession being wrongful, is a Deforcement. F. N. B. 146. In levying a fine of lands, the person, against whom the fictitious action is brought, upon a supposed breach of covenant is called the deforciant. And, lastly by way of analogy, keeping a man by any means out of a freehold office is construed to be a Deforcement; though, being an incorporeal hereditament the deforciant has no corporal possession. So that whatever injurious withholding the possession of a freehold is not included under abatement, intrusion, disseisin, or discontinuance, (See those titles) is comprised under Deforcement. 3 Comm. 172, 4.

DEFORCEOR, deforciator, from the French forceur, expugnator; or DEFORCIANT.] One that overcometh, and casteth out by force. Britton, cap. 53. Old Nat. Brev. fol. 118. Bract. lib. 4. cap. 1. Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 3. See title Deforcement.

DEFORCIATO. Is used for a distress, or holding of goods for satisfaction of a debt. Paroch. Antiq. 239.

DEGRADATION, degradatio.] An ecclesiastical censure, whereby a clergyman is divested of his holy orders. There are two sorts of degrading, by the Canon Law; one summary, by word only; the other solemn, by stripping the party degraded of those ornaments and rights which are the ensigns of his order or degree. Selden's Titles of Hon. 787.

Degradation is otherwise called deposition; and in former times the degrading of a clerk was no more than a displacing or suspension from his office: but the Canonists have since distinguished between a deposition and a degradation; the one being now used as a greater punishment than the other, because the bishop takes from the criminal all the badges of his order, and afterwards delivers him to the secular judge, where he cannot purge himself of the offence whereof he is convicted, &c.

There is likewise a degradation of a Lord, or a Knight, &c. at Common Law; when they are attainted of treason; as in Hil. 18 Ed. 2. Andrew Harcla, Earl of Carlisle, who was also a Knight was degraded, and when judgment of treason was pronounced against him, his sword was broken over his head, and his spurs hewn off his heels, &c. And there is a degrading by act of parliament; for by stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 16. William Lord Monson, Sir Henry Mildmay, and others, were degraded from all titles of honour, dignities, and pre-eminences, and none of them to bear or use the title of Lord, Knight, Esquire, or Gentleman, or any coat of arms for ever after. See title Peers.

DEHORS, Fr. without.] A word used in ancient pleading, when a thing is without the land, &c. or out of the point in question. Vide Hors de son fee.

DE INJURIA SUA PROPRIA, absque tali causa. Are words used in replications, in actions of trespass. 1 Lil. Abr. 427. When one justifies by command or authority derived from another, or if a defendant justifies by authority at Common Law, as a constable by arrest for breach of the peace; or if he justifies by act of parliament, &c. the plaintiff may reply, that he did it of his own wrong, without any such cause as the defendant has alleged. Cro. Eliz. 539. 2 Salk. 628. See this Dict. titles Trespass, Pleading.

DEI JUDICIUM. The old Saxon trial by ordeal was so called: because they thought it an appeal to God, for the justice of a cause, and verily believed that the decision was according to the will and pleasure of Divine Providence. See title Ordeal.

DEIS. The high table of a monastry. See Dagus.

DELATURA, Saxon.] An accusation; and sometimes hath been taken for the reward of an informer. Leges H. 1. c. 46. Leges Inæ 20. apud Brompton.

DEL CREDERE. In a confined sense a commission del credere is an undertaking by an insurance broker, for an additional premium, to insure his principal against the contingency of the failure of the under-writer. See Grove & al' v. Dubois, 1 Term Rep. 112. Bigs v. Dickason. Id. 285.

In a more enlarged sense the Nature of a Commission Del Credere, appears from the case of Mackenzie & al' v. Scott, Parl. Cases, 8vo. vi. 280. to be as follows:

Del Credere is an Italian mercantile phrase signifying the same as the English term Guarantee, or Warranty, or the Scotch term Warrandice: and when applied to the situation of a factor, is understood in the following sense. A Factor who has general orders to dispose of goods for his constituent to the best advantage, is, like all factors, liable only to that degree of diligence which a prudent man uses in his own affairs; and consequently a Factor is authorised to dispose of the goods according to the best terms which can be attained; and if it shall appear that he has done so, and that he has sold his goods to persons in reputed good circumstances at the time, and to whom he would have given credit in his own affairs, he will not be liable to his constituent although some of these persons should fail; and, for such trouble, the factor is generally paid by a per centage upon the goods sold, and in this case the constituent runs the risk of the credit of the person to whom the goods are so sold. Many merchants do not choose to run this risk, and to trust to the prudence and discretion of the Factor; and therefore the agreement called del credere was invented, by which the Factor, for an additional premium when he sells goods on credit, becomes bound to warrant the solvency of the purchasers; and, as it seems, renders himself liable in all events for the payment of the price of the goods sold.—In the case of Mackenzie v. Scott above quoted, where a factor under a commission Del credere sold goods and took accepted bills from the purchasers, endorsed those bills to a banker at the place of sale, and received the banker's bill payable to the factor's order on a house in London, which bill the factor indorsed and transmitted to his principal, who got the same accepted, the acceptor and drawer failing, the factor was held answerable for the amount of the bill.

DELEGATES. Commissioners of appeal appointed by the King under the Great Seal, in cases of appeals from the Ecclesiastical Court, &c. by stat. 25 H. 8. c. 19. See title Court-Ecclesiastical, 6.

DELF. From the Sax. delfan. to dig or delve.] A quarry or mine, where stone or coal, &c. are dug. Stat. 31 Eliz. 7.

DELIVERANCE. When a criminal is brought to trial, and the clerk in court asks him whether he is Guilty or Not guilty, to which he replies Not guilty, and puts himself on God and his country, the clerk wishes him a good deliverance. See Trial.

DELIVERY OF DEEDS. See titles Date, Deed.

DEMAND, Fr. demande, Lat. postulatum.] A calling upon a man for any thing due. There are two manner of demands, the one in deed, the other in law: in deed as in a precipe quod reddat, there is an express demand. Every entry on land, distress for rent, taking of goods, &c. which may be done without words, is a demand in law. 8 Rep. 153.

It is also said there are three sorts of demands; one in writing without speaking, and that is in every precipe; one without writing, being a verbal demand of the person, who is to do or perform the thing; and another made without either word or writing, which is a demand in law, in cases of entries on lands, &c. As an entry on land and taking a distress, are a demand in law of the land and rent, so the bringing an action of debt for money due on an obligation is a demand in law of the debt. 1 Lill. 432. 1 Nels. Abr. Debts, claims, &c. are to be demanded and made in time by the statute of Limitations, 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. and other statutes; or they will be lost by law. See title Limitation of Actions.

Where there is a duty which the law makes payable on demand, no demand need be made; but if there is no duty till demand in such case there must be a demand, to make the duty. 1 Lill. 432. Cro. Eliz. 548. Upon a penalty the party need not make a demand, as he must in the case of a nomine pœnæ; for if a man be bound to pay 20*l.* on such a day, and in default thereof to pay 40*l.* the 40*l.* must be paid without demand. 1 Mod. 89. If a man leases land by indenture for years, reserving a rent payable at certain days, and the lessee covenants to pay the said rent at the days limited; the lessor is entitled to his rent, without demand, for the lessee is obliged to pay it at the days, by force of his covenant. 2 Danv. Abr. 101. But if a lessor makes a lease rendering rent, and the lessee covenant to pay the rent, being lawfully demanded, the lessee is not bound to pay the rent, without a demand. Ibid. 102.

A person makes a lease for life, or years, reserving a rent upon condition, that if the lessee doth not pay the rent at the day, that then without any demand it shall be lawful for the lessor to re-enter; by this special agreement of the parties, the lessor may enter on non-payment of the rent without any demand. 2 Danv. Abr. 100. A lease for years, with condition to be void, on non-payment of the rent, is not void unless the rent be demanded; and an interest shall not be determined, without an actual demand. Hob. 67. 331. 2 Mod. 264. But now by the statutes relative to rents an ejectment may be maintained without an actual entry. See stats. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. § 2. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 16. and this Dict. titles Ejectment, Lease, Rent.

A demand is to be legal, and made in such manner as the law requires: if it be for rent of a messuage and lands, it ought to be made at the messuage, at the fore door of the house, the most notorious place: where lands and woods are let together, the rent is to be demanded on the land as the most worthy thing, and on the most public part thereof; if wood only be leased, the demand must be made at the gate of the wood, &c. 1 Inst. 201. Poph. 58. Vide Dyer, 51. 1 Leon. 425. Cro. Eliz. 209.

He that would enter for a condition broken, which tends to the destruction of an estate, must—1. Demand the rent. —2. Upon the land, if there is no house.—3. If there is a house, at the fore door; though it is not material whether any person be in the house or no.—4. If the appointment is at any other place off the land, the demand must be at that place.—5. The time of the demand is to be certain, that the tenant may be there, if he will, to pay the rent: and the last time of demand of the rent, must be such a convenient time before the sun-setting of the last day of payment, as the money may be numbered. The lessor or his sufficient attorney is to remain upon the land, the last day on which the rent due ought to be paid, until it be so dark that he cannot see to tell the money: and if the money thus demanded is not paid, this is a denial in law, though there are no words of denial; upon which a re-entry may be made, &c. 1 Inst. 201, 202. 4 Rep. 73.—See further title Entry. As to demand of lands, see title Fine.

As a release of suits is more large than of quarrels or actions; so a release of demands is more large and beneficial than either of them. By a release of all demands, all executions, and all freeholds, and inheritances, executory, are released: by a release of demands to the disseisor, the right of entry in the land, and all that is contained therein is released.

And he that releaseth all demands, excludes himself from all actions, entries, and seizures: but a release of all demands, is no bar in a writ of error to reverse an outlawry. 8 Co. 153. 154.—See title Release.

DEMANDANT, petens.] All civil actions are prosecuted either by demands or plaints, and the pursuer is called demandant, in actions real; and plaintiff, in personal actions: in a real action, lands, &c. are demanded. Co. Lit. 127.

DEMEASE. Death. Scotch Dict. See Demise.

DEMEINE, DEMAIN, DEMESNE, Fr.—Lat. dominicum, domanium; also written domaine, and signifieth patrimonium domini.] Demains according to common speech are the lord's chief manor-place, with the lands thereto belonging; terræ dominicales, which he and his ancestors have from time to time kept in their own manual occupation, for the maintenance of themselves and their families: and all the parts of a manor, except what is in the hands of freeholders, are said to be demains. Copyhold lands have been accounted demains, because they that are the tenants hereof are judged in law to have no other estate but at the will of the lord; so that it is still reputed to be, in a manner, in the lord's hands: but this word is oftentimes used for a distinction between those lands that the lord of the manor hath in his own hands, or in the hands of his lessee demised at a rack-rent, and such other land appertaining to the manor, which belongeth to free or copy-holders. Bract. lib. 4. tract. 3. c. 9. Fleta, lib. 5. cap. 5. As demains are lands in the lord's hands manually occupied, some have thought this word derived from de manu; but it is from the Fr. demaine, which is used for an inheritance, and that comes from dominium, because a man has a more absolute dominion over that which he keeps in his hands, than of that which he lets to his tenants. Blount.

Domanium properly signifies the King's lands in France, appertaining to him in property: and in like manner do we in some sort use it here in England; for all lands, it is said, are either mediately or immediately held of the Crown; and when a man in pleading would signify his land to be his own he saith, that he is seised thereof in his demain, (or rather demesne) as of fee; whereby is meant, that although his land be to him and his heirs, it depends upon a superior lord, and is held by rent or service, &c. Lit. lib. 1. cap. 1. From this it hath been observed, that lands in the hands of a common person cannot be true demesnes: and certain it is, that lands in the possession of a subject, are called demains in a different sense from the demain lands of the Crown. For demains, or domains, in the hands of a subject, have their derivation à domo, because they are lands in his possession for the maintaining of his house: but the domains of the Crown are held of the King, who is absolute lord having proper dominion; and not by any feudal tenure of a superior lord, as of fee. Wood's Inst. 139.

Demain is sometimes taken in a special signification, as opposite to frank-fee: for example, Those lands which were in the possession of King Edward the Confessor are called ancient demains, or ancient demesne, and all others frank-free; and the tenants which hold any of those lands are called tenants in ancient demain, or ancient demesne, and the others tenants in frank-fee, &c. Kitch. 98. See title Ancient Demesne.

DEMISE, demissio.] Is applied to an estate either in fee, for term of life, or years, but most commonly the latter: it is used in writs for any estate. 2 Inst. 483. The word demisi, in a lease for years, implies a warranty to the lessee and his assignee; and upon this word action of covenant lies against the heir of the lessor, if he oust the lessee; it binds the executors of the lessor, who has fee-simple, or fee-tail, where any lessee is evicted, and the executor hath assets. Dyer, 257.

The King's death is in law termed, the Demise of the King, to his royal successor, of his crown and dignity, &c. See King, Lease, Covenant, Ejectment.

DEMISE AND REDEMISE. The conveyance by demise and redemise is where there are mutual leases made from one to another on each side, of the same land, or something out of it; and is proper upon the grant of a rent-charge, &c.

DEMURRAGE. An allowance made to the master of a ship by his freightors, for staying longer in a place than the time first appointed for his departure.—The amount is generally inserted in the charter-party to be paid daily as it becomes due; the days are always limited; so that on the expiration thereof, and protests duly made, the master is at liberty to proceed. Spirit of Marine Laws.

The word "Days" used alone in a clause of demurrage for unlading in the river Thames, is to be understood of working or running days only, and not to comprehend Sundays or holidays, by the usage among merchants in London. Cochran v. Retbergh. 3 Espin. N. P. 121.

The payment of Demurrage, stipulated to be made while a ship is waiting for convoy, ceases as soon as the convoy is ready to depart; and such payment, stipulated to be made while a ship is waiting to receive a cargo, ceases when the ship is fully laden, and the necessary clearances are obtained, although the ship may in either case happen to be further detained by adverse winds or tempestuous weather. And if the ship has once set sail and departed, but is afterwards driven back into port, the claim of demurrage is not thereby revived. Lannoy v. Werry, iv. Parl. cases (8°) p. 630. Jamieson v. Lawrie, vi. Parl. cases (8°) p. 471. See also Marshall v. De la Torre, 1 Espin. N. P. 367.

If a contract of freight and demurrage be entered into by deed, the plaintiff cannot declare in debt generally, and give the deed in evidence; but ought to declare upon the deed. Atty v. Parish. 1 Bos. & Pul. New Rep. 104.

DEMURRER. From the Lat. demorare, Fr. demeurer.] A pause or stop, put to any action upon a point of difficulty, which must be determined by the Court, before any farther proceedings can be had therein: for in every action the point of controversy consists either in fact or in law; if in fact, that is tried by the jury; but if in law, that is determined by the Court.

A demurrer therefore, is an issue upon matter of law. It confesses the facts to be true, as stated by the opposite party; but denies that by the law arising upon those facts, any injury is done to the plaintiff; or that the defendant has made out a lawful excuse; according to the party which first demurs, (demoratur, moratur in lege,) rests or abides in law upon the point in question. As, if the matter of the declaration be insufficient in law, (as by not assigning any sufficient trespass, &c. then the defendant demurs to the declaration.—If on the other hand the defendant's excuse or plea be invalid, (as if he pleads that he committed the trespass by authority from a stranger, without making out the stranger's right,) here the plaintiff may demur to the plea: and so in every other part of the proceedings.

The form of such demurrer is by averring the declaration or plea, the replication or rejoinder, to be insufficient in law to maintain the action or the defence; and therefore praying judgment for want of sufficient matter alledged. Sometimes demurrers are merely for want of sufficient form in the writ or declaration. But in case of exception to the form or manner of pleading, the party demurring, must by stats. 27 Eliz. c. 5. 4 & 5 An. c. 16. set forth the causes of his demurrer. See titles Amendment, Pleading.—And upon either a general or such special demurrer, the opposite party must aver it to be sufficient, which is called a joinder in demurer; and then the parties are at issue in point of law; which issue, as above mentioned, the judges of the court before which the action is brought must determine. 3 Comm. 314. Finch L. lib. 4. c. 40. 1 Inst. 71.

A demurrer may be to the writ, (i. e. the original where the proceedings are by original,) to the count, or declaration, or to any part of the pleadings.

A demurrer is admitting the matter of fact, since it refers the law arising on the fact, to the judgment of the Court; and therefore the fact is taken to be true on such demurrer, or otherwise the Court has no foundation on which to make any judgment. Gilb. Hist. of C. P. 55.

As a demurrer at Common Law did confess all matters formally pleaded; so now by the statutes a general demurrer does confess all matters pleaded, though informally. Hob. 233. But a special demurrer admits only facts well pleaded.

Demurrers are general, without shewing any particular causes; or special, where the causes of demurrer are particularly set down: and the judgment of the court is not to be prayed upon an insufficient declaration or plea, otherwise than by a demurrer; when the matter comes judicially before the court. If in pleadings, &c. a matter is insufficiently alledged, that the court cannot give certain judgment upon it, a general demurrer will suffice; and for want of substance, a general demurrer is good: but for want of form, there must be a special demurrer, and the causes specially assigned. The practice is now, on a special demurrer, to take advantage of any real error, though not expressed, in the causes assigned.

A man who demurs generally, shall take advantage of all matters which are requisite to shew a good right or title in the plaintiff. Plowd. Com. 66 a. Hob. 301.

If a man demurs for form, he must shew specially the causes of demurrer. 2 Rol. 330. Stats. 27 Eliz. c. 5, 4, 5 An. c. 16. R. M. 1654. § 17.

If there be a general demurrer to the declaration, the plaintiff may apply to a judge for a summons for leave to amend; if not, he may proceed to join in demurrer, and make up the demurrer-book himself, a copy of which he is to deliver to defendant's attorney, and if not paid for on demand, sign judgment. R. Tr. 12 W. 3. [now allowed in costs and need not be paid for on delivery]. In case of a demurrer to a plea, &c. by a plaintiff, the demurrer-book cannot be made up by the defendant, until default made by the plaintiff. R. E. 11 W. 3.

If a defendant pleads to part, and demurs to part; the demurrer should first be determined, and the issue last; because upon the trial of the issue, the jury may assess damages as to both. Palm. 517. Where there is a demurrer in part, and issue is joined upon the other part, and the plaintiff hath judgment on the demurrer; here he may enter a Non-pros. as to the issue, and proceed to a writ of inquiry upon the demurrer: but otherwise he cannot have such writ of inquiry. 1 Salk. 219. See 1 Stra. 532. 574.

If there be three counts in the declaration, to which there is a general demurrer; if any one of the counts be good, judgment must be for the plaintiff, if such count can be joined with the other two. 1 Wils. 252.

A demurrer is to be signed, and argued on both sides by counsel. After a demurrer is joined, the plaintiff having entered it on the roll, delivers the roll to the Secondary, and makes a motion for a Consilium or day to argue it, which the court grants of course on the Secondary's reading the record; then the demurrer must be entered by the plaintiff in the court-book with the Secondary, who, on his rule sets down the day appointed for argument, at least four days before the demurrer is argued: and paper-books, containing all the proceedings at length, which are afterwards entered on record, are made and delivered to the judges, two days before argument. See Imp. K. B.

By a rule of Court of Hil. 38 G. 3. the points intended to be argued in demurrer, are to be set down in the margin of the paper-book delivered to the judges; which rule, the Court has since observed, was not a new rule but the revival of an old one, made in E. 2. Jac. 2. (Vide 2 Tidd's Pract. 669. 670.) 2 East's Rep. 287. in note (a).

The demurrant argues first, and the Court will hear but two counsel on a day, viz. one of a side; and, if desired on either side, (unless the case be very plain,) the court will hear further arguments the next term. If the major part of the judges of the court cannot determine the matter on the demurrer, it is to be sent into the Exchequer-chamber to be determined by all the judges of England. 1 Inst. 71. Demurrers are now frequently put in for delay. In such cases, the party wishing to avoid the delay, makes up four demurrer-books and delivers to the judges two days before the day when judgment is moved for; which is given of course without argument.

When the Court gives judgment on demurrer in debt for the plaintiff in the action, the judgment is for the plaintiff to recover his debt, costs and damages; but if it be in action on the case, a writ of inquiry of damages must be awarded, before the plaintiff can have final judgment; or if the action be on Bill of Exchange, or promissory note the plaintiff may obtain a rule to refer the same to the master to assess the damages, compute interest, &c., and after costs are taxed, final judgment is entered, &c. and execution may be sued out. If judgment on the demurrer is for the defendant in the action, the judgment is, that the plaintiff take nothing by his writ, bill, &c. and that the defendant go without day. Wood's Inst. 603.

After judgment for plaintiff on demurrer, without argument, and general damages assessed, the Court of C. P. refused to permit the defendant to move in arrest of judgment, on the ground that the damages appeared to be partly given upon a count in the declaration which could not be sustained; for the defendant had the opportunity of excepting to that count on demurrer. Creswell v. Packham, 6 W. P. Taunton, 650. (630).

General demurrer being entered, it cannot be afterwards waved, without leave of the court, but a special demurrer generally may, unless the plaintiff hath lost a term, or the assizes by the defendant's demurring. Impey, K. B.

After demurrer to one count of a declaration, plaintiff may enter a nolle prosequi on that count, and proceed to trial on the others. Bertram v. Gordon, C. P. 6 W. P. Taunton, 444.

A Demurrer in Equity, is nearly of the same nature with a demurrer in law; being an appeal to the judgment of the court, whether the defendant shall be bound to answer the plaintiff's bill: as for want of sufficient matter of equity therein contained: or where the plaintiff upon his own shewing appears to have no right; or where the bill seeks a discovery of a thing which may cause a forfeiture of any kind, or may convict a man of any criminal misbehaviour. For any of these causes, a defendant may demur to a bill in equity; and if on demurrer the defendant prevails, the plaintiff's bill shall be dismissed; if the demurrer be over-ruled, the defendant is ordered to answer. 3 Comm. 446.

It is allowed a good cause of demurrer in Chancery, that a bill is brought for part of a matter only, which is proper for one intire account, because the plaintiff shall not split causes, and make a multiplicity of suits. Vern. 29.

If an original bill be brought for matters, part of which are in a former bill and decree, and part new, or by way of supplimental bill; the court will, on a demurrer to so much as was contained in the former decree, send it to a master to see what was, and what was not in the first bill, and allow the demurrer accordingly. Gilb. E. R. 184. See further, title Chancery.

Demurrer to Evidence. This happens where a record or other matter is produced in evidence, concerning the legal consequences of which there arises a doubt in law: in which case the adverse party may, if he pleases, demur to the whole evidence; which admits the truth of every fact that has been alledged, but denies the sufficiency of them all in point of law to maintain or overthrow the issue, as the case may be. 1 Inst. 72. 5 Rep. 104. This draws the question of law from the cognizance of the jury to be decided, as it ought, by the court, out of which the record is sent. 3 Comm. 372.

So if the plaintiff brings witnesses to prove a fact, and a matter of law ariseth upon it; if the defendant admits their testimony to be true, there also the defendant may demur in law: and so may the plaintiff demur upon the defendant's evidence. And in these cases, the counsel for the plaintiff and defendant agree the matter of fact in dispute; and the jury are discharged; and the matter of law is referred to the judges to determine.

But where evidence is given for the King, in an information or other suit, and the defendant offers to demur upon it, the King's counsel are not obliged to join therein; but the Court ought to direct the jury to find the special matter. And, indeed, because juries of late usually find a doubtful matter specially, demurrers upon evidence are now seldom used. See 5 Rep. 104. 1 Inst. 72. 2 Inst. 426.

On a demurrer to circumstantial evidence the party offering the evidence is not obliged to join in demurrer unless the party demurring will distinctly admit upon the record every fact, and every conclusion, which the evidence offered conduces to prove. Gibson v. Hunter, 2 H. Blackst. 187.

If the Court doth not agree to a demurrer to evidence in a civil cause; they ought to seal a bill of exceptions, &c. 9 Rep. 13.—See title Bill of Exceptions.

DEMURRER TO INDICTMENTS. A demurrer is incident to criminal cases as well as civil, when the fact as alledged is allowed to be true, but the prisoner joins issue upon some point of law in the indictment; by which he insists that the fact, as stated, is no felony, treason, or whatever the crime is alledged to be. Thus, for instance, if a man be indicted for feloniously stealing a greyhound, which is an animal in which no valuable property can be had, and therefore it is not felony, but only a civil trespass to steal it: in this case the party indicted may demur to the indictment; denying it to be felony, though he confesses the act of taking it. Some have held, (2 Hal. P. C. 257.) that if on demurrer, the point of law be adjudged against the prisoner, he shall have judgement and execution, as if convicted by verdict. But this is denied by others; (2 Hawk. P. C. c. 32. § 5, 6.) who hold, that in such case he shall be directed and received to plead the general issue, Not guilty, after a demurrer determined against him. Which appears the more reasonable, because it is clear, that if the prisoner freely discovers the fact in court, and refers to the opinion of the court, whether it be felony or no; and upon the fact thus shewn, it appears to be felony; the court will not record the confession, but admit him afterwards to plead not guilty. 2 Hal. P. C. 225. And this seems to be a case of the same nature, being for the most part a mistake in point of law, and in the conduct of his pleading; and though a man by mis-pleading, may in some cases lose his property, yet the law will not suffer him by such niceties to lose his life. However, upon this doubt, demurrers to indictments are seldom used; since the same advantages may be taken upon a plea of Not guilty; or afterwards in arrest of judgment, when the verdict has established the fact. See Smith v. Bowen, Mich. 7 An. in which case the demurrer was continued on the record with a cesset triatio exitûs, &c. and after the demurrer was determined against the defendant, a Venire was awarded. See Salk. 59, 60. Dyer, 38. 2 Hawk. P. C. ubi suprà in n. 4 Comm. 333, 4.

DEMY-SANGUE. Half-blood: where a man marries a woman, and hath issue by her a son, and the wife dying he marries another woman, by whom he hath also a son; now these two sons, though they are called brothers, are but brothers of the half blood, because they had not both one father and mother: and therefore by law they cannot be heirs to one another; for he that claims freehold as heir to another by descent, must be of the whole blood to him from whom he claimeth. Termes de Ley.—See titles Descent, Executor.

DEN. From the Sax. Den. i. e. Vallis, Locus Sylvestris.] The name of places ending in den, as Biddenden, &c. signify the situation to be in a valley, or near woods. Blount.

DEN AND STROND. Is a liberty for ships or vessels to run or come ashore: and King Ed. I. by charter granted this privilege to the Barons of the Cinque Ports. Placit. temp. Ed. 1.

DENA TERRÆ. A hollow place between two hills; it is also used for a little portion of woody ground, commonly called a coppice. Domesday.

DENARII. A general term for any sort of pecunia numerata, or ready money. Paroch. Antiq. 320.

DENARII DE CARITATE. Customary oblations made to Cathedral Churches about the time of Pentecost, when the parish priests, and many of their people went in procession to visit their mother church: this custom was afterwards changed into a settled due, and usually charged upon the parish priest; though at first it was but a gift of charity, or present, to help to maintain and adorn the bishop's see. Cartular. Abbat. Glaston. MS. f. 15.

DENARIUS. An English penny: it is mentioned in the antient statute, de compositione mensurarum, &c. Temp. inc.

DENARIUS DEI. God's penny, or earnest money given and received by the parties to contracts, &c. Cart. Ed. 1. The earnest money is called Denarius Dei, or God's penny, because, in former times, the piece of money so given to bind the contract, was given to God, i. e. to the church, or the poor.

DENARIUS S. PETRI. An annual payment of one penny from every family to the Pope, during the time that the Roman Catholic religion prevailed in this kingdom, paid on the feast of St. Peter. See Peter Pence.

DENARIUS TERTIUS COMITATUS. Of the Fines and other profits of the County Courts, originally when those courts had superior jurisdiction before other courts were erected, two parts were reserved to the King, and a third part or penny to the Earl of the county; who either received it in specie at the assises and trials, or had an equivalent composition for it out of the Exchequer. Paroch. Antiq. 418.

DENBER. From the Sax. Den, a vale, and berg, a barrow or hog.] A place for the running and feeding of hogs, wherein they are penned; by some called a Swinecomb. Cowel.

DENIZEN. See title Alien.

DESNHIRING OF LAND. Is the casting parings of earth, turf and stubble into heaps, which when dried are burnt into ashes, for a compost on poor barren land. This method of improvement is used on taking in and inclosing common and waste ground; and in many parts of England is called burn-beating, but in Staffordshire and other counties, they term it denshiring of land.

DE NON DECIMANDO, Modus. To be discharged of tithes. See Modus Decimandi, Tithes.

DE NON RESIDENTIA CLERICI REGIS. An ancient writ where a person was employed in the King's service, &c. to excuse and discharge him of non-residence. 2 Inst. 624.

DE NOVO DAMUS. A clause of a charter, which in effect, renders it an original charter.—Scotch Dict.

DENTRIX. A fish with many teeth. Chart. Hen. 6. Manast. Romsey.

DEODAND, Deo dandum.] By this is meant whatever personal chattel is the immediate occasion of the death of any reasonable creature: which is forfeited to the King to be applied to pious uses, and distributed in alms by his high almoner, though formerly destined to a more superstitious purpose. 1 H. P. C. 419. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 25.

It seems to have been originally designed as an expiation for the souls of such as were snatched away by sudden death; and for that purpose ought properly to have been given to Holy Church, in the same manner as the apparel of a stranger who was found dead, was applied to purchase masses for the good of his soul. And this may account for that rule of law, that no Deodand is due, where an infant under the age of discretion is killed by a fall from a cart or horse, or the like, not being in motion; whereas, if an adult person falls from thence, and is killed, the thing is certainly forfeited. 3 Inst. 57. 1 H. P. C. 422. Such infant being presumed incapable of actual sin, and therefore not needing a Deodand to purchase propitiatory masses. 1 Comm. 300.

Thus stands the law, if a person be killed by a fall from a thing standing still. But if a horse, or ox, or other animal of his own motion, kill as well an infant, as an adult; or if a cart run over him, they shall in either case be forfeited as Deodands; which is grounded upon this additional reason, that such misfortunes are in part owing to the negligence of the owner; and therefore he is properly punished by such forfeiture. Bract. l. 3. c. 5.

Where a thing not in motion is the occasion of a man's death, that part only which is the immediate cause is forfeited; as if a man be climbling up the wheel of a cart, and is killed by falling from it, the wheel alone is a Deodand. 1 H. P. C. 422.—But wherever the thing is in motion, not only that part which immediately gives the wound (as the wheel which runs over his body,) but all things which move with it, and help to make the wound more dangerous, (as the cart and loading, which increase the pressure of the wheel,) are forfeited. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 26.

It matters not whether the owner of the thing moving to the death of a person were concerned in the killing or not: for if a man kills another with my sword, the sword is forfeited. Dr. & Stud. d. 2. c. 51. And therefore in all indictments for homicide, the instrument of death, and the value are presented and found by the Grand Jury; (as that the stroke was given by a certain penknife, value 6*d.*) that the King or his grantee may claim the Deodand. For it is no Deodand, unless it be presented as such by a jury of twelve men. 3 Inst. 57. 5 Rep. 110. 1 Inst. 144.

No Deodands are due for accidents happening upon the high sea, that being out of the jurisdiction of the Common Law: but if a man falls from a boat or ship in fresh water and is drowned, it hath been said that the vessel and cargo are in strictness of law a Deodand. 3 Inst. 58. 1 H. P. C. 423. Moll. de Jur. Marit. 2. 225.

Juries however have of late perhaps too frequently taken upon themselves to mitigate these forfeitures, by finding only some trifling thing, or part of an entire thing to have been the occasion of the death. But in such cases, although the finding by the jury be hardly warrantable by law, the court of K. B. hath generally refused to interfere on behalf of the Lord of the Franchise, to assist so unequitable a claim. Fost. on Homic. 266.

Deodands, as well as other forfeitures in general, wrecks, treasure-trove, &c. may be granted by the King to particular subjects as a Royal Franchise: and indeed they are for the most part granted out to the lords of manors or other liberties; to the perversion of their original design. 1 Comm. 299, & seq.

If a man riding over a river, is thrown off his horse by the violence of the water, and drowned, his horse is not Deodand; for his death was caused per cursum aquæ. 2 Co. 483.

If a person wounded by any accident, as of a cart, horse, &c. die within a year and a day after, what did it, is Deodand: so that if a horse strikes a man, and afterwards the owner sells the horse, and then the party that was stricken dies of the stroke, the horse, notwithstanding the sale, shall be forfeited as Deodand. Plowd. 260. 5 Rep. 110.

Things fixed to the freehold; as a bell hanging in a steeple, a wheel of a mill, &c. unless severed from the freehold, cannot be Deodands. 2 Inst. 281. And there is no forfeiture of a Deodand, till the matter is found of record, by the jury that finds the death; who ought also to find and appraise the Deodand. 5 Rep. 110. 1 Inst. 144. After the coroner's inquisition, the sheriff is answerable for the value, where the Deodand belongs to the King; and he may levy the same on the town, &c. Wherefore the inquest ought to find the value of it. 1 Hawk. P. C.

Grants of Deodands, &c. how to be inrolled, 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 22. sect. 1. See Franchises. The goods and chattels of felo de se, &c. were likewisely anciently held to be Deodands, and are now forfeitable to the Crown. See title Felo de se. 1 Lil. 443.

DE ONERANDO PRO RATA PORTIONIS. An ancient writ where a person was distrained for rent, that ought to be paid by others proportionably with him. F. N. B. 234. If a man hold twenty acres of land, by fealty and twenty shillings rent; and he aliens one acre to one person, and another acre to another, &c. the lord shall not distrain one alience for the whole rent, but for the rate and value of the land he hath purchased, &c. And if he be distrained for more, he shall have this writ. New Nat. Br. 586.

DEPARTURE. A term of law properly applied to a defendant, who first pleading one thing in bar of an action, and being replied unto, in his rejoinder, quits that and shews another matter contrary to, or not pursuing his first plea, which is called a departure from his plea: also where a plaintiff in his declaration sets forth one thing, and after the defendant hath pleaded, the plaintiff in his replication shews new matter different from his declaration, this is a departure. Plowd. 7, 8. 2 Inst. 147. But if a plaintiff in his replication depart from his count, and the defendant takes issue upon it: if it be found for the plaintiff, the defendant shall take no advantage of that departure: though it would have been otherwise, if he had demurred upon it. Raym. 86. 1 Lil. Abr. 444.

If a man plead a general agreement in bar, and in his rejoinder alledge a special one, this is a departure in pleading: and if an action is brought at Common Law, and the plaintiff by his replication would maintain it by virtue of a custom, &c. it hath been held a departure. 1 Nels. Abr. 638. Where a matter is omitted at first, it is a departure to plead it afterwards. Ibid. If in covenant, the defendant pleads performance; and after rejoins that the plaintiff ousted him, it is a departure from his plea. Raym. 22. In debt upon bond for performance of covenants in a lease, the defendant pleaded performance; and afterwards in his rejoinder set forth that so much was paid in money, and so much in taxes, &c. upon demurrer, it was adjudged a departure from the plea; because he had pleaded performance, and afterwards set forth other matter of excuse, &c. 1 Salk. 221.

Debt upon bond for performance of an award, made for payment of money; if the defendant plead performance, and the plaintiff having replied and assigned a breach of non-payment, &c. the defendant rejoins that he is ready to pay the money at the day, &c. this is a departure from his plea; for performance is payment of the money; and payment, and ready to pay, are different issues. Sid. 10. 4 Leon. 79. In debt upon bond for non-performance of an award; the defendant pleads that the award was, that he should release all suits to the plaintiff, which he had done; the plaintiff replies that such an award was made, but that the award was further, that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff such a sum, &c. the defendant rejoins that true it is, that by the award he was to pay the plaintiff the said sum, but that the award was also, that the plaintiff should release to the defendant all actions, &c. which he had not done; on demurrer this was held a departure from the plea, being all new matter. 2 Bulst. 39. Godb. 155. 1 Nels. 637. After nullum fecerunt arbitrium, the defendant cannot plead that the award is void, without being a departure from the former plea: and if where nul tiel agard is pleaded, then the award is set forth, and a joinder that it was not tendered, it is a departure. 1 Lev. 133. Lut. 385.

A departure must be always from something that is material; or it will not be allowed: if in trespass for taking goods, the plaintiff reply, that after the taking, the defendant converted them to his own use, this being an abuse, makes a trespass; and the conversion is either trover or trespass at the plaintiff's election, so that by his replication he may make it trespass, and be no departure. 1 Salk. 221, 222. In circumstances of time, &c. laid as to promises, the plaintiff is not tied to a precise day; for if the defendant by his plea, force the plaintiff to vary, it is no departure from his declaration. 1 Nels. 640, 641. And if another place be mentioned in the replication, in action of debt; as this is a personal thing, it is no departure, because he who is indebted to another in one place, is so in every place. Sid. 228.

If new matter which explains or fortifies the bar be rejoined by the defendant, it is not a departure. 1 Wils. 8. 97, 8. Co. Lit. 304. a.

A departure being a denial of what is before admitted, is a saying and un-saying, and for that an issue cannot be joined upon it, it is bad for the uncertainty. 1 Lill. 444. See further titles Pleading, Novel Assignment, Trespass.

DEPARTURE IN DESPITE OF THE COURT, and entry of it. See title Default.

DEPARTURE OF GOLD AND SILVER. The parting or dividing of those metals, from others that are coarser. See stat. 4 H. 7. c. 2.

DEPOPULATIO AGRORUM. Destroying and ravaging a country; an offence where the benefit of clergy was denied at Common Law. 2 Hal. Pl. 333. 12 Rep. 30. 3 Inst. 204. See title Clergy, benefit of.

DEPOSITION, Depositio.] The testimony of a witness, otherwise called a deponent, put down in writing by way of answer to interrogatories exhibited for that purpose, in Chancery, &c. Proof in the High Court of Chancery is by depositions of witnesses: and the copies of such regularly taken and published, are read as evidence at the hearing. For the purposes of examining witnesses in or near London there is an examiner's office appointed: but for such as live in the country, a commission to examine witnesses is usually granted to four commissioners, two named of each side, or any three or two of them to take the depositions there. And if the witnesses reside beyond sea, a commission may be had to examine them there, upon their own oaths; and if foreigners, upon the oaths of two skilful interpreters. And it hath been established that the deposition of an Heathen who believes in the Supreme being taken by commission in the most solemn manner according to the custom of his own country may be read in evidence. 1 Atk. 21.—The commissioners are sworn to take the examinations truly and without partiality, and not to divulge them till published in the Court of Chancery; and their clerks are also sworn to secrecy. The witnesses are compellable by process of subpœna, as in the courts of Common Law, to appear and submit to examination. And when their depositions are taken they are transmitted to the court with the same care that the answer of a defendant is sent. 3 Comm. 449.

After a witness is fully examined, the examinations are read over to him, and the witness is at liberty to alter, or amend any thing; after which he signs them, and then and not before, the examinations are complete, and good evidence. 1 P. Wms. 415. The same practice prevails in Ecclesiastical causes.

Where a witness was examined in a cause in Chancery, and before signing his examination died, the Master of the Rolls, upon advising with the Master in Chancery then in court, denied the making use of the depositions, as being not perfect. 1 P. Wms. 414.

But where, after an order for publication, defendant examined a witness, and then perceiving the irregularity (it being after publication) the defendant on the usual affidavit by himself, his clerk in court, and solicitor, that they had not seen, nor would not see any of the depositions, got an order to re-examine this witness; but before re-examination the witness died; upon affidavit of this Lord Ch. Parker, ordered that the defendant might make use of the depositions, the re-examination being prevented by the act of God. 1 P. Wms. 415.

Depositions in the Chancery after a cause is determined, may be given in evidence in a trial at bar in B. R. in a suit for the same matter, between the same parties, if the party that deposed be dead; but not otherwise, for if he be living, he must appear in person in court to be examined, &c. 1 Lil. Abr. 445.

See further as to the admission of written depositions in evidence at Common Law. Bull. N. P. 229. 239.—242. and this Dict. title Evidence.

Depositions of informers, &c. taken upon oath before a coroner, upon an inquisition of death; or before justices of peace on a commitment or bailment of felony, may be given in evidence at a trial for the same felony; if it be proved on oath that the informer is dead, or unable to travel, or kept away by the procurement of the prisoner; and oath must be made that the depositions are the same that were sworn before the coroner or justice, without any alteration. 2 Hawk. P. C.

Depositions taken before a coroner, cannot be given in evidence upon an appeal for the same death; because it is a different prosecution from that wherein they were taken; and it has been adjudged, That the evidence given by a witness at one trial, could not in the ordinary course of justice, be made use of against a criminal, on the death of such witness at another trial. 2 H. P. C.

The examinations of witnesses abroad, and of such as are aged or going abroad de bene esse, to be read in evidence, if the trial should be deferred till after their death or departure, are now very frequently effected by mutual consent in trials at Common Law, if the parties are open and candid; and this may also be done indirectly at any time, through the channel of a Court of Equity: but such a practice has never yet been adopted directly as a rule of a court of law. But by stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 63. where the cause of action arises in India, and a suit is brought thereupon in any of the courts of Westminster, the Court may issue a commission to examine witnesses upon the spot, and transmit the depositions to England. See title East India Company.

DEPOSITION is used in the law in another sense, viz. To signify the depriving a person of some dignity. See titles Degradation, Deprivation.

Deposition is also taken for death; and dies depositionis, the day of one's death. Litt. Dict.

DEPRIVATION, Deprivatio.] A depriving or taking away; as when a bishop, parson, vicar, &c. is deposed from his preferment. Of deprivations there are two sorts, deprivatio à beneficio, and ab officio; the deprivation à beneficio is when for some great crime, &c. a minister is wholly deprived of his living: and deprivation ab officio is where a minister is for ever deprived of his orders, which is also called deposition or degradation; and is commonly for some heinous offence meriting death, and performed by the bishop in a solemn manner. Blount. See Degradation.

Deprivatio à beneficio is an act of the Spiritual Court, grounded upon some crime or defect in the person deprived by which he is discharged from his spiritual promotion or benefice, upon sufficient cause proved against him. 1 Nels. Abr. 641.

Deprivation may also be by a particular clause in some act of parliament: the deprivation of bishops, &c. is declared lawful by stat. 39 Eliz. c. 8. And by the King's commission, as he hath the supremacy lodged in him, a bishop may be deprived: for since a bishop is vested with that dignity by commission from the King, it is reasonable he should be deprived, where there is just cause, by the same authority: but the canons direct, that a bishop shall be deprived in a synod of the province; or, if that cannot be assembled, by the archbishop; and twelve bishops, at least, not as his assistants, but as judges. It has been adjudged, that an archbishop may deprive a bishop for simony, &c. for he hath power over his suffragans, who may be punished in the archbishop's court for any offence against their duty. 1 Salk. 134. See title Bishop.

The causes of deprivation are many: if a clerk obtain a preferment in the church, by simonical contract; if he be an excommunicate, a drunkard, fornicator, adulterer, infidel, schismatick, or heretick; or guilty of murder, manslaughter, perjury, forgery, &c. If a clerk be illiterate and not able to perform the duty of his church; if he is a scandalous person in his life and conversation; or bastardy is objected against him; if one be a mere layman, and not in holy orders; or under age, viz. the age of twenty-three years; be disobedient and incorrigible to his ordinary; or a noncomformist to the canons; if a parson refuse to use the Common Prayer, or preach in derogation of it; do not administer the Sacraments, or read the Articles of Religion, &c. See titles Parson, Clergy.

If any parson, vicar, &c. have one benefice with cure of souls, and take plurality, without a faculty or dispensation: or if he commit waste in the houses and lands of the church, called Dilapidations, all these have been held good causes for deprivation of priests. Degg's Parson's Counseller, 98, 99. &c. 3 Inst. 204. See tiles Advowson, II. Chaplain, Cession. And refusing to use the Common Prayers of the church, plurality of livings, &c. are causes of deprivation ipso facto, in which case the church shall be void, without any sentence declaratory; and avoidances by act of parliament need no declaratory sentence: But in other cases there must be a declaratory sentence. Dyer, 275. See title Parson.

Where a benefice is only voidable, but not void before sentence of deprivation, the party must be cited to appear; there is to be a libel against him, and a time assigned to answer it, and also liberty for advocates to plead, and after all a solemn sentence pronounced: though none of these formalities are required, where the living is made ipso facto void. Can. 122. If a deprivation be for a thing merely of ecclesiastical cognizance, no appeal lies; but the party has his remedy by a commission of review, which is granted by the King of mere grace. Moor, 781.

DEPUTY, Deputatus.] One that exercises an office, &c. in another man's right; whose forfeiture or misdemeanor, shall cause him, whose deputy he is, to lose his office. The Common Law, takes notice of deputies in many cases, but it never takes notice of under-deputies; for a deputy is generally but a person authorised, who cannot authorise another. 1 Lill. Abr. 416. A man cannot make his deputy in all cases; except the grant of the office justify him in it, and where it is to one to execute by deputy, &c.

And there is a great difference between a deputy and assignee of an office; for an assignee hath an interest in the office itself; and doth all things in his own name; for whom his grantor shall not answer, unless in special cases. But a deputy hath not any interest in the office, but is only the shadow of the officer, in whose name he doth all things And where an officer hath power to make assigns, he may implicitly make deputies. And a sheriff may make a deputy, or undersheriff, although he have not such express words in his patent. 9 Rep. 49.—Cowel.

A deputy cannot make a deputy; because it implies an assignment of his whole power, which he cannot assign over; but he may impower another to do a particular act. 1 Salk. 96. Lit. 379.

Judges cannot act by deputy, but are to hold their courts in person; for they may not transfer their power over to others. 2 Hawk, P. C. c. 1. § 9. But it has been adjudged, that recorders may hold their courts by deputy. 1 Lev. 76. The office of Custos Brevium and Chirographer in C. B. cannot be executed by deputy. 1 Nels. Abr. 644. A steward of a court may make a deputy; and acts of an under-steward's deputy have been held good in some cases. Cro. Eliz. 534.

A coroner ought not to execute his office by deputy, it being a judicial office of trust; and judicial offices are annexed to the person. 1 Lil. 446. If the office of parkership be granted to one, he may not grant this to another; because it is an office of trust and confidence. Termes de Ley.

A bailiff of a liberty, may make a deputy. Cro. Jac. 240. And a constable may make a deputy, who may execute the warrant directed to the constable, &c. 2 Danv. 482. See title Constable.

When an office descends to an infant, idiot, &c. such may make a deputy of course. 9 Rep. 47. Where an office is granted to a man and his heirs, he may make an assignee of that office; and by consequence a deputy.

A Deputy of an office, hath no interest therein, but doth all things in his master's name, and his master shall be answerable; but an assignee hath an interest in the office, and doth all things in his own name, for whom his grantor shall not answer, unless in special cases. Termes de Ley.

A superior officer must answer for his deputy in civil actions, if he is not sufficient: but in criminal cases it is otherwise, where deputies are to answer for themselves. 2 Inst. 191. 466. Doct. & Stud. c. 42. See title Officer.

DE QUIBUS SUR DISSEISIN. A writ of entry. See F. N. B. 191.

DER, from the Sax. Deor. Fera.] The names of places beginning with this word, signify that formerly wild beasts herded there together.

DERAIGN OR DEREYN, Disrationare; dirationare.] Seems to be derived literally from the Fr. deraigner or deragner, to confound and disorder, or to turn out of course or displace; as deraignment or departure out of religion. Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 6. And deraignment and discharge of their profession. Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 29.

In our Common Law this word is used diversly; but generally to prove, viz. to deraign that right, deraign the warranty, &c. Glanv. lib. 2. cap. 6. F. N. B. 146. If a man hath an estate in fee with warranty, and enfeoffs a stranger with warranty, and dies; and the feoffee vouches the heir, the heir shall deraign the first warranty, &c. Plowd. 7. And jointenants and tenants in common shall have aid, to the intent to deraign the warranty paramount. 31 H. 8. cap. 1. See Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 28. Britton applieth this word to a summons that they be challenged as defective, or not lawfully made, cap. 21. And Skene confounds it with our waging and making of law. See Lex Deraisnia.

Perhaps this word deraign, and the word deraignment derived from it, may be used in the sense of to prove and approving, by disproving of what is asserted in opposition to truth and fact.

DERELICT, Derelictus.] Any thing forsaken or left; or wilfully cast away. Derelict lands suddenly left by the sea belong to the King: but if the sea shrink back so slowly that the gain be by little and little, i. e. by small and imperceptible degrees, it shall go to the owner of the lands adjoining. See 2 Comm. 261.

Certain Goods derelict (spirits and tobacco) are liable to duties of customs as if legally imported. Stat. 54 Geo. 3. c. 81. § 21, 22. 29. See title Wreck.

DERELICT (SHIP). Is a vessel forsaken at sea. Sir Leoline Jenkins, defines derelicts to be "boats or other vessels forsaken, or found on the seas without any person in them: of these, the Admiralty has but the custody, and the owner may recover them within a year and a day." See 1 Robinson's Adm. Rep. 41.

In cases of derelict ships an allowance is made in the nature of salvage of two fifths or more, where the case of salvage has been attended with danger. 4 Rob. Adm. Rep. 194.

DESCENDER, Writ of formedon in. A writ which lieth, where a gift in tail is made, and the tenant in tail alienes the land entailed, or is disseised of them and dies; the heir in tail shall have this writ against him, who is then the actual tenant of the freehold. F. N. B. 211, 212. See title Formedon.

DESCENT, OR HEREDITARY SUCCESSION;

Lat. Descensus; Fr. Discent; in which latter way the term is usually spelt in all old law books.] The title whereby a man, on the death of his ancestor, obtains the freehold of such ancestor, by right of representation, as his Heir-at-law. —It is otherwise defined; the order or means whereby lands or tenements are derived unto any man from his ancestor.— An Heir is he upon whom the law casts the estate immediately on the death of his ancestor: and the estate so descending is in law called the Inheritance. See 2 Comm. 200. lib. 2. c. 14. from whence much of the following matter is abridged.

It may not be an useless preliminary observation, that the law of Descents of real estates, is totally distinct from that of the Distribution of personal property; for which latter see title Executor, III. V. 8.

Descent being created by law, and the most ancient title, it is termed the worthiest means by which land can be acquired; and an Heir is in by that, in preference to a grant, or devise, &c. which are called titles by purchase. It is a rule in law, that a man cannot raise a fee-simple to his own right heirs, by the name of heirs, as a purchase, either by conveyance or devise; for if he devise lands to one who is the heir at law the devise is void, and he shall take by descent. Dyer, 54, 126. And it is the same where the lands will come to the heir, either in a direct or collateral line; or where the heir comes to an estate by way of limitation, when the word heirs is not a word of purchase. Ibid. A father hath two sons by several venters, and devises his land to his wife for life, and after her decease to his eldest son; though the son doth not take the estate presently on the death of his father, he shall be in by descent, and not by purchase, and the devise shall be void as to him. Style, 148. 1 Nels. Abr. 645. But it is said he may make his election, and take by devise, if he pleases.

A man being seised of lands which he had by the mother's side, devised them to his heirs on the part of his mother; and it was adjudged, that the devisee shall take by descent. 3 Lev. 127. and when the heir takes that which his ancestor would have taken if living, he shall take it by descent, and not by purchase. 2 Danv. 557. But generally, where an estate is devised to the heir-at-law, attended with a charge, as to pay money debts, &c. in such case he takes by purchase, and not by descent. Though conditions to pay money have been construed only a charge in equity; and that they do not alter the descent at Common Law. 1 Lut. 593. 1 Salk. 241. See further titles Limitation, Purchase, Estate, Will.

If one die seised of land, in which another hath right to enter, and it descends to his heir; such descent shall take away the other's right of entry, and put him to his action for recovery thereof. Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 33. Co. Lit. 237. But a descent of such things as lie in grant, as advowsons, rents, commons in gross, &c. puts not him who hath right to his action. Co. Lit. 237. 2 Danv. Abr. 561. And a descent shall not take away the entry of an infant; nor of a feme-covert, where the wrong was done to her during the coverture. 2 Danv. 563. See title Entry.

The Doctrine of Descents, or law of inheritance in fee-simple, is a point of the highest importance; and is indeed the principal object of the laws of real property in England. All the rules relating to purchases, whereby the legal course of descents is broken and altered, perpetually refer to this settled law of inheritance, as a datum or first principle universally known, and upon which their subsequent limitations are to work.

In order therefore to treat a subject of this universal consequence the more clearly, it seems better to lay aside such matters as will only tend to cause embarrassment and confusion. The question, who are, and who are not capable of being heirs, comes more properly under the titles Heir, Attainder, Escheat; which see. We may also pass over the frequent division of descents, into those by Custom, Statute, and Common Law. As to descents by particular custom, as to all the sons in gavelkind, or to the youngest in Borough English, see those titles, and title Custom; and as to descents by statute, or fees-tail per formam doni, in pursuance of the stat. of West. 2. see titles Estate, Limitations, Tenure.

As the law of Descents depends not a little on the nature of kindred, and the several degrees of consanguinity, it will be previously necessary to state, briefly, the true notion of this kindred or alliance in blood.

CONSANGUINITY, or kindred, is defined by the writers on these subjects to be vinculum personarum ab eodem stipite descendentium; the connexion or relation of persons descended from the same stock or common ancestor. This consanguinity is either lineal or collateral.

Lineal consanguinity, is that which subsists between persons, of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other, as between a man and his father, grandfather, and great grandfather, and so upwards, in the direct ascending line: or between a man and his son, grandson, great grandson, and so downwards in the direct descending line. Every generation, in this lineal direct consanguinity, constitutes a different degree, reckoning either upwards or downwards: the father is related in the first degree, and so likewise is the son; grandsire and grandson in the second; great grandsire and great grandson in the third. This is the only natural way of reckoning the degrees in the direct line, and therefore universally obtains, as well in the civil and canon as in the Common Law.

Collateral kindred answers to the same description: collateral relations agreeing with the lineal in this, that they descend from the same stock or ancestor; but differing in this that they do not descend one from the other. Collateral kinsmen are such then as lineally spring from one and the same ancestor, who is the stirps, or root, the stipes, trunk or common stock, from whence these relations are branched out. As if a man hath two sons, who have each a numerous issue; both these issues are lineally descended from him as their common ancestor; and they are collateral kinsmen to each other, because they are all descended from this common ancestor, and all have a portion of his blood in their veins, which denominates them consanguineos.

The very being of collateral consanguinity, consists in this descent, from one and the same common ancestor. Thus A. and his brother are related; Why? Because both are derived from one father: A. and his first cousin are related; Why? Because both descended from the same grandfather; and his second cousins' claim to consanguinity is this, that they are both derived from one and the same great grandfather. In short as many ancestors as a man has, so many common stocks he has, from which collateral kinsmen may be derived.

The method of computing these degrees in the canon law, which our law has adopted (Co. Lit. 23.) is as follows. We begin at the common ancestor, and reckon downwards; and in whatsoever degree the two persons, or the most remote of them, is distant from the common ancestor, that is the degree in which they are related to each other. Thus A. and his brother are related in the first degree; for from the father to each of them is counted only one: A. and his nephew are related in the second degree; for the nephew is two degrees removed from the common ancestor; viz. his own grandfather, the father of A. 2 Comm.

The learned Commentator then proceeds to lay down a series of Rules, or Canons of inheritance, according to which, estates are transmitted from the ancestor to the heir, with an explanatory comment.

I. THE FIRST RULE is that Inheritances shall lineally DESCEND to the issue of the person who last died actually seised, in infinitum; but shall never lineally ASCEND.

By law no inheritance can vest, nor can any person be the actual complete heir of another, till the ancestor is previously dead. Nemo est hæres viventis. Before that time the person who is next in the line of succession is called an heir apparent, or heir presumptive. Heirs apparent are such, whose right of inheritance is indefeasible, provided they outlive the ancestor; as the eldest son or his issue, who must by the course of Common Law be heir to the father whenever he happens to die. Heirs presumptive are such, who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would in the present circumstances of things be his heirs; but whose right of inheritance may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born; as a brother or nephew, whose presumptive succession may be destroyed by the birth of a child; or a daughter, whose present hopes may hereafter be cut off by the birth of a son. Nay, even if the estate hath descended, by the death of the owner, to such brother or nephew, or daughter; in the former cases, the estate shall be devested and taken away by the birth of a posthumous child; and in the latter, it shall also be totally devested by the birth of a posthumous son. Bro. tit. Descent, 58.

And besides this case of a posthumous child, if lands are given to a son who dies, leaving a sister his heir; if the parents have at any distance of time afterwards another son, this son shall devest the descent upon the sister, and take the estate as heir to his brother. Co. Lit. 11. Doct. & Stud. d. 2. c. 7. So the same estate may be frequently devested by the subsequent birth of nearer presumptive heirs, before it fixes upon an heir apparent. As if an estate is given to an only child, who dies; it may descend to an aunt, who may be stripped of it by an after born uncle; on whom a subsequent sister may enter, and who will again be deprived of the estate by the birth of a brother, the heir apparent. Christian's note on 2 Comm. 208. See tit. Posthumous Children, Infant, II.

It seems determined that every one has a right to retain the rents and profits which accrued whilst he was thus legally possessed of the inheritance. 1 Inst. 11. in n. 2 Wils. 526.—See further as to the entry of a posthumous heir, Watkins on Descents, c. 4.

No person can properly be such an ancestor, as that an inheritance of lands or tenements can be derived from him, unless he hath had actual seisin of such lands, either by his own entry, or by the possession of his own or his ancestor's lessee for years, or receiving rent from a lessee of the freehold: (Co. Lit. 15.) or unless he hath had what is equivalent to corporal seisin in hereditaments that are incorporeal; such as the receipt of rent, a presentation to the church in case of an advowson, and the like. Co. Lit. 11. But he shall be accounted an ancestor, who hath had only a bare right or title to enter, or be otherwise seized. The seisin therefore of any person, thus understood, makes him the root, or stock, from which all future inheritance by right of blood must be derived: which is very briefly expressed in this maxim, seisina facit stipitem. Flet. l. 6. c. 2. § 2.

Though it be necessary the ancestor be seised, yet it is not required that the seisin continue till the death of such ancestor: for if he had been seised at any time during his life, and afterwards disseised, still if he had not parted with his right or property, his heir shall inherit. 1 Inst. 237. b.—See Watkins on Descents. If the hereditaments descending be in the reversion or remainder expectant on an estate of freehold, the heir may obtain what will be equivalent to an actual seisin, by granting them over for life or in tail. See post, VI. as to possessio fratris.

When therefore a person dies so seised, the inheritance first goes to his issue: as if there be grandfather, father, and son, and the father purchases lands and dies; his son shall succeed him as heir, and not the grandfather, to whom the land shall never lineally ascend, but shall rather escheat to the lord. Litt. § 3. This rule, that the inheritance shall never lineally ascend, clearly appears to be of feudal original, and the propriety of it is well defended at some length by the learned Commentator, to whom we refer the reader desirous of investigating the subject, as a matter rather of curiosity than utility.

Though an estate cannot lineally ascend, the father may take his son's estate by an intermediate descent; for if the son has neither issue, nor brothers nor sisters, the estate will descend to an uncle, or some collateral relation, to whom the father may on his decease be the next heir. And in some cases, the father or mother may inherit immediately from a child. As if either of them are cousin to the child; a case of which nature occurs in 2 P. Wms. 613.; where a son died, seised in fee of land, without issue, brother or sister, but leaving two cousins, his heirs at law, one of whom was his own mother, the question was whether the mother could take as heir to her son. The Master of the Rolls was of opinion, that though the heir was also mother, this did not hinder her from taking in the capacity or relation of cousin. See 2 Comm. 212. in n.

In 1 Inst. 8. it is said, that if a man hath issue an elder son, born out of the King's allegiance, and after hath another son born within the realm; the younger son shall have lands by descent from his father in this case, and not the elder who had never any inheritable blood in him. Co. Lit. 8.—But if the father in this case is to be supposed a natural-born subject at the birth of the issue, the child would now be also a natural born subject by force of stats. 7 An. c. 5. 4 Geo. 2. c. 21. But the children of persons attainted of, or liable to the penalties of, treason, or in the service of a foreign state in enmity with Great Britain, are excepted from the benefit of this provision. See stat. 25 E. 3. st. 2. which declares that at Common Law the children of the King wherever born, may inherit. The same statute enables children born abroad to inherit, if at their birth both their parents are within the King's allegiance, and their mothers pass the sea, with the licence of their husbands. See 1 Inst. 8. in n. See tit. Alien.

Lord Coke also lays it down for law, that if an alien hath issue in England two sons, though these sons are indigenæ, subjects born, they cannot inherit to each other. But in the case of Collingwood v. Pace, this was denied to be law, and it was expressly held that such sons of aliens were inheritable to each other. See 1 Sid. 193. 1 Ventr. 413. And now by stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 6. natural-born subjects may derive a title by descent through their parents, though aliens; but stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 39. confines the benefit of the former statute to such heirs as shall be living, and capable of taking at the death of the person last dying seised; unless such heirs happen to be daughters, and there is afterwards a son or another daughter, for which cases the statute makes a special provision. Both these acts are extended to Scotland by stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 52. The principle, on which it has been adjudged that the children of an alien may be heirs as between themselves, though not to their father, seems to reach the case of children born after their father's attainder. See 1 Inst. 8. in n. —And further this Dict. titles Alien, Attainder.

II. A SECOND GENERAL RULE, or canon is, that the male issue shall be admitted before the female. Thus sons shall be admitted before daughters; or, as our law expresses it, the worthiest of blood shall be preferred. Hal. H. C. L. 235. As if one hath two sons, and two daughters, and dies; first the eldest son, (and in case of his death without issue) then the youngest son shall be admitted to the succession in preference to both the daughters.

The reason of this, as well as of the preceding rule, must be deduced from feodal principles: for, by the genuine and original policy of that constitution, no female could ever succeed to a proper feud, inasmuch as females were incapable of performing those military services, for the sake of which that system was established. But our law does not extend to a total exclusion of females, as the Salic law, and others, where feuds were most strictly retained: it only postpones them to males; for though daughters are excluded by sons, yet they succeed before any collateral relations.

III. A THIRD RULE, or Canon of descent, is; that where there are two or more males in equal degree, the eldest son shall inherit; but the females all together.

As if a man hath two sons, and two daughters, and dies his eldest son shall alone succeed to his estate, in exclusion of the second son and both the daughters; but, if both the sons die without issue before the father, the daughters shall both inherit the estate as coparceners. Litt. § 5. Hal. C. L. 238.

This rule is also of feudal original, and arose from thence on the establishment of that constitution in England, by William the Conqueror.

Yet we find, that socage estates frequently descended to all the sons equally, so lately as when Glanvil wrote, in the reign of Henry II. and it is mentioned in the Mirror, (c. 1. § 3.) as a part of our ancient constitution, that knights' fees should descend to the eldest son, and socage fees should be partible among male children. However, in Henry III.'s time, we find by Bracton, (l. 2. c. 30, 1.) that socage lands, in imitation of lands in chivalry, had almost entirely fallen into the right of succession by primogeniture, as the law now stands; except in Kent, where they gloried in the preservation of their ancient gavelkind tenure, of which a principal branch was the joint inheritance of all the sons; and except in some particular manors and townships, where their local customs continued the descent, sometimes to all, sometimes to the youngest son only, or in other more singular methods of succession.

A Rectory in Kent, formerly belonging to one of the monasteries dissolved by Hen. VIII. and by him given to a Layman to be holden in fee, by Knight's Service in capite: the court of C. P. held that the Lands were descendible according to the custom of Gavelkind: but the tithes according to the Common Law. Doe d. Lushington v. Llandaff, Bp. 2 New Rep. 491.

As to the females, they are still left as they were by the ancient law; for they were all equally incapable of performing any personal service: and therefore one main reason for preferring the eldest ceasing, such preference would have been injurious to the rest: and the other principal purpose, the prevention of the too minute subdivision of estates, was left to be considered and provided for by the lords, who had the disposal of these female heiresses in marriage. However, the succession by primogeniture, even among females, took place as to the inheritance of the crown; wherein the necessity of a sole and determinate succession, is as great in the one sex, as in the other. 1 Inst. 165. And the right of sole succession, though not of primogeniture, was also established with respect to female dignities and titles of honour. For if a man holds an earldom to him and the heirs of his body, and dies, leaving only daughters; the eldest shall not of course be Countess, but the dignity is in suspence or abeyance till the King shall declare his pleasure; for he, being the fountain of honour, may confer it on which of them he pleases. Ibid.—See titles Abeyance, Peers, Parceners.

IV. A FOURTH RULE, or Canon of descent, is; that the lineal descendants, in infinitum, of any person deceased, shall represent their ancestor; that is, shall stand in the same place as the person himself would have done, had he been living.

Thus the child, grandchild, or great grandchild, (either male or female) of an eldest son, succeeds before a younger son, and so in infinitum. Hal. H. C. L. 236, 7. And these representatives shall take neither more nor less, but just so much as their principals would have done. As if there be two sisters, and one dies, leaving six daughters; and then the father of the two sisters dies, without other issue: these six daughters shall take among them exactly as much as their mother would have done, had she been living; that is, a moiety of the lands in coparcenary: so that, upon partition made, if the land be divided into twelve parts, the surviving sister shall have six parts, and her six nieces, one part each.

This taking by representation, is called succession in stirpes according to the roots: since all the branches inherit the same share that their root, whom they represent, would have done. So if the next heirs of a man be six nieces, three by one sister, two by another, and one by a third; his inheritance by the laws of England, is divided only into three parts, and distributed per stirpes, thus; one third to the three eldest children who represent one sister, another third to the two who represent the second, and the remaining third to the one child who is the sole representative of her mother.

This mode of representation is a necessary consequence of the double preference given by our law, first to the male issue, and next to the first born among the males. For if all the children of three sisters were to claim per capita, in their own right, as next of kin to the ancestor, without any respect to the stocks from whence they sprung, and those children were partly male, and partly female, then the eldest male among them would exclude not only his own brethren and sisters, but all the issue of the other two daughters, or else the law in this instance must be inconsistent with itself, and depart from the preference which it constantly gives to the males, and the first born, among persons in equal degree. Whereas, by dividing the inheritance according to the roots, or stirpes, the rule of descent is kept uniform and steady; the issue of the eldest son excludes all other pretenders, as the son himself (if living) willing would have done; but the issue of two daughters divide the inheritance between them, provided their mothers (if living) would have done the same: and among these several issues, or representatives of the respective roots, the same preference to males, and the same right of primogeniture obtain, as would have obtained at the first among the roots themselves, the sons or daughters of the deceased. As 1. if a man hath two sons, A. and B. and A. dies, leaving two sons, and then the grandfather dies; now the eldest son of A. shall succeed to the whole of his grandfather's estate: and if A. had left only two daughters, they should have succeeded also to equal moieties of the whole, in exclusion of B. and his issue. But 2. if a man hath only three daughters, C. D. and E.; and C. dies leaving two sons, D. leaving two daughters, and E. leaving a daughter and a son, who is younger than his sister: here when the grandfather dies, the eldest son of C. shall succeed to one third, in exclusion of the younger; and the two daughters of D. to another third in partnership; and the son of E. to the remaining third, in exclusion of his eldest sister. And the same right of representation, guided and restrained by the same rules of descent, prevails downwards in infinitum.

How far the two immediately preceding, and other cases in the course of this title may be explained by the following scheme, the student is left to determine. It may perhaps afford a hint for statements in more complicated cases of descent. For regular tables of Consanguinity and Descent, see 1 Inst.; The Commentaries; and Watkins's Treatise on Descent.

King John, however, who kept his nephew Arthur from the throne, by disputing this right of representation, did all in his power to abolish it throughout the realm. Hale H. C. L. 217. 229. But in the time of his son King Henry III. the rule was indisputably settled in the manner here laid down, Bract. l. 2. c. 30. § 2. and so it has continued ever since. And thus much for lineal descents.

V. A FIFTH RULE is, that, on failure of lineal descendants or issue of the person last seised, the inheritance shall descend to his collateral relations, being of the blood of the first purchasor, subject to the three preceeding rules. Thus if A. purchase land, and it descend to B. his son, who dies seised thereof without issue; whoever succeeds to this inheritance, must be of the blood of A. the first purchasor of this family. Co. Litt. 12. The first purchasor, perquisitor is he who first acquired the estate to his family, whether the same was transferred to him by sale or by gift, or by any other method except only that of descent.

This is a rule almost peculiar to our own laws, and those of a similar feudal original; and this rule or canon cannot otherwise be accounted for than by recurring to feudal principles, which did not originally permit the descent of lands to any but one of the lineal descendants of the first purchasor, who in the case of a feudum novum, or estate purchased by the ancestor himself, could only be of his own offspring; so that such estate could not descend even to his brother. See this Dict. title Tenures; 1. 3.

But when the feudal rigour was in part abated, a method was invented to let in the collateral relations of the grantee to the inheritance, by granting him a feudum novum to hold ut feudum antiquum; that is, with all the qualities annexed of a feud derived from his ancestors; and then the collateral relations were admitted to succeed even in infinitum, because they might have been of the blood of, that is descended from, the first imaginary purchasor.

Of this nature, are all the grants of fee-simple estates of this kingdom; for there is now in the law of England, no such thing as a grant of a feudum novum, to be held ut novum; unless in the case of a fee-tail, and there this rule is strictly observed, and none but the lineal descendants of the first donee (or purchasor) are admitted; but every grant of lands in fee-simple, is with us a feudum novum, to be held ut antiquum, as a feud whose antiquity is indefinite: and therefore the collateral kindred of the grantee, or descendants from any of his lineal ancestors, by whom the lands might possibly have been purchased, are capable of being called to the inheritance.

Yet, when an estate hath really descended in a course of inheritance to the person last seised, the strict rule of the Feudal law is still observed; and none are admitted, but the heirs of those through whom the inheritance hath passed; for all others have demonstrably none of the blood of the first purchasor in them, and therefore shall never succeed. As, if lands come to A. by descent from his mother; no relation of his father (as such) shall ever be his heir of these lands; and, vice versa, if they descended from his father, no relation of his mother (as such) shall ever be admitted thereto; for his father's kindred have none of his mother's blood, nor have his mother's relations any share of his father's blood. And so, if the estate descended from his father's father, the relations of his father's mother shall for the same reason never be admitted, but only those of his father's father.

Hence the expression heir at law must always be used with reference to a specific estate: for if an only child has taken by descent an estate from his father, and another from his mother; upon his death without issue, these estates will descend to two different persons. So also, if his two grandfathers and two grandmothers, had each an estate, which descended to his father or mother, being only children, then these four estates will descend to four different heirs. 2 Comm. 222. in n.

This then is the great and general principle, upon which the law of collateral inheritances depends; that, upon failure of issue in the last proprietor, the estate shall descend to the blood of the first purchasor; or, that it shall result back to the heirs of the body of that ancestor, from whom it either really has, or is supposed by fiction of law to have originally descended: according to the rule laid down in the year books. M. 12 Ed. 4. 14. Fitzherbert, Abr. t. Discent. 2. Brook. Ibid. 38. and Hale H. C. L. 243. "That he who would have been heir to the father of the deceased, (and of course to the mother, or any other real or supposed purchasing ancestor) shall also be heir to the son;" a maxim that will hold universally, except in the case of a brother or sister of the half blood, which exception (as we shall see hereafter) depends upon very special grounds. See post, VII.

VI. A SIXTH RULE, or canon is, that the collateral heir of the person last seised, must be his next collateral kinsman of the whole blood.

First, he must be his next collateral kinsman, either personally, or jure representationis; which proximity is reckoned according to the canonical degrees of consanguinity. Therefore, the brother being in the first degree, he and his descendants shall exclude the uncle and his issue, who is only in the second. And herein consists the true reason of the different methods of computing the degrees of consanguinity, in the civil law on the one hand, and in the canon and common laws on the other.

When the paternal and maternal lines are both admitted to the inheritance, the most remote collateral kinsman in the paternal line, will inherit before the nearest in the maternal. So that the expression that the collateral heir, must be the next collateral kinsman, is qualified by the general rules of descent, which prefer the male line to the female.

The designation of person, however, in seeking for the next of kin, will come to exactly the same end, (though the degrees will be differently numbered,) which-ever method of computation we suppose the law of England to use; since the right of representation of the parent by the issue, is allowed to prevail in infinitum. Indeed it may be questioned how far the introduction of the computation of kindred, either by the canon or civil law, is of use in the Common Law doctrine of Descents.

This right of representation being established, the former part of the present rule amounts to this; that, on failure of issue of the person last seised, the inheritance shall descend to the other subsisting issue of his next immediate ancestor. Thus, if A. dies without issue, his estate shall descend to his eldest brother, (if more than one) or his representatives; he being lineally descended from A.'s father his next immediate ancestor. On failure of brethren, or sisters, and their issue, it shall descend to the uncle of A. the lineal descendant of his grandfather; and so on in infinitum.

The elder brother of the whole blood shall have land by descent, purchased by a middle or younger brother, if such die without issue; for as to descents between brethren, the eldest is the most worthy of blood to inherit to them as well as to the father. Lit. 3. 3 Rep. 40.

Here it must be observed, that the lineal ancestors though (according to the first rule) incapable themselves of succeeding to the estate, because it is supposed to have already passed them, are yet the common stocks from which the next successor must spring. But though the common ancestor be thus the root of the inheritance, yet it is not necessary to name him in making out the pedigree or descent. For the descent between two brothers is held to be an immediate descent; and therefore title may be made by one brother, or his representatives, to or through another, without mentioning their common father. 1 Sid. 196. 1 Ventr. 423. 1 Lev. 60. 12 Mod. 619.

The law takes no notice of the disability of the father in case of descent, but only of the immediate relation of brothers and sisters, as to their estates; so that the inability of the father doth not hinder the descent between them: for example: A man had issue a son and a daughter, and was attainted of treason, and died; the son purchased lands and died without issue; and it was adjudged that notwithstanding the attainder of the father, the daughter shall take by descent from her brother, because the descent between them was immediate, and the law doth not regard the disability of the father. 4 Leon. 5. See 4 Rep. 31. 124.

Where a person seised of lands, hath issue two daughters, if one of them commits felony, after the father's death, both daughters being alive, a moiety shall descend to one daughter, and the other shall escheat. Co. Lit. 163.

But, secondly, the heir need not be the nearest kinsman absolutely, but only sub modo; that is, he must be the nearest kinsman of the whole blood; for, if there be a much nearer kinsman of the half blood, a distant kinsman of the whole shall be admitted, and the other entirely excluded: nay, the estate shall escheat to the lord, sooner than the half blood shall inherit.

A kinsman of the whole blood is he that is derived, not only from the same ancestor, but from the same couple of ancestors. For, as every man's own blood is compounded of the bloods of his respective ancestors, he is only properly of the whole or entire blood with another, who hath (so far as the distance of degrees will permit) all the same ingredients in the composition of his blood that the other hath. Thus the blood of A. being composed of those of his father and his mother, therefore his brother being from both the same parents hath entirely the same blood with A.; or, in other words, he is his brother of the whole blood. But if, after the death of A.'s father, his mother had married a second husband, and had issue by him; the blood of this issue, being compounded of the blood of A.'s mother only, on the one part, but of that of the second husband, on the other part, it hath therefore only half the same ingredients with that of A. himself; so that such issue is only A.'s brother of the half blood; and for that reason they shall never inherit to each other. So also if the father has two sons, A. and B. by different venters, or wives; these two brethren are not brethren of the whole blood, and therefore shall never inherit to each other, but the estate shall rather escheat to the lord. Nay even if the father dies, and his lands descend to his eldest son A. who enters thereon, and dies seised without issue, still B. shall not be heir to this estate, because he is only of the half blood to A. the person last seised: but it shall descend to a sister (if any) of the whole blood to A.; for in such cases the maxim is, that possessio fratris facit sororem esse hæredem, the seisin or possession of the brother makes the sister to be heir. Yet, had A. died without entry, then B. might have inherited; not as heir to A. his half brother, but as heir to their common father, who was the person last actually seised. Hale H. C. L. 238.

Of some inheritances there cannot be a seisin, or possessio fratris: as if the eldest brother dies before a presentation to an advowson, it will descend to the half brother, as heir to the person last seised, and not to the sister of the whole blood. 1 Bur. Ec. 11. So of reversions, remainders, and executory devises, there can be no seisin or possessio fratris; and if they are reserved or granted to A. and his heirs, he who is heir to A. when they come into possession, is entitled to them by descent: that is, the person who would have been heir to A. if A. had lived so long, and had then died actually seised. 2 Woodd. 256. Fearne, 448. 2 Wils. 29. and see further this title ad finem relative to the descent of reversions, &c.—But though a possessio fratris cannot properly be of a remainder or reversion expectant upon an estate of freehold, yet by the exertion of certain acts of ownership, as by granting them over for term of life, a possessio fratris of them may be made. 8 Rep. 95 b. 1 Inst. 15 a; 191 b.—There can be no possessio fratris of an estate tail; nor of honorary dignities. Nor of the descent of the crown, and its possessions; nor of a mere right. See Watkins on Descents, c. 1. § 4. and the authorities there cited.

That the rule of possessio fratris does not apply to estates tail, nor even to inheritances in fee simple, without an actual possession of the brother of the whole blood, see Doe d. Gregory v. Whichelo, 8 Term Rep. 211.

The total exclusion of the half blood from the inheritance being almost peculiar to our own law, is looked upon as a strange hardship by such as are unacquainted with the reasons on which it is grounded. But these censures arise from a misapprehension of the rule, which is not so much to be considered in the light of a rule of descent as of a rule of evidence; an auxiliary rule, to carry a former into execution.

To illustrate this rule by example: let there be A. and B. brothers, by the same father and mother, and C. another son, of the same mother by a second husband. Now if A. dies seised of lands, but it is uncertain whether they descended to him from his father or mother; in this case his brother B. of the whole blood, is qualified to be his heir; for he is sure to be in the line of descent from the first purchasor, whether it were the line of the father or mother. But if B. should die before A. without issue, C., the brother of the half blood, is utterly incapable of being heir; for he cannot prove his descent from the first purchasor, who is unknown; nor has he that fair probability which the law admits as presumptive evidence, since he is to the full as likely not to be descended from the line of the first purchasor, as to be descended: and therefore the inheritance shall go to the nearest relation possessed of this presumptive proof, the whole blood.

And, as this is the case in feudis antiquis, where there really did exist a purchasing ancestor, who is forgotten, it is also the case in feudis novis held ut antiquis, where the purchasing ancestor is merely ideal, and never existed, but only in fiction of law. Of this nature are all grants of lands in fee-simple at this day, which are inheritable as if they descended from some uncertain indefinite ancestor, and therefore, any of the collateral kindred of the real modern purchasor, (and not his own offspring only,) may inherit them, provided they be of the whole blood; for all such are, in judgment of law, likely enough to be derived from this indefinite ancestor: but those of the half blood are excluded for want of the same probability. Nor should this be thought hard, that a brother of the purchasor, though only of the half blood, must thus be disinherited, and a more remote relation of the whole blood admitted, merely upon a supposition and fiction of law; since it is only upon a like supposition and fiction, that brethren of purchasors (whether of the whole or half blood) are entitled to inherit at all.

J. A. devised all his lands to S. A. (his son by a first wife) when he should come to the age of twenty-one years, but if he should die before twenty-one, and D. A. (testator's daughter by a second wife) should be then living, he gave the same to her when she should attain twenty-one. After testator's death, S. A. died under age without issue.—The court of C. P. held that the inheritance vested in D. A. his sister of the half-blood, in preference to the uncle of S. A. of the whole blood. Doe d. Andrew v. Hutton, 3 B. & P. 643.

This rule, as to the exclusion of the half blood, is certainly a very fine-spun and subtle nicety: but, considering the principles upon which our law is founded, it is not an injustice, nor always a hardship; since even the succession of the whole blood was originally a beneficial indulgence, rather than a strict right of collaterals: and though that indulgence is not extended to the demi-kindred, yet they are rarely abridged of any right which they could possibly have enjoyed before. See this Dict. title Tenures, III. 5. The doctrine of the whole blood was calculated to supply the frequent impossibility of proving a descent from the first purchasor; without some proof of which (according to our fundamental maxim) there can be no inheritance allowed of. And this purpose it answers, for the most part, effectually enough. It seems however that in some instances, the practice is carried farther than the principle upon which it goes will warrant. It is more especially over-strained, when a man has two sons by different venters, and the estate, on his death, descends from him to the eldest, who enters, and dies without issue; in which case the younger son cannot inherit this estate, because he is not of the whole blood to the last proprietor. This, it must be owned, carries a hardship with it, even upon feudal principles: for the rule was introduced only to supply the proof of a descent from the first purchasor; but here, as this estate notoriously descended from the father, and as both the brothers confessedly sprung from him, it is demonstrable, that the half brother must be of the blood of the first purchasor, who was either the father, or some of the father's ancestors.

It is moreover worthy of observation, that the Crown, (which is the highest inheritance in the nation,) may descend to the half blood of the preceding sovereign; Plowd. 245. Co. Lit. 15. so that it be the blood of the first monarch, purchasor (or in the feudal language) conqueror, conquæstor, of the reigning family. Thus it actually did descend from king Edward VI. to queen Mary, and from her to queen Elizabeth, who were respectively of the half blood to each other. For, the royal pedigree being always a matter of sufficient notoriety, there is no occasion to call in the aid of this presumptive rule of evidence, to render probable the descent from the royal stock, which was formerly king William the Norman, and is now (by stat. 12 Will. 3. c. 2.) the princess Sophia of Hanover. Hence also it is, that in estates-tail, where the pedigree from the first donee must be strictly proved, half blood is no impediment to the descent; Lit. § 14, 15. because when the lineage is clearly made out, there is no need of this auxiliary proof. Also in titles of honour half blood is no impediment to the descent; but a title can only be transmitted to those who are descended from the first person ennobled. 1 Inst. 15. See this Dict. title Peers. How far it might be desirable to amend the law of descents in one or two instances, and ordain that the half blood might always inherit, where the estate notoriously descended from its own proper ancestor, and, in cases of new purchased lands, or uncertain descents, should never be excluded by the whole blood in a remoter degree; or how far a private inconvenience should be still submitted to, rather than a long established rule should be shaken, is for the Legislature to determine. See further 2 Comm. 233. in n.

The rule as to the whole blood, together with its illustration, amounts to this: that in order to keep the estate of A. as nearly as possible in the line of his purchasing ancestor it must descend to the issue of the nearest couple of ancestors that have left descendants behind them; because the descendants of one ancestor only are not so likely to be in the line of that purchasing ancestor, as those who are descended from both.

And in order to avoid the confusion and uncertainty that might arise between the several stocks wherein the purchasing ancestor may be sought for, another qualification is requisite, besides the proximity and entierty; which is that of dignity, or worthiness, of blood. For,

VII. The seventh and last rule or canon is, that in collateral inheritances the male stocks shall be preferred to the female; (that is, kindred derived from the blood of the male ancestors, however remote, shall be admitted before those of the blood of the female, however near;) unless where the lands have, in fact, descended from a female.

Thus the relations on the father's side are admitted in infinitum, before those on the mother's side are admitted at all. Litt. § 4. And the relations of the father's father, before those of the father's mother, and so on.—This rule seems to have been established in order to effectuate and carry into execution the fifth rule, or principal canon of collateral inheritance, before laid down; that every heir must be of the blood of the first purchasor.

That this was the true foundation of the preference of the agnati or male stocks, in our law, will farther appear, if we consider, that, whenever the lands have notoriously descended to a man from his mother's side, this rule is totally reversed; and no relation of his by the father's side, as such, can ever be admitted to them: because he cannot possibly be of the blood of the first purchasor. And so, è converso if the lands descended from the father's side, no relation of the mother, as such shall ever inherit. 1 Inst. 14.—See Watkins on Descent, c. 5.

But it has been resolved, that a fine and render of lands, claimed by a party as heir at law ex parte maternâ, will alter the quality of the estate: so that it shall descend to the heir ex parte paternâ. 6 Rep. 63. Carthew, 141.

Also if a man seised of land, as heir of the part of his mother, make a feoffment and take back an estate to him and his heirs; this as a purchase, alters the descent, and if he die without issue, the heir of the part of the father shall inherit it. Co. Lit. 12.

A. seised in fee of a Copyhold of inheritance by descent ex parte maternâ, surrendered to the use of himself for life, remainder to such persons as he should by deed or will appoint, remainder, in default of appointment, to himself in fee. Afterwards he mortgaged and surrendered to the use of the mortgagee in fee, who on repayment, surrendered back to the mortgagor. It was held that the line of descent was broken, and the estate descended to the paternal heir. Doe d. Harman v. Morgan, 7 Term Rep. 103.—See Id. 105. that a feoffment and re-feoffment break the line of descent.

Devise of all the testator's real and personal estate and effects to his wife in trust for the education of his daughter, an only child, until twenty-one; and in case of the death of his daughter before 21, the whole of his said estate and effects to his wife: the wife died in the minority of the daughter, and the daughter afterwards died under age and without issue. The Court of C. P. held that the heir of the daughter ex parte maternâ was entitled to succeed by descent. Goodtitle d. Castle v. White. 2 New Rep. C. P. 383.

Devise to trustees, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, in trust to let the freehold estates for any term they thought proper at the best improved yearly rent, to pay one third of the rents of the freehold estates to his wife for life, and one third of the personalty to her absolutely; and then to lay out the other two-thirds of the personalty in the funds; and to pay her the dividends, and the rents of two-thirds of the freehold estates, and, after the death of the wife, the other third of the rent of the freehold estates to his daughter for her own separate use, and after her death the freehold estates and two-thirds of the personal estates to the daughter's children to be equally divided amongst them, and to be paid them at the respective ages of twenty-one years; and if his daughter died without leaving issue, then his freehold estates to his wife for life; and after her death to his heir at law, as if he had died intestate. Held by the Court of K. B. that the trustees took an estate in fee, and that upon the death of the widow, who was the surviving trustee, the legal estate descended to the daughter, and upon her death without issue, vested in the heir at law ex parte maternâ. Doe d. Tomkins v. Willan, T. R. K. B. Mich. 59 G. 3.

The short Result of all the above rules and explanations is, that when a man (A.) dies seized of an estate in fee-simple, it shall—1. In the first place, descend to his eldest son and heir or his issue.—2. If his line be extinct, then to the second or other sons of A. respectively, in order of birth, or their issue; the issue of an elder brother being still preferred to the person of a younger, that is to say, the children of the second son, to the third son himself, and so on.—3. In default of sons, or their issue, then to all the daughters of A. together, or their issue. See ante, III, IV.—4. On failure of descendants from A. himself, then to the issue of his father and mother; the eldest brother of the whole blood, or his issue; or on failure of them, the other whole brothers of A. respectively, in order of birth, or their issue; or on failure of them the sisters of A. of the whole blood respectively, or their issue.—5. On failure of descendants from the father and mother of A. then to the issue of his grand-father and grand-mother by the father's side; still tracing the line of relationship on the father's side, till it entirely fails; when and not before, recourse must be had to the relations of his mother in the same regular successive order as in the paternal line. See more fully and accurately, 2 Comm. c. 14. p. 200—240. on the whole of this subject, which in some points seems at first inextricably intricate, but will soon unfold itself to the researches of the diligent student; who to understand many parts of it, should be intimately acquainted with the law of Tenures.—See that title in this Dictionary.

As to the DESCENT of REVERSIONS and REMAINDERS expectant upon estates of freehold, see Watkins's Essay on the Law of Descents (1793.) from whence some cursory observations have already been adopted, and the following extract from which on this part of the subject, may be deserving attention.

"The principles which apply to the descent of an estate in possession do not apply to the descent of an estate in remainder or reversion, expectant on an estate of freehold, but they apply when the particular estate is only for years; a tenant for years being considered merely as the bailiff of the freeholder, and to hold the possession for him. 1 Inst. 239. b. n. 2.

"When a reversion or remainder, expectant upon an estate of freehold, continues in a course of descent, without certain acts of ownership exerted, such reversion, &c. still continually devolves, on the death of each particular heir, to the person who can then make himself heir to the donor or purchasor; without any regard to the very heir of the precedent person who succeeded to it by descent; till when the particular estate is determined, it ultimately vests in possession in him, who, at such determination, is the right heir of such donor, purchasor, or original remainder-man. For as there was no intermediate person actually seised of such reversion or remainder, no one could be the mean of turning its descent, and becoming a new stock or terminus; but such stock must yet be the donor, purchasor, or remainder-man, and must so continue, (if no alienation be made) till such estate shall become vested in possession; and consequently, it will be absolutely necessary to prove, on every devolution, a descent, not from the immediate predecessor who took by descent, (for with him, as such, in this case, there is nothing to do) but from the donor, purchasor, or original remainder-man. Whoever, therefore, can make himself heir to such donor, &c. will be entitled to the inheritance in reversion or remainder, though expectant; but yet not so as to be capable of transmitting it to his own right heirs, (as such) except by granting it over; till it becomes vested in possession, by the determination of the particular estate which supported it, or whereon it was expectant, (when it would cease to be a reversion or remainder) in him who should be, at that time, the right heir of the donor, &c. which person would then become the stock of descent, and him from whom the future pedigree must run on his obtaining an actual seisin of it. "So also with respect to contingencies and executory devises—Thus on a devise to G. in fee; but if he happened to die under the age of twenty-one years, leaving no issue, then to P. in fee; after the decease of the testator, P. died in the life-time of G. who afterwards died under the age of twenty-one, and without issue; it was held that the lands vested in P.'s heir at law, upon the happening of the contingency, (viz. on the death of G. under age, and without issue), but that the interest, while it was contingent, did not so attach in G. who was heir at law to P. on his decease, as to carry it, on his death, to his heir at law, who was not heir at law to P. but that it vested in that person who was heir at law to P. (the first purchasor) at the time of the contingency happening. See 2 Wils. 29. Goodright and Searle; and cited also in Fearne on Con. Rem. 448. (3d edit.) And see *Cro. DESCRIPTION, descriptio.] In deeds and grants there must be a certain description of the lands granted, the places where the lands lie, and of the persons to whom granted, &c. to make them good. But wills are more favored than grants as to those descriptions: and a wrong description of the person will not make a devise void, if there be otherwise a sufficient certainty what person was intended by the testator. 1 Nels. Abr. 647.

Where a first description of land, &c. is false, though the second is true, a deed will be void: contra, if the first be true and the second false. See 3 Rep. 2, 3. 8. 10. 28. 33, 34, &c. See titles Deed, Will.

DETINET. See Debt.

DETINUE, detinendo.] In the Common Law; is like actio depositi in the Civil Law; and is a writ which lies against him, who having goods or chattels delivered to keep, refuseth to re-deliver them. In this action of detinue it is necessary to ascertain the thing detained in such a manner as that it may be specifically known and recovered. Therefore it cannot be brought for money, corn or the like, for that cannot be known from other money or corn; unless it be in a bag or a sack, for then it may be distinguishably marked. In order therefore to ground an action of detinue, which is only for the detaining, these points are necessary. See 1 Inst. 286. 1. That the defendant came lawfully into possession of the goods, as either by delivery to him or by finding them. [But if the goods are alleged to have come to the defendant by finding, it is sufficient for the plaintiff to prove that the goods came to the defendant by wrong; at least unless the finding be traversed. Miles v. Graham, New Rep. C. P. 141.] —2. That the plaintiff have a property.—3. That the goods themselves be of some value.—4. That they be ascertained in point of identity. Upon this the jury, if they find for the plaintiff, assess the several values of the several parcels detained, and also damages for the detention. And the judgment is conditional; that the plaintiff recover the said goods; or if they cannot be had, their respective values, and also the damages for detaining them. Co. Ent. 170. Cro. Jac. 681.

There is one disadvantage which attends this action, viz. that the defendant is herein permitted to wage his law; (that is, to exculpate himself by oath; see title Wager of Law;) and thereby defeat the plaintiff of his remedy; which privilege in this case is grounded on the confidence originally reposed in the bailee by the bailor, in the borrower by the lender or the like: from whence arose a strong presumptive evidence, that in the plaintiff's own opinion the defendant was worthy of credit. See 1 Inst. 295.

For this and other reasons the action of detinue is now much disused, and has given place to the action of Trover. See title Trover; and also title Bailment.

The following cases on the subject of detinue, may prove matter of use as well as of curiosity, and see further Viner, title Detinue, and Bull. N. P. 49—51.

Detinue may be brought for a piece of gold, of the price of 21*s.* though not for 21*s.* in money; for here is a demand of a certain particular piece. Bull. N. P. 50.

If a man receiving money from a banker, put part thereof into his bag, and while he is telling the rest the bag is stolen, no action of detinue, &c. lies; because by putting up the money, he had appropriated it to his own use. Comb. 475. A man lends a sum of money to another, detinue lies not for it, but debt: but if A. bargains and sells goods to B. upon condition to be void, if A. pays B. a certain sum of money at a day; now if A. pays the money, he may have detinue against B. for the goods, though they came not to the hands of B. by bailment, but by bargain and sale. Cro. Eliz. 867. 2 Danv. 510.

If a man delivers goods to A. to deliver to B., B. may have detinue, for the property is in him: and where he delivers them to B. and after grants them to D. he shall not have detinue after the grant, but the grantee shall have it. Yelv. 241. 1 Bulst. 69. When goods are delivered to one, and he delivers them over to another, action of detinue may be had against the second person, and if he delivers them to one that has a right thereto, yet it is said he is chargeable: also if a person to whom a thing is delivered dieth, detinue lieth against his executors, &c. or against any person to whom a thing comes. 2 Danv. Abr. 511.

A man may have a general detinue against another that finds his goods: though if I deliver any thing to A. to re-deliver, and he loses it, if B. finds it and delivers it to C. who has a right to the same, he is not chargeable to me in detinue, because he is not privy to my delivery. 7 H. 6. 22. 9 H. 6. 58.

In actions of detinue, the thing must be once in the possession of the defendant; which possession is not to be altered by act of law, as seisure, &c. And the nature of the thing must continue, without alteration, to entitle one to this action. F. N. B. 138. If I find goods, and before the owner brings his action, I sell them; or they are recovered out of my hands upon an execution, or outlawry, against the owner, &c. he cannot have detinue against me. 12 E. 4. 8. 27 H. 8. 13. But action of detinue will lie against him that finds goods, if they are wasted by wilful negligence. Dr. & Stud. 129.

A man buys cloth or other things of another, on a good and perfect contract; if the seller keeps the things bought, detinue lieth. Dyer, 30. 203. Where one takes my goods into his custody to keep them for me, and refuses to restore them; although he have nothing for the keeping of them, this action will lie. 4 Rep. 84. 29 Ass. pl. 28. If I deliver to one a trunk that is locked, with things in it, and keep the key myself, and something be taken out of it, writ of detinue lieth not for this: but if the trunk, and all that is in it, be taken away, there it lies. 11 Rep. 89. 4 E. 3.

This action will not lie, where a man delivers goods to me, and I bid him take them again, if he refuses to do it: or where one takes my goods or cattle by wrong as a trespasser; or by way of distress for rent or as damage feasant, &c. Nor for a horse sick, when it is taken or lent; if he dies of that sickness. Bro. Detin. 242. 43 E. 3. 21. 21 E. 4. And if it be a ring that is delivered to another, and he breaks it, it is doubted whether action of detinue may lie; because the thing is altered, and cannot be returned as it was: but action on the case lieth. And although, where goods are found, and sold &c. detinue lies not: yet action upon the case of trover and conversion may be brought. 12 E. 4. 8. 13 E. 4. 22.

DETINUE OF CHARTERS. A man may have detinue for deeds and charters concerning land; but if they concern the freehold, it must be in C. B. and no other court. Action of detinue lies for charters which make the title of lands; and the heir may have a detinue of charters, although he hath not the land: if my father be disseised, and dieth, I shall have detinue for charters, notwithstanding I have not the land; but the executors shall not have the action for them. New Nat. Br. 308. If a man keep my charters from me, concerning the inheritance of my land, and I know the certainty of them, and the land; or if they be in a chest locked, &c. and I know not their certainty, I may recover them by this writ: so where lands are given to me and J. S. and my heirs, and he dies, if another gets the deeds, and if tenant in tail give away the deed of entail, and then die, his issue may bring a writ of detinue of charters. Co. Lit. 286. 1 Rep. 2. F. N. B. 138. But if the tenant in fee-simple do give away his deeds of the land, his heir may not have this action: and in case a woman great with child by her deceased husband keeps the charters from his daughter and heir that concern the land, during the time she is with child, this writ will not lie against her. 41 E. 3. 11.

Detinue was brought for a deed, and the plaintiff had a verdict, that the defendant detained the deed, and the jury gave 20*l.* damages, but did not find the value of the deed; and then there issued out a distringas to deliver the deed, or the value, and afterwards a writ of inquiry was awarded for the value: whereupon the jury found a different value from what the first verdict found; and it was adjudged good. Raym. 124. 1 Nels. Abr. 649. In detinue of charters, if the issue be upon the detinue, and it is found that the defendant hatb burnt the charters, the judgment shall not be to recover the charters, which it appears cannot be had; but it is said it shall be for the plaintiff to recover the land in damages. 2 Rol. Abr. 101. 2 Danv. Abr. 511. For detaining of deeds and charters concerning the inheritance of lands, or an indenture of lease, the defendant shall not wage his law, as he may in a common action of detinue. 1 Inst. 295.

DETINUE OF GOODS IN FRANK-MARRIAGE. After a divorce between, the wife shall have this writ of detinue for the goods given with her in marriage. Mich. 35 E. 1. New. Nat. Br. 308.

DETUNICARE. To discover or lay open to the world. Matt. Westm. 1240.

DEVADIATUS, OR DIVADIATUS. Is where an offender is without sureties or pledges. Domesday.

DEVASTAVIT, OR DEVASTAVERUNT BONA TESTATORIS. A writ against executors or administrators, for paying debts upon simple contract, before debts on bonds and specialties, &c. for in this case they are liable to action, as if they had squandered away, or wasted the goods of the deceased, or converted them to their own use; and are compellable to pay such debts by specialty out of their own goods, to the value of what they so paid illegally. Dyer, 232.

By the stat. 30 Car. 2. c. 7. it is enacted, That if an executor de son tort wastes the goods, and dies, his executors shall be liable in the same manner as their testator would have been, if he had been living. And it has been since adjudged, that a rightful executor, who wastes the goods of the testator, is in effect an executor de son tort for abusing his trust. 3 Mod. 113. And his executor or administrator is made liable to a devastavit, by stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24. which statute makes the stat. 30 C. 2. c. 7. perpetual. See further this Dict. title Executor, V. 1. VI. 2.

DEVENERUNT. A writ heretofore directed to the escheator on the death of the heir of the King's tenant under age and in custody, commanding the escheator that by the oaths of good and lawful men he inquire what lands and tenements by the death of the tenant came to the King. Dyer, 360. This writ is now disused; but see stat. 14 Car. 2. c. 11. for preventing frauds and abuses in his Majesty's Customs.

DEVEST, OR DIVEST, devestire.] Is opposite to invest. As to invest signifies to deliver the possession of any thing to another; so to devest signifieth to take it away. Feud. lib. 1. cap. 7.

DEVISE, from the Fr. deviser, to divide or sort into parcels.] A gift of lands, &c. by a last will and testament. The giver is called the devisor; and he to whom the lands are given, the devisee. A devise in writing, is in construction of law, no deed; but an instrument by which lands are conveyed.

To DEVISE, is to give by will.

The word was formerly particularly applied to bequests of land; but is now generally used for the gift of any legacies whatever.

For the law relating to Devises, as well of real as personal estates, see fully this Dict. title Will. As to executory Devises, see titles Executory Devise, Estate, Limitation, Remainder.

DEVOIRES OF CALEIS, Fr. Devoir, Duty.] The customs due to the King, for merchandise brought into or carried out of Calais; when our staple remained there.—See stats 34 Ed. 1. c. 18. 2 Rich. 2. st. 1. c. 3.

DEXTRARIUS. One at the right hand of another. The word dextrarios has been used for light horses, or horses for the great saddle; from the Fr. destrier, a horse for service.

DEXTRAS DARE. Shaking of hands in token of friendship; or a man's giving up himself to the power of another person. Walsingh. p. 332.

DIARIUM. Daily food; or as much as will suffice for the day. Du Cange.

DIASPERATUS. Stained with many colours. Mon. tom. 3. pag. 314.

DICA. A tally for accounts, by number of taillees, cuts or notches. Lib. Rub. Scaccar. fol. 30. [Gr. δικὰ ten.]

DICKAR, OR DICKER OF LEATHER. A quantity consisting of ten hides, by which leather is bought and sold. Vide stat. antiq. de ponderibus et mensuris. There are also dickers of iron, containing ten bars to the dicker. Domesday.

DICTORES, DICTUM. The one signifies arbitrators, the other the arbitrament. Malms. p. 348.

DICTUM DE KENELWORTH. An Edict, Award, Act or Statute, made for composing differences between King Henry the Third and his Barons and others, who had been in arms against him: so called, because it was made at Kenelworth, in Warwickshire, anno 51 or 52 Hen. 3.

DIEM CLAUSIT EXTREMUM. A writ which issued out of the court of Chancery to the escheator of the county, upon the death of any of the King's tenants in capite, to inquire by a jury of what lands he died seised, and of what value, and who was the next heir to him. This writ was to be granted at the suit of the next heir, &c. for upon that, when the heir came of age, he was to sue livery of his lands out of the King's hands. F. N. B. 251.

DIES. See Day.

DIES DATUS. The day or time of respite given to the defendant in a suit by the court. Broke.—See Day.

DIES MARCHIÆ. The day of congress or meeting of the English and Scotch, heretofore appointed annually to be held on the marches or borders, to adjust all differences between them, and preserve the articles of peace. Tho. Walsingham, in Rich. 2. p. 307.

DIETA. A day's journey. Fleta, lib. 4. c. 28. Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 16.

DIET, conventus.] A legislative assembly; as the diet of the Empire, of Ratisbon, &c. See this Dict. titles Parliament, Wittenagemote.

DIEU ET MON DROIT. God and my Right; the motto of the royal arms, intimating, that the King of England holds his empire of none but God; first given by King Rich. I.

DIEU SON ACT. Are words often used in our old law: and it is a maxim in law, That the act of God, or inevitable accident, shall prejudice no man. Therefore, if a house be blown down by tempest, thunder, or lightning, the lessee or tenant for life or years, shall be excused in waste: likewise he hath by the law a special interest to take timber, to build the house again for his habitation. 4 Rep. 63. 11 Rep. 82. So when the condition of a bond consists of two parts in the disjunctive, and both are possible at the time of the obligation made, and afterwards one of them becomes impossible by the act of God, the obligor is not bound to perform the other part. 5 Rep. 22. And where a person is bound to appear in court, at a certain day, if before the day he dieth, the obligation is saved, &c. See particularly relative to this term, titles Bailment, Carrier.

DIFFACERE. To destroy: and diffactio is a maiming any one. Leg. H. 1. c. 64. 92.

DIFFORCIARE RECTUM. To take away, or deny justice. Mat. Paris. anno 1164.

DIGEST. The book of Pandects of the Civil Law; which hath its name from its containing Legalia præcepta excellenter digesta. Du Cange.—See title Civil Law.

DIGNITY, dignitas.] Honour and authority; reputation, &c. Dignities may be divided into superior and inferior: as the titles of Duke, Earl, Baron, &c. are the highest names of dignity: and those of Baronet, Knight, Serjeant at Law, &c. the lowest. Nobility only can give so high a name of dignity as to supply the want of a surname in legal proceedings, and as the omission of a name of dignity may be pleaded in abatement of a writ, &c. so it may be where a peer who has more than one name of dignity is not named by the Most Noble. See title Abatement. No temporal dignity of any foreign nation can give a man a higher title here than that of Esquire. 2 Inst. 607.—See titles Addition, Descent, Peer.

DIGNITY ECCLESIASTICAL, dignitas ecclesiasticalis.] Is defined by the Canonists to be administratio cum jurisdictione et potestatæ aliqua conjuncta; of which there are several examples in Duarenus, de Sacris Eccles. &c. lib. 2. c. 6. Dignitatis ecclesiasticæ, are mentioned in the stat. 26 H. 8. c. 81. & 32. And of church dignities, Cambden in his Britannia, p. 161. reckons in England, 544.

DIGNITARIES, dignitarii.] Those who are advanced to any dignity Ecclesiastical; as a Bishop, Dean, Archdeacon, Prebendary, &c. But there are simple Prebendaries, without cure or jurisdiction, which are not dignitaries. 3 Inst. 155.

DIKES. See Fens, Navigation, Powdike.

DILAPIDATION, dilapidatio.] Is where an incumbent of a benefice suffers the parsonage house or out-houses to fall down, or be in decay for want of necessary reparation: or it is the pulling down or destroying any of the houses or buildings, belonging to a spiritual living, or destroying of the woods, trees, &c. appertaining to the same; for it is said to extend to the committing or suffering any wilful waste, in or upon the inheritance of the church. Degg's Pars. Couns. 89. It is the interest of the church in general to preserve what belongs to it for the benefit of the successors; and the old canons, and our own provincial constitutions require the clergy sufficiently to repair the houses belonging to their benefices; which if they neglect or refuse to do, the bishop may sequester the profits of the benefice for that purpose, &c. Right's Clerg. 143. And by the Canon Law, dilapidations are made a debt, which is to be satisfied out of the profits of the church; but the Common Law prefers debt on contracts, &c. before debt for dilapidations. Hern. 136.

The prosecution in these cases may be brought either against the incumbent himself, or against his executors or administrators; and the executor or administrator of him in whose time it was done or suffered, must make amends to the successor: and if the proceedings are against the incumbent, then they ought to be in the spiritual court. That court may also proceed against an executor, or the successor may have an action of the case or debt at the Common Law, in which action he shall recover damages in proportion to the dilapidations. 1 Nels. Abr. 656. Pars. Couns. 97, 98. Carter. 224. 3 Lev. 268.

It is also said to be good cause of deprivation, if the Bishop, Parson, Vicar, or other ecclesiastical person dilapidates the buildings, or cuts down timber growing on the patrimony of the church unless for necessary repairs. 1 Ro. Rep. 86. 11 Rep. 98. Godb. 259. And that a writ of prohibition will also lie against him in the courts of Common Law. 3 Bulst. 158. 1 Ro. Rep. 335.

By stat. 13 Eliz. c. 10. if any Parson, &c. shall make a gift of his goods and personal estate to defraud his successor of his remedy for dilapidations, such successor may have the same remedy in the spiritual court against the person to whom such gift is made, as he might have against the executors of the deceased parson. And by stat. 14 Eliz. c. 11. money recovered for dilapidations, is to be employed in the reparations of the same houses suffered to be in decay, or the party recovering shall forfeit double the value of what he receives, to the King.

If a parson suffers dilapidations, and afterwards takes another benefice, whereby his former benefice becomes void, his successor may have an action against him, and declare that by the custom of the kingdom he ought to pay him so much money as shall be sufficient to repair the dilapidations. 3 Lev. 268. In case a parson comes to a living, the buildings whereof are in decay by dilapidations, and his predecessor did not leave a sufficient personal estate to repair them, so that he is without remedy, he is to have the defects surveyed by workmen, and attested under their hands in the presence of witnesses, which may be a means to secure him from the incumbrance brought upon him by the fault of his predecessor. Country Parson's Companion, 60.

An action on the case for dilapidations of a prebendal house may be maintained by a succeeding prebendary against his predecessor: but when by the statutes of the church the materials are to be supplied out of the church funds, the successor shall recover only the amount of the workmanship necessary in making the repairs. Radcliffe v. D'Oyly, 2 Term Rep. 630. The successor may have separate actions against the executor of a preceding rector, for dilapidations to different parts of the rectory. Young v. Manby, Term Rep. K. B. 55 Geo. 3. 183. See further titles Clergy, Parson.

DILATORY PLEAS. Such pleas as are put in merely for delay; and there may be a demurrer to a dilatory plea, or issue may be taken on the fact, if false. If the plea is true in fact and good in law, and is in abatement, the plaintiff must enter up judgment of cassetur, before he commences a new suit. If the plea is adjudged ill, on demurrer, there must be a respondeas ouster, and defendant must plead another plea. If issue in fact is taken, and found by the jury, for plaintiff, in case, &c. they assess the damages. In debt, the judgment for plaintiff is final, &c. The truth of dilatory pleas is to be made out by affidavit of the fact, &c. by stat. 4 An. c. 16. § 11.—See title Pleading.

DILIGIATUS. Outlawed, i. e. de le ejectus. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 45.

DILLIGROUT. Pottage formerly made for the King's table, on his coronation day: and there was a tenure in serjeanty, by which lands were held of the King, by the service of finding this pottage, at that solemnity. 39 H. 3.

DIMIDIETAS. Used in records for a moiety, or one half.

DIMINISHING the coin. See title Coin.

DIMINUTION, diminutio.] Where the plaintiff or defendant, on an appeal to a superior court, alledges that part of the record is omitted, and remains in the inferior court not certified; whereupon he prays that it may be certified by certiorari. Co. Ent. 232. 242. Of course diminution is to be certified on a writ of error; though if issue be joined upon the errors assigned, and the matter is entered upon record, which is made a consilium, in this case there must be a rule of court granted for a certiorari to certify diminution. 1 Lil. Abr. 245. Diminution cannot be alledged of a thing which is fully certified; but in something that is wanting, as want of an original, or a warrant of attorney, &c. 2 Lev. 206. 1 Nels. Abr. 658. And if on diminution alledged, and the plaintiff in error certify one original, &c. which is wrong; and the defendant in error certifies another that is true; the true one shall stand. Cro. Jac. 597. Cro. Car. 91.

After a writ of error brought, and the defendant hath pleaded in nullo est erratum he cannot afterwards alledge diminution; because by that plea he affirmeth or alloweth the record to be such as is certified upon the writ of error. Godb. 266. But in some cases, diminution hath been alledged, after in nullo est erratum pleaded, ex gratiâ curiæ: though not ex rigore juris. Palm. 85. And there is an instance, that the court in such a case hath awarded a certiorari, to inform their conscience of the truth of the record in C. B. where the defendant in error had not joined in nullo est erratum. 1 Nels. 658. —See further title Judgment, Reversal of.

DIMISSORY LETTERS, literæ dimissoriæ.] Where a candidate for holy orders has a title in one diocese, and is to be ordained in another, the proper diocesan sends his letters dimissory directed to some other ordaining bishop, giving leave that the bearer may be ordained, and have such a cure within his district. Cowel.

DIOCESE, diocesis.] The circuit of every bishop's jurisdiction. For this realm hath two sorts of divisions; one into shires or counties, in respect to the temporal state; and another into dioceses, in regard to the ecclesiastical state, of which we reckon twenty-one in England, and four in Wales. Co. Lit. 94. Also the kingdom is said to be divided in its ecclesiastical jurisdiction into two provinces of Canterbury and York; each of which provinces is divided into dioceses, and every diocese into archdeaconries, and archdeaconries into parishes, &c. Wood's Inst. 2.

The bounds of Dioceses are to be determined by witnesses and records, but more particularly by the administration of divine offices. To which purpose, there are two rules in the Canon Law: in one case, upon a dispute between two bishops upon this head, the direction is, that they proceed in the business, by ancient books or writings, and also by witnesses, reputation, and other sufficient proof: in the other case, where the question was, by whom a church built upon the confines of two dioceses should be consecrated, the rule laid down is, that it should be consecrated by the bishop of that city, who, before it was founded, baptized the inhabitants, and administered to them other divine offices. Gibs. 133.

The jurisdiction of the city is not included in the name of diocese, so saith the Canon Law: and accordingly, in citations in general visitations, directed to the clergy, it is ordered to cite the clergy of the city and diocese. Gibs. 133.

A bishop may perform divine offices, and use his episcopal habit, in the diocese of another, without leave; but may not perform therein any act of jurisdiction, without permission of the other bishop. Gibs. 133.

A clergyman dwelling in one diocese, and beneficed in another, and being guilty of a crime, may, in different respects, be punished in both; that is, the bishop in whose diocese he dwells may prosecute him; but the sentence, so far as it affects his benefice, must be carried into execution by the other bishop. Gibs. 134.—See titles Bishop, Clergy, Convocation.

DISABILITY, disabilitas.] An incapacity in a man to inherit any lands, or take that benefit which otherwise he might have done: which may happen four ways; by the act of an ancestor, or of the party himself, by the act of God, or of the law.

1. Disability, by the act of the ancestor, is where the ancestor is attainted of treason, &c. which corrupts the blood of his children, so that they may not inherit his estate. See title Attainder, Descent.

2. Disability, by the act of the party, is where a man binds himself by obligation, that upon surrender of a lease, he will grant a new estate to the lessee; and afterwards he grants over the reversion to another, which puts it out of his power to perform it.

3. Disability, by the act of God, is where a person is of non-sane memory, whereby he is incapable to make any grant, &c. So that if he passeth an estate out of him, it may after his death be made void; but it is a maxim in law, that a man of full age shall never be received to disable his own person. See title Lunacy.

4. Disability, by the act of the law, is where a man by the sole act of the law, without any thing done by him, is rendered incapable of the benefit of the law, as an alien born, &c. Termes de Ley. 4 Rep. 123, 124. 5 Rep. 21. 8 Rep. 43.—See title Alien.

There are also other disabilities, by the Common Law, of idiotcy, infancy, and coverture, as to grants, &c. And by statute in many cases: as papists are disabled to make any presentation to a church, &c.: Officers not taking the oaths, are incapable to hold offices: Foreigners, though naturalised, to bear offices in the government, &c. See the proper titles. A person shall not be admitted to disable himself to avoid an office of charge, &c. no more than a man shall be allowed to say that he was an idiot, &c. to avoid an act done by himself. Carth. 307. As to the disability of Dissenters, see that title, and title Nonconformists. As to pleas of disability in the person of the plaintiff, see title Abatement.

DISADVOCARE. To deny or not acknowledge a thing. Hengham Magna, cap. 4.

DISAGREEMENT. Will make a nullity of a thing, that had essence before: and disagreement may be to certain acts, to make them void, &c. Co. Lit. 380.—See title Agreement.

DISBOSCATIO. A turning wood ground into arable or pasture.

DISCARCARE, from Dis and Cargo.] To unlade a ship or vessel by taking out the cargo or goods. Placit. Parl 18 Ed. 1.—See Carcatus.

DISCEIT. See Deceit.

DISCENT. See Descent.

DISCHARGE. On writs and process, &c. is where a man is confined by some legal writ or authority, and doth that which by law he is required to do; he is released or discharged from the matter for which he was confined. If one be arrested by a latitat out of B. R. and the plaintiff do not file a declaration against the defendant in prison in two terms, he shall be discharged on common bail. 1 Lil. Abr. 470. Also where a defendant on arrest is admitted to bail, if the bail bring in the principal before the return of the second scire facias issued out against them, they shall be discharged. If an obligee discharges one joint obligor, where several are jointly bound, it discharges the others. March. 129. And a man may discharge a promise made to himself, &c. Cro. Jac. 483.—See titles Accord, Acquittal, Habeas Corpus, Satisfaction, Bond, &c.

DISCLAIMER, disclaimium, from Fr. clamer, with the privative dis.] A plea containing an express denial, or renouncing of a thing; as if a tenant sue a replevin, upon the distress of the lord, and the lord avows the taking, saying the tenant holds of him as of his lord, and that he distrained for the rent not paid, or service not performed: now, if the tenant say he doth not hold of him, that is called a disclaimer, and the lord proving the tenant to hold of him, on a writ of right sur disclaimer brought, the tenant shall lose his land Termes de Ley.

This Disclaimer by a tenant, is considered as a civil crime, and punished accordingly, by forfeiture of lands to the lord, on reasons most apparently feodal. Finch, 270, 1. So if in any court of record, the particular tenant does any act which amounts to a virtual disclaimer; if he claims any greater estate than was granted him at the first infeodation; or takes upon himself those rights which belong only to tenants of a superior class; 1 Inst. 252. if he affirms the reversion to be in a stranger by accepting his fine, attorning as his tenant, collusive pleading, and the like; such behaviour amounts to a forfeiture of his particular estate. 1 Inst. 253. 2 Comm. 275. 3 Comm. 233.

If a writ of præcipe be brought against two persons for land, and one of them, the tenant, saith that he is not tenant, nor claims any thing in the lands; this is a disclaimer as to him, and the other shall have the whole land. Termes de Ley. And when a tenant hath disclaimed upon action brought against him, he shall not have restitution on writ of error, &c. against his own act; but is barred of his right to the land disclaimed. 8 Rep. 62. But a verbal disclaimer shall not take place against a deed of lands: nor shall the disclaimer of a wife during the coverture bar her entry on her lands. 3 Rep. 26.

Baron and Feme may disclaim for the wife; though if the husband hath nothing but in right of his wife, he cannot disclaim. 2 Danv. Abr. 569. Such person as cannot lose the thing perpetually in which he disclaims, shall not be permitted to disclaim: a bishop, &c. may not disclaim, for he cannot divest the right out of the church. Though in a quo warranto, at the suit of the King, against a bishop or others for franchises and liberties, if the bishop, &c. disclaims them, this shall bind the successors. Co. Lit. 102, 103. If a man be vouched because of a reversion on a lease made by himself, he cannot disclaim: but an heir may disclaim, being vouched upon a lease made by his ancestor. 2 Danv. 569.

A person may disclaim in the principal, and not in the incident; as he that is vouched because of a reversion, cannot disclaim in the reversion, saving the seignory. 40 Ed. 3. 27. If the lord disclaims his seignory in a court of record, it is extinct, and the tenant shall hold of the lord next paramount to the lord disclaiming. Lit. sect. 146.

It is said not to be necessary, that the writ of right sur disclaimer should be brought against the person that disclaims; for if it be only against him that is found tenant of the land, though he be a stranger, it is not material. 2 Danv. 570. By plea of non-tenure, nothing is disowned but the freehold, which may be good where the tenant hath the reversion in fee, and not the freehold; but when such tenant disclaims, or pleads non-tenure and disclaims, the demandant shall have the whole, as the whole is disclaimed. Ibid.

By stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. § 5. In all actions of trespass quare clasum fregit, wherein the defendant shall disclaim any title to the land, and the trespass be by negligence or involuntary, the defendant shall be admitted to plead a disclaimer, and that the trespass was by negligence or involuntary, and a tender of sufficient amends before the action brought; and if the issue be found for the defendant, or the plaintiff be non-suited, the plaintiff shall be barred from the said action, and all suits concerning the same. See title Pleading.

Besides these disclaimers by tenants of lands, there are disclaimers in divers other cases: for there is a disclaimer of blood, where a person denies himself to be of the blood or kindred of another, in his plea. F. N. B. 102. And a disclaimer of goods, as well as lands; as if a man disclaimeth goods, on arraignment of felony, when he shall lose them, though he be cleared. Standf. P. C. 186. In Chancery, if a defendant by his answer renounces the having any interest in the thing in question, this is likewise a disclaimer. See title Chancery. And there is a deed of disclaimer of executorship of a will, &c. where an executor refuses, and throws up the same.

DISCONTINUANCE,

Discontinuatio, from Fr. discontinuer, cessare.] An interruption or breaking off. An injury to real property, which consists in the keeping out the true owner of an estate, by a tenant whose entry was at first lawful, but who wrongfully detains the possession afterwards.

This happens when he who hath an estate-tail, maketh a larger-estate of the land than by law he is entitled to do: in which case the estate is good, so far as his power extends who made it, but no further. Finch. L. 190. As if tenant in tail makes a feoffment in fee-simple, or for the life of the feoffee, or in tail; all which are beyond his power legally to make, for that by the Common Law extends no farther than to make a lease for his own life: in such case, the entry of the feoffee is lawful during the life of the feoffor; but if he retains the possession after the death of the feoffor, it is an injury which is termed a discontinuance; the ancient legal estate, which ought to have survived to the heir in tail being gone; or at least suspended, and for a while discontinued. For, in this case, on the death of the alienors neither the heir in tail, nor they in remainder or reversion expectant on the determination of the estate-tail, can enter on and possess the land so aliened: but must bring their writ, and seek to recover possession by law. 3 Comm. 172. 1 Inst. 325. F. N. B. 191, 4.

In the case of a Disseisin (see that title), while the possession remains in the disseisor, it is a mere naked possession unsupported by any right; and the disseisee may restore his own possession, and put a total end to the possession of the disseisor by an entry on the land, without any previous action; but if the disseisor dies, his heir comes to the possession of the estate by a lawful title: it is the same if the disseisor aliens: the alienee comes in by a lawful title. By reason of this lawful title, the heir in the first instance, and the alience in the second, acquires a presumptive right of possession, which is so far good, that even the person disseised loses by it his right to recover the possession by entry; and can only recover it by an action at law. When the right of entry is thus lost, and the party can only recover by action, the possession is said to be discontinued. This is the general import of the word discontinuance; but in its usual acceptation it signifies the effect of alienations made by husbands seised in right of their wives; by ecclesiasticks seised in right of their church; or by tenants in tail; those being the three instances adduced by Littleton of Discontinuance. Thus before the stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20. the alienation of a woman seised of an estate in dower, or of an estate of the gift of her husband, or of any of his ancestors, was said to be a discontinuance: and before the stats. 32 H. 8. c. 31. 14 Eliz. c. 8. recoveries suffered by tenants for life, tenants by the curtesy, or tenants in tail after possibility of issue extinct, or even by the feoffee of tenant for years, worked a discontinuance. See 1 Rep. 14.

It is to be observed, that there is a material difference between the situation or title of the alienee of any person, whose alienation makes a discontinuance, and the situation or title of the heir or alienee of a disseisor; for the heir and alienee of a disseisor immediately claim under a person coming in by a wrongful title, and their estates though not defeasible by entry, are immediately defeasible by action. But the alienee of every person, whose alienation is said to be a discontinuance, [or rather whose alienation causes a discontinuance,] claims by a person having a lawful estate; and the estate of the alienee is unimpeachable during the life of the alienor. It should also be observed, that a discontinuance extends to those cases only, where a person is dispossessed of an estate of freehold, and where, though he has lost his right of entry, he can still recover the possession by action. The peculiar import of the word Discontinuance, where applied to the cases mentioned by Littleton, is thus shortly, but forcibly expressed by Honard, in his Ancient Laws of the French.—"An interruption of the right, which one has on an estate, by the sale which another, charged to preserve that right, has made of it."—See 1 Inst. 325. a. and the long and learned note there on the doctrine of Discontinuance at large.

By the Common Law, the alienation of an husband who was seised in right of his wife, worked a discontinuance of the wife's estate: till the stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. provided, that no act by the husband alone should work a Discontinuance of, or prejudice the inheritance or freehold of the wife: but that after his death, she or her heirs may enter on the lands in question. Formerly also, if an alienation was made by a sole Corporation, as a Bishop or Dean, without consent of the Chapter, this was a Discontinuance. F. N. B. 194. But this is now quite antiquated by the disabling stats. 1 Eliz. c. 19. 13 Eliz. c. 10. which declare all such alienations absolutely void ab initio; and therefore at present no Discontinuance can be thereby occasioned. 3 Comm. 172.

Having said thus much on the general nature of Discontinuance, a title which though of considerable extent in the old law, is now very much abridged by statute, the following selection on the subject may be sufficient in this place: referring the enquiring student to Com. Dig. title Discontinuance, and the other abridgements, for further information when necessary.

A Discontinuance taketh away an entry only; and to every discontinuance it is necessary there should be a devesting or displacing of the estate, and turning the same to a right; for if it be not turned to a right, they that have the estate cannot be driven to an action. Co. Lit. 327. And an estate-tail cannot be discontinued, but where he that makes the discontinuance, was once seised by force of the intail, where the estate-tail is executed; unless by reason of a warranty. Lit. sect. 637. 641. Driver, d. Burton v. Hussey, 1 H. Blackst. 269. Also if tenant in tail levies a fine, &c. this is no discontinuance, till the fine is executed; because if he dies before execution, the issue may enter. Co. Lit. 33. 2 Danv. Abr. 572.

A Discontinuance may be five ways, viz. by feoffment, fine, recovery, release and confirmation with warranty. 1 Rep. 44. A grant without livery, or a grant in fee without warranty, are no discontinuances: an exchange will not make a discontinuance; as if tenant in tail exchanges land with another, that is not any discontinuance, by reason no livery is requisite thereon. 2 Danv. 57. It is the same of a bargain and sale, &c. And an alteration of such things as lie in grant, and not in livery, works no discontinuance; for such grant does no wrong either to the issue in tail, or him in reversion or remainder, because nothing passeth but during the life of tenant in tail, which is lawful; and every discontinuance worketh a wrong. Co. Lit. 332.

If tenant in tail of a copyhold estate, surrenders to another in fee, this makes not any discontinuance, (except there be a custom for it) but the heir in tail may enter; though this hath been a great question. 1 Leon. 95. 2 Danv. 571. If there be tenant for life, remainder in tail, and remainder in tail, &c. And tenant for life, and he in the first remainder in tail levy a fine, this is no discontinuance of either of the remainders. 1 Rep. 76. But if there be tenant in tail, remainder in tail, &c. and tenant in tail enfeoffs him in reversion in fee: or where there is tenant for life, remainder in tail, reversion in fee, and tenant for life enfeoffs the reversioner; these are discontinuances, because there is a mean or immediate estate. 1 Rep. 140. Co. Lit. 335. 3 Danv. 575.

If there be tenant in tail, remainder to his right heirs, and he makes feoffment in fee, this is a discontinuance; though such tenant that made the feoffment, hath the fee in him. 2 Danv. 572. A man is tenant for life, the remainder in tail, remainder in fee: and the tenant for life makes a feoffment to him in remainder in fee: this is such a discontinuance of the estate tail, as produceth a forfeiture. 3 Rep. 59. If a tenant in tail be disseised, and after release with warranty to the desseisor, it will be a discontinuance: so if he release or confirm to tenant for life. Lit. Sect. 135. 1 Rep. 44. And if, where there is a tenant for life, and remainder in tail, the tenant for life levies a fine to his own use; and after tenant for life and he in remainder join in a feoffment by letter of attorney, that is a discontinuance of the estate-tail and the fee. Dyer, 327.

If tenant in tail makes a feoffment in fee upon condition, and the condition is broken, the issue may enter notwithstanding this discontinuance. Lit. 632. Tenant in tail grants all his estate to another, though without livery and seisin; and if that other person make a feoffment in fee, it will not be a discontinuance to take away the entry of him in reversion or remainder. Lit. 145. 1 Rep. 46. 10 Rep. 97. A lease is made for life, remainder in tail; and he in remainder in tail disseises the tenant for life, and makes a feoffment in fee, and dies without issue, and then tenant for life dieth; this is no discontinuance to him in reversion. Lit. 146. 1 Brown. 36. And if tenant in tail of a rent, common, advowson, or the like, grant it in fee, it is not a discontinuance: nor where such tenant granteth any thing out of land, &c. Lit. 138. Finch's Law, 193.

Where a tenant in tail of a manor makes a lease for life, not warranted by stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 28. of part of the demesnes, this is a discontinuance of this parcel; and it is said makes it no parcel of the manor. 2 Rol. Abr. 58.

There can be no discontinuance by tenant in tail of the gift of the Crown, stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 20. Nor by tenant in tail of fee-farm rents, to bar the remainder vested by the statute; stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 24. s. 6.—Some discontinuances at Common Law are now made bars as to the issue in tail; though they still remain discontinuances in some cases to him in remainder, &c. such as fines, with proclamations by stats. 4 H. 7. cap. 24. 32 H. 8. cap. 36. If the husband levy a fine with proclamations, and dieth, the wife must enter, or avoid the estate of the conusee within five years, or she is barred for ever, by the stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24. for the stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 28. doth help the discontinuance, but not the bar. Co. Lit. 326. Husband and wife tenant in special tail, the husband alone levied a fine to his own use, and afterwards he devised the land to his wife for life, the remainder over, rendering rent, &c. The husband dies, the wife enters and pays the rent, and dies: in this case it was adjudged, that the fine had barred the issue in tail, but not the wife. Dyer, 351. The entry of the wife in this case was a disagreement to the estate of inheritance, and an agreement to the estate for life: but if the wife had not waived the inheritance, the estate tail as to the wife had remained. 9 Rep. 135.

If lands be given to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of their two bodies, and the husband maketh a feoffment in fee, and dieth; the wife is helped by stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. and so is the issue of both their bodies, 1 Inst. 326. The husband is tenant in tail, the remainder to the wife in tail, the husband makes a feoffment in fee; by this, the husband, by the Common Law, did not only discontinue his own estate tail, but his wife's remainder: but by stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. after the death of the husband without issue, the wife may enter by the said act. Though if the husband hath issue, and maketh a feoffment in fee of his wife's land, and his wife dieth; the heir of the wife shall not enter during the husband's life, neither by the Common Law nor by the statute. 1 Inst. 326.

A Discontinuance may be defeated, where the estate that worked it is defeated: as if a husband make a feoffment of the wife's land upon condition, and after his death, his heir enters on the feoffee for the condition broken; now the discontinuance is defeated, and the feme may enter upon the heir. Co. Lit. 336.

DISCONTINUANCE OF PLEA. Where divers things should be pleaded to, and some are omitted, this is a discontinuance. 1 Nels. Abr. 660, 661. If a defendant's plea begin with an answer to part, and answers no more, it is a discontinuance: and the plaintiff may take judgment by nil dicit, for what is not answered: but if the plaintiff plead over, the whole action is discontinued. 1 Salk. 139. Debt upon bond of 500*l.* the defendant as to 225*l.* part of it, pleads payment, &c. And upon demurrer to this plea, it was adjudged that there being no answer to the residue, it is a discontinuance as to that, for which the plaintiff ought to take judgment by nil dicit. 1 Salk. 180. Where no answer is given to one part, if the plaintiff pleads thereto, he cannot have judgment according to his declaration; for which reason it may be a discontinuance of the whole. 1 Nels. 660. But this is helped after verdict by stat. 32 H. 8. c. 30. See titles Amendment, Pleading, Practice.

DISCONTINUANCE OF PROCESS. This Discontinuance is somewhat similar to a nonsuit; for when a plaintiff leaves a chasm in the proceedings of his cause, as by not continuing the process regularly from day to day, and time to time, as he ought to do, the suit is discontinued; and the defendant is no longer bound to attend; but the plaintiff must begin again by suing out a new original, usually paying costs to his antagonist. Antiently by the demise of the King all suits depending in his courts were at once discontinued; but to prevent the expence as well as delay attending this rule of law, the stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 7. enacts that no action shall be discontinued by such death of the King. The continuance of the suit by improper process, or by giving the party an illegal day, is properly a mis-continuance.

Where an action is long depending, and continued from one term to another, the continuances must be all entered, otherwise there will be a discontinuance; whereupon a writ of error may be brought, &c. 1 Nels. Abr. 660. If the plaintiff in a suit doth nothing, it is a discontinuance, and he must begin his suit again: and where it is too late to amend a declaration, &c. or the plaintiff is advised to prosecute in another court, he is to discontinue his suit, and proceed de novo. But a discontinuance of an action is not perfect till it is entered on the roll, when it is of record. Cro. Car. 236.

The plaintiff cannot discontinue his action after a demurrer joined; and entered; or after a verdict, or a writ of inquiry, without leave of the court. Cro. Jac. 35. 1 Lill. Abr. 473. In actions of debt or covenant, after a demurrer joined, the court will give leave to discontinue, if there be an apparent cause, as if the plaintiff through his own negligence is in danger of losing his debt: but if the demurrer be argued, then he shall not have leave to discontinue; nor where he brings another action for the same cause, and this is pleaded in abatement of the first action. Sid. 84.

It has been ruled, upon a motion to discontinue, that the court may give leave after a special verdict, which is not complete and final, but never after a general verdict. 1 Salk. 178. See Hardw. 200, 1. So after enquiry executed and returned. Carth. 81.

After issue and a verdict plaintiff cannot discontinue without consent of defendant; for if plaintiff will not enter up judgment defendant may. Salk. 178.—After demurrer argued and allowed, discontinuance may be allowed on payment of costs. Str. 76. 116. 3 Lev. 440.

And where a man hath a just cause of action, for a matter of any consequence, and unadvisedly demurs to a plain bar, &c. and defendant joins in demurrer, and it is argued, and the court are of opinion the plea is good in law, tho' it may be false in fact, the court will, even after giving their opinions, but before judgment given, on motion, permit the plaintiff to withdraw his demurrer, on payment of costs, and take issue.

The plaintiff may, if he sees occasion, discontinue before or after declaration delivered by a side bar rule on payment of Costs, N. on R. Mich. 10 Geo. 2. But in replevin the avowant cannot have such rule.

An appeal may as well be discontinued by the defect of the process or proceeding in it, as it may be by the insufficiency of the original writ, &c. For by such defect, the matter depending is as it were out of court. 1 Lill. 473. A discontinuance or miscontinuance, at Common Law, reverses a judgment given by default; and discontinuance upon a demurrer is error; but a miscontinuance after appearance is not so. 8 Rep. 150. 46 Ed. 3. 30.

Discontinuance of process is helped at Common Law by appearance: and by stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 30. all discontinuances, miscontinuances, and negligences therein, of plaintiff or defendant, are cured after verdict. See title Amendment.

A discontinuance of a former action is not complete, so as to entitle the plaintiff to arrest the defendant upon a fresh writ, until the plaintiff has taxed the costs. Term Rep. K. B. 54 Geo. 3. 153.

DISCOVERT. The law term for a woman unmarried or widow, one not within the bonds of matrimony. Law Fr. Dict.

DISCOVERY. The act of revealing or disclosing any matter by a defendant in his answer to a bill filed against him in a court of equity. See title Chancery.

To administer to the ends of justice, without pronouncing a judgment which may affect any rights, the Courts of Equity, in many cases, compel a discovery. This jurisdiction is exercised to assist the administration of justice, in the prosecution or defence of some other suit, either in the Court of Equity itself, or in some other court: and a discovery has been compelled to aid the jurisdiction of a foreign court. But if a bill is brought to aid, by a discovery, the prosecution or defence of any proceeding not merely civil, in any other court, as an indictment or information, a Court of Equity will not exercise its jurisdiction to compel a discovery; and the defendant may demur. 2 Vez. 398. And in the case of suits merely civil in a Court of ordinary jurisdiction, if that Court can itself compel the discovery required, a Court of Equity will not interfere. 1 Atk. 288. 1 Vez. 205. 2 Vez. 451.

A bill for a discovery must shew an interest in the plaintiff in the subject to which the required discovery relates; and such an interest as entitles him to call on the defendant for the discovery. See Finch Rep. 36. 44. 1 Vern. 399.

As the object of a Court of Equity in compelling a discovery is either to enable itself or some other court to decide on matters in dispute between the parties, the discovery sought must be material, either to the relief prayed by the bill, or to some other suit actually instituted, or capable of being instituted. If, therefore, the plaintiff does not shew by his bill such a case as renders the discovery which he seeks, material to the relief, if he prays relief; or does not shew a title to sue the defendant in some other court; or that he is actually involved in litigation with the defendant, or liable to be so; and does not also shew that the discovery which he prays is material to enable him to support or defend a suit; he shews no title to the discovery; and consequently a demurrer to the bill for such purpose will be allowed. See Finch Rep. 214. 1 Vez. 205. 2 Vez. 396, 9. 2 Atk. 388. 1 Vern. 204.

The situation of a defendant may render it improper for a court of equity to compel a discovery; either, 1. because the discovery may subject the defendant to pains and penalties, or to some forfeiture, or something in the nature of a forfeiture: or 2. it may hazard his title in a case where, in conscience, he has at least an equal right with the person requiring the discovery; though that right may not be clothed with a perfect legal title; as to which latter, see 1 Vez. 205. 3 Atk. 453.—It is a general rule that no one is bound to answer so as to subject himself to punishment, in whatever manner that punishment may arise; (as by pains and penalties, a criminal prosecution, &c.) or whatever may be the nature of the punishment. 2 Vez. 245. 251. 1 Vez. 246. 1 Eq. Ab. 131. p. 10. 1 Atk. 450. 2 Atk. 393. Viner, title Usury, Q. 4. Toth. 135.

But if the plaintiff alone is entitled to the penalties, and expressly waves them by his bill, the defendant shall be compelled to make the discovery; for it can no longer subject him to a penalty. 1 Vern. 60.—And though a discovery may subject a defendant to penalties, to which the plaintiff is not entitled, and which consequently he cannot wave, yet if the defendant has expressly covenanted not to plead or demur to the discovery sought, which is the common case with respect to servants of the East India Company, he shall be compelled to answer. 1 Eq. Ab. 77, 8. Where too a person, by his own agreement, subjects himself to a payment in the nature of a penalty on his doing a particular act, a demurrer, to discovery of that act, will not be allowed.

It seems however that a demurrer will be allowed to any discovery which may tend to shew the defendant guilty of any moral turpitude, as the birth of a child out of wedlock. Park. 163. but see 2 Vez. 451.—But a mother may in some cases be compelled to discover where her child was born, though it may lead to prove the child an alien. 2 Vez. 287, 294.

A defendant may likewise demur to a bill which may subject him to any forfeiture of interest; as if a bill is brought to discover whether a lease has been assigned without licence; or whether a defendant entitled during widowhood, or liable to forfeiture of a legacy in case of marriage without consent is married: or to discover any matter which may subject a defendant entitled to any office or franchise to a quo warranto. See Toth. 69. 1 Vez. 56. 2 C. R. 68. 2 Atk. 392. 2 Vez. 265. 1 Eq. Ab. 131. c. 10.

A defendant may in the same manner demur to a discovery which may subject him to any thing in the nature of a forfeiture; as to a discovery whether he was educated in the popish religion, by which he might incur the incapacities in stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. which the stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 60. does not entirely remove: or whether a clergyman was presented to a second living which avoided the first. See 3 Atk. 457. 2 Comm. 661. 3 Bac. Abr. 3 Atk. 453.

See further this Dict. title Chancery.

DISCRETION, Discretio.] When any thing is left to any person to be done according to his discretion, the law intends it must be done with sound discretion, and according to law: and the court of B. R. hath a power to redress things that are otherwise done, notwithstanding they are left to the discretion of those that do them. 1 Lil. Abr. 477.

Discretion is to discern between right and wrong; and therefore whoever hath power to act at discretion, is bound by the rule of reason and law. 2 Inst. 56. 298. And though there be a latitude of discretion given to one, yet he is circumscribed, that what he does be necessary and convenient; without which no liberty can defend it. Hob. 158. The assessment of fines on offenders committing affrays, &c. and the binding of persons to the good behaviour, are at the discretion of our judges and justices of the peace. And in many cases for crimes not capital, the judges have a discretionary power to inflict corporal punishment on the offenders. Infants, &c. under the age of discretion, are not punishable for crimes; and want of discretion is a good exception against a witness. See title Age; and other apposite titles.

TO DISFRANCHISE. Is to take away one's freedom or privilege: it is the contrary to enfranchise. Corporations have power to disfranchise members, in certain cases. See titles Corporation, Bye-Law.

DISHERISON. A disinheriting: stats. 20 Ed. 1. de vocatis ad Warr. Disherison of the Crown.—Stat. 8 Ric. 2. c. 3. Disherison of the people.

DISMES, Decimæ.] The tenth part of all the fruits of the earth, and of beasts, or labour, due to the Clergy. It signifieth also the tenths of all spiritual livings granted to the crown, which is called a perpetual disme. Stat. 26 Hen. 8. c. 3. § 8. &c. It also formerly signified a tax or tribute levied on the Temporalty. See Taxes, Tenths, Tithes.

DISORDERLY HOUSES. See Bawdy Houses, Riots, Theatres.

DISPARAGEMENT. In the time of the old tenures; the matching an heir in marriage under his degree, or against decency. Co. Lit. 107. Magn. Chart. c. 6. See this Dict. title Tenures.

TO DISPAUPER. When a person by reason of his poverty is admitted to sue in formâ pauperis; if afterwards, before the suit is ended, the same party have any lands or personal estate fallen to him, or be guilty of any thing whereby he is liable to have this privilege taken from him, then he is put out of the capacity of suing in formâ pauperis, and is said to be dispaupered. See title Costs, II.

DISPENSATION. See title Bishops; and as to Dispensations to hold pluralities, see titles Chaplains, Cession.

DISPENSATIONS OF THE KING. If a dispensation by the Archbishop of Canterbury, is to be in extraordinary matters, or in a case that is new, the King and his council are to be consulted: and it ought to be confirmed under the broad seal. The King's authority to grant dispensations remains as it did at Common Law; notwithstanding stat. 25 H. 8. c. 21. Cro. Eliz. 542, 601. See further as to the dispensing power of the Crown by non obstante, &c. this Dict. title King.

DISPERSONARE. To scandalise or disparage. Blount.

DISSIGNARE. To break open a seal—Sepulto patre testamentum dissignatum est. Neubrigensis, lib. 2. c. 7.

DISSEISIN. From the Fr. Dissaisin.]

A species of injury by ouster to the freehold estate of another.—A wrongful putting out of him that is seised of the freehold. 1 Inst. 277. As where a person enters into lands or tenements, and his entry is not lawful, and keeps him that hath the estate from the possession thereof. Bract. lib. 4. c. 3. And disseisin is of two sorts; either single disseisin, committed without force of arms; or disseisin by force; but this latter is more properly deforcement. Brit. cap. 42, 43.

Seisin is a technical term to denote the completion of that investiture, by which the tenant was admitted into the tenure, and without which no freehold could be constituted, or pass. Disseisin must therefore mean the turning the tenant out of his tenure and usurping his place and feudal relation.—Lord Mansfield in the case of Taylor ex dem. Atkins v. Horde, 1 Burr. 60. 5 Bro. P. C. 247.

Now, however, from the several statutes, first restraining and at length abolishing all military tenures, little more is left than the names of feoffment, seisin, tenure, and freeholder, without any precise knowledge of the things originally signified by those terms. Ibid.

In the same case Lord Mansfield said "Disseisin is a complicated fact, and differs from dispossessing. The freeholder by disseisin differs from a possessor by wrong.—Though the term disseisin happens to be the same, the thing signified by that word, as applied to the two cases of actual disseisin, or disseisin by election, is very different."—In this case it was attempted to support a common recovery, by supposing the tenant to the præcipe to have gained a freehold by disseisin. —The nature of a disseisin was therefore elaborately investigated by the counsel; and the idea of a freehold being gained thereby, learnedly repelled by Lord Mansfield. See further title Fine.

Disseisin therefore seems to imply the turning the tenant out of his fee, and usurping his place and relation.—To constitute an actual disseisin it was necessary that the disseisor had not a right of entry; (or, to use the old law expression, that his entry was not congeable;) that the person disseised was, at the time of the disseisin, in the actual possession of the lands; that the disseisor expelled him from them by some degree of constraint or force; and that he substituted himself to be tenant to the lord. But how this substitution was effected, it is diffcult, perhaps impossible, now to discover. 1 Inst. 266. b. in n.; 330 b. in. n. the latter a very long and abstruse note on the subject, and entering fully into the principles of the case above mentioned.

The injuries of Abatement and Intrusion (see those titles) are by a wrongful entry where the possession is vacant; but this of Disseisin is an attack upon him who is in actual possession, and turning him out of it. The former were an ouster from a freehold in law; this is an ouster from a freehold in deed. Disseisin may be effected either in corporeal inheritances, or incorporeal. Disseisin of things corporeal, as of houses, lands, &c. must be by entry, and actual dispossession of the freehold; Co. Lit. 181.; as if a man enter either by force or fraud into the house of another, and turns, or at least keeps, him or his servants out of possession. Disseisin of incorporeal hereditaments cannot be an actual dispossession, for the subject itself is neither capable of actual bodily possession, nor dispossession: but it depends on their respective natures and various kinds; being in general nothing more than a disturbance of the owner in the means of coming at, or enjoying them. But all disseisins of hereditaments incorporeal, are only so at the election and choice of the party injured; if, for the sake of more easily trying the right, he is pleased to suppose himself disseised. Litt. § 588, 589. Otherwise, as there can be no actual dispossession, he cannot be compulsively disseised of any incorporeal hereditaments.

And so too, even in corporeal hereditaments, a man may frequently suppose himself to be disseised, when he is not so in fact, for the sake of entitling himself to the more easy and commodious remedy, of an assise of novel disseisin, instead of being driven to the more tedious process of a writ of entry. Heng. Parv. c. 7. 4 Burr. 110.

The true injury of an actual or compulsive disseisin, according to what has been already stated, seems to be that of dispossessing the tenant, and substituting oneself to be the tenant of the lord in his stead; in order to which, in the times of pure feodal tenure, the consent or connivance of the lord, who, upon every descent or alienation, personally gave, and who therefore alone could change, the seisin or investiture, seems to have been considered as necessary. But when, in process of time, the feodal form of alienations wore off, and the lord was no longer the instrument of giving actual seisin, it is probable that the lord's acceptance of rent or service from him who had dispossessed another, might constitute a complete disseisin. Afterwards no regard was had to the lord's concurrence, but the dispossessor himself was considered the sole disseisor: and this wrong was then allowed to be remedied by entry only, without any form of law, as against the disseisor himself; but required a legal process against his heir or alienee. And when the remedy by assise was introduced under Henry II. to redress such disseisins as had been committed within a few years next preceding, the facility of that remedy induced others, who were wrongfully kept out of the freehold, to feign or allow themselves to be seised, merely for the sake of the remedy. 3 Comm. 169. &c.

By Magna Charta, 9 Hen. 3. c. 29. No man is to be disseised or put out of his freehold, but by lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land: and by stat. 32 H. 8. c. 33. the dying seised of any disseisor of or in any lands, &c. having no right therein, shall not be a descent in law, to take away an entry of a person having lawful title of entry; except the disseisor hath had peaceable possession five years, without entry or claim by the person having lawful title. But if a disseisor having expelled the right owner, hath such peaceable possession of the lands five years without claim, and continues in possession so as to die seised, and the land descends to his heirs, they have a right to the possession thereof till the person that is owner recovers at law; and the owner shall lose his estate for ever if he do not prosecute his suit within the time limited by the statute of limitations. Bac. Elem. And if a disseisee levy a fine of the land whereof he is disseised, unto a stranger, the disseisor shall keep the land for ever; for the disseisee against his own fine cannot claim, and the conusee cannot enter, and the right which the disseisee had being extinct by the fine, the disseisor shall take advantage of it. 2 Rep. 56. But this is to be understood, where no use is declared of the fine by the disseisee; when it shall enure to the use of the disseisor, &c. by Bridgman, C. J. 1 Lev. 128.—See title Claim Continual.

By the stat. of Gloucester, (6 Ed. 1.) c. 1. damages were given in an assise, or writ of entry upon a novel disseisin, against the alienee, or him that was found tenant after the disseisor; and also in all cases where a man recovered by assise of mort d'ancestor: (Damages had been before given in an assise of mort d'ancestor, by the stat. of Marlbridge, 52 Hen. 3. c. 16. in cases where the land was recovered against the chief lord:) or upon writs of cosinage, aiel and besaiel, or against a tenant upon his own intrusion or act. Booth, on real Actions. 3 Comm. 187, 8. 200, 1. 2 Inst. 286. 10 Co. Pinfold's case. See also the stats. of Westm. 1. 3 Edw. 1. c. 24. Westm. 2. 13 Edw. 1. c. 25. 1 Ric. 2. c. 9. 1 Hen. 4. c. 8. and 4 Hen. 4. c. 8. by which double or treble damages are given upon disseisins in particular cases.

If a feme sole be seised of lands in fee, and is disseised, and then taketh husband; in this case, the husband and wife, as in right of the wife, have right to enter, and yet the dying seised of the disseisor, shall take away the entry of his wife after the death of the husband. Co. Lit. 246. If a person disseises me, and during the disseisin, he or his servants cut down the timber growing upon the land, and afterwards I reenter into the land, I shall have action of trespass against him; for the law, as to the disseisor and his servants, supposes the freehold to have been always in me: but if the disseisor be disseised by another, or if he makes a feoffment, gift in tail, lease for life or years, I shall not have an action against the second disseisor, or against those who come in by title: for all the mesne profits shall be recovered against the disseisor himself. 11 Rep. 52. Keilw. 1.

A disseisor in assise, where damages are recovered against him, shall recover as much as he hath paid in rents chargeable on the lands before the disseisin. Jenk. Cent. 189. But if the disseisor or his feoffee sows corn on the land, the disseisee may take it whether before or after severance. Dyer, 31. 173. 11 Rep. 46. Where a man hath a house in fee, &c. and locks it and then departs; if another person comes to his house, and takes the key of the door, and says that he claims the house to himself in fee, without any entry into the house, this is a disseisin of the house. 2 Danv. Abr. 624. If the feoffor enters on the land of the feoffee, and makes a lease for years, &c. it is a disseisin, though the intent of the parties to the feoffment was, that the feoffee should make a lease to the feoffor for life. 2 Rep. 59. If lessee for years is ousted by his lessor, this is said to be no disseisin. Cro. Jac. 678.

A man who enters on another's land, claiming a lease for years, who hath not such a lease, is a disseisor: though if a man enters into the house of another by his sufferance, without claiming any thing, it will not be a disseisin. 9 H. 6. 21. 31. 2 Danv. 625. If a person enters on lands by virtue of a grant or lease that is void in law, he is a disseisor. 2 Danv. 630. A lessee at will, makes a lease for years, it is a disseisin, at the election of the lessor at will: but it is the disseisin of the lessee at will, not of the lessee for years. Hill. 7 Car. B. R. If a man enters into the land of an infant, though by his assent, this is a disseisin to the infant at his election. 11 Ed. 3. Ass. 87. And if a person commands another to enter upon lands, and make a disseisin, the commander is a disseisor, as well as such other: unless the command be conditional, when it may be otherwise. 22 Ass. 99. 2 Danv. 631.

If a man forces another to swear to surrender his estate to him, and he doth so, it will be a disseisin of the estate. So forcibly hindering a person from tilling his land, is a disseisin of the land. Co. Lit. 161. But if one enter wrongfully into the lands of another, and he accepts rent from such person, he shall not afterwards be taken for a disseisor. Dyer, 173. Where any person is disturbed from entering on land, it is a disseisin: a denial of a rent, when lawfully demanded, is a disseisin of the rent. Co. Litt. 153. Also hindering a distress for rent by force, or making rescous of a distress, are a disseisin of the rent. 2 Danv. 624, 625. An infant, or feme covert, may be a disseisor, but it must be by actual entry on lands, &c.

A feme covert shall not be a disseisoress by the act of the baron: if he disseises another to her use, she is not a disseisoress; nor if the wife agrees to it during the coverture: yet if after his death she agrees to it, she is a disseisoress. 2 Danv. 626, 627. Assises that lie against disseisors are called writs of disseisin; and there are several writs of entry sur disseisin, of which some are in the per, and others in le post, &c.

After all that has been here said on this head, we must conclude by observing that writs of assise on disseisins are now disused; and the feigned action of ejectment is introduced in their place. It is not amiss to be acquainted with this learning, but trespass and ejectment supply the place of almost every kind of assise. See those titles, and title Assise of Novel Disseisin.

DISSEISOR. Is in general he that disseiseth or puts another out of his land, without order of law: and a disseisee is he that is so put out. 4 Hen. 4. As the king, in judgment of law can do no wrong, he cannot be a disseisor. 1 E. 3. 8. A disseisor is to be fined and imprisoned; and the disseisee restored to the land, &c. by stat. 20 H. 3. c. 3. Where a disseisor is disseised, it is called disseisin upon disseisin. See title Disseisin.

DISSENTERS. Separatists from the Church and the service and worship thereof. Though the disposition of these Sectarists occasioned in former times several disabilities and restrictions (inconsistent with the spirit of true Toleration) to be laid upon them by abundance of statutes; (See statutes 23 Eliz. c. 1. 29 Eliz. c. 6. 35 Eliz. c. 1. 13, 14 C. 2. c. 1. 17 C. 2. c. 2. 22 C. 2. c. 1.) yet at length the Legislature, with a spirit of true magnanimity, extended that indulgence to them which they themselves, when in power, had held to be countenancing schism, and had denied to the church of England. The penalties are conditionally suspended by the stat. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 18. "for exempting their majesties' protestant subjects, dissenting from the church of England, from the penalties of certain laws," commonly called the Toleration act; which is confirmed by stat. 10 An. c. 2. and declares that neither the laws above-mentioned, nor the statutes 1 Eliz. c. 2. § 14. 3 Jac. 1. cc. 4, 5. nor any other penal laws made against Popish recusants (except the Corporation and Test Acts) shall extend to any Dissenters, other than papists, and such as deny the Trinity: Provided, 1. That they take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy; (or make a similar affirmation, being Quakers; see stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. 6;) and subscribe the declaration against popery; 2. That they repair to some congregation certified to, and registered in, the court of the bishop or archdeacon, or at the county sessions. 3. That the doors of such meeting-house shall be unlocked, unbarred, and unbolted; in default of which the persons meeting there are still liable to all the penalties of the former acts.

Dissenting Teachers in order to be exempted from the penalties of the statutes 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 1. 15 Car. 2. c. 6. 17 Car. 2. c. 2. 22 Car. 2. c. 1. were also to subscribe the articles of religion mentioned in stat. 13 Eliz. c. 12. (which only concern the confession of the true Christian faith, and the doctrine of the sacraments;) with an express exception of those relating to the government and powers of the church, and to infant baptism; or if they scrupled subscribing the same, were to make and subscribe the declaration prescribed by 19 Geo. 3. c. 44. professing themselves to be Christians and protestants, and that they believe the scripture to contain the revealed will of God, and to be the rule of doctrine and practice.

Thus, though the crime of non-conformity was by no means universally abrogated, it was suspended, and ceased to exist, with regard to these Protestant Dissenters, during their compliance with the conditions imposed by these statutes; and, under these conditions, all persons who approved themselves no papists or oppugners of the Trinity, were left at full liberty to act as their conscience shall direct them, in the matter of religious worship.

By stat. 52 G. 3. c. 155. the acts 13, 14 Car. 2. c. 1. 17 C. 2. c. 2. and 22 Car. 2. c. 1. are wholly repealed.—By stat. 53 G. 3. c. 160. so much of 1 W. & M. c. 18. as excepts persons denying the Trinity from the benefit of that act, and so much of stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 32. as imposes penalties on persons denying the Trinity, (See this Dict. title Blasphemy,) are repealed.—See also 57 Geo. 3. c. 70. repealing the like provisions of the Irish act, 6 Geo. 1. c. 5.

If any person shall wilfully, maliciously, or contemptuously, disturb any congregation assembled in any church, or permitted meeting-house, or shall misuse any preacher or teacher there, he shall be bound over to the sessions of the peace, and forfeit 20*l.* Stat. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 18. But by stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 4. no mayor or principal magistrate must appear at any dissenting meeting with the ensigns of his office, on pain of disability to hold that or any other office; the Legislature judging it a matter of propriety, that a mode of worship, set up in opposition to the national, when allowed to be excercised in peace, should be exercised also with decency, gratitude, and humility.—Dissenters also, who subscribe to the declaration in the stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 44. are exempted (unless in the case of endowed schools and colleges) from the penalties of the stats. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. and 17 Car. 2. c. 2. which prohibit (upon pain of fine and imprisonment) all persons from teaching school, unless they be licensed by the Ordinary, and subscribe a declaration of conformity to the liturgy of the church, and reverently frequent the divine service established by the laws of this kingdom.

By stat. 52 Geo. 3. c. 155. § 2. no congregation for religious worship of Protestants, where more than twenty persons shall be present besides the preacher's family, shall be permitted, (unless registered under former acts), until duly certified to the bishop, &c. or to the sessions, and a due return shall be made thereof once a year to the bishop or archdeacon, and registered in the court of the bishop, &c. on penalty of 20*l.* on every person allowing any such congregation to meet in any place occupied by him. Persons preaching in any place without consent of occupiers, are liable to a penalty of 30*l.* Preacher and persons resorting to religious assemblies, certified and registered under this act, are exempted from all penalties as protestant dissenters taking the oaths under stat. 1 W. & M. c. 18. Preachers, when required, shall take the oaths and subscribe the declaration prescribed by 19 G. 3. c. 44. if they have not previously so done.—Any Protestant may require a Justice to administer such oaths &c. to him, and receive a certificate thereof.—Preachers having taken such oaths, and producing such certificate, and not following any business except a school master, exempted from offices and the militia.—Penalty on producing false certificate, 50*l.*—Door of all such religious assemblies shall not be bolted or barred.—Penalty on disturbing such religious assemblies 50*l.* for payment of which offender shall find sureties, or be committed.—The ecclesiastical jurisdiction over churches, &c. is saved; and the act does not extend to Quakers.

Dissenters chosen to any parochial or ward offices, and scrupling to take the oaths, may execute the office by deputy, who shall comply with the law in this behalf. Stat. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 18.—But it appears that they are not subject to fine on refusing to serve corporation offices.—For where a freeman of London was elected one of the sheriffs, but refused to take the office on account of his being a dissenter, and, as such, not having received the sacrament according to the rights of the church of England, within a year before his election, an action was brought in the Sheriff's Court, for the penalty incurred by such refusal, and a judgment recovered; which judgment was affirmed in a writ of error brought in the Court of Hustings. But the defendant having obtained a special commission of errors, the Judges Delegates reversed both judgments; and, on a writ of error in Parliament, this judgmeut of reversal was affirmed; the judges being (except one) of opinion that the defendant was at liberty to object to the validity of his election, on the ground of his own non-conformity. 3 Bro. P. C. (8vo. ed.) 465. Harrison v. Evans.

DISTILLERS. Of strong waters, spirits, &c. are subject to divers regulations under the Excise-laws, in order to avoid frauds in the revenue; for some particulars relative to which, see this Dict. title Spirituous Liquors; and also title Excise.

DISTRAIN. To distrain is to take and keep any thing in custody as a distress. See title Distress.

DISTRESS.

DISTRICTIO.] The taking of a personal chattel out of the possession of the wrong-doer into the custody of the party injured, to procure a satisfaction for the wrong committed. 3 Comm. 6. The term Distress is also applied to the thing taken or distrained.

A man may take a distress for homage, fealty or any services; for fines and amercements, and for damage-feasant, &c. And the effect of it is to compel the party either to replevy the distress, and contest the taking in an action against the distrainer; or, which is more usual, to compound, or pay the debt or duty, for which he was distrained.

There are likewise distresses in actions compulsory, to cause a man to appear in court: and of these there is a distress personal, of a man's moveable goods, and profits of lands, &c. for contempt in not appearing after summoned; and distresses real, upon immoveable goods. And none shall be distrained to answer for any thing touching their freeholds, but by the King's writ. Stat. 52 Hen. 3. c. 1.

Distress is also divided into finite and infinite: Finite, is that which is limited by law, how often it shall be made to bring the party to trial of action, as once, twice, &c. And infinite, is without limitation, until the party appears; which is likewise applicable to jurors not appearing: then it hath had a further division into a grand distress, and ordinary distress; the former whereof extends to all the goods and chattels which the party hath within the country. F. N. B. 904. Old. Nat. Br. 43. 113. Brit. c. 26. f. 52.

Let us now consider, more particularly,

I. 1. Who may distrain, and for what; 2. And what may be distrained.
II. At what Time, and in what Manner, generally, the Distress should be made.
III. Of the statutes regulating Distress.

I. 1. THE MOST USUAL INJURY for which a distress may be taken is, that of non-payment of rent; and it may now be laid down as an universal principle, that a Distress may be taken for any kind of rent in arrear. See post, III.—For neglecting to do suit to the lord's court, or other certain personal service, the lord may distrain of common right. Bro. Distress 15. 1 Inst. 46.—For amercements in a Court Leet, a distress may be had of common right; but not for amercements in a Court Baron, without a special prescription to warrant it. Brownl. 36. Another injury, for which distresses may be taken, is, where a man finds beasts of a stranger wandering in his grounds damage feasant; doing him hurt or damage by treading down his grass, &c. in which case the owner of the soil may distrain them, till satisfaction made to him for the injury he has sustained.—Lastly for several duties and penalties inflicted by special Acts of Parliaments, remedy by distress and sale is given. See post, III.

Of common right a person may distrain for rents, and all manner of services; and for rent reserved upon a gift in tail, lease for life, years, &c. though there be no clause of distress in the deed, so as the reversion be in himself: but, on a feoffment in fee, a distress may not be taken, unless expressly reserved in the deed. Co. Lit. 57. 205. Doctor and Student, cap. 9.—See Co. Lit. 204.

A man grants a rent out of the manor of D. and further, that if the rent be behind, the grantee shall distrain for it in the manor of S. this is a rent in the manor of D. and only a penalty on the other manor. 1 Shep. Abr. 567. If a person seized of land in fee, demise it to one upon condition to pay his wife 5*l.* a year rent, and if it be behind, and in arrear, that she shall distrain for it; the wife may take a distress for the rent. Dyer, 3. 48. There is a lord and tenant by 3*l.* rent and fealty, the lord dies, and his wife is endowed of the thirds of the seignory; here she may distrain for one pound, and the heir for two pounds: so if a rent be divided amongst parceners, each of them may have a distress for her part; but this may not be till the partition is made. Bro. 45.

If one joint-tenant make a gift in tail of the land, reserving a certain rent, and the rent be in arrear, he may not distrain the beasts of the other joint-tenant. 33 H. 6. 35. But if A. and B. are tenants in common, and A. leases his moiety to C. for years, rendering rent, and C. lease it to B. if the rent is behind, A. may take a distress of the cattle of B. his fellow tenant in common. 7 Rep. 23. Moor, 558.

A terre-tenant, holding under two tenants in common, cannot pay the whole rent to one after notice from the other not to pay it: and if he do, the other tenant in common may distrain for his share. 5 Term Rep. K. B. 216.

Where lessee of lands died before the expiration of the term, and his administrator continued in possession during the remainder, and after the expiration of it, a distress may be taken for rent due for the whole term, under stats. 32 H. 8. c. 37. 8 An. c. 14.—1 H. Blackst. 465.

To justify taking a distress, the party must see he hath good cause to distrain; that he have power to take the distress, and from the person from whom he takes it; that the thing, for the quality of it, be distrainable, and he distrain it in due time and place, &c. He who takes a distress for another ought to have good warrant for doing it; and must do it in his name: and a bailiff or servant may distrain for his master. 1 Cro. 748. 2 Cro. 436. Godb. 110. A distress ought to be made of such things whereof the sheriff may make replevin, and deliver again in as good plight and condition as they were at the time of the taking. Co. Lit. 47.

A landlord may distrain for the rent of ready furnished lodgings. 2 New. Rep. C. P. 224.

2. Distresses are to be of a thing valuable, whereof somebody hath a property; things feræ naturæ, as dogs, conies, &c. may not be distrained. 1 Rol. Abr. 664, 666. It is the same of cattle of the plough, beasts of husbandry, sheep, or horses joined to a cart, with a rider upon it. 1 Vent. 36.

Sheep are equally privileged with averia carucæ, and cannot be taken if any other distress can be found. See 2 Inst. 133.—But it has been adjudged that beasts of the plough may be taken for the poor's rate, under stat. 43 Eliz. because the remedy given by that and other statutes for compelling the payment of particular rates or sums of money, though called a distress, is in effect an execution. 1 Burr. 579.—See acc. Saund. on 22 C. 2. against Conventicles 39. referred to in Com. Dig. Distress (C.) but not cited in 4 Burr.

A horse with a rider upon his back; or a horse in an inn, or put into a common; an ax in a man's hand, cutting down wood; or any thing a person carries about him; utensils and instruments of a man's trade or profession, or the books of a scholar; corn in a mill, or goods in a market, to be sold for the use of the public; materials in a weaver's shop, for making of cloth; another person's garment in the house of a taylor, &c. are not distrainable; nor is any thing that is fixed to the freehold of a house, as a furnace, doors, windows, boards, an anvil, or mill-stone, &c. 1 Sid. 422. 440. Co. Lit. 47. 2 Danv. Abr. 461. 4 Term Rep. 565. 6 Term Rep. 138.

Implements of trade may be distrained for rent if they be not in actual use at the time, and if there be no other sufficient distress on the premises: and so may beasts of the plough under the same circumstances. 4 Term Rep. K. B. 565.

Deer in a private inclosure may be distrained. 3 Comm. 8. —Some have thought that a horse on which one is riding may be distrained for damage feasant. 2 Keb. 596. 1 Sid. 440. but the opinion was extrajudicial; and see 6 Term Rep. 138. that such distress cannot be made. See also Cro. Eliz. 549. 596. Some also have inclined to think that horses drawing a cart laden with corn, though one is riding in the cart, may be distrained for rent; and for that purpose may be severed from the cart, if the person distrained doth not choose to take the cart with the corn also, all of which, as it seems, are equally liable to the distress. See 2 Keb. 529. 596. Raym. 18. 1 Vent. 36. 1 Sid. 422. 440. in which latter book the reporter makes a query, whether the man's being on the cart, should not privilege the whole team.—If ferrets and nets in a warren be taken damage feasant it is good; but if they are in the hands of a man, they cannot be distrained any more (says the Reporter) than a horse on which a man is; nor can they be distrained if they are out of the warren, 2 E. 2. Avowry 182. 7 E. 3. ib. 199.—See Vin. title Distress A.

Goods, cattle, not of the plough, &c. sheaves of corn; corn in the straw, or threshed, and carts with corn, (but not victuals,) hay in a barn, or ricks of hay; money in a bag sealed, though not out of a bag, &c. may be distrained for rent: and so may cattle or goods driving to market, if put into a pasture by the way. Co. Lit. 47. 1 Lutw. 214. Mod. 385. Beasts of the tenant feeding on commons or wastes, appendant or appurtenant to the demised premises, may be distrained for rent. 3 Comm. 11.

If a driver of cattle asks leave of the lessor to put his cattle into his ground for a night, and he gives leave, as well as the lessee, yet it is said he is not concluded from distraining them for rent. 2 Vent. 59. 2 Danv. 642.

Beasts that escape into the tenant's ground may be distrained for rent, though they have not been levant and couchant. 1 Inst. 47. This doctrine has been objected to as too general; and several distinctions are taken, the sum of which seems to be, that if a stranger's beasts escape into another's land by default of the owner of the beasts, as by breaking the fences, they may be distrained for rent immediately, without being levant or couchant; but that if they escape there by default of the tenant of the land, as for want of his keeping a sufficient fence, then they cannot be distrained for rent or service of any kind, till they have been levant and couchant; nor afterwards by a landlord for rent on a lease, unless, on notice, the owner of the beasts neglects to remove them: though it is said that such notice is not necessary where the distress is by the lord of the fee for an ancient rent, or by the grantee of a rent charge.—See this subject argued at large in Kemp v. Crewes, 2 Lutw. 1573.

If A. brings yarn to his neighbour's house to weigh, it cannot be distrained by the lord. Noy, n. 298. Vide 15 E. 3. Avowry 216.—See Noy. 68. and S. C. in Cro. Eliz. 549. 596. —Cloth in a taylor's shop, or things delivered to persons in exercise of their trade cannot be distrained. 4 Term Rep. 569. —For other cases in which the property of strangers is privileged from distress, for the sake of trade and commerce, see Francis v. Wyatt, 3 Burr. 1498. In that case the question was, whether a person's chariot, which stood at a common livery stable, could be distrained for rent due, from the keeper of the livery stable; and the Court, after two arguments, appearing to be strongly inclined in favour of the distress, the owner of the chariot declined bringing the question to a third argument.

The goods of a third person, found on the premises, may be distrained by the collector of the house and window tax, for arrears under 43 Geo. 3. c. 161. though the goods are only borrowed and the person in arrear has other goods of his own on the premises sufficient to satisfy the arrears. 1 Maul. & Sel. Rep. 601.

The goods of a Carrier are privileged, and cannot be distrained for rent, though the waggon wherein loaded, is put into the barn of a house, &c. on the road. 1 Salk. 249.

Now by stat. 2 W. & M. c. 5. sheaves or cocks of corn, or corn loose or in the straw, or hay in any hovel, stack or rick, or otherwise on the land, may be distrained for rent on demise, lease, or contract.

At Common Law corn growing could not be distrained, because it adheres to the freehold. 1 Ro. Ab. 666. H. pl. 4. But by stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. Landlords are impowered to distrain all sorts of corn, grass, or other product growing on the estate demised, and to cut and gather them when ripe; and so in Ireland under stat. 56 Geo. 3. c. 88. § 16.

II. ALL DISTRESSES must be made by day; unless in the case of damage feasant; an exception allowed lest the beasts should escape before they are taken. 1 Inst. 142.

Distresses for rent are to be reasonable, and not excessive; and not to be taken in the King's highway, or the common street; or in the ancient fees of the church. 51 H. 3. stat. 4. 52 H. 3. c. 1, 2, 3, 4. 15. 2 Ed. 2. st. 1. c. 9. Except in case of an amercement in the leet.

All distresses for rent must be made on the premises, by the Common Law. And by stat. 8. An. c. 14. if any tenant fraudulently removes goods from off the premises, the landlord may in five days seize such goods wheresoever found, as a distress for the rent in arrear; unless the goods are sold for a valuable consideration before the seizure. By stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. thirty days are allowed. And, whereas at Common Law, for rent due the last day of the term, the lessor could not distrain; because the term ended before the rent was due, and the lessee had the whole day to pay it; nor where the lessee held over his term, for rent incurred during the term. See 1 Inst. 47.) now, by the stat. 8. An. c. 14. where leases are expired, a distress may be taken, provided it be done within six months, and during the landlord's title and tenant's possession. See 1 H. Blackst. 5. where a distress of corn left on the premises under a custom, was held liable to distress after the expiration of the six months.

Distresses for services are to be on the land: but for an amercement in a leet, the distress may be taken any where within the hundred, as well out of the land, as on it, wherever the cattle are of him that is amerced; for the amercement charges only the person, and not the land; and for this a distress may be taken in the high street. 2 Danv. Abr. 644, 645. The lord cannot distrain for amercements in a court-baron, without a prescription; though he may in the leet: and the goods and cattle of another, may not be taken in distress on my ground, for an amercement, &c. set upon me in a court-leet or court-baron. 11 Rep. 44. 12 H. 7. 13. For services a distress cannot be taken but where the services are certain; or may be reduced to a certainty. Co. Lit. 96.

The landlord might not formerly break open a house to make a distress, for that is a breach of the peace. But when he was in the house, it was held that he might break open an inner door, 1 Inst. 161. Comb. 17. By stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. (see post,) he may by assistance of the peace-officer, break open in the day time any place, whither the goods have been fraudulently removed, and locked up to prevent a distress; oath being first made in case it be a dwelling-house, of a reasonable ground to suspect that such goods are concealed therein. See 3 Comm. 11.

Trespass will not lie against a landlord, who occupied an apartment over a mill demised to his tenant, from which it was divided only by a boarded floor without any ceiling, for taking up the floor of his own apartment, and entering through the aperture to distrain. 4 W. P. Taunton 562.

Where a landlord comes to distrain cattle, which he sees on the tenant's ground, if the tenant, or any other, to prevent the distress, drives the cattle off the land, the landlord may make fresh pursuit, and distrain them: though if before the distress, the owner of the cattle tenders his rent, and a distress is taken afterwards, it is wrongful. 2 Inst. 107. 160.

A distress of cattle must be brought to the common pound, or be kept in an open place; and if they are put into a common pound, the owner is to take notice of it at his peril; but if in any other open place, notice is to be given to the owner, that he may feed them; and then if the cattle die for want of food, the tenant shall bear the loss; and the landlord may distrain again for his rent. 5 Rep. 90. Co. Lit. 47. 96. Where one impounds cattle distrained, he cannot justify the tying them in the pound: if he ties a beast, and it is strangled, he must answer it in damages. 1 Salk. 248. If the person distraining damage-feasant put the distress in a broken pound, and the distress escapes, he can have no action for the same: it is otherwise if from a good pound, without his default, when he may have action for the trespass. Salk. ibid. By stats. 53 H. 3. c. 4. 1 P. & M. c. 12. none shall drive a distress out of the county, on pain to be fined and amerced: and no distress of cattle shall be driven out of the hundred where taken to any pound, except to a pound overt in the same county, and not above three miles distant; nor shall any distress be impounded in several places under the penalty of 5*l.* and treble damages.

By stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 10. persons distraining for rent, may impound the distress on any convenient part of the land chargeable with the distress.

After a distress is in the pound, it is said to be in custodiâ legis, so that the owner of it hath no absolute property therein; and therefore he cannot sell or forfeit it, nor may the same be taken in execution, &c. but it must be as a pledge or means to help the party distraining to his debt or duty. Co. Lit. 190. Finch L. 135. Cattle distrained may not be used, because by law they are only as a pledge; unless it be for the owner's benefit, by milking, &c. Cro. Jac. 148.

When a distress is taken of household goods, or other dead things, they are to be impounded in a house, or other pound covert, &c. And if the distress is damaged, the distrainer must answer it. Wood's Inst. 191. And they are to be removed immediately; except corn or hay, by stat. 2 W. & M sess. 1. cap. 5. But if a landlord doth not remove goods immediately, but quits them till another day, during which time they are taken away, it is not a rescous, for want of possession. Mod. Ca. 215. 1 Nels. 672.—See post III.

Where goods are unlawfully distrained, the owner may rescue them, before they are impounded; but not afterwards. Co. Lit. 47. But the safest way is to replevy, as there are few cases, in law, where a man is allowed to be his own judge, if any.—If lands lie in several counties, a distress may be made in one county for the whole rent. Co. Lit. 154. And if a landlord comes into a house, and seizes upon some goods as a distress, in the name of all the goods in the house; this is a good seizure of all. 6 Mod. 215.

By stat. 2 W. & M. c. 5. if any distress and sale be made where there is no rent due, the owner of the goods distrained shall recover double the value of the goods, and full costs. Also by the Common Law, if a lord or other person shall distrain several times for his service or rent, when none is in arrear, the tenant may have an assise de sovent distress, &c. F. N. B. 176.

Where a man is entitled to distrain for an entire duty, he ought to distrain for the whole at once, and not for part at one time, and part at another. 2 Lutw. 1532. But if he distrains for the whole, and there is not sufficient on the premises, or he happens to mistake in the value of the thing distrained, and so takes an insufficient distress, he, his executors, &c. may take a second distress to complete his remedy. Cro. Eliz. 13. Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 7. 4 Burr. 590.

One warrant of distress for the amount of several duties imposed by different acts of parliament, each giving a power of distress, is legal. 7 Term Rep. K. B. 367.

Distresses must be proportioned to the thing distrained for. By the stat. of Marlbridge, 52 H. 3. c. 4, if any man takes a great or unreasonable distress for rent arrere, he shall be heavily amerced for the same. As if the landlord distrains two oxen for 12*d.* rent, the taking of both is an unreasonable distress. 2 Inst. 407. But if there were no other distress nearer the value to be found, he might reasonably have distrained one of them; but for homage, fealty, or suit and service, as also for parliamentary wages (when they used to be paid) it is said no distress can be excessive. Bro. Ab. t. Assise 291. Prerog. 98. For as these distresses cannot be sold, the owner upon making satisfaction, may have his chattels again. 3 Comm. 12.

The remedy for excessive distresses is, by a special action on the stat. of Marlbridge; for an action of trespass is not maintainable upon this account, it being no injury at the Common Law. 1 Vent. 104. Fitzgib. 85. 4 Burr. 590.—See titles Avowry, Replevin, Recaption, Rescous, &c.

III. See furtiier as to Distress 3 Comm. 6. 145. and in the several abridgments titles Distress and Replevin, and also Gilbert on Replevins.—See also stats. 2 Wm. & M. st. 1. c. 5. 8 An. c. 14. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19.

These statutes have made great alterations in the ancient law of distress, particularly by empowering persons who distrain for rent of any kind, to sell the distress for payment of rent in arrear, if the tenant or owner fails to replevy with sufficient security, within five days after taking of the distress and giving the tenant notice of the cause; in this case the constable is bound to assist, the goods are to be appraised by two sworn appraisers, and the overplus, if any, left in the constable's hands for the use of the owner. This improvement of the remedy by distress, was first introduced by stat. 2 W. & M. c. 5. with respect to rents due on demise, or contract; and afterwards by stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. was extended to rents-seck, rents of assise, and chief-rents. Before these two statutes, the remedy by distress was very imperfect; for the distress was merely taken nomine pœnæ, to compel satisfaction, and could not be sold or used for the profit of the person distraining, except in case of the King and some few other instances.—See further as to distresses and other remedies for rent, this Dict. titles Cessavit, Rent, Lease, &c.

The following extracts will more fully explain the nature of distress by statute.

By stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. if any tenant of lands or tenements shall fraudulently carry away his goods, to prevent distress, the landlord may, within thirty days after, distrain them wherever they shall be found, as if they had been on the premises; but no such goods shall be distrained, if sold bonâ fide for valuable consideration before seizure, to any person not privy to the fraud. Tenants committing such fraud, or others assisting, shall forfeit double the value of the goods carried off, to be recovered by action of debt, &c. And where they shall not exceed 50*l.* value, the landlord may exhibit a complaint before two justices of peace, who are to examine the fact, and inquire into the value of the goods, and thereupon order the offender to pay double value, leviable by distress and sale; and, for want thereof, commit the offender to the house of correction for six months. Landlords, or their agents may, with the assistance of a constable, seize any goods, fraudulently concealed in any house, outhouse, &c.

And in case of a dwelling-house, on oath first made to some justice, of reason to suspect that such goods are therein, may break open the same, and distrain them: they may also distrain for rent and cattle, or stock of their tenants, feeding in any common; or corn, grass, hops, fruits, &c. growing on the land, which they shall cut, gather, cure, and lay up when ripe, in any proper place, giving notice to the tenant within a week where lodged, and dispose thereof towards the satisfaction of the rent and charges; the appraisement to be made when cut or cured: but, if after a distress so taken, before the product be ripe and gathered, the tenant shall pay the rent, and charges of the distress, the said distress shall cease.

Persons may secure distresses lawfully taken, and sell them upon the premises, in like manner as may be done off the same, by 2 W. & M. sess. 1. c. 5. And any persons may go to and from the premises to view, appraise, buy, or take away the goods of the purchaser; and if a rescous be made of the distress, the persons aggrieved shall have the remedy given by the said statute.

Distresses made for rent justly due shall not be unlawful, nor distrainers be trespassers ab initio, for any irregularity in the disposition thereof; but the parties grieved to have satisfaction for special damage, in an action on the case, &c. But no tenant shall recover by such action, if tender of amends hath been made before the action brought. And in all actions of trespass, or on the case, relating to the entry, distress or sale, made by landlords for rents, the defendants may plead the general issue; and if the plaintiffs become non-suit, &c. shall recover double costs of suit.

If goods remain on the demised premises, after a fictitious bill of sale made of them under an execution, they are nevertheless liable to be distrained for rent. 3 W. P. Taunton, 400.

By stat. 56 Geo. 3. c. 88. § 16, 17. Tenants in Ireland having paid rent to their immediate landlord, if distrained by the superior landlord, may recover damages against their immediate landlord, and retain them out of the future accruing rent. By this act, as amended by 58 Geo. 3. c. 39. the powers of distress on corn, &c. growing, given in England by stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. are extended to Ireland: and other provisions are made for the recovery of tenements from absconding, overholding and defaulting tenants.

By stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 20. Justices of peace, in all cases, where they are empowered to levy penalties by any act of parliament, are, in their warrants of distress, to limit a time for the sale of the goods; the Constable making such distress may deduct the reasonable charges of detaining, keeping, and selling such distress, out of the money arising by the sale; and the overplus, if any, after such charges, and also the penalty or sum of money, shall be fully paid, shall be returned to the owner of the goods distrained; and the Constable, if required, shall shew the warrant to the party whose goods are distrained, and suffer a copy thereof to be taken.—This act not to alter or repeal the stats. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 34. and 1 Geo. 1. c. 6. relating to Distresses on Quakers for Tithes and Church Rates.

Distress of the King. By the Common Law no subject can distrain out of his fee or seigniory: unless cattle are driven to a place out of the fee, to hinder the lord's distress, &c. But the king may distrain for rent service, or fee-farm, in all the lands of the tenant wheresoever they be; not only on lands held of himself, but of others: where his tenant is in actual possession, and the land manured with his own beasts, &c. 2 Inst. 132. 2 Danv. Abr. 643.

Distress of a Town. If a town be assessed to a certain sum, a distress may be taken in any part, subject to the whole duty. 2 Danv. 643.

DISTRESSES. Were pledges taken by the sheriff from those who came to fairs, for their good behaviour; which, at the end of the fair or mercat, were delivered back, if no harm was done. Scotch Dict.

DISTRIBUTION of Intestates' Estates; see title Executor V. 8.

DISTRICTIONE SCACCARII. The stat. 51 H. 3. stat. 5. as to Distresses in the Exchequer for the King's debt.

DISTRICT, districtus.] A territory, or place of jurisdiction; the circuit wherein a man may be compelled to appear; also the place in which one hath the power of distraining:

and where we say hors de son fee, out of his fee, it has been used for extra districtum suum. Brit. c. 120.

DISTRINGAS. A writ directed to the Sheriff, or other officer, commanding him to distrain a man for a debt to the King, &c. or for his appearance at a day affixed. There is a great diversity of this writ; which was sometimes of old called constringas. F. N. B. 138. There is also a distringas against Peers and persons entitled to privilege of parliament, under stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 50. by which the effects (in law called the issues) levied may be sold to pay the plaintiff's costs. And it has been held that this statute extends to all writs of distringas. 5 Burr. 2726.—See titles Process; Parliament, (privilege of.) In detinue after judgment, the plaintiff may have a distringas to compel the defendant to deliver the goods, by repeated distresses of his chattels. 1 Ro. Ab. 737. Rast. Entr. 215.—See title Execution.

DISTRINGAS JURATORES. A writ directed to the sheriff, to distrain upon a jury to appear; and return issues on their lands, &c. for non-appearance. Where an issue in fact is joined to be tried by a jury, which is returned by the sheriff in a panel upon a venire facias for that purpose; thereupon there goes forth a writ of distringas jurator' to the sheriff, commanding him to have their bodies in court, &c. at the return of the writ. 1 Lil. Abr. 483. The writ of distringas jur' ought to be delivered to the sheriff so timely, that he may warn the jury to appear four days before the writ is returnable, if the jurors live within forty miles of the place of trial; and eight days if they live farther off. Ibid. 484. There may be an alias, or pluries distringas jur' where the jury doth not appear. See titles Jury, Trial.

DISTRINGAS NUPER VICECOMITEM. See title Venditioni Exponas.

DITTAY. A Scotch word introduced into our statute law since the union of England and Scotland. It is a term of art, and signifies the manner of proceeding against a criminal in the court of justiciary. There is likewise a brief or writ of Dittay, directed from the justice to the sheriff, the form whereof may be seen in Skene de verb. signif. v. Iter. where is shown at large the manner of proceeding by Dittay. Termes de la ley.

DIVEST. See Devest.

DIVIDENDS OF BANKRUPTS EFFECTS. See title Bankrupt.

DIVIDEND IN THE EXCHEQUER. Is taken for one part of an indenture. Stat. 10 Ed. 1. c. 11.

DIVIDEND OF STOCKS. A dividable proportionate share of the interest of stocks erected on public funds; as the Bank, South-Sea, and India stocks, &c. See title Funds.

DIVISA. Hath various significations: sometimes it is used for a device, award, or decree: sometimes for devise of a portion or parcel of lands, &c. by will: and sometimes it is taken for the bounds or limits of division of a parish or farm, &c. as divisas perambulare, to walk the bounds of a parish; in which sense it has been extended to the division between counties, and given name to towns, as to the Devises, a town in Wiltshire, situate on the confines, the Division of the West Saxon and Mercian kingdoms. Leg. H. 2. cap. 9. Leg. Inæ, c. 44. Leg. H. 1. c. 57. Cowel.

DIVORCE, divortium; à divertendo.] The separation of two, de facto married together, made by law: it is a judgment spiritual; and therefore, if there be occasion, it ought to be reversed in the spiritual court. Co. Lit. 335. And, besides sentence of divorce, in the old law, the woman divorced was to have of her husband a writing called a bill of divorce, which was to this effect; viz. I promise that hereafter I will lay no claim to thee, &c.—See title Baron and Feme, III. 2. VI. and particularly XI. See also title Marriage.

There are many divorces mentioned in our books; as causâ præcontractûs; causâ frigiditatis; causâ consanguinitatis; causâ affinitatis; causâ professionis, &c. But the usual divorces are only of two kinds, i. e. à mensa & thoro, from bed and board; and à vinculo matrimonii, from the very bond of marriage. A divorce à mensa & thoro dissolveth not the marriage; for the cause of it is subsequent to the marriage, and supposes the marriage to be lawful: this divorce may be by reason of adultery in either of the parties, for cruelty of the husband, &c. And as it doth not dissolve the marriage, so it doth not debar the woman of her dower, or bastardize the issue, or make void any estate for the life of husband and wife, &c. Co. Lit. 235. 3 Inst. 89. 7 Rep. 43. The woman under separation by this divorce must sue by her next friend; and she may sue her husband in her own name for alimony. Wood's Inst. 62.

A divorce à vinculo matrimonii, absolutely dissolves the marriage, and makes it void from the beginning, the causes of it being precedent to the marriage; as præcontract with some other person, consanguinity or affinity, within the Levitical degrees, impotency, impuberty, &c. On this divorce dower is gone; and if, by reason of præcontract, consanguinity, or affinity, the children begotten between them are bastards. Co. Rit. 335. 2 Inst. 93, 687. But in these divorces, the wife, it is said, shall receive all again that she brought with her, because the nullity of the marriage arises through some impediment; and the goods of the wife were given for her advancement in marriage, which now ceaseth; but this is where the goods are not spent; and if the husband give them away during the coverture, without any collusion, it shall bind her: if she knows her goods unspent, she may bring action of detinue for them; and as for money, &c. which cannot be known, she must sue in the spiritual court. Dyer. 62. Nels. Abr. 675. This divorce enables the parties to marry again. But in the other cases, a power for so doing must be obtained by act of parliament.

Where lands were formerly given to husband and wife; and the heirs of their bodies in frank marriage; if they had been afterwards divorced, the wife was to have her whole lands; and by divorce an estate tail of baron and feme, it is said may be extinct. Godb. 18. After a sentence of divorce is given in the spiritual court causa precontractûs, the issue of that marriage shall be bastards, so long as the sentence stands unrepealed: and no proof shall be admitted at Common-law to the contrary. Co. Lit. 235. 1 Nels. 674. In such case issue of a second marriage may inherit until the sentence is repealed. 2 Leon. 207. If after a divorce à mensa et thoro, either of the parties marry again, the other being living, such marriage is a mere nullity; and by sentence to confirm the first contract, she and her first husband become husband and wife to all intents, without any formal divorce from the second. 1 Leon. 173. Also on this divorce, as the marriage continues, marrying again while either party is living, hath been held to be bigamy within the stat. 1 Jac. c. 11.—Cro. Car. 333. 1 Nels. 674.

A divorce for adultery was anciently à vinculo matrimonii; and therefore in the beginning of the reign of Queen Elizabeth the opinion of the church of England was, that after a divorce for adultery, the parties might marry again; but in Foliambe's case H. 44 El. in the star-chamber, that opinion was changed; and archbishop Bancroft, by the advice of divines, held, that adultery was only a cause of divorce à mensa et thoro. 3 Salk. 138.

Sentence of divorce must be given in the life of the parties, and not afterwards: but it may be repealed in the spiritual court, after the death of the parties. Co. Lit. 33. 244. 7 Rep. 44. 5 Rep. 98. Upon the divorce of a man and his wife, equity will not assist the wife in recovering dower, at the husband's death, but shall leave her to the law; neither ought the spiritual court to grant her administration, she not being such a wife as is entitled to it; nor will the Chancery decree her a distributive share. Preced. Canc. 111, 112.

Divorces may be obtained by act of parliament: and for this purpose it is necessary that on the petition for the bill to the House of Lords, (where such bill usually originates) that an official copy of the proceedings, and definitive sentence of divorce à mensâ et thoro, in the Ecclesiastical Courts, at the suit of the petitioner, shall be delivered at the bar on oath.—Upon the second readingof the bill, the petitioner must attend the house to be examined at the bar, if the house think fit, whether there is any collusion respecting the act of adultery, or the divorce, or any action for Crim. Con.; and whether the wife was living apart from her husband under articles of separation. In all divorce bills must be contained a clause prohibiting the offending parties from intermarrying with each other, and evidence must be given, in the committee of the House of Commons, on the bill, that an action for damages has been brought against the seducer, and judgment for the plaintiff had thereon; or a sufficient reason given why such action was not brought, or judgment obtained. See the Standing Orders of the Two Houses.

DIURNALIS. See Daywere.

DOCKET, OR DOGGET. A brief in writing on a small piece of paper or parchment, containing the effect of a greater writing. West. Symbol. par. 2. sect. 106. And when rolls of judgments are brought into C. B. they are docketted, and entered on the docket of that term; so that upon any occasion you may soon find out a judgment, by searching these dockets, if you know the attorney's name. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20.—See title Judgments. Exemplification of decrees in Chancery and Commissions of Bankruptcy, are also docketted.

DOGS. The law takes notice of a greyhound, mastiff dog, spaniel and tumbler; for trover will lie for them. Cro. Eliz. 125. Cro. Jac. 44. A man hath a property in a mastiff; and where a mastiff falls on another dog, the owner of that dog cannot justify the killing the mastiff; unless there was no other way to save his dog, as that he could not take off the mastiff, &c. 1 Saund 84. 3 Salk. 139. The owner of a dog is bound to muzzle him if mischievous, but not otherwise: and if a man doth keep a dog, that useth to bite cattle, &c. if after notice given to him of it, or his knowing the dog is mischievous, the creature shall do any hurt, the master shall answer for it. Cro. Car. 254. 487. Stra. 1264.—See titles Action, Trespass.

By stat. 10 Geo. 3. 18. If any person shall steal any dog or dogs, they shall be liable to forfeit for the first offence from 30 to 20*l.* or be committed to gaol, for from twelve to six months, at the discretion of two justices—for the second offence to forfeit from 50*l.* to 30*l.* or be imprisoned for from eighteen to twelve months, and also whipped.—A punishment perhaps not too severe for notorious dog-stealers; but which may afford a dangerous handle for oppression: and Burn, title Dogs, seems seriously to doubt whether the statute extends to Bitches—a question that we believe has never yet been argued in a court of law.

A magistrate who convicts an unqualified person of killing game, and causes his dog to be brought for the purpose of seizing it, may order the dog to be killed, without any formal adjudication of seizure. 5 W. P. Taunton, 416.

Dogs now form one among the many articles, for keeping of which a tax is levied on the possessor. See this Dict. title Taxes.

DOG-DRAW. The manifest deprehension of an offender against venison in a forest, when he is found drawing after a deer by the scent of a hound led in his hand: or where a person hath wounded a deer, or wild beast, by shooting at him, or otherwise, and is caught with a dog drawing after him to receive the same. Manwood, par. 2. cap. 8.—See title Forest.

DOGGER. A light ship or vessel: as a Dutch dogger, &c. Stat. 31 Ed. 3. cap. 1. and Dogger fish, are fish brought in those ships. Stat. ibid.

DOGGER-MEN. Fishermen that belong to dogger-ships. 25 H. 8. c. 2.

DOITKIN, or Doit. Was a base coin of small value, prohibited by the stat. 3 H. 5. c. 1. We still retain the phrase, in common saying, when we would undervalue a man, that he is not worth a doit. See title Coin.

DO LAW, facere legem.] Is the same with to make law. Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 14.

DOLE, dola.] A Saxon word signifying as much as pars or portio in the Latin: and anciently where a meadow was divided into several shares, it was called a dole meadow. 4 Jac. 1. c. 11. See Dalus.

DOLEFISH. Seems to be the share of fish, which the fishermen, yearly employed in the North seas, do customarily receive for their allowance. Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 7.

DOLG-BOTE, Sax.] A recompence or amends, for a scar or wound. Sax. Dic. LL. Aluredi Reg. cap. 22.

DOLLAR. A piece of foreign coin, passing for about 4*s.* 6*d.* Lex Mercat. and see Foreign Coin.

DOM-BEC OR DOM-BOC, Sax. See Dome-book.

DOME, OR DOOM, from the Sax. dom.] A judgment, sentence, or decree. And several words end in dom: as kingdom, earldom, &c. from whence they may be applied to the jurisdiction of a lord, or a king. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. fol. 284.

DOME-BOOK, Liber judicialis.] A book composed under the direction of Alfred, for the general use of the whole kingdom, containing the local customs of the several provinces of the kingdom. This book is said to have been extant so late as the reign of Ed. IV; but it is now lost. It probably contained the principal maxims of the common law, the penalties for misdemeanors and the forms of judicial proceedings. Thus much at least may be collected from the injunction to observe it which is found in the laws of Edward the Elder, son of Alfred, c. 1. See also Leg. Inæ. c. 29. and Spelm. in verb. Dombec. This book was compiled by Alfred for the use of the Court Baron, Hundred and County Court, the Court Leet and Sheriff's tourn. See 1 Comm. 64. 4 Comm. 411. See post Domesday.

DOMESDAY OR DOMESDAY-BOOK: Liber judiciarius, vel censualis Angliæ.] A most ancient record, made in the time of William I. called the Conqueror, and now remaining in the Exchequer fair and legible, consisting of two volumes, a greater and a less; the greater containing a survey of all the lands in England, except the counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmoreland, Durham, and part of Lancashire, which it is said were never surveyed; and excepting Essex, Suffolk, and Norfolk; which three last are comprehended in the lesser volume. There is also a third book, which differs from the others in form more than matter, made by the command of the same king. And there is a fourth book kept in the Exchequer which is called Domesday; and, though a very large volume, is only an abridgment of the others. Likewise a fifth book is kept in the Remembrancer's office in the Exchequer, which has the name of Domesday, and is the very same with the fourth before mentioned. Our ancestors had many dome-books. King Alfred had a roll which he called Domesday; and the Domesday book made by Will. I. referred to the time of Edward the Confessor, as that of King Alfred did to the time of Ethelred; see ante, Dome-book. The fourth book of Domesday having many pictures, and gilt letters in the beginning, relating to the time of King Edward the Confessor, this led him who made notes on Fitzherbert's Register into a mistake in p. 14. where he tells us that liber Domesday factus fuit tempore regis Edwardi.

The book of Domesday was begun by five justices, assigned for that purpose in each county, in the year 1081, and finished anno 1086. And the question whether lands are antient demesne, or not, is to be decided by the Domesday of Will. I. from whence there is no appeal: and it is a book of that authority, that even the Conqueror himself submitted some cases, wherein he was concerned, to be determined by it. The addition of day to this Dome-book was not meant with any allusion to the final day of judgment, as most persons have conceived; but was to strengthen and confirm it, and signifieth the judicial decisive record or book of dooming judgment and justice. Hammond's Annot'. Camden calls this book Gulielmi Librum Censualem, the Tax-book of King William; and it was further called Magna Rolla Winton. See the printed copy of Domesday-book, pag. 332. (b.) There is an ancient roll in Chester-castle, called Domesday-roll. Blount. At York, Worcester, and other Cathedrals their registers or chartularies are called Domesday-books. A transcript of the Domesday-book of W. I. has been made, and printed and published, by which the access to it is rendered more familiar to our antiquaries and historians. See Spelm. in verb. Domesdei, and this Dict. title Tenures, II. 1.

DOMES-MEN. Judges or men appointed to doom, and determine suits and controversies, hence æg deme, I deem, or judge. Suitors in a Court of a manor of Ancient Demesne, who are Judges there. Vide Days men.

DOMICELLUS. An obsolete Latin word, anciently given as an appellation or addition to the King's natural sons in France, and sometimes to the eldest sons of noblemen there; from whence we borrowed these additions: as several natural children of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, are stiled domicelli by the charter of legitimation. 20 R. 2. But according to Thorn, the domicelli were only the better sorts of servants in monasteries.

DOMICILE. The place where a man has his home. See title Alien. Personal property follows the person of the owner, and on his decease must be distributed according to the law of the county in which he was domiciled at the time of his death, and not according to the law of the county where such property is situate. Bruce v. Bruce, Cases in Parliam. 2 Bos. & Pul. 229. See title Executor.

The residence of a party for forty days constitutes a domicile as to jurisdiction in Scotland.—When there are two houses, which appear equally intitled to the appellation of domicile, the person is liable to both jurisdictions; but a person may have no domicile, as a soldier or travelling merchant, in which case a personal citation renders him subject to the jurisdiction of the judge within whose jurisdiction he is cited. Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

DOMIGERIUM. Is sometimes used to signify danger; but otherwise, and perhaps more properly, it is taken for power over another; sub domigerio alicujus vel manu esse. Bract. lib. 4. tract. 1. cap. 10.

DOMINA. A title given to honourable women, who anciently in their own right of inheritance held a barony. Paroch. Antiq.

DOMINANT TENEMENT. A term used in the Scotch law in the constitution of servitudes, and means the Tenement or subject in favour of which the service is constituted; as the tenement over which the servitude extends is called the servient tenement. Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

DOMINICA IN RAMIS PALMARUM, Palm Sunday.

DOMINIUM. Right or power. Paroch. Antiq. 498.

DOMINIUM DIRECTUM, and DOMINIUM UTILE, are terms by which the rights of the superior and vassal are distinguished in the Scotch Law. The right of superiority is termed the dominium directum, as being the highest and most ancient of the two. The vassal's right is termed the dominium utile, because under it he enjoys the whole fruits and produce of the estate.

DOMINUS. This word prefixed to a man's name, in ancient times usually denoted him a knight, or a clergyman; and sometimes a gentleman, not a knight, especially a lord of a manor.

DOMINUS LITIS in the civil law, an advocate who after the death of his client prosecuted a suit to sentence for the executor's use.

DOMO REPARANDA. Is a writ that lay for one against his neighbour by the fall of whose house he feared a damage and injury to his own. Reg. Orig. 153.

DOMUS CONVERSORUM. An ancient house built or appointed by King Hen. III. for such Jews as were converted to the Christian faith: but, King. Ed. III. who expelled the Jews from this kingdom, deputed the place for the custody of the rolls and records of the Chancery. See Rolls.

DOMUS DEI. The hospital of St. Julian in Southampton, so called. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. 440. A name applied to many hospitals.

DONATIO CAUSA MORTIS. A gift in prospect of death; a death-bed disposition; viz. when a person in his last sickness, apprehending his dissolution near, delivers or causes to be delivered to another the possession of any personal goods, to keep in case of his decease. See titles Legacy, Will.

DONATIVE, donativum.] Is a benefice merely given and disposed of by the patron to a man, without either presentation to, or institution by, the Ordinary, or induction by his order. F. N. B. 35. Donatives are so termed, because they began only by the foundation and erection of the donor. The King might of ancient time found a church or chapel, and exempt it from the jurisdiction of the ordinary; so he may by his letters patent give license to a common person to found such church or chapel, and make it donative, not presentable; and that the incumbent or chaplain shall be deprived by the founder and his heirs, and not by the bishop; which seems to be the original of donatives in England. See 2 Comm. 22. and this Dict. title Advowson.

In the case of a Donative the party is in full possession immediately on the nomination; and may maintain an action for money had and received against any person who receives the profits. 1 Term Rep. K. B. 403.

When the King founds a church, &c. donative, it is of course exempted from the Ordinary's jurisdiction, though no particular exemption is mentioned; and the Lord Chancellor shall visit the same; and where the King grants a licence to any common person to found a church or chapel, it may be donative, and exempted from the jurisdiction of the bishop so as to be visited by the founder, &c. Co. Litt. 134. 2 Rol. Abr. 230. The resignation of a donative must be to the donor or patron, and not to the Ordinary; and donatives are not only free from all ordinary jurisdiction, but the patron and incumbent may charge the glebe to bind the successor: and if the clerk is disturbed, the patron may bring quare impedit, &c. Also the patron of a donative may take the profits thereof when it is vacant. Co. Lit. 344. Cro. Jac. 63.

If the patron of a donative will not nominate a clerk, there can be no lapse: but the bishop may compel such patron to nominate a clerk by ecclesiastical censures; for though the church is exempt from the power of the Ordinary, the patron is not exempted: and the clerk must be qualified like unto other clerks of churches; no person being capable of a donative, unless he be a priest lawfully ordained, &c. Yelv. 61. Stat. 14 Car. 2. cap. 4. 1 Lill. 488.

There may be a donative of the King's gift with cure of souls as the church of the Tower of London is: and if such donative be procured for money, it will be within the statute of simony. Mich. 9 Car. B. R. A parochial church may be donative, and exempt from the Ordinary's jurisdiction. Godolph. 262. The church of St. Mary le Bone in Middlesex, is donative, and the incumbent being cited into the spiritual court, to take a licence from the bishop to preach, pretending that it was a chapel, and that the parson was a stipendiary; it was ruled in the King's Bench that it was a donative; and if the bishop visit, the court of B. R. will grant a prohibition. 1 Mod. 90. 1 Nels. Abr. 676.

If a patron of a donative doth once present his clerk to the Ordinary, and the clerk is admitted, instituted, and inducted, then the donative ceaseth; and it becomes a church presentative. Co. Lit. 344. But when a donative is created by letters patent, by which lands are settled upon the parson and his successors, and he is to come in by the donation of the King, and his successors; in this case, though there may be a presentation to the donative, and the incumbent come in by institution and induction, yet that will not destroy the donative. 2 Salk. 541.

How far the nature of a donative is changed by having been augmented by Queen Anne's bounty, see 1 T. R. K. B. 397.

All bishopricks being of the foundation of the King, they were in ancient time donative. 3 Rep. 75. See title Bishop.

Donatives have two peculiar properties; one, that the presentation does not devolve to the king as in other livings when the incumbent is made a bishop. Ca. Parl. 184.—The other that a donative is within the statute of pluralities, if it is the first living; but if a donative is the second benefice taken without a dispensation, the first would not be void; for the words of the statute are instituted and inducted to any other, which are not applicable to donatives. 1 Wood. 330.—And therefore it seems if donatives are taken last they may be held with any other preferment.

DONIS, Statute de. The statute of West. 2. viz. 13 Ed. 1. c. 1. called the statute de donis conditionalibus. This statute revives, in some sort, the ancient feodal restraints which were originally laid on alienations; by enacting, that from thenceforth the will of the donor be observed, and that the tenements so given (to a man and the heirs of his body) should at all events go to the issue, if there were any, or if none, should revert to the donor. See 2 Comm. 12.; and this Dict. titles Estate, Tail, Limitation.

DONOR AND DONEE. Donor is he who gives lands or tenements to another in tail, &c. And the person to whom given is the donee.

DOOMSDAY. See Domesday.

DORTURE, dormitorium. The common room or chamber, where all the Fryars, or religious of one convent, slept and lay all night. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 11.

DOSSALE. Hangings or tapestry.—Mat. Par.

DOTE ASSIGNANDA. Is a writ that lay for a widow, where it was found by office, that the King's tenant was seised of lands in fee, or fee-tail at the day of his death, and that he held of the King in chief, &c. In which case, the widow came into the Chancery, and there made oath, that she would not marry without the King's leave; whereupon she had this writ to the escheator, to assign her dower, &c. But it was usual to make the assignment of the dower in the Chancery, and to award a writ to the escheator, to deliver the lands assigned unto her. Stat. 15 Ed. 4. cap. 4. Reg. Orig. 297. F. N. B. 26. See title Dower.

DOTE UNDE NIHIL HABET. A writ of dower, that lies for the widow against the tenant, who bought land of her husband in his life-time, whereof he was solely seised in fee-simple or fee-tail, and of which she is dowable. F. N. B. 147.

See the law and form of the writ in Booth's Real Actions 166, &c. See further title Dower.

DOTIS ADMENSURATIONE. Admeasurement of dower, where the widow holds more than her share, &c. See titles Admeasurement, Dower.

DOTKIN. See Doitkin.

DOUBLE AVAIL OF MARRIAGE. Is the double of the value of the vassal's wife's tocher, due to the superior; because he refused a wife equal to him when offered by the superiour; but this is modified to three years rent of the vassal's free estate. Scotch Dict.

DOUBLE PLEA, duplex placitum.] Is where a defendant allegeth for himself two several matters, in bar of the plaintiff's action, when one of them is sufficient; which shall not be admitted: as if a man plead several things, the one not depending upon the other, the plea is accounted double, and will not be allowed; but if they mutually depend on each other, and the party may not have the last plea without the first, then it shall be received. Kitch. 223. And where a double plea that is wrong, is pleaded; if the plaintiff reply thereto, and take issue of one matter; if that be found against him, he cannot afterwards move in arrest of judgment; for by the replication it is allowed to be good. 18 Ed. 4. 17.

If a man pleads two or more matters, when he is compelled to shew them, it makes not the plea double; so it is where two distinct things are pleaded, which require but one answer: and in case a man pleads two several matters or things, and only one is material, the other being surplusage, or but matter of inducement, and needing no answer, the plea is not double. Hob. 197. Where there are several inducements to a plea, they shall not make the plea double: and double pleas are allowable in assises of novel disseisin, &c. but not in other actions. Jenk. Cent. 75.

By stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. sect. 4. It shall be lawful for any defendant or tenant in any action or suit, or for any plaintiff in replevin, in any court of record, with the leave of the same court, to plead as many several matters thereto, as he shall think necessary for his defence. That is, in so many separate and distinct pleas, and where there are more pleas than one. By virtue of this statute defendant is said to plead double, by leave of the court.—See further title Pleading.

DOUBLE QUARREL, duplex querula.] Is a complaint made by any clerk, or other, to the archbishop of the province against an inferior Ordinary, for delaying or refusing to do justice in some cause ecclesiastical; as to give sentence, institute a clerk, &c. and seems to be termed a double quarrel, because it is most commonly made against both the judge, and him at whose suit justice is denied or delayed: the effect whereof is, that the archbishop taking notice of the delay, directs his letters under his authentical seal to all clerks of his province, commanding them to admonish the Ordinary within a certain number of days to do the justice required, or otherwise to appear before him or his official, and there alledge the cause of his delay; and to signify to the Ordinary, that if he neither perform the thing enjoined, nor appear and shew cause against it, he himself in his court of audience, will forthwith proceed to do the justice that is due. Cowel. See Quare Impedit.

DOUBLES, Fr.] Letters patent. St. 14 H. 6. c. 6.

DOVE-COTE. See Pigeon-House.

DOVER CASTLE. The constable of Dover castle shall not hold plea of any foreign county within the castle gates, except it concern the keeping of the castle; nor shall he distrain the inhabitants of the ports, to plead elsewhere or otherwise than as they ought, according to the charters, &c. Stat. 28 Ed. 1. c. 7. See title Cinque Ports.

DOW. To give or endow, from the Latin word Do.

DOWAGER, dotata, dotissa.] A widow endowed; applied to the widows of Princes, Dukes, Earls, and other great personages.

DOWAGER, Queen.] Is the widow of the King, and as such enjoys most of the privileges belonging to her as Queen consort. But it is not high treason to conspire her death, or violate her chastity; because the succession to the crown is not thereby endangered. But no man can marry her, without a special licence from the King, on pain of forfeiting his lands and goods. 2 Inst. 18. See Riley's Plac. Parl. 672. 1 Comm. 223. See title King.

DOWER.

DOTARIUM.] The portion which a widow hath of the lands of her husband at his decease, for the sustenance of herself, and education of her children. 1 Inst. 30. See title Tenure, III. 8.

I. Of the several Kinds of Dower.
II. 1. What Woman shall be endowed; 2. Of what Estate.
III. Of the Assignment and Admeasurement of Dower.
IV. What shall be deemed a Bar and forfeiture of Dower.
V. Of the Proceedings in Dower.

I. There were formerly five kinds of dower in this kingdom. 1. Dower by the Common Law; which is a third part of such lands or tenements whereof the husband was sole seised in fee-simple, or fee-tail, during the coverture; and this the widow is to enjoy during her life.

2. Dower by custom; which is that part of the husband's estate to which the widow is intitled after the death of her husband, by the custom of any manor or place, so long as she lives sole and chaste; and this is more than one third part, for in some places she shall have half the land, as by the custom of gavelkind; and in divers manors the widow shall have the whole during her life, which is called her free bench: but as custom may inlarge, so it may abridge dower to a fourth part. Co. Litt. 33.

3. Dower ad ostium ecclesiæ; at the church-door, made by the husband himself immediately after the marriage, who named such particular lands of which his wife should be endowed; and in ancient time it was taken, that a man could not by this dower, endow his wife of more than a third part, though of less he might: and as the certainty of the land was openly declared by the husband, the wife after his death might enter into the land of which she was endowed without any other assignment. Co. Lit. 34. Lit. § 39.

4. Dower ex assensu patris, which is only a species of the dower ad ostium ecclesiæ; which likewise was of certain lands named by a son who was the husband, without the consent of his father then living, and always put in writing as soon as the son was married: and if a woman thus endowed or ad ostium ecclesiæ, after the death of her husband, entered into the land allotted her in dower, and agreed thereto, she was concluded to claim any dower by the Common Law, Litt. §§ 40, 41.

5. Dower de la pluis belle; which was where the wife was endowed with the fairest part of her husband's estate.

But of all these kinds of Dower, the two first are now only in use.

II. 1. A Woman to be endowed must be the actual wife of the party at the time of his decease. If she be divorced à vinculo matrimonii, she shall not be endowed; for ubi nullum matrimonium, ibi nulla dos. Bract. lib. 2. c. 39. § 4.

But a divorce à mensa et thoro only, doth not destroy the dower; Co. Litt. 32; no, not even for adultery itself by the Common Law. By stat. West. 2. (13 Ed. 1. c. 34.) if a woman voluntarily leaves (which the law calls eloping from) her husband, and lives with an adulterer, she shall lose her dower, unless her husband be voluntarily reconciled to her. And in a case where John de Camoys had assigned his wife by deed, it was decided in parliament, that, notwithstanding the pretended purgation of the adultery in the spiritual court, the wife was not entitled to dower. 2 Inst. 435. If however, after the elopement of a wife, her husband and she demean themselves as husband and wife, it is evidence of reconciliation. Dyer, 106. Lady Powys's case where the reconciliation was specially pleaded and allowed.

A marriage celebrated bona fide in Scotland, will undoubtedly entitle the woman to dower in England: and the lawfulness of such a marriage may be tried by a Jury in England. 2 H. Blackst. 145.

It was formerly held, that the wife of an ideot might be endowed, though the husband of an ideot could not be tenant by the curtesy. Co. Litt. 31. But as it seems to be at present agreed, upon principles of sound sense, and reason, that an ideot cannot marry, being incapable of consenting to any contract, this doctrine cannot now take place. By the ancient law the wife of a person attainted of treason or felony could not be endowed; to the intent, says Staundford, (P. C. b. 3. c. 3.) that if the love of a man's own life cannot restrain him from such atrocious acts, the love of his wife and children may: though Britton, (c. 110.) gives it another turn; viz. that it is presumed the wife was privy to her husband's crime. However the stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. abated the rigour of the Common Law in this particular, and allowed the wife her dower. But a subsequent stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 11. revived the severity against the widows of traitors, who are now barred of their dower; (except in the case of certain treasons relating merely to the coin; stats. 5 Eliz. c. 11. 18 Eliz. c. 1. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 26. 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 28.) but the widows of felons are not barred. The wife must be above nine years old at her husband's death, otherwise she shall not be endowed. Litt. § 36. See 2 Comm. 130.

The wife of a man who is banished shall have dower in his life-time; it is held otherwise, if he is professed in religion: and a jointress of a banished husband shall enjoy her jointure, in his life. Co. Litt. 133. Perk. 5. 307.

If a woman be of the age of nine years, at the death of her husband she shall be endowed of whatsoever age he is; because after the death of the husband the marriage is adjudged lawful. Co. Litt. 33.

The wife of a felo de se shall have dower. Plowd. 261. a. 262. a. So if the husband be outlawed in trespass, or any civil action, for this works no corruption of blood, or forfeiture of lands. Bro. 82. Perk. 388. Co. Lit. 31. a.

If a woman being a lunatick kill her husband, or any other, yet she shall be endowed, because this cannot be felony in her who was deprived of her understanding by the act of God; so though she be of sound mind, and refused to bring an appeal of his death, when he is killed by another, yet she shall be endowed; for this is only a waver of that privilege the law has given her to be avenged of her husband's murderer; so it seems if she refuses to visit and assist her husband in his sickness, yet she shall be endowed, for this is only undutifulness, which the law does not punish with the loss of her entire subsistence. Perk. 364, 365.

If a man take an alien to wife and dieth, she shall not be endowed, except the wife of the King, who shall be endowed by the law of the crown.—And if a Jew born in England marry a Jewess also born here, the husband becomes a christian, purchases lands and dies.—The wife, (not being also a christian) shall not have dower. 1 Inst. 31 b; 32 a.

In the notes on Mr. Hargrave's edition of Co. Litt. the latter part of the above is confirmed; as to the former there is the following remarkable note. "Anciently a woman alien was not dowable; but by special act of parliament not printed. Rot. Parl. 8 H. 5. n. 15. all women aliens who from thenceforth should be married to English men by licence of the King, are enabled to demand their Dower after the death of their husbands, to whom they should in time to come be married, in the same manner as English women. But this act did not extend to those married before; and therefore in Rot. Parl. 9 H. 5. n. 9. there is a special act of parliament to enable Beatrice countess of Arundel, born in Portugal, to demand her Dower. Hal. MSS: see Acc. 1 Ro. Ab. 675."—See also 9 Vin. 210. (8vo. ed.)

2. A Woman is now by law entitled to be endowed of all lands and tenements, of which her husband was seised in fee-simple, or fee-tail general at any time during the coverture; and of which any issue, which she might have had, might, by possibility, have been heir. Litt. § 36. 53. Therefore if a man, seised in fee-simple, has a son by his first wife, and afterwards marries a second wife, she shall be endowed of his lands; for her issue might by possibility have been heir, on the death of the son, by the former wife. But, if there be a donee in special tail, who holds lands to him and the heirs of his body begotten on A. his wife; though A. may be endowed of these lands, yet if A. dies, and he marries a second wife, that second wife shall never be endowed of the lands entailed; for no issue that she could have, could, by any possibility, inherit them. Ibid. § 53.

But in case land be given to the husband and wife in tail, the remainder in tail to the husband, and the first wife dying without issue, he marries another wife; this second wife will be entitled to dower after his death. Lit. § 53. 40 Ed. 3. 4. 2 Shep. Abr. 63. For here he hath an estate in tail. The wife of a tenant in common, but not a joint-tenant, shall have dower; and she shall hold her part in common with the tenants in common. Kitch. 160.

A seisin in law of the husband will be as effectual as a seisin in deed, in order to render the wife dowable; for it is not in the wife's power to bring the husband's title to an actual seisin, as it is in the husband's power to do with regard to the wife's lands; which is one reason why he shall not be a tenant by the curtesy, but of such lands whereof the wife, or he himself in her right, was actually seised in deed. Co. Litt. 31.—The seisin of the husband, for a transitory instant only, when the same act which gives him the estate conveys it also out of him again, (as where by a fine land is granted to a man, and he immediately renders it back by the same fine,) will not entitle the wife to dower. Cro. Jac. 615. 2 Rep. 67. Co. Litt. 31. for the land was merely in transitu, and never vested in the husband, the grant and render being one continued act. But, if the land abide in him for the interval of but one single moment, it seems that the wife shall be endowed thereof. And, in short, a widow may be endowed of all her husband's lands, tenements, and hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, under the restrictions beforementioned; unless there be some special reason to the contrary.

Thus, a woman shall not be endowed of a castle, built for defence of the realm. Co. Litt. 31. 5. 3 Lev. 401. Nor of a common without stint; for, as the heir would then have one portion of this common, and the widow another, and both without stint, the common would be doubly stocked. Co. Lit. 32. 1 Jon. 315. Copyhold estates are also not liable to dower, being only estates at the lord's will; unless by the special custom of the manor, in which case it is usually called the widow's free-bench. 4 Rep. 22. See title Copyhold. But where dower is allowable, it matters not though the husband alien the lands during the coverture; for he aliens them liable to dower. Co. Litt. 32.

It is now settled that although the husband may be tenant by the curtesy of a trust estate of inheritance, (see title Curtesy,) the wife is not entitled to dower out of such an estate. 3 P. Wms. 229.—The reason assigned for this is, that the wife was not endowed of a use at Common Law.—And, from analogy to trusts, it has been determined that a wife shall not be endowed of an equity of redemption, where the estate was mortgaged in fee by the husband previous to the marriage. 1 Bro. C. R. 326.

If lands are exchanged by the husband for other lands, the wife may be endowed of which lands she will, as the husband was seised of both; though she may not be endowed of the lands given and taken in exchange. Co. Lit. 31.

Where the estate, which the husband hath during the marriage, is ended, there the wife shall lose her dower. New Nat. Br. 333. But of an estate-tail in lands determined, a woman shall be endowed; in like manner as a man may be tenant by the curtesy of her lands. Co. Lit. 31. And if a wife be endowed of her third part, and afterwards evicted by an elder title, she shall have a new writ of dower, and be endowed of the other lands. 2 Danv. Abr. 670. Though this is, where it is the immediate estate descended to the heir; and not when it is the estate of an alienee. 9 Rep. 17. The wife is dowable where lands are recovered against the husband by default or covin: and a woman, deforced of her dower, shall recover damages, viz. the value of her dower from her husband's death. 13 E. 1. 20 H. 3. If the husband doth not die seised, after demand and refusal to assign dower to her, she shall have damages from the time of the refusal. Jenk. Cent. 45. She shall be endowed of a reversion, expectant on a term of years; and of a rent reserved thereon. Lutw. 729. If the husband hath only an estate for life, remainder to another in tail, though the remainder over is to his heirs, the wife shall not be endowed. 2 Danv. 656. A woman shall not be endowed of the goods of her husband; nor of a castle, or capital messuage: but of all other lands and tenements she may. Co. Litt. 35.

A grantee of a rent in fee or tail dies without heir, his wife shall be endowed: but not where the rent arises upon a reservation to the donor and his heirs, on a gift in tail, and the donee dies without issue; for this is a collateral limitation. Plowd. 156. F. N. B. 149. If, during the coverture, the husband doth extinguish rents by release, &c. yet she shall be endowed of them; for, as to her dower in the eye of the law, they have continuance. Co. Lit. 32. And where a rent is descended to the husband, but he dies before any day of payment; notwithstanding, the wife shall be endowed of it. 1 H. 7. 17. If lands are given to the husband and wife in tail, and, after the death of the husband, the wife disagrees, she may recover her dower; for, by her waiving her estate, her husband, in judgment of law, was sole seised ab initio. 3 Rep. 27. If lands are improved, the wife is to have one third according to the improved value. Co. Lit. 32. And if the ground delivered her be sowed, she shall have the corn. 2 Inst. 81.

Dower is an inseparable incident to an estate in tail or fee, and cannot be taken away by condition. If one, seised in fee of lands, make a gift in tail, on condition that the wife shall not have dower, the condition is void. 6 Rep. 41. If tenant in tail die without issue, so that the land reverts to the donor; or in case he covenants to stand seised to uses, and dies, his wife will be endowed: and a devise of land by the husband to his wife by will, is no bar of her dower, but a benevolence. 8 Rep. 34. Yelv. 51. Bro. Dower, 69. See post. IV.

A person grants and conveys land to D. and his heirs, on condition, to re-demise the same back, &c. which afterwards he does, and dies; here D.'s widow may, nevertheless, be endowed. Abr. Cas. 217. A. is tenant in tail of lands, the remainder to B. in tail, remainder to A. in fee; if A. bargains and sells the land to C. and his heirs, the wife of the bargainee shall have dower, determinable upon the death of the tenant in tail. 10 Rep. 96. And if a feoffment be made upon condition to reinfeoff, and the feoffee take a wife, she may have her dower till re-infeoffment, or an entry made for not doing it: and so it is of other defeasible estates. 2 Rep. 59. Perk. § 420. If one be disseised, and after doth marry, if he die before entry, his wife shall not have dower: and where a person recovers land in a real action, and before his entry or execution made he dieth, the wife shall not be endowed of this land. 2 Rep. 56. Perk. 377. In these cases the husband was not actually seised, sed qu? for, as before observed, where there is a seisin in law, she shall be endowed. Co. Lit. 31, 32, &c. So that these cases depend on the construction of what is, and what is not, a seisin in law. And see post. Div. IV. towards the end, and Perk. 379, 380.

Although of copyhold lands a woman shall not be endowed, unless there be a special custom for it, yet if there be a custom to be endowed thereof, then she shall have the assistance of such laws as are made for the more speedy recovery of dower in general, being within the same mischief, and therefore shall recover damages within the statute of Merton. 4 Co. 22. Hob. 216. 5 Co. 116.

Of tithes women were not dowable till 32 H. 8. c. 7. for before that statute tithes were not a lay fee, but now they are dowable of them. Style's P. R. 122. 11 Co. 25. Co. Lit. 32 a. 159 a. 1 Rol. Abr. 682.

Of an advowson, be it appendant or in gross, a woman shall be endowed; for this may be divided as to the fruit and profit of it, viz. to have the third presentation. See Perk. 343, 344. F. N. B. 148. 150. Co. Lit. 32. Cro. Jac. 621. Cro. Eliz. 360. 1 Rol. Abr. 683. Co. Lit. 379. 3 Leon. 155. Cro. Jac. 691.

Dower is due of mines wrought during the coverture, whether by the husband or lessee for years, whether paying pecuniary rents or rents in kind, and whether the mines are under the husband's own land, or have been absolutely granted to him to take the whole stratum in the land of others. Stoughton v. Leigh.—And such dower shall be assigned by metes and bounds, if practicable, otherwise either by a proportion of the profits or separate alternate enjoyment of the whole for short proportionate periods. 1 W. P. Taunton, 142. 402.

III. By the old law, grounded on the feodal exactions, a woman could not be endowed without a fine paid to the lord: neither could she marry again without his licence; lest she should contract herself, and so convey part of the feud to the lord's enemy. Mirr. c. 1. § 3. This licence the lord took care to be well paid for; and, as it seems, would sometimes force the dowager to a second marriage, in order to gain the fine. But, to remedy these oppressions, it was provided, first, by the famous charter of Henry I. A. D. 1101. and afterwards by Magna Charta, c. 7. that the widow shall pay nothing for her marriage, nor shall be distrained to marry afresh if she chooses to live without a husband; but shall not, however, marry against the consent of the lord: and farther, that nothing shall be taken for assignment of the widow's dower, but that she shall remain in her husband's capital mansion-house for forty days after his death, during which time her dower shall be assigned. These forty days are called the widow's quarantine; a term made use of in law to signify the number of forty days, whether applied to this occasion or any other. The particular lands to be held in dower, must be assigned, by the heir of the husband, or his guardian; Co. Litt. 34, 5. not only for the sake of notoriety, but also to entitle the lord of the fee to demand his services of the heir, in respect of the lands so holden. For the heir, by this entry, becomes tenant thereof to the lord, and the widow is immediate tenant to the heir, by a kind of sub-infeudation, or under-tenancy, completed by this investiture or assignment: which tenure may still be created, notwithstanding the statute of quia emptores, because the heir parts, not with the fee-simple, but only with an estate for life. If the heir or his guardian do not assign her dower within the time of quarantine, or do assign it unfairly, she has her remedy at law, and the sheriff is appointed to assign it. Co. Lit. 34, 5. Or if the heir (being under age) or his guardian assign more than she ought to have, it may be afterwards remedied by a writ of admeasurement of dower. F. N. B. 148. Finch L. 314. st. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 2. c. 7. If the thing of which she is endowed be divisible, her dower must be set out by metes and bounds; but if it be indivisible, she must be endowed specially; as of the third presentation to a church, the third toll-dish of a mill, the third part of the profits of an office, the third sheaf of tithe, and the like. Co. Lit. 32.

The assignment of the lands is for the life of the woman: and if lands are assigned to a woman for years, in recompense of dower, this is no bar of dower; for it is not such an estate therein as she should have. 2 Danv. Abr. 668. Also where other land is assigned to the woman, that is no part of the lands wherein she claims dower; that assignment will not be good or binding: And there must be certainty in what is assigned, otherwise, though it be by agreement, it may be void. 4 Rep. 2. 1 Inst. 34. If a wife accept and enter upon less land than the third of the whole, on the sheriff's assignment, she is barred to demand more, Moor 679. But if where a wife is entitled to dower of the lands of her first husband, her second husband accepts of this dower less than her third part, after his death she may refuse the same, and have her full third part. Fitz. Dower, 121.

If a wife, having right of dower in the land, accept of a lease for years thereof after the death of her husband, it suspends the dower; though not such acceptance of a lease before the husband's death, &c. for then the wife has only a title to have dower, and not an immediate right of dower. Bro. Ca. 372. Jenk. Cent. 15. A widow accepting of dower of the heir, against common right, shall hold it subject to the charges of her husband; but otherwise it is if she be endowed against common right by the sheriff. 2 Danv. 672. By provision of law, the wife may take a third part of the husband's lands, and hold them discharged. Ibid. If dower be assigned a woman on condition, or with an exception, the condition and exception are void. Cro. Eliz. 541.

Where there are three manors, one of them may be assigned to the wife in dower in lieu of dower in all three; though it is said that a third part of every manor ought to be assigned. Moor, 12, 47. The sheriff may asssign a rent out of the land in lieu of dower; and her acceptance of the rent will bar dower out of the same land, but not of other lands. 2 And. 31. Dyer, 91. 1 Nels. Abr. 680.

A woman intitled to dower cannot enter till it be assigned to her, and set out either by the heir, tertenant or sheriff, in certainty. 1 Rol. Abr. 681. Dyer, 343. Plowd. 529. Bro. 16. Co. Lit. 34 b. 37 a. b.

None can assign dower but those who have a freehold, or against whom a writ of dower lies; therefore a tenant by statute merchant, statute staple, or elegit, or lessee for years cannot assign dower, for none of these have an estate large enough to answer the plaintiff's demand. Perk. 403, 404. Co. Lit. 35. Bro. 63. 94. 1 Rol. Abr. 681. 6 Co. 57.

If a woman be dowable of land, meadow, pasture, wood, &c. and any of these be assigned in lieu of dower of all the rest, it is good, though it be against common right, which gives her but the third part of each, for the heir's enjoyment of the residue sufficiently accounts for her title to what she has. 1 Rol. Abr. 683. Moor, pl. 47. 66.

If lands whereof a woman hath no right to be endowed, or a rent out of such lands be assigned in lieu of her dower, this does not bar her demand of dower, for she having no manner of title to those lands, cannot without livery and seisin be any more than tenant at will, which is no sufficient recompence for an estate for life, which her dower was to be. Perk. 407. Co. Lit. 34. 4 Co. 1. Co. Lit. 169. Bro. 3.

If the heir within age assign to the wife more land in dower than she ought to have, he himself shall have a writ of admeasurement of dower at full age by the Common Law: so if too much be assigned in dower by the heir within age, or his guardian in chivalry, and the heir dies, his heir shall have such writ, to rectify the assignment; but the heir, in whose time the assignment of too much was by the guardian, cannot have such writ till his full age, because till then the interest of the guardian continues; and if any wrong be done, it is to the guardian himself, and not to the heir; if a disseisor assigns too much, the heir of the disseisee shall have admea- surement by the Common Law. F. N. B. 148. 332. Co. Lit. 39 a. 2 Inst. 367. 7 H. 2. 4. See Statutes 13 E. 1. c. 7 & 8.

If the heir within age, before the guardian enters, assigns too much in dower, the guardian shall have a writ of admeasurement of dower, by the statute of W. 2. c. 7. before which statute the guardian had no remedy because the writ of admeasurement being a real action, lay not for the guardian, who had but a chattel; also by the same statute it is provided, that if the guardian pursue such writ seintly, or by collusion with the wife, the heir at full age shall have a writ of admeasurement, and may alledge the feint pleading or collusion generally. 2 Inst. 367.

If the wife after assignment of dower improves the lands, so as thereby they become of greater value than the other two parts, no writ of admeasurement lies; so if they be of greater value, by reason of mines open at the time of the assignment, no writ of admeasurement lies, because the land in quantity was no more than she ought to have; and then it is lawful to work the mines, which were open at the time of such assignment. F. N. B. 149. 2 Inst. 368. 5 Co. 12.

IV. Upon preconcerted marriages, and in estates of considerable consequence, tenancy in dower happens very seldom: for the claim of the wife to her dower at the Common Law, diffusing itself so extensively, it became a great clog to alienations, and was otherwise very inconvenient to families. Wherefore since the alteration of the ancient law respecting dower ad ostium ecclesiæ, which hath occasioned the entire disuse of that species of dower, jointures have been introduced in their stead, as a bar to the claim at Common Law.

A widow may be barred of her dower, not only by elopement, divorce, being an alien, the treason of her husband, and other disabilities before-mentioned, (see ante II.) but also by detaining the title deeds, or evidences of the estate from the heir, until she restores them. Ibid. 39. Though if she denies the detainer, and it is found against her, she loses her dower. Hob. 199. 9 Rep. 19. By the stat. of Gloucester, 6 Ed. 1. c. 7. if a dowager aliens the land assigned her for dower, she forfeits it ipso facto, and the heir may recover it by action. A woman also may be barred of her dower, by levying a fine with her husband, or suffering a recovery of the lands during her coverture. Pig. of Recov. 66. 2 Rep. 74. Plowd. 514.—See title Fine and Recovery.

But the most usual method of barring dower, is by jointures, as regulated by the stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 10.

A jointure, which, strictly speaking, signifies a joint-estate, limited to both husband and wife, but in common acceptation extends also to a sole estate, limited to the wife only, is thus defined by Coke, 1 Inst. 36. "A competent livelihood of freehold for the wife, of lands and tenements; to take effect, in profit or possession, presently after the death of the husband; for the life of the wife at least." This description is framed from the stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 10. commonly called the statute of Uses. (See title Uses.)—Before the making of that statute, the greatest part of the land in England was conveyed to uses; the property or possession of the soil being vested in one man, and the use, and profits thereof, in another; whose directions, with regard to the disposition thereof, the former was in conscience obliged to follow, and might be compelled by a court of equity to observe. Now, though a husband had the use of lands in absolute fee simple, yet the wife was not entitled to any dower therein; he not being seised thereof: wherefore it became usual, on marriage, to settle by express deed some special estate to the use of the husband and his wife, for their lives, in joint-tenancy, or jointure; which settlement would be a provision for the wife, in case she survived her husband. At length the statute of uses ordained, that such as had the use of lands, should, to all intents and purposes, be reputed and taken to be absolutely seised and possessed of the soil itself. In consequence of which legal seisin, all wives would have become dowable of such lands as were held to the use of their husbands, and also entitled at the same time to any special lands that might be settled in jointure: had not the same statute provided, that upon making such an estate in jointure to the wife before marriage, she shall be for ever precluded from her dower. 4 Rep. 1, 2.

But in this case, these four requisites must be punctually observed.—1. The jointure must take effect immediately on the death of the husband: 4 Co. 3.—2. It must be for the life of the wife herself at least, and not pur auter vie, or for any term of years, or other smaller estate.—3. It must be made to herself, and no other in trust for her. 1 Inst. 36 b.—4. It must be made in satisfaction of her whole dower, and not of any particular part of it, and must be so expressed to be in the deed; or it may be averred to be so. 1 Inst. 36 b. 4 Rep. 3. Ow. 33. Cro. Eliz. 128. Dy. 220. 2 Vent. 340. 1 Ch. Ca. 181.

If the jointure be made to her after marriage, she has her election after her husband's death as in dower ad ostium ecclesiæ, and may either accept it, or refuse it, and betake herself to her dower at Common Law, for she was not capable of consenting to it during coverture. (See title Jointure.)

So where a devise is expressed to be given in lieu and satisfaction of dower, or where that is the clear and manifest intention of the testator, the wife shall not have both, but shall have her choice. 1 Inst. 36 b. in n.

If, by any fraud, or accident, a jointure made before marriage proves to be on a bad title, and the jointress is evicted, or turned out of possession, she shall then, (by the provisions of the same stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10.) have her dower pro tanto at the Common Law. 2 Comm. 138. c. 8.

If a woman who is under age at the time of marriage, agrees to a jointure and settlement in bar of her dower, and of her distributive share of her husband's personal property, in case he dies intestate; she cannot afterwards waive it; but is as much bound as if she were of age at the time of the marriage. Drury v. Drury, (or Buckingham E. v. Drury) 3 Bro. P. C. (8vo. ed.) 492. (See title Jointure.)

There are some advantages attending tenants in dower that do not extend to jointresses; and so vice versâ, jointresses are in some respects more privileged than tenants in dower. Tenant in dower by the old Common Law, is subject to no tolls or taxes; and hers is almost the only estate on which, when derived from the King's debtor, the King cannot distrain for his debt; if contracted during the coverture. Co. Lit. 31 a. F. N. B. 150. But on the other hand, a widow may enter at once, without any formal process, on her jointure land, as she also might have done on dower ad ostium ecclesiæ, which a jointure in many points resembles; and the resemblance was still greater, while that species of dower continued in its primitive state; whereas no small trouble, and a very tedious method of proceeding, is necessary to compel a legal assignment of dower. Co. Lit. 36. And, what is more, though dower be forfeited by the treason of the husband, yet lands settled in jointure remain unimpeached to the widow. 1 Inst. 37. Wherefore Coke very justly gives it the preference, as being more sure and safe to the widow, than even dower ad ostium ecclesiæ, the most eligible species of any. 2 Comm. 135, &c. An additional advantage is, that a jointure is not forfeited by the adultery of the wife as dower; and Chancery will decree against the husband a performance of marriage articles, though he alledges and proves that the wife lives separate from him in adultery. Sidney v. Sidney, 3 P. Wms. 269, &c. and the notes to that case.

Further as to the means by which a woman may be barred of her dower.—Where a woman releases her right to him in reversion, her dower may be extinguished. 8 Rep. 151.

If a woman takes a lease for life of her husband's lands after his death, she shall have no dower, because she cannot demand it against herself; and if she takes a lease for years only, yet she shall not sue to have dower during these years, because it was her own act to suspend the fruit and effect of her dower during that time. Perk. 350. F. N. B. 149. Mo. pl. 403.

If a recovery be had against the husband by collusion, this shall not bar the wife of dower; as if the recovery be by confession, or reddition, which are always understood to be by collusion, the husband always acting and concurring in obtaining of them; but it seems to have been a very great doubt, whether a recovery by default should not be a bar: and the better opinion being that such recovery was a bar at Common Law, therefore the stat. W. 2. cap. 4. was made, which ordains that notwithstanding such recovery by default, &c. pleaded, the tenant shall moreover in bar of the dower shew his right to the tenements recovered; and if it be found that he had no right, then shall the demandant recover her dower notwithstanding such recovery by default against her husband. 2 Inst. 349. Perk. 376.

By stat. W. 2. cap. 4. it appears, that if the recoveror had right, then the wife is barred; therefore if the heir of the disseisor be in by descent, and the disseisee enters upon him, and marries, and the heir of the disseisor recovers by default, or reddition, in a writ of entry, in nature of an assise, and the husband dies, his wife shall not have dower, because he, who recovered, had right to the possession by the descent; aliter, if this disseisin, descent, &c. were after marriage, because the husband was seised before of a rightful estate during the coverture, whereof his wife had title of dower, which cannot be defeated by the disseisin, descent and recovery, which all happened during the coverture. Perk. 379, 380.

If the husband levy a fine with proclamation of his lands, and dies, his wife is bound to make her claim within five years after his death; otherwise she shall be barred of her dower; for though her title of dower was not consummate at the time of the fine levied; yet it being initiate by the marriage and seisin of the husband, the fine begins to work upon it presently after the husband's death; and if she does not claim it within five years after, she shall be barred. 2 Co. 93. 10 Co. 49. 99. 3 Inst. 216. Hob. 265. Mo. pl. 154. 879. Dyer, 224. 13 Co. 20.

V. The wife is, as soon as she can after the decease of her husband, to demand her dower, lest she lose the value from the time of his death: and in action of dower, the first process is summons to appear: and if the tenant or defendant do not appear, nor cast an essoin, a grand cape lies to seize the lands, &c. By stat. 31 Eliz. c. 3. every summons on the land is to be made fourteen days before the return of the writ, and proclamation made at the church door on a Sunday, or else no grand cape to be awarded, but an alias and pluries summons till proclamation. But on the return of the writ of summons, the attorney for the tenant or defendant may enter with the filazer that the tenant appears and prays view, &c. Then a writ of view goes out, whereby the sheriff is to shew the tenant the land in question; upon the return of which writ of view, the tenant's attorney takes a declaration, and puts in a plea; the most general one is, ne unques seizie, &c. viz. that the husband was never seised of any estate, whereof the wife can be endowed; and when issue is joined, you must proceed to trial, as in other actions: upon trial, the jury are to give damages for the mesne profits from the death of the husband (if he die seised), for which execution shall be made out; and then you have a writ to the sheriff to give possession of a third part of the lands. The sheriff may give possession or seisin to the woman by a clod, or by grass growing on the land, or by any beast being thereon. 40 E. 3. Fitz. Dower, 48.—See Impey's Sheriff.

A widow may recover her dower with a cessat executio, in case there be any thing objected, precedent to the title of dower, &c. till that is determined. 1 Nels. 684. 687. 1 Salk. 291. Judgment in dower is to recover a third part of lands and tenements by metes and bounds. A wife may have her writ of dower against an heir, an alienee, a disseisor, &c. or against any one that has power to assign dower; if the lord enters on the land for an escheat, she may bring it against him, but to the King she must sue by petition. 9 Rep. 10. Plowd. 141. Dyer, 263. Co. Lit. 59. This writ was brought against eight persons feoffees of the husband after marriage, two confessed the action, and the other six pleaded to issue; here the demandant had judgment to recover the third part of two parts of the land, in eight parts to be divided: and, after the issue being found for the demandant against the other six, she recovered against them the third part of the six parts of the same land as her dower. Dyer, 187. Co. Lit. 32.

At the Common Law, before the stat. of W. 1. c. 49. if a woman had accepted any part of her Dower, though never so small, of any one tenant in any one county or town, she had no other remedy for the residue, but by a writ of right of dower; for if she brought a writ of dower, unde nihil habet, it was a good plea in abatement, that she had accepted such a part of such a tenant, in such a town or county; which being a great mischief to the woman is remedied by that statute, which provides that it shall be no plea in abatement, to say that she hath received part of her dower of any other person before the writ purchased; and this extends as well to guardian in chivalry as to the tenant of the land, because such guardian is to render her dower. 2 Inst. 261.

In case of deforcement of dower, by not assigning any dower to the widow within the time limited by law, she has her remedy by writ of dower unde nihil habet. F. N. B. 147. But if she be deforced of part only of her dower, she cannot then say that nihil habet; and therefore she may have recourse to another action by writ of right of dower: which is a more general remedy, extending either to part or the whole; and is (with regard to her claim) of the same nature as the grand writ of right is with regard to claims in fee-simple. On the other hand, if the heir (being within age) or his guardian assign her more than she ought to have, this may be remedied by a writ of admeasurement of dower. F. N. B. 16. 148. Finch. L. 314. Stat. Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 7.

As to damages in dower, they are given by the stat. of Merton, c. 1. but that statute extends only to the possessory action of dower unde nihil habeat, and not to the writ of right of dower, because they are intended to be given for the detention of the possession; and on writs of right, where the right itself is questionable, no damages are given, because no wrong done till the right be determined; also that statute extends only to lands whereof the husband died seized; and therefore judgment for the damages was reversed, because the jury did not find that the husband died seised; for otherwise she shall have no damages: as if the husband aliens and takes back an estate for life, the wife shall recover dower, but no damages; because this dying seised was only of an estate of freehold; but if he makes a lease for years only, rendering rent, she shall recover a third part of the reversion, with a third part of the rent and damages, because there he died seised as the statute speaks. Co. Lit. 32. Dyer, 284. pl. 33. Yelv. 112. Dr. & Stud. lib. 2. c. 13. § 166. 2 Inst. 80.

Damages must be after demand of dower, for the heir is not bound to assign this provision till demanded, because the law casts the freehold of the whole upon him, which he cannot divide without the concurrence of the wife: but a demand in pais before good testimony is sufficient; and if the heir appear the first day on summons, and plead that he hath always been ready, and still is, to render her dower, she may plead such request, and issue may be taken upon it; but the feoffee of the heir cannot plead tout temps prist, because he had not the land all the time since the death of the ancestor, and therefore she shall recover the mesne profits, and damages against him; and if he hath not provided his indemnity and recompense against the heir, it is his own folly. Co. Lit. 32.

If the heir or feoffee assign dower, and the wife accepteth thereof, she loses her damages, because having the dower, which is the principal, she cannot sue for the damages, which are but consequential or accessory. Co. Lit. 33 a.

Damages are given in dower from the death of the husband, and to the return of the writ of inquiry, though the writ of seisin issued a year before, but was not executed. Hardw. 19. &c. Where there are two joint-tenants in dower, and one dies after judgment for damages, and his heir and the other joint-tenant bring error, the value from the time of the judgment to the affirmance cannot be recovered against the surviving plaintiff in error only. Id. 50.—See 2 Stra. 271. On a writ of dower damages cannot be awarded by 16 Car. 2. without speeding a writ of inquiry. Hardw. 51.

DOWL AND DEAL. A division: from the Brit. Dal, divisio, from the Sax. dælan. i. e. dividere, and from thence comes the word dealing. So the stones which are laid to the boundaries of lands are called dowle stones, i. e. such as divide the lands. Cowel.

DOWRY, Dos Mulieris.] Was in ancient time applied to that which the wife brings her husband in marriage; otherwise called maritagium, or marriage goods: but these are termed more properly, goods given in marriage, and the marriage portion. Co. Lit. 31. This word is often confounded with Dower; though it hath a different meaning from it.

DRIFT OF THE FOREST, Agitatio animalium in Foresta.] A view or examination of what cattle are in the forest, that it may be known whether it be surcharged or not; and whose the beasts are and whether they are commonable, &c. These drifts are made at certain times in the year by the officers of the forest; when all the cattle of the forest are driven into some pound or place inclosed, for the purposes aforementioned; and to the end it may be discovered, whether any cattle of strangers be there, which ought not to common. Manw. par. 2. c. 15. Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 13. 4 Inst. 309.—See title Forest.

DRINKLEAN, in some records Potura Drinklean.] A contribution of tenants, in the time of the Saxons, towards a potation, or ale, provided to entertain the lord, or his steward.

DROFDENE. Among the Saxons, a grove, or woody place, where cattle were kept; and the keeper of them was called Drofman. Domesday.

DROFLAND, OR DRYFLAND, Saxon.] A tribute or yearly payment made by some tenants to the King, or their landlords, for driving their cattle through a manor to fairs or markets. Cowel.

DROIT, Right. Is the highest writ of all other real writs whatsoever, and hath the greatest respect, and the most assured and final judgment: and therefore is called a writ of right, and in the old books Droit. Co. Lit. 158. There are divers of these writs used in our law, as

DROIT DE ADVOWSON.
DROIT DE DOWER.
DROIT DE GARDE.
DROIT PATENT.
DROIT RATIONABILI PARTE.
DROIT SUR DISCLAIMER.

DROIT DE ENTRIE, Right of Entry, is when one seised of land in fee, is thereof dissesed, he hath right to enter into the land, and may do so when he will, or have a writ of right against the disseisor. Termes de Ley. See Entry.

DROMONES, DROMOS, DROMUNDA. Ships of great burden; men-of-war. Walsing. Anno. 1292.—Mat. Paris, sub. ann. 1191.

DROVERS. Those that buy cattle in one place to sell in another: they are to be married men and householders, and be licensed, by stat. 5 Eliz. c. 12. that part of the statute directing them to be married and householders is now totally disregarded. See title Cattle.

DRUGGERIA. A place of drugs, or drugster's shop.

DRUNKENNESS. Is an offence for which a man may be punished in the Ecclesiastical Court, as well as by justices of peace, by statute.

By stats. 4 Jac. 1. c. 5. 21 Jac. 1. c. 7. if any person shall be convicted of drunkenness by the view of a justice, oath of one witness, &c. he shall forfeit five shillings for the first offence, to be levied by distress and sale of his goods; and, for want of a distress, shall sit in the stocks six hours; and, for the second offence, he is to be bound with two sureties in ten pounds each to be of the good behaviour, or be committed.

Tippling is a species of drukenness. By stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 9. § 2, 3. 21 Jac. 1. c. 7. § 4. 1 C. 1. c. 4. if any innkeeper, victualler, or alehousekeeper, shall suffer any person, (except travellers, and labouring-people at their dinner hour) to continue drinking or tippling in an alehouse, &c. he shall forfeit 10*s.* to the poor, to be recovered by distress, or the party offending to be committed till payment; and disabled to keep an ale-house for three years.

By stats. 4 Jac. 1. c. 5. § 4. 1 Jac. 1. c. 9. 21 Jac. 1. c. 7. 1 C. 1. c. 4. the persons tippling shall forfeit 3*s.* 4*d.* or be set in the stocks for four hours. And an alehousekeeper tippling shall be disabled to keep an ale-house for three years. 7 Jac. 1. c. 10.

See further titles Churchwarden, Constable.

He who is guilty of any crime, through his own voluntary drunkenness, shall be punished for it as if he had been sober. Co. Lit. 247. 1 Hawk. P. C. 3. It has been held that drunkenness is a sufficient cause to remove a magistrate: and the prosecution for this offence, by stat. 4 Jac. 1. c. 5. was to be, and still may be, before justices of peace in their sessions, by way of indictment, &c.

Equity will not relieve against a bond, &c. given by a man when drunk, unless the drunkenness is occasioned through the management or contrivance of him to whom it is given. 3 P. Wil. 130. in n. 1 Inst. 247. Plowd. 19. and this Dict. titles Bond, Fraud, Chancery.

DRY EXCHANGE, Cambium Siccum.] A term invented in former times for the disguising and covering of usury; in which something was pretended to pass on both sides, whereas in truth nothing passed but on one side, in which respect it was called dry. Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 5.—See Cowel.

DRY MULTURES. Quantities of corn paid to a mill, whether the payers grind or not. Scotch Dict.

DUCES TECUM, Bring with thee.] Is a writ commanding a person to appear at a certain day in the Court of Chancery, and to bring with him some writings, evidences, or other things which the court would view. Reg. Orig. So subpœnas duces tecum, are often sued out at Common Law, to compel witnesses to produce, on trials at Nisi prius, deeds, bonds, bills, notes, books, or memorandums, &c. which are in their custody or power, and which relate to the issue in question. But if they are in the possession or power of the adverse party or his attorney, it is customary to give notice to the attorney to produce them, and on proof made in open court, before the judge of Nisi Prius, of such notice, the court generally compels the attorney or his client to produce the same, if material. If not produced, parol evidence may be given of their contents. See titles Evidence, Trial.

DUCES TECUM LICET LANGUIDUS. A writ directed to the sheriff, upon a return that he cannot bring his prisoner without danger of death, he being adeo languidus; then the court grants a habeas corpus in the nature of a duces tecum licet languidus. Book Entr. But this is now out of use; and where the person's life would be endangered by removal, the law will not permit it to be done.

DUCKING-STOOL. See Castigatory.

DUEL, Duellum.] In our ancient law is a fight between persons in a doubtful case for the trial of the truth. Fleta.—See title Battel. But this kind of Duel is disused; and what we now call a Duel is, a fighting between two, upon some quarrel precedent: wherein, if a person is killed, both the principal and his seconds are guilty of murder, and whether the seconds fight or not. H. P. C. 47. 51.

If two persons quarrel over night, and appoint to fight the next day; or quarrel in the morning, and agree to fight in the afternoon; or such a considerable time after, by which it may be presumed the blood was cooled; and then they meet and fight a Duel, and one kill the other, it is murder. 3 Inst. 52. H. P. C. 48. Kel. 56. And whenever it appears, that he who kills another in a Duel, or fighting on a sudden quarrel, was master of his temper at the time, he is guilty of murder; as if, after the quarrel, he fall into another discourse, and talk calmly thereon; or allege that the place where the quarrel happens is not convenient for fighting; or that his shoes are too high if he should fight at present, &c. Kel. 56. 1 Lev. 180.

If one challenge another, who refuses to meet him, but tells him that he shall go the next day to such a place about business, and then the challenger meets him on the road, and assaults the other; if the other, in this case, kill him, it will be only manslaughter; for here is no acceptance of the challenge, or agreement to fight: and if the person challenged refuseth to meet the challenger, but tells him that he wears a sword, and is always ready to defend himself, if then the challenger attack him, and is killed by the other, it is neither murder nor manslaughter, if necessary in his own defence. Kel. 56.

If one kill another in a deliberate duel, under provocation of charges against his character and conduct however grievous, it is Murder in him and his Second: and therefore the bare incitement to fight, though under such provocation, is in itself a very high misdemeanor, though no consequence ensue thereon against the peace. 3 East's Rep. 581.

An endeavour to provoke another to commit the misdemeanor of sending a challenge to fight, is itself a misdemeanor indictable, particularly where such provocation was given by a writing, containing libellous matter, and alleged to have been done with intent to do the party bodily harm, and to break the king's peace: the sending such writing being an act done towards procuring the commission of the misdemeanor meant to be accomplished. 6 East's Rep. 464.

See further titles Murder, Challenge to Fight.

DUES, ecclesiastical, non-payment of. Various dues to the clergy are cognisable in the spiritual court; which makes decrees for their actual payment. Offerings, oblations, and obventions, not exceeding the value of 40*s.* may, by stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 6. be recovered in a summary way before two justices of peace.

DUKE, Lat. Dux, Fr. Duc. à Ducendo.] Signified among the ancient Romans, ductorem exercitûs, such as led their armies; since which they were called duces, and were governors of provinces, &c. In some nations the sovereigns of the country are called by this name; as the Duke of Savoy, &c. In England, the title of Duke is the next dignity to the Prince of Wales: and the first Duke we had in England, was Edward the Black Prince, so famed in our English histories for heroic actions, who was created Duke of Cornwall, in the 11th year of King Ed. III. A. D. 1337. After which, there were more made in such manner as that their titles descended to their posterity. They are created with solemnity, per cincturam gladii, cappæ et circuli aurei, in capite impositionem. Cambd. Brit. p. 166.—See title Peer.

DUM FUIT INFRA ÆTATEM, While he was within age.] A writ whereby one who had made a feoffment of his lands while an infant, when he came of full age, might recover those lands and tenements which were so aliened: and, within age, he might enter into the land, and take it back again, and by his entry, he should be remitted to his ancestor's right. New Nat. Br. 426. If the husband and wife alien the wife's land during the nonage of both of them, the wife, at her full age, after the death of the husband, shall have a writ of dum fuit infra ætatem. M. 14 E. 3. By this writ to the sheriff he shall command A. that he render to B. who is of full age, two messuages and lands, &c. which B. demised to him, while he was within age, as he saith; or into which the said A. hath not entered, but by C. to whom the said B. the same demised; and unless, &c. F. N. B. 477.—See title Infant.

DUM NON FUIT COMPOS MENTIS, While he was not of sound mind.] Is a writ that lay where a man, not of sound memory, aliened any lands or tenements, against the alienee. And he shall allege that he was not of sane memory; but being visited with infirmity, lost his discretion for a time, so as not to be capable of making a grant, &c. New Nat. Br. 449. See titles Disability, Lunatic, and F. N. B. 202.

DUN, Down, which termination is now varied into don. It signifies a mountain or high open place; so that the names of those towns which end in dun, or don, as Ashdon, &c. were either built on hills, or near them in open places. Domesday.

DUNSETTS. Those who dwell on hills or mountains.

DUNUM, Duna. Dunnarium. A down or hill. Chart. MSS.

DUODENA. A jury of twelve men. Walsing. 256.

DUODENA MANU. Twelve witnesses to purge a criminal of an offence. See titles Jurare duodecimâ manu; Wager of Law.

DUPLEX QUERELA. A process ecclesiastical. See Double Quarrel, Quare Impedit.

DUPLICATE. Is used for the second letters-patent, granted by the Lord Chancellor, in a case wherein he had before done the same; which were therefore thought void. Cromp. Jurisd. fol. 215. But it is more commonly a copy or transcript of any deed or writing, account, &c. or a second letter, written and sent to the same party and purpose as a former, or a copy of dispatches, for fear of a miscarriage of the first, or for other reasons. See stat. 4 Car. 2. c. 10. See also titles Insolvent, Pawnbrokers.

DUPLICITY in pleading. This must be avoided, as it begets confusion. Every plea must be simple, entire, connected, and confined to one single point: it must never be entangled with a variety of distinct independent answers to the same matter; which must require as many different replies, and introduce a multitude of issues upon one and the same point. See titles Double Plea, Pleading.

DURANTE ABSENTIA, During absence.] An administration granted when the executor is out of the realm, to continue in force until his return. See this Dict. title Executor.

DURANTE MINORE ÆTATE, During minority.] An infant cannot act as executor until seventeen, during which minority administration is granted. See title Executor.

DURDEN. A thicket of wood in a valley. Cowel.

DURESS, Durities, Constraint.] Whatever is done by man to save either life or limb, is looked upon as done by the highest necessity and compulsion. Therefore, if a man through fear of death or mayhem, is prevailed upon to execute a deed, or do any other legal act, these, though accompanied with all other requisite solemnities, may be afterwards avoided, if forced upon him by a well-grounded apprehension of losing his life, or even his limbs, in case of non-compliance. 2 Inst. 483.—And the same is also a sufficient excuse for the commission of many misdemeanours. The constraint a man is under in these circumstances is called in law Duress; of which there are two sorts, Duress of Imprisonment, where a man actually loses his liberty; and Duress per minas, (by threats,) where the hardship is only threatened and impending. If a man is under Duress of Imprisonment, or illegal restraint of liberty, until he seals a bond or the like, he may allege this Duress, and avoid the extorted bond. But if a man be lawfully imprisoned, and either to procure his discharge, or on any other fair account, seals a bond or deed, this is not by Duress of imprisonment, and he is not at liberty to avoid it. 2 Inst. 482. See this Dict. title Prisoner.

Duress per minas, is either for fear of loss of life, or else for fear of mayhem or loss of limb. And this fear must be upon sufficient reason: non suspicio cujuslibet vani et meticulosi hominis, sed talis qui possit cadere in virum constantem. Bract. l. 2. c. 5.—A fear of battery (or being beaten) though never so well grounded, is no Duress; neither is the fear of having one's house burned, or one's goods taken away and destroyed; because in these cases, should the threat be performed, a man may have satisfaction, by recovering equivalent damages; but no suitable atonement can be made for the loss of life or limb. 2 Inst. 483.—See 1 Comm. 131, 6.

As to criminal cases.—In time of war or rebellion, a man may be justified in doing many treasonable acts by compulsion of the enemy or rebels, which would admit of no excuse in time of peace. 1 Hal. P. C. 50. This however seems only, or at least principally, to hold as to positive crimes, so created by the laws of Society; and which therefore Society may excuse; but not as to natural offences, so declared by the laws of God. Therefore, though a man may be violently assaulted, and hath no other possible means of escaping death but by killing an innocent person: this fear and force shall not acquit him of murder, for he ought rather to die himself than escape by such means. 1 Hal. P. C. 51. But in such a case he is permitted to kill the assailant; for there the law of nature and self-defence have made him his own protector. 4 Comm. 30.—See this Dict. titles Baron and Feme, Felony, Murder, &c.

By the acts 37 G. 3. c. 123. 50 G. 3. c. 102. and 52 G. 3. c. 104. persons compelled to take unlawful oaths are declared not to be justified or excused, unless they declare the same (within 14 days in England, and 10 in Ireland) to some justice of the peace. See Oaths unlawful.

Further as to civil cases.—It has been adjudged, that if a man makes a deed by Duress done to him, by taking of his cattle, though there be no Duress to his person, yet this shall avoid the deed. 2 Danv. Abr. 686. If a person threaten another to make a deed to a third person, it is by Duress, and void; as if such third person had made the threatening. 2 Inst. 482. 3 Inst. 92. 4 Inst. 97. And where a man is imprisoned until he makes a bond at another place; if afterwards he doth it when at large, the bond is by Duress, and void.

If a person be arrested upon an action at the suit of another, and the cause of action is not good, if he make a bond to a stranger, it is not Duress; though if he make it to the plaintiff it is; and, being sued upon the bond, he may plead it was made by Duress; and so avoid it: also the party shall have an action for the false imprisonment itself. 1 Rep. 119. Perk. § 16. Cromp. Jur. 296. 1 Lil. Abr. 491. If the arrest is under colour of legal process, the action must be a special action on the case, not an action of trespass vi et armis.

If one imprisoned make an obligation by Duress, and after he is at large takes a defeasance upon it, this will estop him to say it was made per Duress. And where A. and B. by Duress to B. seal a bond or deed, it may be good as to A. that was never threatened. 3 H. 16. Bro. 17. Mich. 7 Jac. 1. See 43 E. 3. 10. 2 Danv. 686.

A man shall not avoid a deed by Duress of a stranger; for it hath been held that none shall avoid his own bond for the imprisonment or danger of any other than of himself only. Cro. Jac. 187. Yet a son shall avoid his deed by Duress of the father: and the husband shall avoid a deed made by Duress of the wife; though a servant shall not avoid a deed made by Duress of his master, or the master the deed sealed by Duress of his servant. 2 Danv. 686. If a man is taken by virtue of a process issuing out of a court that hath not power to grant it; or in custody on a false charge of felony, &c. and for his enlargement and discharge gives bond, &c. this may be avoided, as taken by Duress. Cro. El. 616. 4 Inst. 97. Allen. 92.

A statute merchant may be avoided by audita querela, because it was made by Duress, or imprisonment. A will shall be avoided by Duress, or menace of imprisonment. A feoff-ment made by Duress is voidable, but not void. But no averment shall be taken against a deed enrolled, that it was made by Duress. 1 Rol. Abr. 862. 2 Danv. 685. A marriage had by Duress is voidable: and by stat. 31 H. 6. c. 9. obligations, statutes, &c. obtained of women by force, to marry the persons to whom made, or otherwise, unless for a just debt, are declared void. If a person executes a deed by Duress, he cannot plead non est factum, because it is his deed; though he may avoid it by special pleading, and judgment Si actio, &c. 5 Rep. 119. Records may not regularly be said to be made by Duress, and therefore shall not be avoided by this plea or pretence. 2 Shep. Abr. 319.—See further this Dict. titles Fraud, Fine, &c.

DURHAM. The bishoprick of Durham was dissolved, and the King to have all the lands, &c. by a stat. 7 Ed. 6. not printed. But this act was afterwards repealed, by stat. 1 Mary, st. 3. c. 3. and the bishoprick newly erected, with all jurisdiction ecclesiastical and temporal annexed to the County-Palatine. The justices of the County-Palatine of Durham may levy fines of lands in the county: and writs upon proclamation, &c. are to be directed to the bishop. Stats. 5 Eliz. c. 27. 31 Eliz. c. 2. Writs to elect members of parliament in the County-Palatine of Durham shall go to the bishop or his chancellor, and be returned by the sheriff, &c. Stat. 25 Car. 2. c. 9.—See further title Counties-Palatine.

As to the Courts of which three Counties, and the Royal Franchise of Ely, we may here insert what was there omitted. They are a species of private courts of a limited local jurisdiction, and having at the same time an exclusive cognizance of pleas in matters both of law and equity. 4 Inst. 213, 8. Finch. R. 452. In all these, as in the Principality of Wales, the King's ordinary writs issuing under the Great Seal out of Chancery, do not run; that is, they are of no force. For as, originally, all jure regalia were granted to the Lords of these Counties-Palatine, they had of course the sole administration of justice by their own judges, appointed by themselves, and not by the Crown. It would therefore be incongruous for the King to send his writ to direct the judge of another's court in what manner to administer justice between the suitors. But when the privileges of these Counties-Palatine were abridged by stat. 27 H. 8. c. 24. it was also enacted, that all writs and process should be made in the King's name, but should be tested or witnessed in the name of the owner of the franchise. Wherefore all writs whereon actions are founded, and which have current authority here, must be under the seal of their respective franchises; the two former of which, Chester and Lancaster, are now united to the Crown, and the two latter, Durham and Ely, under the government of their several bishops. And the judges of assise who sit therein, sit by virtue of a special commission from the owners of the several franchises, and under the seal thereof, and not by the usual commissions under the Great Seal of England. 3 Comm. 78.

A bail-bond given to the sheriff of Durham, under a writ issued immediately from the court of K. B. to him, is not void. though the Court-Palatine might have interposed and claimed the privilege. 6 Term Rep. K. B. 71.

DURSLEY. Signifies blows without wounding or bloodshed, vulgo dry blows. Blount.

DUSTY-FOOT. See Court of Piepowder.

DUTCHY-COURT OF LANCASTER. See titles Chancellor of the Dutchy of Lancaster, Counties Palatine.

DUTIES of persons. Allegiance is the duty of the people, protection the duty of the magistrate; yet they are reciprocally the rights, as well as duties of each other. Allegiance is the right of the magistrate, and protection the right of the people. 1 Comm. 123.

DUTY. Any thing that is known to be due by law, and thereby recoverable, is a duty before it is recovered; because the party interested in the same hath power to recover it. 1 Lill. 495.

DWELLING-HOUSE. A man may assemble people together lawfully (at least if they do not exceed eleven) without danger of raising a riot, rout, or unlawful assembly, in order to protect and defend his house; which he is not permitted to do in any other case. 1 Hal. P. C. 547. 4 Comm. 224. —See titles Burglary, Riot.

DWINED. Consumed; from whence comes the word dwindle.

DYERS. By stat. 3 & 4 E. 6. c. 2. no dyer may dye any cloth with orchel; or with Brazil, to make a false colour in cloth, wool, &c. on pain of 20*s.* By stat. 23 Eliz. c. 9. Dyers are to fix a seal of lead to cloths, with the letter M. to shew that they are well mathered, &c. or forfeit 3*s.* 4*d. per* yard. By stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 15. several penalties are inflicted on Dyers who dye any cloths deceitfully, and not throughout, with woad, indico, and mather; dying blue with logwood to forfeit 20*l.* Dyers in London are subject to the inspection of the Dyers' Company, who may appoint searchers; and out of their limits, justices of the peace in sessions to appoint them; opposing the searchers incurs 10*l.* penalty.—See this Dict. titles Labourers, Lien, Manufacturers.

DYKE-REED, rather DYKE-REVE. An officer that hath the care and oversight of the dykes and drains in fenny countries; as of Deeping fens, &c. mentioned in stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 11.

DYRGE OR DIRGE. A mournful song over the dead; from the Teutonick dyrke, laudare, to praise and extol; whence it is a laudatory song. Cowel.

DYRENUM. A ditty or song.—Venire cum toto ac pleno dyreno; to sing harvest home. Paroch. Antiq. 320.

E.

EALDING. See Adeling.

EALDERMAN, or Ealdorman.] Among the Saxons was as much as Earl with the Danes. Camb. Brit. 107. Also an elder, senator, &c. Ealdermen or aldermen, are now those that are associated to the mayor or chief officer in the common council of a city or borough-town. Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 13. See titles Aldermen; Squire's Ang. Sax. Gov. 107. 161. 220. n. 257. n. and Lord Lytt. Hist. H. 2. v. 215.

EALEHUS, from the Sax. Eale, Cervisia, and Hus, Domus.] An ale-house: In the laws of King Alfred we often find this word.

EARLHORDA. The privilege of assising and selling ale and beer. It is mentioned in a charter of King Hen. II. to the abbot of Glastonbury.

EARL, Sax. Eorle, Lat. Comes.] This it is said was a great title among the Saxons, and is the most ancient of the English peerage, there being no title of honour used by our present Nobility that was likewise in use by the Saxons, except this of Earl, which was usually applied to the First in the Royal Line. Verstegan deriveth this word from the Dutch Ear, i. e. Honour, and Ethel, which signifies Noble: But whencesoever it is derived, the title Earl was at length given to those who were associates to the King in his council and martial actions; and the method of investiture into that dignity was per cincturam gladii, without any formal charter of creation. Dugdale's Warwicksh. 302. William the First, called the Conqueror, gave this dignity in fee to his Nobles, annexing it to this or that county or province; and allotting them for the maintenance of it a certain portion of money arising from the prince's profits, for the pleadings and forfeitures of the provinces. Camd. And formerly one Earl had divers shires under his government, and had lieutenants under him in every shire, such as are now sheriffs; as appears by divers of our old statutes. Cowel.

But about the reign of King John, and ever since, our Kings have made Earls of counties, &c. by charter; giving them no authority over the county, nor any part of the profits arising out of it; only sometimes they have had an annual fee out of the Exchequer, &c. An Earl, Comes, was heretofore correlative with comitatus; and anciently there was no Earl but had a shire or county for his earldom; but of late times, the number of Earls very much increasing, several of them have chosen for their titles some eminent part of a county, considerable town, village, or their own seats, &c. Besides these local Earls, there are some personal and honorary; as Earl Marshal of England; see titles Constable, Court of Chivalry; and others nominal, who derive their titles from the names of their families. Lex Constitutionis, p. 78. Their place is next to a Marquis, and before a Viscount, and as in very ancient times, those who were created Counts or Earls, were of the blood royal; our British monarchs to this day call them in all public writings, "Our most dear Cousin:" They also originally did, and still may, use the style of Nos. See titles Countee, Peers of the Realm, Sheriff.

EARNEST. Money paid in part of a larger sum, or part of the goods delivered, on any contract, &c. which being done by way of earnest, the property of the goods is absolutely bound by it: and the buyer may recover the goods by action, as well as the vendor may the price of them. And by the statute of frauds, stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. no contract for sale of goods, to the value of 10*l.* or more to be valid, unless such earnest is made or given. See title Frauds.

EASEMENT, Aisiamentum, from the Fr. Aise, Commoditas.] Is defined to be a service or convenience which one neighbour hath of another, by charter or prescription, without profit; a way through his land, a sink, or such like. Kitch. 105. A person may prescribe to an easement in the freehold of another, as belonging to some ancient house, or to land, &c. And a way over the land of another; a gateway, water-course, or washing place on another's ground may be claimed by prescription as easements. But a multitude of persons cannot prescribe; though for an easement, they may plead custom. Cro. Jac. 170. 3 Leon. 254. 3 Mod. 294. Lil. Abr. 496. See title Prescription.

EASTER. The name of a goddess which the Saxons worshipped in the month of April, and so called, because she was the goddess of the East. Blount.—In our church it is the feast of the Passover, in commemoration of the sufferings of our Saviour.

EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

A Corporation, or "UNITED COMPANY OF MERCHANTS OF ENGLAND TRADING TO THE EAST INDIES;" which name is given to them in stat. 6 Ann. c. 17. § 13. More explicitly, according to their charter, and the adjustment of their rights by stat. 9 & 10 Will. 3. c. 44. § 61. trading "into, and from, the East Indies, in the countries and parts of Asia and Africa, and in, to and from, the islands, ports, havens, cities, creeks, towns, and places of Asia, Africa, and America, or any of them, beyond the Cape of Good Hope, to the Straights of Magellan, where any trade or traffic of merchandise is or may be used or had, and to and from every of them."

The Laws relative to this important Company shall be considered in the following order:

I. The ORIGIN and UNION of the Old and New East India Companies.
II. The STATE of the present East India Company, and the Regulations by certain Statutes, and otherwise, relating thereto.
III. The RIGHTS permanent and temporary, of the present East India Company.
IV. STATUTES relative to the present East India Company.

1. THE PASSAGE by sea to the peninsula of India, and the Eastward part of the Continent of Asia, the present seats of our Asiatic trade, was not discovered till about the latter end of the 15th century; and, of the various attempts made from hence by individuals, to open a trade thither, none proved successful until Queen Elizabeth, by a Charter dated December 31, A. D. 1600, established the first incorporated Company, by the name of the London East India Company, the original shares were 50*l.* each, and the capital was under 400,000*l.* After a long series of disasters and losses, this Company obtained from the country powers of India, at a great expence, the privilege of a limited trade in certain parts of India and Persia; and of making small settlements, or houses of trade, called Factories, for the residence of their factors and servants. In those times the charters of the crown, and the powers which they conveyed, were not thought to require parliamentary sanction; nor was it till after the Restoration that the rights or authorities derived under them to the Company were first called in question.

In the year 1638, Mr. Langhorne, agent for the English East India Company, purchased the village of Madras-patam, with a small district on the east-coast of Coromandel, from the Hindoo Rajah, for the East India Company. This village was soon after surrounded by a wall; and a castle, called Fort Saint George, was erected there in 1640. This being a purchase, no objection was made to the circumvallation. And from this small beginning arose the extensive dominions now belonging to the East India Company, under the presidency of Madras or Fort Saint George.

In less than thirty years after these petty establishments in Bengal and Coromandel, the island of Bombay was ceded to the English, on the marriage of Charles the Second with the Princess Catherine of Portugal: this was the foundation of the Bombay government, and all its subsequent appendages on the western side of the Indian peninsula. The whole of these settlements, and every other British factory in India, (including those retained in the eastern islands after the cruel massacre of the Company's servants at Amboyna by the Dutch,) were subordinate to the Governor and Council at Surat; established there, with a supreme authority, by the East India Company in England. See Forbes's Oriental Memoirs.

By the interruptions, however, of speculative adventurers, called Interlopers who had begun to resist the exclusive claims of the Old Company under their charters, on the ground of their wanting the sanction of parliamentary authority, and by occasional failures of investments of goods from abroad, and the then not unfrequent losses of ships in their passage, the commerce of the Company was often chequered with disasters and disappointments.

Notwithstanding these discouragements, the Company formed, by degrees, various factories and houses of trade, both in India and Persia. When, by this means, they had at length, become more successful, various attempts were made to induce the Crown, and even Parliament itself, to interpose and revoke the charters of the Company; some on pretext that every man had an equal right to trade in the East as well as in the West Indies; while others hoped to effect it on proposals of terms of advantage in point of public finance, that they might themselves be erected into an exclusive Company.

Such was the state of things in 1693, when the Company, by an accidental failure in the payment of a small duty which had been imposed on their capital stock, (see stat. 4 & 5 W. and M. c. 15. §§ 10. 12.) gave an opening to Government to determine their charters, rendered void by that default: and, though in the same year, the Crown, to obviate all doubts, revived their powers and exclusive privileges by a new charter, the Company were obliged to submit to a condition, that their capacity of trading should in future be determinable on three years' notice. The legal obstacle to the erecting a new Company being thus removed, the stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 44. was passed for borrowing two millions on a loan at 8 per cent. towards carrying on the war; and, as an encouragement to subscribers, it was declared, that they should be incorporated by a charter from the King into a general society; with liberty for each individual member to trade to India, and the other limits of the old Company's exclusive charter; so that the value of his exports exceeded not his share of this loan or capital: and that such of the subscribers as should choose to convert their subscriptions into a joint stock, should be at liberty so to do, and be incorporated hy a separate charter, by the name of The English East India Company, with the privilege of trading with and to the amount of such joint stock. All persons but those incorporated, and such as they should license, were prohibited from this trade, except the old Company, who had time given them to wind up their commercial affairs.

The act reserved a power to determine the charters both of the General Society, and the New Company after September, 1711, on repayment of the loan, and three years' notice.

The bulk of the subscribers having agreed to trade as a separate Company, with a joint stock, the old Company, to whose prejudice the two new corporations were to be erected, found means to become members for a very large proportion of the loan of two millions. With an interest thus acquired, they joined with the English Company, and by means of their superior knowledge and possessions, they obtained a decided influence in the general courts of the new Company, and thus paved the way to that union which afterwards took place in 1702; and which, A. D. 1708, was confirmed by parliament, by stat. 6 Ann. c. 17. By the terms of this union the warehouses at home and shipping, and also all the settlements and factories of the old Company in the East Indies, Persia, and China, including the islands of Bombay, and Saint Helena, with their dependencies, and all their rights and privileges, however derived, became vested in the United Company; except their Body Politic, which was surrendered to the Crown.

The curious reader may wish to learn what became of the General Society, whose members were individually authorised to trade, as far as the value of their subscriptions in goods exported from hence. All that can be discovered of them is, that though they were actually incorporated by the King's charter, and were therefore legally authorised to send ships to India or China, it does not with certainty appear that any one ship was ever fitted out by them: and that the superior advantages of being concerned in the trade to be carried on with a joint stock, were so evident, that, at the time of the union of the two Companies, out of the whole loan of two millions, only 7,200*l.* then remained the property of the separate traders of the General Society; and that this sum also was soon absorbed in the United Company, whose capital or trading stock, by which their dividend of profits was to be governed, thereupon became fixed at Two Millions.

The history of the English East India Company, and the aggrandisement of the British nation, in the remote regions of Hindostan, became generally interesting about the middle of the eighteenth century, in consequence of the unparalleled cruelty of the Nabob of Bengal, and the sufferings of the English in the Black Hole at Calcutta, an event which was soon followed by the memorable battle of Plassey, and other gallant exploits in Bengal, by Robert Lord Clive, the first of that title; which not only amply revenged the perfidious cruelty of the Mahomedan despot, but gave the company power, wealth, and territory in the finest provinces of India, where, from a set of licensed foreign merchants, they became sovereigns of the country.

The wars which subsisted at that period, between the native princes of India on the coast of Coromandel, aided by English and French troops, opposed to each other as auxiliaries, under experienced commanders of both nations, and the consequences of such interference to the British nation, are admirally related by Orme, justly styled "the elegant historian of India." The subsequent conquests by other generals, and the more recent victories in which the name of WELLESLEY is so conspicuous, have added an immense domain to the British empire. These invaluable territories, acquired by British valour, are maintained by sound policy, moderation and justice; the extent of our territorial power excites the wonder of Asia; and the effects are sensibly felt by all the maritime nations of Europe, whose consequence in India declined; until in 1812, not a single possession remained to any potentate of Europe, except Goa and some insignificant seaports belonging to the Portuguese, and the Spanish settlements at Manilla; while the British empire in India, commencing with a few Banians and factors in a mercantile warehouse, now extends over an immense territory, inhabited by upwards of sixty millions of people. See Mill's British India.

II. The first enlargement of the Company's term took place in 1708; (Stat. 6 Ann. c. 17;) when the United Company bargained with the Public to advance 1,200,000*l.* as a loan, but without any interest; (or, which operated as the same thing, at a reduced interest of 5 per cent. on the two loans conjointly;) for an extension of their term, in the exclusive trade, of fifteen years; and thus their nominal trading capital, on which the dividend was made, became advanced to 3,200,000*l.*

In 1712 the Company petitioned Parliament, (on the ground that the term which remained unexpired in their trade was too short to admit their risking the expences of regaining and securing the pepper trade, which had been engrossed by the Dutch,) that their corporate capacity might be continued, though the debt due to them from the Public should be redeemed. In consequence of this petition, the stat. 10 Ann. c. 28. passed, for repealing all former provisoes and powers of determining their trade or incorporation, but with power to the Public to redeem the debt at any time after September 1733. And thus the United Company were supposed to have obtained a perpetuity, as well in the exclusive trade as in all their chartered rights and capacities. They however submitted themselves in that respect to the pleasure of Parliament in 1730; when the stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 14. was passed, for continuing to them their exclusive trade till 1766; for which they gave the public a premium of 200,000*l.* without any return of either principal or interest, and also agreed to a reduction of the rate of interest to 4 per cent. on the debt of 3,200,000*l.* and to accept of payment of the principal by instalments of 500,000*l.*

In 1744 they contracted for and obtained, by stat. 17 G. 2. c. 17. a further addition of fourteen years in the exclusive trade, for which they lent to the public one million at 3 per cent.—And, in 1750, they agreed, by stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 22. to a further reduction of the rate of interest on the former debt to 3 per cent.

Thus grew the debt of 4,200,000*l.* from the Public to the United Company, carrying with it an annuity of 126,000. This was called the 3 per cent. East India annuities, and are now consolidated with the 3 per cent. Bank annuities. See title National Debt.—But the Company's capital or nominal sum, by which their dividends were governed, continued as before at 3,200,000*l.*; the million last lent having been raised by their bonds, and therefore not added to their former capital.

The next renewal, was made by contract with the public by stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 65. § 9. when a further term, determinable in 1794, was granted in the exclusive trade on payment of 400,000*l.* in discharge of all claims on the Company by the Public, previous to March 1st. 1781. But it was provided that after payment of a yearly dividend of 8 per cent. to the holders of India stock, the surplus of all the net proceeds of their trade and revenues should be applied, ¾ to the use of the Public, and the remaining ¼ to the use of the Company.

The debts incurred by the Company, in the wars subsisting in India at and after that period, prevented any such surplus from arising; and therefore no participation of revenue took place under this act.—On the contrary, the pressure of those debts, and the compulsory clauses of an act of 1784, by which the Company were obliged to keep a stock of teas always in their warehouses, sufficient for one year's consumption, rendered it necessary for them to enlarge their actual trading capital, by new subscriptions, to 5,000,000*l.* for which they had the sanction of Parliament granted them by stat. 26 G. 3. c. 62. (explained by stat. 31 G. 3. c. 11.) and stat. 29 G. 3. c. 65.

In 1783 the Public agreed to forego any participation of the funds of the Company under the said stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 65. until certain debts should be discharged; and by the Relief Act of 1784, the participation, as settled in 1781, was to be resumed as soon as the debts therein specified were paid, and the bond debt reduced to a million and a half. See Stats. 22 Geo. 3. c. 83. 24 Geo. 3. c. 34.

In 1793, was passed the act, 33 G. 3. c. 52. extending the term of the Company's exclusive trade (with certain modifications) for 20 years. (See post, IV.) and in 1813, was passed the act 53 Geo. 3. c. 155. by § 6. of which the Company's exclusive trade to any other places than China, was enacted to cease on 10th April 1814; and a further term in the exclusive trade to China, and the sole trade in tea between the Cape of Good Hope and the Straits of Magellan, and the possession of their territorial acquisitions and governments, determinable on three years' notice after 10th April 1831, were granted to the Company. See post. IV.

Having said thus much relative to the rise and progress of the Company, it may not be unacceptable to state shortly the mode of what may be called its internal œconomy.

The books of the Company are at all times open for the admission of every description of persons, natives or foreigners, who may desire to become members, and have money to adventure. It knows no distinction of professions, religions, or even sexes; and in the General Courts there is the most perfect equality; every one present has the same right with another to speak his sentiments, and give his advice. A difference is made only in voting; which, when taken by the holding up of hands, requires 500*l.* stock, and when by ballot, 1000*l.* stock for a single vote, 3000*l.* for two votes, 6000*l.* for three votes, and 10,000*l.* for four votes, which is the largest number of votes any member is allowed to possess; 2000*l.* stock qualifies any member to become a candidate for the office of a Director or Chairman.

In the beginning of the year 1794, the number of votes was about 1700—that of actual voters however not much exceeding 1400. The number of votes has probably increased since that time.

A proprietor of stock to the amount of 1000*l.* whether man or woman, native or foreigner, has a right to give a vote in the General Courts. The Directors are twenty-four in number, including the chairman and deputy chairman, who may be re-elected in turn, six each year for four years successively. (See post. IV.) The meetings or Courts of Directors are to be held at least once a week, but are commonly oftener, being summoned as occasion requires. Out of the body of Directors are chosen several committees, who have the peculiar inspection of certain branches of the Company's business; as the Committee of Correspondence; a Committee of Buying; a Committee of Treasury; a House Committee; a Committee of Warehouse; a Committee of Shipping; a Committee of Accounts; a Committee of Law Suits; and a Committee to prevent the Growth of Private Trade. And under stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. a Committee of Secrecy. See post, IV.

By the Company's charter, 9, 10 W. 3. it was appointed that in all cases of an equality of votes in the general court of proprietors, or in the Court of Directors, the matter should be determined by lots: By § 77 of 53 Geo. 3. c. 155. no question shall be carried in either court, except by a majority, and an equality shall be deemed a rejection of the question: except in cases of election to offices, which shall, as before, be in such case decided by lot.

The bulk of the Company's Exports consists of camblets, cloth, and other woollens; metals, (particularly tin, lead, and copper;) naval and military stores; and silver in bullion.

The Company reserved to themselves the exclusive export of cloth, woollens, copper, bullion, and military stores; and also clocks, toys, and other articles ornamented with jewels.

Other articles exported from hence are chiefly purchased in India by Europeans, for their own consumption, and are carried abroad, (in what is called private trade,) by the commanders and officers of the Company's ships.—The Company may license whom they please, to trade in the East Indies. The officers and subordinates of their ships, being thirty in number for every ship, are allowed the benefit of it, both in export and import, according to their different ranks. This is called private trade; and what they pay for this permission, and in lieu of freight, is called Company's duties, and forms an article of the Company's profits. The servants abroad are also frequently permitted to remit home their fortunes in merchandize, for which they pay a freight to the Company. This latter trade is distinguished from the former by the name of privileged trade.

Besides this, abundance of British goods are sent to India by illicit trade carried on directly from Great Britain; and also by clandestine trade from various parts of Europe, in British ships under foreign colours.

See the stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. post IV. in the 4, 5, and 6th divisions of the act as there arranged.

The goods imported by the Company from India consist chiefly of muslins, callicoes, and other piece goods, raw silk, cotton, indigo, pepper, salt-petre, opium, and various sorts of drugs; and from China, tea, coffee, and japan and china-ware, the other articles are comparatively of a trifling value.—Sugar has occasionally been imported in small quantities, but being at present (January 1794) subject to a heavy duty, it is in effect nearly prohibited.

The whole average amount of the customs and inland duties on the import trade of India and China to Great Britain, may be estimated at upward of a million per annum; and the sale amount thereof at nearly six millions per annum.

III. The temporary rights of the Company, consist: 1st. Of the sole and exclusive trade with China: so that none other of the King's subjects can go thither or trade there except it be by leave of the Company; or pursuant to the directions of stat. 53 Geo. 3. c. 155. post IV.—2dly. They have the administration of the government and revenues of the territories in India, acquired by their conquests during their term in the exclusive trade; subject nevertheless to the various checks and restrictions contained in the several statutes, which vest that administration in them.

The rights which the Company possess in perpetuity, are, to be a Body Corporate and Politick, with perpetual succession. See stats, 3. Geo. 2. c. 14. 17 Geo. 2. c. 17. 21 G. 3. c. 65.—To purchase, acquire and dispose at will of lands and tenements in Great Britain. In their charter of 10 W. 3. the value in Great Britain was not restricted; but by stat. 3 G. 2. c. 14. § 14. the value therein is not to exceed 10,000*l. per annum.*—By the charter of King William, to make settlements to any extent, within the limits of their exclusive trade; build forts and fortifications; appoint governors; erect courts of judicature; coin money; raise, train and muster forces at sea and land; repel wrongs and injuries, make reprisals on the invaders or disturbers of their peace; and continue to trade within the same limits, with a joint stock for ever, although their exclusive right of trading shall be determined by parliament. See the three statutes immediately above cited; and as to the forces, stats. 27 Geo. 2. c. 9. 1 Geo. 3. c. 14. 21 Geo. 3. c. 65. 28 Geo. 3. c. 8. explained by stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 10. and 39 Geo. 3. c. 109.

These rights, it appears, the Company hold under the immediate authority of Parliament: they embrace all those of the old chartered Company which subsisted from the year 1600 to 1708, when, as has been already observed, they became vested or absorbed with all their fortresses, settlements and factories, and other property real and personal, in the present United Company.—They are a perpetual Corporation; and although their exclusive right to trade, and their power of administering the government and revenues of India, were to be determined, they would still remain an incorporated Company in perpetuity; with the exclusive property and possession of Calcutta and Fort William, Madras, and Fort St. George, Bombay, Bencoolen and St. Helena, and various other settlements and landed estates in India: and also a right of trading thither, with a joint stock; together with all their repositories and other conveniences adapted to their commerce and the preservation of their merchandise, both abroad and at home.

The only privileges they can be constitutionally deprived of, are, those of trading to the exclusion of others, and of governing the countries and collecting and appropriating the revenues of India, See post IV. and the Statutes there cited and abridged.

By § 93 of 53 Geo. 3. c. 155. an express saving is made, of the "undoubted sovereignty of the Crown," in and over the territorial acquisitions: and of the rights, franchises and immities of the Company.

IV. The Statutes now in force relative to the trade and concerns of the East-India Company, but the whole of which it does not seem expedient to state at large, are the following viz.—9, 10. Wm. 3. c. 44. continued and extended by 6 Ann. c. 17. 10 Ann. c. 28. 3 Geo. 2. c. 14. 17 Geo. 2. c. 17. 13 Geo. 3. c. 64. 19 Geo. 3. c. 61. 20 Geo. 3. c. 56. 21 Geo. 3. c. 65. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. 53 Geo. 3. c. 155. & 54 Geo. 3. c. 34. as to the general Establishment of the Company—7 Geo. 1. st. 1. c. 5. § 32, 33. 7 Geo. 3. c. 50. 10 Geo. 3. c. 47. 23 Geo. 3. c. 22. 26 Geo. 3. c. 62. 28 Geo. 3. c. 29. 29 Geo. 3. c. 65. 31 Geo. 3. c. 11. 33 Geo. 3. c. 47. 34 Geo. 3. c. 41. 37 Geo. 3. c. 31. 44 Geo. 3. c. 3. 47 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 41. 51 Geo. 3. c. 64. & 52 Geo. 3. c. 121. as to the Interest on, and Increase of, their Capital Stock and Bond Debt:—7 Geo. 3. c. 57. 9 Geo. 3. c. 24. 23 Geo. 3. cc. 36. 83. 24 Geo. 3. c. 34. 50 Geo. 3. c. 114. and 52 Geo. 3. c. 10. & c. 135. as to Payments by the Company, and Relief or Advances to the Company:—7 Geo. 3. c. 50. 10 Geo. 3. c. 47. 13 Geo. 3. c. 63. 17 Geo. 3. c. 8. 21 Geo. 3. c. 70. 26 Geo. 3. c. 25. 27 Geo. 3. c. 48. 36 Geo. 3. cc. 119. 127. 37 Geo. 3. c. 142. 39 Geo. 3. c. 59. 39 & 40 Geo. 3. cc. 59, 79. 41 Geo. 3. *U. The following is the general effect of the statutes now in force so far as it seems necessary to particularize their several provisions.

By the stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 63. "for establishing certain regulations for the better management of the affairs of the Company, as well in India as in Europe," considerable alterations were made in the constitution of the Company. It was enacted that the Court of Directors should in future be elected for four years; six members annually; but none to hold their seats longer than four years. That no person should vote at the election of the Directors, who had not possessed their stock twelve months.—This stat. also increased the qualifications for a vote from 500*l.* to 1000*l.* (See ante II.)—The statute ordained that the Mayor's Court of Calcutta should in future be confined to small mercantile causes, to which only its jurisdiction extended before the territorial acquisitions. That in lieu of this Court, a new one should be established at Fort William, under the title of the Supreme Court of Judicature, consisting of a Chief Justice, and three Puisne Judges; and that these judges be appointed by the Crown. That a superiority be given to the presidency of Bengal, over the other presidencies in India. That the power of nominating and removing the Governor-General and Council at Fort William and Bengal, should be vested in the Directors. [By Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 25. it is declared that His Majesty's approbation of the appointment of the Governor-General and Council of Fort William, is not necessary.]

By 37 Geo. 3. c. 142. and 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 79, further regulations were made as to the Court at Calcutta, and for establishing Courts of Judicature at Madras and Bombay. Under these several acts the salaries of the judges are settled, and certain pensions are secured to them on their return to Europe.—By 47 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 68. the Governor and Council at Madras and Bombay were empowered to make rules and orders for the better government of those settlements, by appointing justices of the peace, &c.

By stat. 24 Geo. 3. sess. 2. c. 25. three things were intended.—1. The establishing a power of controul in Great Britain, by which the executive government in India is connected with that over the rest of the empire.—2. The regulating the conduct of the Company's servants in India, in order to remedy the evils that had prevailed there.—3. The providing for the punishment of crimes which might reflect disgrace upon Great Britain.

1. Six persons are to be nominated by the King, as Commissioners for the affairs of India, of whom one of the Secretaries of State, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the time being shall be two, and the President is to have the casting vote if equally divided. (See post, stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. div. 1.) New Commissioners are to be appointed at the pleasure of the Crown.—The Members of this Board of Controul are sworn to execute the several powers and trusts reposed in them without favour or affection, prejudice or malice. The Directors are to appoint the servants abroad, but power is given to the King by his Secretary of State, to recall the Governors and Members of the Councils, and all inferior Magistrates. The Council of Bengal are subjected to the direction of the Company at home; and in all cases, except those of immediate danger and necessity, restrained from acting without orders from England.

Another object of this act is, to redress the grievances of the natives of India; to provide for the payment of the debts of the Nabob of Arcot, which are a burden on his country; discriminating at the same time those which were justly incurred, from those which were forced upon him by the injustice and extortion of British oppressors: to ascertain the indeterminate rights and pretensions, on which so many differences arose between him and the Rajah of Tanjore; and to deliver the Zemindars, and other native landholders of India, from oppression; and to secure to them their possessions by permanent rules of moderation and justice. (See also stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 16.)

2. A material part of this act is directed also against the abuses said to have prevailed in the civil and military departments; enjoining a thorough revisal of their establishment, together with the suppression of such places as are found to be useless, and of such expences as may be conveniently avoided. And in order to prevent any delusive show of retrenchment, or any future deviation, this reform is directed to be constantly submitted in its whole state and progress to Parliament. (See also stats. 28 Geo. 3. c. 8, 31 Geo. 3. c. 10.)

Cadets and writers were heretofore sent to India in such numbers as to remain a burden upon the Company's establishments. These are reduced to a certain complement not to be exceeded.

A system of succession by seniority is established by the act, to prevent the servants of the Company from rising, merely through interest without merit: leaving however to the Councils abroad the power of bringing forward, for reasons to be by them assigned, any persons of extraordinary merit or capacity. (See post, Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. div. 3.)

3. Security having been heretofore derived to delinquents in India, from the circumstance of their offences being committed within the territories of Indian princes, so as not to come within the cognizance of the British Government; this act provides against such evasions in future, by declaring the offence equally punishable, in whatever territory of India it is committed. The act of receiving presents, is declared to be in itself extortion, and punishable accordingly. The offences of disobeying orders, and bargaining for offices, are pronounced to be misdemeanors; and it is provided that offenders shall not compound for them with the Company; nor ever be restored to appointments in their service. Collectors and receivers are bound by oath not to receive any private gratuity over and above the legal tribute.

With a view to prevent, or more easily punish, the misconduct of the Company's servants, several regulations were made by this statute for the discovery of their property on their return to England from India; but which were all repealed by stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 57. § 31.

The Attorney-General or Court of Directors may exhibit an information against any person guilty of the crime of extortion, or other misdemeanors committed in the East Indies, after January 1, 1785; which information is to be tried by Commissioners selected from both Houses of Parliament.

The election of these Commissioners is regulated by stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 57. which in substance directs as follows. The Lords are to ballot for twenty-six of their house, and the Commons for forty of their number; their names are again to be put into a box, to be drawn out by lot, in presence of three Judges, (one of the Court of K. B. one of C. P. and one of the Exchequer,) and of the parties; and the defendant may peremptorily challenge thirteen peers and twenty commoners, and he, as well as the prosecutor, may challenge as many as they please for cause shewn. The first five names of the Peers, and the first seven names of the commoners, which shall be drawn without challenging, shall be returned by the three judges to the Lord Chancellor, to insert their names, with those of the three Judges, in a special commission, for them, or any ten of them, of whom one of the Judges always to be one, to hear and determine every such information, and pronounce judgment thereon; such judgment to be enforced by the authority of the Court of K. B. and to be effectual and conclusive to all intents and purposes whatsoever.—This, as well as the former act also, contains many other directions relative to the trial, as also relative to the dispensing justice, both in criminal and civil cases in India.

The above stat. 24 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 25. is explained by stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 8. as to the forces, (see ante III. and stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 10.) the annual accounts (ante 2.) and the power of the Commissioners as to salaries and gratuities.

The stats. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. & 53 Geo. 3. c. 155. being of the greatest importance on this subject, these, and their several explaining statutes are here presented in the form which seemed best adapted to elucidate the purposes for which they were passed. As they concern—1, The Controul in Great Britain.—2. The Governments abroad.—3. Patronage, and rule of promotion.—4. The general trade.—5. Limitations on the exclusive trade to and from India.—6. What shall at present be deemed illicit or clandestine trade.—7. Appropriations of the Company's revenue.—8. The method of suing for forfeitures and penalties, and proceeding as to seizures.—9. Regulations of general justice and policy in India.—10. The statutes repealed.—11. Regulations as to the Directors, and the Company's concerns in England.

1. The act 33 Geo. 3. provides for the continuation of the Board of Controul in all its parts; except that the person first named in the King's Commission is to be President; and, instead of the Commissioners being limited to six Privy Councillors, the number is indefinite, resting in the King's pleasure; of which, however, the two principal Secretaries of State, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, are to be three; and His Majesty may, if he pleases, add to the list two Commissioners not of the Privy Council.

The King may give 5000*l.* a year among such of the Commissioners as he pleases; which, together with the salary of the Secretary and Officers, and other expences of the Board, are to be paid by the India Company, and not, as formerly, by the Civil List; the whole (under various acts) not to exceed 26,000*l. per annum*, and superannuation allowances may be made to officers of the board.

Oaths are prescribed for the Commissioners and their officers. The office of a Commissioner, or chief Secretary, is not to be deemed a new office to disable them from sitting in parliament. Nor is the appointment of a Commissioner not having a salary, or of a chief Secretary, to vacate a seat. Three Commissioners must be present to form a Board.

The Powers of the Board are, in substance, as follows:—The Court of Directors are to deliver to this Board for their approbation or alteration, all minutes, orders, and resolutions of themselves, and of the Courts of Proprietors; and copies of all letters, orders, and instructions proposed to be sent abroad. None are to be sent until after such previous communication on any pretence whatever. They are to superintend, direct, and controul all acts, operations, and concerns, which relate to the civil or military government and revenues of the British territorial possessions in India, subject to the restrictions after mentioned. They and their officers are to have access to the papers and records of the Company, and to be furnished with copies or extracts of such of them as shall be required. They are also to be furnished with copies of all proceedings of General Courts, and Courts of Directors, within eight days; and with copies of all dispatches from abroad, relating to matters of government or revenue, immediately after their arrival. No orders on those subjects are to be sent by the Company to India, until approved by the Board; and when the Commissioners vary or expunge any part of the dispatches proposed by the Directors, they are to give their reasons; and all dispatches are to be returned to the Court of Directors in fourteen days. The Directors may state their objections to any alterations, and the Commissioners are to re-consider them; and if they interfere with what the Directors deem matters of Commerce, the Directors may apply to the King in Council to determine betwixt them. But the Board are restricted from the appointment of any of the Company's servants. If the Directors, on being called upon to propose dispatches, on any subject relating to government or revenue, shall fail to do so within fourteen days, the Board may originate their own dispatches on that subject.

The Board are not to authorise any increase of salaries, or any allowance or gratuity to be granted to persons employed in the Company's service, except the same shall be first proposed by the Company; and their intention and reasons for such grant are to be certified to both Houses of Parliament, thirty days before the salary can commence.

The Directors are to appoint three of their members to be a Committee of Secrecy, through whom dispatches relating to government, war, peace, or treaties, may be sent to and received from India. This Committee and their clerks to be sworn to secrecy.

Orders of Directors concerning the government or revenues of India, once approved by the Board, are not subject to revocation by the general court of proprietors.

The act 53 Geo. 3. c. 155. gives several additional powers to the Board of Controul. By § 64. &c. of this act the Directors are to order distinct accounts to be kept of their territorial, political, and commercial affairs, and to submit to the Board for their approbation a plan for such an arrangement of the accounts required by 32 Geo. 3. c. 52. Copies of all regulations, made under the acts for regulating the administration of justice at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, are to be laid before Parliament, together with such accounts. Duties in India on goods of the Company, are to be charged to the debit of the commercial account, and these together with the duties on private trade goods are to be considered as territorial revenue, and to be subject to the controul of the Board; who are also to have the control over the appropriation of any such revenues, to investments or commercial purposes: except such sums as shall be issued in India to make good home payments on account of territorial charges on Indian loans. The Court of Directors are to deliver to the Board, Copies of all proceedings, and of dispatches received relative to such appropriation; and no dispatches relative thereto are to be sent to India till approved by the Board: and the Board have two Months allowed (instead of 14 days under 33 Geo. 3.) to return dispatches laid before them by the Directors. The Secret Committee of the Directors are not to disclose the contents of any dispatches from their presidencies which relate to war, peace, or negociations, until authorised by the Board of controul. The Board may call for any accounts, &c. which the Directors shall furnish accordingly. Vacancies of governors and commanders in chief are to be filled by the Court of Directors subject to the royal approbation, countersigned by the president of the Board of Control. The approbation of the Board is required to the appointment of persons to civil and military officers of the Company in the East Indies. Members of council, general officers on the staff, advocate and attorney general, chaplains to the presidencies, writers, cadets and assistant surgeons, may be appointed by the Directors only.

2. The forms of government over the presidencies of Bengal, Fort St. George, and Madras, are continued in all their essential parts. For Bengal, by a Governor-General and three Members of Council. For each of the others, a Governor and three Members. These latter, with respect to treaties with the native powers of India, levying war, making peace, collecting and applying revenues, levying and employing forces, or other matters of civil or military government, are to be under the controul of the Government-General of Bengal; and are in all cases whatever to obey their orders; unless the Directors shall have sent to those settlements any orders repugnant thereto not known to the Government-general; of which, in that case, they are to give the Government-general immediate advice.

The Court of Directors are to appoint to these several governments; namely, the Governor-General, the two other Governors, and the Members of all the Councils; and likewise the Commander in Chief of all the Forces, and the three Provincial Commanders in Chief. None of the Commanders in Chief are, ex officio, to be of the Council, but they are not disqualified from being so if the Directors shall think fit to appoint them: and, when they are Members of the Council, they are to have precedence of the other Councillors.

The Directors may appoint to any of these offices provisionally, but without salary, till the persons appointed shall actually succeed in possession. Any vacancy of Governor General, or Governor, when no provisional successor is on the spot, is to be filled by the senior of the Civil Councillors till a successor shall arrive; and the vacant seat in Council thereby occasioned, shall be temporarily supplied from among the senior Merchans, at the nomination of the acting Governor-General, or Governor, if only one Councillor shall then remain: and on other occasions, the Governor-General and Governors may supply vacancies in Council from the list of senior Merchants, until successors duly appointed shall arrive to take their seats. In all these cases, the salaries and allowances are to follow the acting Members while in office. If the Directors fail to appoint to vacancies in two calendar months after notification thereof, the King may supply them, and the Directors shall not remove any person so appointed. In all other cases, the Directors have the power of recalling or dismissing any servants; and the like general power is vested in the Crown.

The Commander in Chief of all the Forces, when at either of the subordinate settlements is to have a seat at the Council Board, but is to have no salary in respect thereof; and if the provincial Commander is a Member of that Council, he may continue to deliberate, but his voice, shall be suspended as long as the other shall remain.

Provision is made for supplying the place of any Member of Council disabled from attending by illness.

The departure of any Governor, or Member of Government, or Commander in Chief, from India, with intent to come to Europe, or any written resignation delivered in by them, shall be deemed an avoidance of office, and the coming into any part of Europe, shall be a sufficient indication of that intent. No salary shall be payable to any officer, or his agent during absence, unless employed on actual service; and if any officer, unless absent on service, never returns, the salary is to be deemed to have ceased from the day of his quitting the settlement.

The act prescribes the order and method of conducting business, at the several Council Boards. Powers are given to the Governor General, or Governor, to act contrary to the opinions of the other Members of Council, taking upon themselves the sole responsibility.

Provision is made in case of the absence of the Governor-General, and his visiting any subordinate presidency; and in case he shall be in the field without a Council, all the governments and officers shall obey his orders, and he alone shall be responsible.

By 45 Geo. 3. c. 36. the Court of Directors may appoint the Commander in Chief on the Bengal establishment to be a Member of the Council of Fort William there, notwithstanding the office of Governor-General of Fort William, and that of Commander in Chief of all the Forces in India, shall be united in the same person.—The same act provides that such Commander shall have rank at the Board next to the Governor-General, but shall not succeed to the government in case of vacancy, unless he shall have been provisionally appointed to supply the same; but such vacancy shall be supplied by the Councillor next in rank.

All the governments are, by the act 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. laid under restrictions to prevent war or extension of dominion in India, unless hostilities against the Company or their Allies shall render war unavoidable. The Members of subordinate governments acting contrary to this act or to the directions of the Government General may be suspended or dismissed by that government, and further punished. The subordinate presidencies are also required to communicate all matters of importance to the superior government with all dispatch.

The Governor-General and other Governors, are vested with powers of apprehending persons suspected of illicit correspondence with the enemies of the Company, or of Great Britain. Witnesses are to be examined and cross-examined, and their evidence recorded; and the parties may either be tried in India, or sent home; in the latter case, the depositions of the witnesses are also to be sent home, and are to be received in evidence, subject to impeachment in respect to the competency of the witnesses.

To the acting President of the several Council Boards is given a casting vote in all cases of equality of voices.

By 42 Geo. 3. c. 29. the Company were authorised to reduce their Settlement of Fort Marlborough, (at Bencoolen in Sumatra,) to a Factory, subordinate to the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal: the servants, who thereby became supernumerary, were, under the act, transferred to Fort St. George.

By 53 G. 3. c. 155. §§ 42, 43. the Colleges and seminaries abroad are subjected to the Board of Controul. A lack of rupees is to be annually applied under the advice of the Governor General in Council, to the revival and improvement of literature, and the encouragement of the learned natives of India; subject, however, to the direction of the Board of Controul.

3. The Directors are to appoint so many cadets and writers only, as to supply vacancies according to returns from abroad. Their ages to be from fifteen to twenty-two; unless any cadet shall have been one year in the King's service, and then his age is not to exceed twenty-five years.

All shall have promotion by seniority of service only. Three years' service qualifies a civil servant for a place of 500*l.* a year—four years for one of 1500*l.*—seven years 3000*l.*—ten years 4000*l.* or upwards. None to take two offices where the joint emoluments shall exceed this rule. Two years of the time spent in the College established by the Company in England, by persons above seventeen years old, shall be reckoned as time spent in India. See stats. 24 Geo. 3. c. 25. 47 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 68. § 7. and 53 G. 3. c. 155. § 82. 86.

Nearly the same regulations are made by 33 G. 3. c. 52. relative to receiving presents, disobedience of orders, and bargaining for offices, as have been already mentioned in stat. 24 Geo. 3. c. 25. div. 3. All the King's subjects are made amenable to all courts of competent jurisdiction abroad, and at home for all crimes committed by them in India. The Company may compound civil actions, but are absolutely restricted from compounding or remitting any judgment or sentence whatever in criminal cases.

Servants of the Company, (under the degree of a Member of Council, or Commander in Chief, after five years absence, cannot return with their rank, nor serve again, unless detained by sickness, or unless it be by leave of the Company, on a ballot of three parts in four of the General Court. In case of sickness, the Directors are the judges in the civil service; and in the military, the Directors and the Board of Controul jointly. This is qualified by § 84 of 53 G. 3. c. 155. as to Generals and Colonels commanding regiments, who, by the joint permission of the Directors and Board of Controul, may return after five years; and by § 85 of that act, restored civil servants shall rank only according to their seniority at the time of their departure from India. By § 93 the Directors are empowered to grant allowances to superannuated servants.

4. The Company's term is extended to the 10th of April, 1831, subject to be determined at or after that period, on three years' previous notice by Parliament, signified by the Speaker of the House of Commons. During this term they are to enjoy the sole, and exclusive right of trading, trafficking, and using the business of merchandize in, to, and from the dominions of the Emperor of China; and the whole sole and exclusive right of trading and trafficking in Tea, in, to, and from all islands, ports, havens, coasts, cities, towns, and places between the Cape of Good Hope, and the straights of Magellan; and if the exclusive trade, thus limited, shall be hereafter discontinued, the Company are still to retain their corporate capacity, with power to trade with a joint stock, in common with other people. If, however, any new settlement shall be obtained from the Chinese government, separate from the Continent of Asia, an export trade thither is preserved, by 33 G. 3. to private merchants under certain regulations; and there is also a clause, in that act, to preserve to the Southern Whalers the benefit of their carrying trade into the Pacific Ocean, by the way of Cape Horn, to the northward of the Equator, limited to 180 degrees West Longitude of London: and ships from Nootka Sound are to be licensed to trade from thence with Japan and China, but are not to bring any goods of the produce or manufacture of those countries to Great Britain. See ante, III.

By 35 Geo. 3. c. 115. (continued by 42 Geo. 3. c. 20. § 6. during the continuance of the Company's exclusive right of trade under 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. and further by 53 G. 3. c. 155. § 30.) the importation of goods from India and China, and other parts within the limits of the Company's trade, is allowed in ships not of British built, or registered as such, having been taken up, and employed in the East Indies on account of the Company; and the same ships are allowed also to export goods to the East Indies as British-built ships; and this indulgence is extended to private traders.

By 42 Geo. 3. c. 77. British-built ships are permitted to carry on the Fisheries in the Pacific Ocean, which may pass through the Streights of Magellan, or round Cape Horn, &c. without licence from the East India Company, or the South Sea Company.

5. By 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. all persons were permitted to export and import goods to and from India, in the Company's ships; except that they shall not export military stores, ammunition, masts, spars, cordage, anchors, pitch, tar, or copper; nor import India callicoes, dimities, muslin, or other piece-goods, made or manufactured with silk or cotton, or with silk or cotton mixed, or with other mixed materials, unless it be done by leave of the Company. If the market shall not be sufficiently supplied with excepted articles, of import or export, (with an exception of military stores and copper,) the Board of Controul may open that trade also to individuals. If the Company should not export 1500 tons of copper, annually, private traders may export copper, in the Company's ships, to the amount of the deficiency.

So much of the act as required the Company to furnish private traders, with shipping, and the rate of freights thereon, &c. is repealed by 53 G. 3. c. 155. § 23.

The restrictions of the law against the Company's servants, or others, from acting as factors for foreigners, or lending money to foreign companies, or on buttomry of their ships, or assisting them with remittances by bills, were repealed by stat. 33 G. 3. c. 52. And all legal impediments to the recovery of debts, under any pretence that they were incurred illicitly, and against the letter of these abrogated laws, were removed; and all persons in India, not specially prohibited by the Company, or restricted by their covenants, were authorised to act as mercantile agents for any who may choose to employ them; and if there shall be a want of factors, (properly qualified and authorised) the Company are to license free merchants, with the approbation of the Board of Controul, so that there may be always a proper supply of agents for conducting the private trade abroad. But the becoming factors is not to exempt any persons from being amenable to the general authorities of the governments in India; and all agents are restricted from going beyond ten miles from some principal settlement without special leave.

By 37 Geo. 3. c. 97. § 22. the United States of America were allowed to trade to the British territories in India, conformable to the treaty of commerce with America, and during that treaty.

By 37 Geo. 3. c. 117. vessels of friendly countries may import into, and export from, the British possessions in India, goods permitted by the East India Directors, not contrary to treaties or law.

By stat. 53 Geo. 3. c. 155. any of his Majesty's subjects are allowed (after 10th April 1814) to trade to and from the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, from and to all ports and places within the Company's then existing limits, (except China), and to import ony goods (except Tea), the produce of any such places. But all persons, except the Company. or persons specially licensed by them, are prohibited from shipping any tea in the East Indies, or within the Company's limits, or importing it into the United Kingdom; and also from carrying military stores to any place on the continent of Asia, between the river Indus and the town of Malaccas, or in any island under the government of the Company, situate to the north of the Equator, or to the factory of Bencoolen.—All ships in private trade are to clear out from some port in the United Kingdom, and all goods imported in private trade are to be brought to some port in the United Kingdom, declared proper for that purpose by an Order of Council.—Other regulations are also imposed on such private trade, and a special reservation for future parliamentary provisions.—Ships engaged in the southern whale fishery, may sail between the Cape of Good Hope, and the Streights of Magellan.

6. All the old laws for preventing Clandestine Trade with India, and from lending to, or assisting, or being concerned with, Foreign Companies, or Foreign Traders, were by 33 Geo. 2. c. 52. repealed, and the following provisions substituted in their place: and by 53 Geo. 3. c. 155. these are extended to the clandestine trade to China, or in tea: observing that the penalties are made to extend to his Majesty's subjects of Great Britain, Ireland, Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, Sark, Man, Faro Isles, or the Colonies, Islands or Plantations in America or the West Indies; and that all vessels and goods forfeited may be seized by any of the Company's officers in China.

Persons going unlawfully to China, and trafficking there, forfeit ships, vessels, goods, and merchandize, and double the value thereof; one-fourth to the informers, and three-fourths to the Company, they paying thereout the costs of prosecution.

Persons unlawfully going to China, shall be deemed unlawful traders, and subject to the foregoing penalties and forfeitures, and may also be prosecuted as for a crime and misdemeanor, and be liable to fine and imprisonment. One moiety of the fine goes to the King, the other to the Company if they prosecute, or else to any other informer.

Persons unlawfully resorting to China may be seized and sent home for trial; and, on arrival, they are to give bail, or be committed to prison.

Persons dismissed the service, or whose licences shall have expired, if they continue in China, are to be considered as illicit traders, and are made subject to penalties and forfeitures of goods, &c. as such.

Goods shipped clandestinely, or such as are restricted by the act, and goods unshipped at sea, shall be seized and forfeited, with double the value; and the Master, or other officer, knowingly permitting or suffering the same, shall forfeit all his wages to the Company; to be deducted out of the monies payable to the owners and be disabled from again acting in the service.

Any who shall solicit for, or accept a foreign commission to sail to, and trade in, India, shall forfeit 500*l.* half to the Company, and half to the prosecutor, or the whole to the Company, if they shall prosecute.

All Governors and Councillors are prohibited from trading, except for the Company; and all Collectors, Supervisors, and others employed in the Revenues of Bengal, Bahar, and Orissa, or their agents, or any in trust for them, are prohibited from inland trade except for the Company. The judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature in Bengal are absolutely prohibited from traffic; and none, without the permission of the Company, shall trade in salt, beetle-nut, tobacco, or rice, on pain of forfeiture of the goods, and treble the value, one moiety to the Company, and the other to the prosecutor.

None shall send goods from China to the Continent of Europe by any other channel than as allowed by the act, on pain of forfeiture of double the value: but this restriction is not to extend to matters of agency, only on the account bonâ fide of any foreign Company, or foreign Merchant. See Division, 5.

By § 33. &c. of 53 G. 3. c. 155. reciting that it is the duty of this Country to promote the interest and happiness of the native inhabitants of the British dominions in India, and that such measures ought to be adopted as may tend to the introduction among them of useful knowledge, and of religious and moral improvement; and that in furtherance of the above objects sufficient facilities ought to be afforded by law to persons desirous of going to, or remaining in India, for those benevolent purposes, so as the authority of the local Governments as to the intercourse of Europeans be preserved, and the principles of the British Government, on which the nations of India have relied for the free exercise of their religion, be maintained: certain regulations are made for permitting persons to proceed to the East Indies, for the above or any other lawful purposes; if the Directors refuse such permission, they are to give their reasons to the Board of Controul, who may license or permit any persons to go to any places within certain bounds prescribed by § 38, 39 of the act. All persons going without licence or permission are subjected to the penalties of the act 33 Geo. 3. c. 52.

7. Appropriation. First in India. The territorial revenues are to be applied, in the first place, in defraying all charges of a military nature. Secondly, in payment of the interest of the debts there already, or hereafter to be, incurred. Thirdly, in payment of the civil and commercial establishments. Fourthly, towards the liquidation of the Company's territorial debt, or of the bond debt at home; or to such other purposes as the Directors, with the approbation of the Board of Controul, shall direct. And to prevent the commercial funds of the company from being exposed to embarrassments by payments made in Europe on account of territorial charges, a sum equal to such payments shall be annually applied in India for the purposes of investment or remittance. Stat. 53 G. 3. c. 155. § 55, 56.

Secondly, at home.—The net proceeds of their sales and other commercial profits are thus appropriated:—First in paying all bills of exchange;—secondly, in payment of current charges;—thirdly, in payment of dividend of 10½ per cent.—fourthly, in reduction of the Indian debt, or bond-debt at home, as the Directors and Board of Controul shall order.—The home profits shall not be liable to territorial charges, till after the dividend is provided for; except to bills and certificates for value received in India, and to interest and sinking fund on a loan of 2,500,000*l.* from the public to the Company, under 52 G. 3. c. 135. If the home funds are insufficient, after payment of the dividend, to discharge bills drawn for interest of existing Indian debts, the deficiency shall be paid as Parliament shall direct. It is provided, that money received at home on credit of bills drawn on territorial funds, or for advances in India, shall be applied to payment of territorial or political charges of the Company in Europe; and that any deficiency of commercial profits at home, to answer the annual dividend, shall be made good out of the surplus territorial revenues. Any surplus of the territorial revenues and home profits (after reduction of the Indian debt to ten millions, and of the home bonded debt to three millions) is to be applied as follows: first, in repayment of the capital of any public funds created for the Company.—Any further surplus to the amount of twelve millions is to be paid into the Exchequer, to be applied as Parliament shall direct, without any interest to be paid to the Company, but to be taken as a guarantee fund for securing the Company's stock and dividends at 10½ per cent.; and after such payment of twelve millions, one-sixth of all excess is to be the Company's, and the remaining five-sixths to be the property of the public, and disposable by Parliament. Stat. 53 Geo. 3. c. 155. § 57—59.

If the debts abroad, or the bond debt at home, after being reduced to the sums before limited, shall be again increased, the former appropriation is to be revived until those debts shall be again diminished to their respective standards before limited. 53 Geo. 3. c. 155. § 60.

The statute 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. recognized the rights of the Company, to a sum of 467,896*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.* in money, and 9750*l.* East India Stock, (which sums constitute the separate fund of the Company established under the act of 1781;) and it is observed that it will be more for the general interest of the Company to continue that money employed in trade, computing an interest upon it, and to make it a fund for a permanent increase to their dividend of 10*s. per cent.* than to draw it from their trading capital for any sudden distribution. And it then authorizes and limits the Company to make a dividend from this separate fund, and the interest thereof, after the rate of 10*s. per cent. per annum*, during their further term in the exclusive trade; and, at the end of the term, it gives them a power of disposing of the remainder of this fund as they shall think fit.

By 37 G. 3. c. 31. this 10*s. per cent.* was made payable out of the general profits: but by 53 G. 3. c. 155. § 62. it is again made payable out of this fund until it shall be exhausted, and then out of the general profits.

The Company are not to grant any pensions or new salaries beyond 200*l. per annum*, nor any gratuity above 600*l.* to any one person, without the consent of the Board of Controul; and they are to lay before Parliament annually a list of all their establishments abroad and at home; and also complete accounts of all their affairs, receipts and outgoings of the preceding year, with estimates of the following year; and copies of all warrants, &c. granting any salary, pension, or gratuity.

8. The statute (33 Geo. 3. c. 52.) gives a right of suing by action, bill, or information, in any of the courts of Westminster, (in which case the venue is to be laid in London or Middlesex,) or in the supreme courts of judicature in Bengal, or the Mayor's court at Madras or Bombay; and in such suits the legality of seizures of persons, ships, or goods, is made cognizable. In cases of misdemeanors, the offenders are punishable by fine and imprisonment; and if abroad, they may be sent home, as part of the punishment; and a capias, for arresting the accused party, is given in the first instance, which may be compounded for by bail.

For securing to the crown the duties for goods unlawfully trafficked with, in the cases of forfeiture of goods, the Attorney-General may prosecute the offenders, or their partners, by bills in a court of equity, waving penalties, and the defendants shall make full discovery of their illicit traffic upon oath, and shall be decreed to pay all the duties thereupon to government, and 30*l. per cent.* on the value of the goods to the Company, and shall be relieved against all other forfeitures. The Company may, in like manner, proceed against offenders by bill in equity, and if they fail they shall pay costs. Defendants are to pay costs to the Crown and to the Company, when the decree shall be against them. Other usual regulations are made as to informers, pleading, &c.

9. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William in causes of Admiralty, is made to extend to the High Seas at large; whereby a defect in stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 63. for constituting that court is cured.

For increasing the number of magistrates in Bengal, Madras and Bombay, the supreme court of judicature in Bengal is to issue commissions of the peace, in pursuance of orders issued in council for that purpose; and any of the justices, so appointed, may, by order in council, sit also in the courts of oyer and terminer, taking the oaths of justices in England, (excepting the oath prescribed by the act of the 18 Geo. 2. relating to qualification by estate.) The proceedings and judgments of justices may be removed to the court of oyer and terminer by certiorari, but cannot be set aside for want of form, but on the merits only. The justices may also associate with the judges, in causes appealed, when called upon so to do.

The Governments abroad may appoint coroners to take inquests upon the bodies of persons coming to an untimely end and appoint fees to be paid for that duty.

The justices of the peace may appoint scavengers, and raise money by assessments, for cleansing, watching, and repairing the streets of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay; they may also license houses for retailing spirituous liquors, and fix the limits of those towns; and none are to retail spirits but such as they shall so license, under the penalties of the laws of Great Britain.

By 47 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 68. the Governor and Council at Madras and Bombay, are empowered to make regulations for the good order of those towns and their dependencies; subject to the appeal given by 13 Geo. 3. c. 63.—The Governor and Council at Bombay may make regulations for the Provincial Courts.—The Governors and Council of Madras and Bombay are made justices of peace for those towns, and empowered to issue commissions to the Company's servants to be justices of the peace in the places subordinate to the respective councils, without controul from the Governor-General and Council at Fort William.

By 37 Geo. 3. c. 142. § 28—30. British subjects are prohibited from lending any money, or being concerned in raising any, for native Princes, without the consent of the Court of Directors, or the Governor in Council at the settlement.—Persons offending may be prosecuted for a misdemeanor, and the securities are declared void.—See 46 Geo. 3. c. 133. for carrying into effect an agreement between the Company and the private creditors of the Nabobs of the Carnatic.

By 47 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 68. &c. the several governments in India, are empowered to establish public banks there: and the Company's servants are allowed to subscribe to them. No judge of the courts there can be a director. § 8, 9, 10.

By 53 Geo. 3. c. 155. § 49—54. after reciting that no sufficient provision hath hitherto been made for the maintenance and support of a Church-establishment in the British territories in the East Indies, and other parts within the limits of the Company's charter, it is enacted that the King shall erect one Bishoprick, for the whole of the British territories in the East Indies, &c. and three Archdeaconries, for the three presidencies of Fort William in Bengal, Fort St. George on the Coast of Coromandel, and Bombay: the salaries of such Bishop and Archdeacons shall be paid by the Company; the jurisdiction of the Bishop to be ascertained by his patent; and after fifteen years' residence, the King may grant them pensions payable by the Company.

By 53 Geo. 3. c. 155. § 96, 97. the Governments in India are empowered to make articles of war for the native troops, and to hold courts-martial.—By § 98, &c. the Governor-General and Council at Fort William, Madras, Bombay, and Prince of Wales's Island, are empowered to impose duties, customs, and taxes, under certain regulations.—By § 101, 104. & 123. provision is made for the summary conviction and punishment by fine of British subjects being or remaining in India without or beyond the term of licence granted to them. Such persons may be sent home without being afterwards prosecuted. By § 102, 103. 105—122. several regulations are made for the administering justice in civil and criminal cases upon the principles of the law of England, as adapted to the circumstances as well of the natives as of the British Residents.

10. The Acts or parts of Acts repealed by 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. are as follows: stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 44. § 81.—The whole of the temporary stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 21. and so much of the several statutes as continued it in force.—Stat. 7 Geo. 1. c. 21. § 1. to § 9.—The whole of stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 26.—Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 14. § 9.—Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 17. § 11.—Stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 47. § 1 & 2.—Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 63. § 23. to § 29. and § 32 to § 35.—Stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 65. § 29.—Stat. 24 Geo. 3. c. 25. § 3. 13. 29. and 31.—The whole of Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 16. and Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 57. § 32, 33.

The repeal is not to extend to offences committed before the commencement of the act, nor is it to affect the powers of the former Board of Controul, until a new one shall be appointed; nor to affect the powers given to the Board by stats. 28 G. 3. c. 8. 31 G. 3. c. 10. concerning the forces in India.

By 53 Geo. c. 155. § 21. so much of 31 G. 3. c. 42. is repealed as requires the Company to put up to sale or reserve for Government certain quantities of salt-petre at specific rates.—By § 22. so much 9 W. 3. c. 44. is repealed as requires goods of private traders imported to be sold by inch of candle.—By § 23. 26. so much of 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. as related to private trade in the Company's ships, and the duties payable to the Company thereon, are repealed; except as to goods deposited in the Company's warehouses.—By § 61. of the same act, so much of 33 G. 3. c. 52. as relates to any payments to be made by the Company into the Exchequer or the Bank is repealed.

The exclusive right of trading granted to the Company by 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 44. has never been put an end to, and any infringement of it is a public wrong; and though such parts of that act, as inflicted penalties, &c. were repealed by 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. which enacts that no acts, or parts of acts, thereby repealed shall be pleaded, or set up in bar of any action, &c. it is competent to underwriters, who have subscribed policies on ships trading to the East Indies, in contravention of the statute of William 3. to avail themselves of the illegality of such trading in an action brought on the policies. 6 Term Rep. K. B. 723. 1 Bos. & Pul. 272.

11. By 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. A special oath is prescribed to be taken in future by the Directors of the Company, prohibitory of their acting as Directors when concerned in buying from, or selling to, the Company any goods; and prohibitory of their being concerned in any shipping employed by the Company, or accepting any present for any appointment of office, or of being concerned in any private trade contrary to the act.

By 36 Geo. 3. c. 119. and c. 127. the Company were empowered to purchase houses and ground to enlarge their warehouses.

By 37 Geo. 3. c. 74. they were allowed to pay two regiments of infantry for defence of their houses and warehouses.

By 39 Geo. 3. c. 109. (as combined with the general annual mutiny acts) the recruiting the forces of the Company in England is regulated. Till embarkation they are governed under the mutiny acts; and afterwards, under 27 Geo. 2. c. 9. &c. See ante, III.

By 43 Geo. 3. c. 83. the Company were empowered to defray the expence of volunteer corps raised by them for the protection of their warehouses and property in London.

By 55 Geo. 3. c. 153. § 44. &c. after reciting that the Company had lately established in England a college for the appropriate education of young men designed for their civil service in India; and also a military seminary for the military service, and that it was fit that they should be maintained and proper regulations made for their government; the Directors are empowered to make such regulations with the approbation of the Board of Controul.—The Bishop of London is to exercise a visitatorial jurisdiction over the college.—No person shall be appointed a writer who has not kept four terms at the college.

EASTINUS, Sax. East-Tyne.] An Easterly coast or country; also the East street, East side of a river, &c. Leg. K. Ed. 1.

EASTLAND COMPANY. This Company subsisted under a charter granted by Queen Elizabeth in 1579, for regulating the commerce into the East country; a name anciently given, and still continued by mercantile people, to the ports of the Baltic sea, more particularly those of Prussia and Livonia. They were by this charter to enjoy the sole trade, through the Sound, into Norway, Sweden, Poland, Lithuania, (excepting Narva, which was within the charter of the Russia Company), Prussia, and also Pomerania, from the river Oder, eastward, Dantzick, Elbing, and Koningsburgh: also to Copenhagen and Elsinore, and to Finland, Gothland, Bornholm, and Oeland. This charter was confirmed by another from Charles I. in 1629.

By the stat. 25 Car. 2. c. 7. the following provisions were made for laying open a very considerable part of this trade: it was declared lawful for any native or foreigner, at all times, to have free liberty to trade into and from Sweden, Denmark, and Norway, notwithstanding the charter to the Eastland Merchants, or any other charter.—And further, that every person, being a subject of this realm, might be admitted into the fellowship of merchants of Eastland on paying 40*s.* and no more. § 5, 6.—Which latter provision made the trade to the other parts within the limits of the charter easily accessible.

EAT INDE SINE DIE. Words used on the acquittal, &c. of a defendant, &c. that he may go without day, i. e. be dismissed. See title Judgment.

EAVES-DROPPERS. Persons that listen under walls or windows, or the eaves of a house, to hearken after discourse, and thereupon to frame slanderous and mischievous tales, are a common nuisance, and presentable at the court-leet; or are indictable at the sessions, and punishable by fine, and finding sureties for good behaviour. Kitch. of Courts, 20. 4 Comm. 169. See title Good Behaviour.

EBDOMADARIUS. An ebdomadary or officer, appointed weekly in cathedral churches, to supervise the regular performance of divine service, and prescribe the particular duties of each person attending in the choir, as to reading, singing, praying, &c. To which purpose the ebdomadary, at the beginning of his week, drew, in form, a bill or writing of the respective persons, and their several offices, called tabula; whereupon the persons there entered were styled intabulati: This is manifested in the statutes of the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, digested by Dr. Ralph Baldock, Dean of St. Paul's, anno 1295. MSS.

EBEREMORTH, EBEREMORS, EBEREMURDER, Sax.] Bare or downright murder. Leg. H. 1. c. 12. See title Aberemurder.

ECCLESIA, Lat.] The place where God is served, commonly called a church: But in law proceedings, according to Fitzherbert, this word intends a parsonage; for so he expresses it in a question, whether a benefice was ecclesia sive capella, &c. F. N. B. 32. 2 Inst. 363.

ECCLESIÆ SCULPTURA. The image or sculpture of a church in ancient times, which was often cut out or cast in plate or other metal, and preserved as a religious treasure or relic, and to perpetuate the memory of some famous churches. Mon. Ang. tom. 3. p. 309.

ECCLESIASTICAL. Denotes something belonging to, or set apart for the church; as distinguished from civil or secular, with regard to the world.

ECCLESIASTICAL CORPORATIONS. Are where the members that compose it are spiritual persons. They were erected for the furtherance of religion, and perpetuating the rights of the church. See title Corporation.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS. See title Courts Ecclesiastical.

ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION. By stat. 37 H. 8. c. 17. the doctors of the civil law, although they be laymen, &c. may exercise ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAWS. See titles Canon Law, Courts Ecclesiastical.

ECCLESIASTICAL PERSONS, OR ECCLESIASTICS. Ecclesiastici.] Churchmen, persons whose functions consist in performing the service, and keeping up the discipline of the church. See title Clergy.

EDESTIA. From Ædes, used in some old charters for buildings.

EDIA. Aid or Help: Thus Du Fresne interprets it; but Cowel says it signifies Ease.

EDICT, Edictum.] An ordinance or command; a statute, Lat. Law Dict.

EDICTAL CITATION. In Scotch Law, a citation against a foreigner not within Scotland, but who has a landed estate there, or against a native who is out of Scotland. The citation is published at the market cross of Edinburgh, and pier and shore of Leith, and is authorised partly by necessity, partly by the idea that whoever is possessed of property there, will have left a warrant with some one to attend to his interest in that court where alone any question in relation to it can be tried.

EEL-FARES. A fry or brood of eels. Stat. 25 H. 8.

EFFECTUAL ADJUDICATION. A legal security for a debt on the estate of the Creditor in Scotland. See stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 74. § 11.

EFFEERERS, (or Affeerers.) Persons appointed to set and assess fines in courts leet, &c.

EFFORCIALITER. Forcibly; as applied to military force.—Mat. Paris, anno 1213.

EFFRACTORES, Lat.] Breakers applied to burglars, that break open houses to steal.

EFTERS, Sax.] Ways, walks, or hedges. Blount.

EFFUSIO SANGUINIS. The mulct, fine, or penalty imposed by the old English laws for the shedding of blood, which the King granted to many lords of manors: And this privilege, among others, was granted to the abbot of Glastonbury. Cartular. MSS.

EGYPTIANS, Egyptiani.] Commonly called Gypsies.—These are a strange kind of common-wealth among themselves, of wandering impostors and jugglers who made their first appearance in Germany, about the beginning of the sixteenth century, and have since spread themselves all over Europe and Asia. They were originally called Zinganees by the Turks, from their captain Zinganeus, who, when Sultan Selim conquered Egypt, about the year 1517, refused to submit to the Turkish yoke, and retired into the desarts, where they lived by rapine and plunder, and frequently came down into the plains of Egypt, committing great outrages in the towns upon the Nile, under the dominion of the Turks. But being at length subdued, and banished from Egypt, they dispersed themselves in small parties, into every country in the known world; and as they were natives of Egypt, a country where the occult sciences, or black art, as it was called, was supposed to arrive to great perfection, and which in that credulous age, was in great vogue with persons of all religions and persuasions, they found the people wherever they came, very easily imposed on. Mod. Univ. Hist. Vol. 43. p. 271.

In the compass of a very few years, they gained such a number of idle proselytes, who imitated their language and complexion, and betook themselves to the same arts of chiromancy, begging and pilfering, that they became troublesome and even formidable to most of the States of Europe. Hence they were expelled from France in the year 1560, and from Spain in 1591. And the government in England, took the alarm much earlier, for in 1530, they are described by stat. 22 Hen. 8. c. 10. as "outlandish people, calling themselves Egyptians, using no craft or seat of merchandize, who have come into this realm, and gone from shire to shire, and place to place in great company, and used great, subtil, and crafty means to deceive the people; bearing them in hand, that they by palmestry could tell men and women fortunes; and so many times by craft and subtilty have deceived the people of their money, and have also committed many heinous felonies and robberies." Wherefore they are directed to avoid [depart] the realm, and not to return, under pain of imprisonment, and forfeiture of their goods and chattels; and, upon their trials for any felonies which they might have committed, they shall not be entitled to a jury de medietate linguæ. And afterwards it was enacted by stats. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 4. 5 Eliz. c. 20. that if any such persons shall be imported into this kingdom, the importer shall forfeit 40*l*. And if the Egyptians themselves remain one month in this kingdom; or if any person, being 14 years old, whether a natural born subject or stranger, which hath been seen or found in the fellowship of such Egyptians, or which hath disguised him, or herself like them, shall remain in the same one month, at one or several times; it is felony, without benefit of clergy. And Sir Matthew Hale informs us, that at one Suffolk assizes, no less than thirteen gypsies were executed upon these statutes, a few years before the Restoration. But, to the honour of our national humanity, there are no instances more modern than this, of carrying these laws into execution. 4 Comm. 165, 6. Now by stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 51. the said act of 5 Eliz. c. 20. is repealed. And the stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. (see title Vagrants) regards them only under the denomination of rogues and vagabonds. The Scotch act 1690. c. 13. is understood to be still in force.

EJECTA. A woman ravished or deflowered; or cast forth from the virtuous. Ejectus, a whoremonger. Blount.

EJECTIONE CUSTODIÆ. Ejectment de Garde.] Is a writ which lieth against him that casteth out the guardian from any land during the minority of the heir. Reg. Orig. 162. F. N. B. 139. There are two other writs not unlike this; the one termed ravishment de gard, and the other droit de gard. See title Guardian.

EJECTIONE FIRMÆ; OR EJECTMENT.

An action at law by which a person ousted or amoved from the possession of an estate for years, may recover that possession: and which action is now used as the general mode of trying disputed titles to lands and tenements.—See 3 Comm. 199. from whence the subsequent matter is extracted with addition from other sources.

A writ of Ejectione firmæ, or action of trespass in Ejectment lieth where lands or tenements are let for a term of years, and afterwards the lessor, reversioner, remainder-man, or any stranger, doth eject or oust the lessee of his term. F. N. B. 220. In this case he shall have his writ of ejection or Ejectment; to call the defendant to answer for entering on the lands so demised to the plaintiff for a term that is not yet expired and ejecting him. And by this writ the plaintiff shall recover back his term or the remainder of it, with damages.

Since the disuse of real actions, this mixt proceeding is become the common method of trying the title to lands or tenements. It is therefore necessary to delineate its history, the manner of its process, and the principles whereon it is grounded.

The writ of covenant, for breach of the contract contained in the lease for years, was anciently the only specific remedy for recovering against the lessor a term from which he had ejected his lessee, together with damages for the ouster. But if the lessee was ejected by a stranger claiming under a title superior to that of the lessor or by a grantor of the reversion, (who might at any time by a common recovery have destroyed the term,) though the lessee might still maintain an action of covenant against the lessor, for non-performance of his contract or lease, yet he could not by any means recover the term itself. F. N. B. 145. If the ouster was committed by a mere stranger, without any title to the land, the lessor might indeed, by a real action recover possession of the freehold, but the lessee had no other remedy against the ejector but in damages, by a writ of ejectione firmæ, for the trespass committed in ejecting him from his farm. But afterwards, when the courts of equity began to oblige the ejector to make a specific restitution of the land to the party immediately injured, the courts of law also adopted the same method of doing complete justice; and, in the prosecution of a writ of ejectment, introduced a species of remedy not warranted by the original writ, nor prayed by the declaration; (which are calculated for damages merely, and are silent as to any restitution;) viz. a judgment to recover the term, and a writ of possession thereupon. This method seems to have been settled as early as the reign of Edward IV. though it hath been said to have first begun under Hen. VII. because it probably was then first applied to its present principal use, that of trying the title of the land. Bro. Ab. F. N. B. 220.

The better to apprehend the contrivance, whereby this end is effected, it is to be recollected that the remedy by ejectment is, in its original, an action brought by one who hath a lease for years, to repair the injury done him by dispossession. In order therefore to convert it into a method of trying titles to the freehold, it is first necessary that the claimant do take possession of the lands, to empower him to constitute a lessee for years, that may be capable of receiving this injury of dispossession. For it would be an offence, called in our law maintenance, to convey a title to another, when the grantor is not in possession of the land: and indeed it was doubted at first, whether this occasional possession, taken merely for the purpose of conveying the title, excused the lessor from the legal guilt of maintenance. 1 Ch. Rep. Ap. 39.

When therefore a person, who hath a right of entry into lands, determines to acquire that possession, which is wrongfully withheld by the present tenant, he makes (as by law he may) a formal entry on the premises, and being so in the possession of the soil, he there, upon the land, seals and delivers a lease for years to some third person or lessee; and, having thus given him entry, leaves him in possession of the premises. This lessee is to stay upon the land, till the prior tenant, or he who had the previous possession, enters thereon a-fresh and ousts him; or till some other person (either by accident or by agreement beforehand) comes upon the land, and turns him out, or ejects him. For this injury the lessee is entitled to his action of ejectment against the tenant; or his casual ejector, whichever it was that ousted him, to recover back his term and damages. But where this action is brought against such a casual ejector as is before mentioned, and not against the very tenant in possession, the Court will not suffer the tenant to lose his possession without an opportunity to defend it. Wherefore it is a standing rule, that no plaintiff shall proceed in ejectment to recover lands against a casual ejector, without notice given to the tenant in possession (if any there be) and making him a defendant if he pleases. And, in order to maintain the action, the plaintiff must, in case of any defence, make out four points before the court; viz. Title, Lease, Entry, and Ouster. First, he must shew a good title in his lessor, which brings the matter of right entirely before the Court; then, that the lessor, being seised or possessed by virtue of such title, did make him the lease for the present term; thirdly, that he, the lessee, or plaintiff did enter or take possession in consequence of such lease; and then, lastly, that the defendant ousted, or ejected him. Whereupon he shall have judgment to recover his term and damages; and shall in consequence, have a writ of possession, which the sheriff is to execute by delivering him the undisturbed and peaceable possession of his term.

This is the regular method of bringing an action of ejectment, in which the title of the lessor comes collaterally and incidentally before the Court, in order to shew the injury done to the lessee by this ouster. This method must be still continued in due form and strictness, (save only as to the notice to the tenant,) whenever the possession is vacant, or there is no actual occupant of the premises; and also in some other cases. But, as much trouble and formality were found to attend the actual making of the lease, entry, and ouster, a new, and more easy method of trying titles by writ of ejectment, where there is any actual tenant or occupier of the premises in dispute, was invented by the Lord Chief Justice Rolle. Styl. Pract. Reg. 108. (edit. 1657).

This new method entirely depends upon a string of legal fictions; no actual lease is made, no actual entry by the plaintiff, no actual ouster by the defendant, but all are merely ideal, for the sole purpose of trying the title. To this end, in the proceedings, a lease for a term of years is stated to have been made, by him who claims title, to the plaintiff who brings the action; as by John Rogers to Richard Smith, which plaintiff ought to be some real person, and not merely an ideal fictitious one, who hath no existence, as is frequently, though unwarrantably, practised. 6 Mod. 309. It is also stated, that Smith the lessee entered; and that the defendant William Stiles, who is called the casual ejector, ousted him; for which ouster he brings this action. As soon as this action is brought, and the complaint fully stated in the declaration, Stiles, the casual ejector, or defendant, sends a written notice to the tenant in possession of the lands, e. g. George Saunders, informing him of the action brought by Smith, and transmitting him a copy of the declaration; withal assuring him that he, Stiles, the defendant, has no title at all to the premises, and shall make no defence; and therefore advising the tenant to appear in court and defend his own title; otherwise he, the casual ejector, will suffer judgment to be had against him, and thereby the actual tenant, Saunders, will inevitably be turned out of possession. On receipt of this caution, if the tenant in possession does not, within a limited time, apply to the court to be admitted a defendant in the stead of Stiles, he is supposed to have no right at all; and, upon judgment being had against Stiles, the casual ejector, Saunders, the real tenant, will be turned out of possession by the sheriff.

But if the tenant in possession applies to be made a defendant, it is allowed him upon this condition; that he enter into a rule of court, to confess, at the trial of the cause, three of the four requisites for the maintenance of the plaintiff's action; viz. the lease of Rogers the lessor, the entry of Smith the plaintiff, and his ouster by Saunders himself, now made the defendant, instead of Stiles: which requisites being wholly fictitious, should the defendant put the plaintiff to prove them, he must of course be non-suited for want of evidence; but by such stipulated confession of lease, entry, and ouster, the trial will now stand upon the merits of the title only.

This done, the declaration is altered by inserting the name of George Saunders (the tenant) instead of William Stiles, and the cause goes down to trial under the name of Smith (the plaintiff) on the demise of Rogers (the lessor) against Saunders, the now defendant. And herein the lessor of the plaintiff is bound to make out a clear title, otherwise his fictitious lessee cannot obtain judgment to have possession of the land for the term supposed to be granted. But if the lessor makes out his title in a satisfactory manner, then judgment and a writ of possession shall go for Smith, the nominal plaintiff, who, by this trial, has proved the right of Rogers, his supposed lessor.

Yet, to prevent fraudulent recoveries of the possession, by collusion with the tenant of the land, all tenants are obliged by stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. on pain of forfeiting three years' rent, to give notice to their landlords when they are served with any declaration in ejectment: and any landlord may, by leave of the court, be made a co-defendant to the action, in case the tenant himself appears to it, or, if he makes default, though judgment must be then signed against the casual ejector, yet execution shall be stayed, in case the landlord applies to be made a defendant, and enters into the common rule; a right which, indeed, the landlord had long before the provision of statute (Styl. Pract. Reg. 108. 111. 265. 7 Mod. 70. Salk. 257. Burr. 1301.) in like manner as (previous to the statute of West. 2. c. 3.) if, in a real action, the tenant of the freehold made default, the remainder-man or reversioner had a right to come in and defend the possession, lest, if judgment were had against the tenant, the estate of those behind should be turned to a naked right. Bract. lib. 5. c. 10. § 14.

A third person cannot defend as landlord upon the trial of an ejectment, where it appears that the tenant in possession came in as tenant to the lessor of the plaintiff, and paid rent to him under an agreement that has expired. Doe d. Knight v. Smythe (Lady). Term Rep. K. B. Mic. 56 Geo. 3. 347.

Ejectment may be brought by a mortgagee, without giving notice to quit, against one who was let into possession, as tenant from year to year, by the mortgagor, after the mortgage made to the original mortgagee, but before the assignment of it to the lessor. 3 East's Rep. 449.

In ejectment for a chapel, the parson can only defend for a right to enter and perform divine service. Str. 914.—Notwithstanding 1 Salk 250. no man is to be admitted tenant or defendant in ejectment by the common rule, unless he hath been in possession, or received rent, and not a mere stranger. Comb. 209.

He who claims title shall be joined as a defendant, though the plaintiff opposes it. 1 Salk. 256. And, therefore, even the wife of the lessor. 1 Salk. 257.

The court permitted an heir, who had never been in possession, to come in and defend the ejectment. The father, under whom he claimed, died just after having first obtained a similar rule. 4 Term Rep. 122. So a mortgagee. Comberb. 399. As to a cestui que trust, see 3 Term Rep. 783. 4 Term Rep. 122.

In ejectment the legal title must prevail. Term Rep. K. B. ii. 682. vii. 47. Nor is there any difference in this respect between the case of an ejectment brought by a trustee against his cestui que trust, and an ejectment brought by any other person. 8 Term Rep. K. B. 122.

When ejectment is brought after a fine levied by a defendant, but before all the proclamations have been made, it is not necessary for the lessor to prove an actual entry to avoid such fine: but by the defendant's confessing lease, entry, and ouster the merits only of the lessor's title are put in issue. 9 East's Rep. 17.

Where a pauper had been put into possession of a cottage 40 years before by the then overseers, and had continued in the parish pay, and the cottage had at times been repaired by the overseers; the pauper disposed of it and went away: held, that the existing overseers could not maintain ejectment for it. 14 East Rep. 488.

Though a purchaser for a valuable consideration may recover in ejectment, against one who claims only under a voluntary settlement, of which such purchasor had notice, yet it seems that the inadequacy of such consideration is material if it extend so far as to shew that it was only made colourably to get rid of the first settlement, and make another voluntary settlement. 16 East Rep. 212.

If a sheriff sell a term under a fi. fa. which is afterwards set aside, and the produce of the sale directed to be returned to the termor, he cannot maintain ejectment to recover his term against the vendee under the sheriff. 1 Maul. & Selw. Rep. 425.

The court will not, after a plaintiff has obtained judgment and possession in an undefended ejectment without collusion, and has sold part of the premises and transferred the possession, let in a landlord to defend, from whom his tenants had concealed the ejectment. 4 W. P. Taunton, 820.

But the court will set aside a writ of hab. fac. poss. executed, and let in a landlord to try an ejectment, on suggestion of collusion. 5 W. P. Taunton, 205.

If the new defendants, whether landlord or tenant, or both, after entering into the common rule, fail to appear at the trial, and to confess lease, entry, and ouster, the plaintiff Smith must indeed be there non-suited, for want of proving those requisites: but judgment will in the end be entered against the casual ejector, Stiles; for the condition on which Saunders (the tenant), or his landlord, was admitted a defendant, is broken, and therefore the plaintiff is put again in the same situation as if he never had appeared at all; the consequence of which (we have seen) would have been, that judgment would have been entered for the plaintiff, and the sheriff, by virtue of a writ for that purpose, would have turned out the tenant Saunders, and delivered possession to Smith the plaintiff. The same process therefore, as would have been had, provided no conditional rule had ever been made, must now be pursued as soon as the condition is broken.

The damages recovered in these actions, though formerly their only intent, are now usually (since the title has been considered as the principal question) merely nominal, as 1*s.* In order, therefore, to complete the remedy, when the possession has been long detained from him that had the right to it, an action of trespass also lies, after a recovery in ejectment, to recover the mesne profits which the tenant in possession has wrongfully received. Which action may be brought in the name of either the nominal plaintiff in the ejectment, or his lessor, against the tenant in possession: whether he be made party to the ejectment, or suffers judgment to go by default. In this case, the judgment in ejectment is conclusive evidence against the defendant, for all profits which have accrued since the date of the demise stated in the former declaration of the plaintiff; but if the plaintiff sues for any antecedent profits, the defendant may make a new defence. 4 Burr. 668.

Such is the modern way of obliquely bringing in question the title to lands and tenements, in order to try it in this collateral manner; a method which is now universally adopted in almost every case. It is founded on the same principles as the ancient writs of assize, being calculated to try the mere possessory title to an estate; and hath succeeded to those real actions, as being infinitely more convenient for attaining the ends of justice; because the form of the proceeding being entirely fictitious, it is wholly in the power of the court to direct the application of that fiction, so as to prevent fraud and chicane, and eviscerate the very truth of the title. The writ of ejectment and its nominal parties (as was resolved by all the judges) are judicially to be considered as the fictitious form of an action, really brought by the lessor of the plaintiff against the tenant in possession; invented, under the controul and power of the court, for the advancement of justice in many respects; and to force the parties to go to trial on the merits, without being entangled in the nicety of pleadings on either side. 4 Burr. 668. See also 3 Burr. 1294, 6.

But a writ of ejectment is not an adequate means to try the title of all estates, for on those things, whereon an entry cannot in fact be made, no entry shall be supposed by any fiction of the parties. Therefore an ejectment will not lie of an advowson, a rent, a common, or other incorporeal hereditaments. Brownl. 129. Cro. Car. 492. Str. 54. Except for tithes in the hands of lay appropriators, by the express purview of stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 7. which doctrine hath since been extended by analogy to tithes in the hands of the clergy. Cro. Car. 301. 2 Ld. Raym. 789. Nor will it lie in such cases where the entry of him that hath right is taken away by descent, discontinuance, twenty years dispossession, or otherwise.

More particularly, for what things ejectment will lie. Ejectment ought to be brought for a thing that is certain; and if it be of a manor, the manor of A. with the appurtenances; if of a rectory, the rectory of B. &c. And so many messuages, cottages, acres of arable land, meadow, &c. with the appurtenances in the parish of, &c. For land must be distinguished, how much of one sort, and how much of another, &c. Cro. Eliz. 339. 3 Leon. 13. Ejectment lies of a church, as of an house called the parish church of, &c. And a church is a messuage, by which name it may be recovered: and the declaration is to be served on the parson who performs divine service. 11 Rep. 25. 1 Salk. 256.

A Rector may recover in ejectment against his lessee, on the ground of the lease of the rectory being avoided on account of his own non-residence, by force of the 13 Eliz. c. 20. and the lease to the defendant, describing him as doctor in divinity, produced by him at the trial in support of his title, is primâ facie evidence of his being such as he is therein described to be, so as to avoid the lease under stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 13. § 3. 2 East's Rep. 467.

It lies de uno messuagio sive burgagio; but not de uno messuagio sive tenemento, unless it have a vocat' A. &c. to make it good, because of the uncertainty of the word tenement. 1 Sid 295. But for a messuage and tenement hath been allowed. 1 Term Rep. 11. So indeed for a messuage or tenement. 3 Wils. 23. 3 Mod. 328. 1 Sid. 295. but see contra, 1 East's Rep. 441, 2. It will lie for a moiety, or third part of a manor or messuage, &c. And for a chamber or room of a house well set forth. 11 Rep. 55. 59. 3 Leon. 210. It lieth de domo, which hath convenient certainty for the sheriff to deliver possession, &c. Cro. Jac. 654. It lies of a cottage or curtilage; of a coal-mine, &c. but not of a common, piscary, &c. Cro. Jac. 150. For underwood it lies, though a præcipe doth not. 2 Roll. Rep. 482, 483. But for uno clauso, or una pecia terræ, &c. without certainty of the acres, and their nature, it doth not lie. 11 Rep. 55. 4 Mod. 1. It lieth of a close, containing three acres of pasture, &c. Also of so many acres of land covered with water; though not de aquæ cursu. Cro. Jac. 435. 1 Brownl. 242. It lies for a prebendal stall, after collation to it. 1 Wils. 14.

After verdict for a messuage and tenement the court gave leave to enter the verdict according to the judge's rules for the messuage only, without obliging the lessor of the plaintiff to release the damages. 8 E. R. 357.

If copyhold descends by custom to all the children equally of the tenant last seised, one of the joint tenants may maintain an ejectment on his single demise for his own share. 12 E. R. 39.

If four tenants in common jointly demise, from year to year, such of them as give notice to quit may recover their several shares in ejectment on their several demises. 3 W. P. T. 120.

Ejectment lies by the owner of the soil for land which is part of the King's Highway, or of an acre of land, described only by the name of land, though there was a wall, and porch, and part of a house built on it. 1 Burr. 133.

In this action the law requires, that the thing demanded be so particularly specified, that the sheriff may certainly know what to give the possession of, if the plaintiff should recover; for the judgment is in order to execution, and the judgment would be vain, if execution could not be had of the thing specifically demanded; but in this action the judges did not confine themselves to those rules which govern the præcipe, but allowed some things to be recovered in this action, which could not be demanded in a præcipe; because, since the establishment of that real action, many things have been added and improved by art, and acquired new appellations, that are perfectly understood now by the law, which are not found in the ancient law books; and as men began to contract by new names, which were not known in the old law, so it was reasonable to suffer the remedy to follow the nature of such contracts. See 2 Ld. Raym. 1470. 2 Stra. 908. 1 Burr. 629.—And, in general, ejectment does not lie without showing the quantity and quality of the land, and how many acres of arable, meadow, and pasture, &c. 11 Co. 55. 1 Salk. 254. 4 Mod. 97.

An Ejectment is a possessory remedy, and only competent where the lessor of the plaintiff may enter; therefore it is always necessary for the plaintiff to shew that his lessor had a right to enter, by proving a possession within twenty years, or accounting for the want of it, under some exceptions allowed by the statute; twenty years' adverse possession is a positive title to the defendant; it is not a bar to the action or remedy for the plaintiff only, but takes away his right of possession. 1 Burr. 119. Every plaintiff must shew a right of possession as well as of property, and therefore the defendant needs not plead the statute, as in the case of actions. Ibid.

A judgment in ejectment is the recovery of the possession; (not of the seisin or freehold,) without prejudice to the right, as it may afterwards appear between the parties. He who enters under it in truth and substance, can only be possessed according to right, prout lex postulat. If the lessor have a freehold, he is in as a freeholder: if he has a chattel interest, he is in as a termor; and in respect of the freehold, his possession enures according to right. If he has no title, he is in as a trespasser; and, without any re-entry by the true owner, is liable to account for the profits. 1 Burr. 114.

This action of ejectment is rendered a very easy and expeditious remedy to landlords whose tenants are in arrear, by stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. which enacts that every landlord who hath by his lease a right of re-entry in case of non-payment of rent, when half a year's rent is due, and no sufficient distress is to be had, may serve a declaration in ejectment on his tenant, or fix the same upon some notorious part of the premises, which will be valid, without any formal re-entry or previous demand of rent. And a recovery in such ejectment shall be final and conclusive, both in law and equity, unless the rent and all costs be paid or tendered within six calendar months afterwards.

The true construction upon this act is, to take off the landlord the inconvenience of his continuing always liable to an uncertainty of possession; (from its remaining in the power of the tenant to offer him a compensation at any time, in order to found an application for relief in equity;) and to limit and to confine the tenant to six calendar months after execution granted for his doing this; or else that the landlord shall from thenceforth hold the demised premises discharged from the lease. 1 Burr. 619. As to the provision of Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 16. and 57. G. 3. c. 52. in cases of tenants at rack-rent being in arrear, and deserting the premises, see this Dict. title Rent. Two justices of peace may, in this case, put the landlord in possession.—

Where an ejectment is brought against a tenant, for the purpose of turning him out of his farm, &c. and the tenant actually holds the premises of the lessor of the plaintiff, it is sometimes necessary to give him notice to quit possession, in order to maintain an ejectment. Here we may observe, that demises, where no certain term is mentioned, are held to be tenancies from year to year, which neither party can determine without reasonable notice to the other. This notice is, in most counties, six months; and it must in all such cases expire at that part of the year when the tenancy commenced; and therefore it hath been holden, that half a year's notice to quit possession must be given to such tenant; before the end of which time the landlord cannot maintain an ejectment, unless the tenant has attorned to some other person, or done some act disclaiming to hold as tenant; in which case no notice is necessary. And the same law will apply to the executor of such a tenant. 3 Wils. 25. See 1 Term Rep. 160. 4 Term Rep. 361.

A landlord gave notice to quit different parts of a farm at different times, which the tenant neglected to do in part; in consequence of which the landlord commenced an ejectment; and before the last period mentioned in the notice was expired, the landlord, fearing that the witness, by whom he was to prove the notice, would die, gave another notice to quit at the respective times in the following year, but continued to proceed with his ejectment: held, the second notice was no waver of the first. 2 East's Rep. 237.

Where a defendant in ejectment held, as to the arable lands, from Candlemas, and as to the rest of the farm from May-day, the rent being payable at Michaelmas and Lady-day, and notice to quit was given six months before May-day, and not six months before Candlemas; the plaintiff was nonsuited. See 2 East's Rep. 384.

Under an agreement by a tenant of a farm "to enter on the tillage-land at Candlemas, and on the house and all other the premises at Lady-day following, and that when he left the farm he should quit the same according to the times of entry as aforesaid;" and the rent was reserved half-yearly at Michaelmas and Lady-day: held, that notice to quit, delivered half a year before Lady-day, but less than a half year before Candlemas, was good; the taking being, in substance, from Lady-day, with a privilege for the incoming tenant to enter on the arable land at Candlemas, for the sake of ploughing, &c. 6 East's Rep. 120.

After the expiration of a lease for a certain term, the tenant continuing in possession is deemed a trespassor: and therefore an ejectment, which is an action of trespass, may be brought without any notice to quit.

But in ejectment by a landlord against a tenant, whose lease is expired, the latter is not barred from shewing that his landlord's title is expired. 4 Term Rep. K. B. 682.

Points of practice relating to ejectments. Where there is a tenant in possession, in order to proceed against him, prepare a declaration, the copy of which, upon stamp, you serve the tenant with; if there be more than one tenant, each must be served with a copy; but if the man is not at home, his wife will do (provided she be served on the premises, and so sworn to); this is necessary both in town and country causes. At the time of service, in all cases, it is requisite to read over or explain the notice at the foot of the declaration to the person served.—Impey K. B. which see at length.

The tenant's son, daughter, or servant, he being out of the way, must not be served, unless it appear to the court that such declaration and notice came to his hands, in which case it has been held a good delivery; but if the tenant purposely keep out of the way to avoid being served, the court, on affidavit, will grant a rule to shew cause why that should not be deemed good service.

In case the servant, &c. be served, and motion be made that it be deemed good service, the tenant must swear that the declaration never came to his hands before the time of shewing cause, or the court will make the rule absolute. Trin. 30 Geo. 3. In this case to ground such a motion you must shew endeavours to serve him at several times, &c.

The declaration must be served before the essoign-day of every term, either in town or country, and the notice must be made to appear in the next term after delivery; but the delivery on a Sunday, or on the essoign-day of that term wherein the defendant is to appear, will not do.

If the premises be in London or Middlesex, the notice must be made to appear the first day of the next term after service, for if made generally, the tenant in possession has the whole term to appear in; but if the tenements lie in any other county, the notice must be to appear as of the next term generally.

Ejectment must be brought in the county where the lands lie, and the declaration must set forth the particular parish; and the day of the demise must be laid after the title accrues, otherwise the plaintiff will be non-suited; and the plaintiff must lay the commencement of his supposed lease, to have been precedent to the ejectment by the defendant. 1 Sid. 8. 2 New Ab. 171.

If the title of the lessor of the plaintiff accrue in Easter vacation, yet the plaintiff may deliver his ejectment as of Easter term, and shall recover thereon, because he makes up his issue, or takes judgment as of the next term: otherwise the act of the law, which supposes the bill filed as of the first day of Easter term, before a title accrued to the plaintiff, would be an act of injury to him, and delay his right; for a man ejected out of a lease made in term time, could not complain till term was over. 2 Ventr. 174. It must be brought within twenty years, by stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. Sid. 432. See ante, and title Limitation of Actions.

It was formerly held, that a declaration in ejectment could not be altered or amended after once delivered, in the most trivial matters; but it has since been held, that an ejectment is a mere fictitious action, and the demise mere matter of form, nor does it exist, and on application, the demise was ordered to be amended; but this was to save the plaintiff from being barred by a fine, if he had been obliged to bring a new ejectment. 4 Burr. 2447. Therefore, as the demise may be altered, there can be no doubt but that other parts less material may also be amended; the action being invented under the control of the court, for the advancement of justice, and merely to try the right in question. 1 Burr. 665. The term may be amended without consent from five to ten years. Str. 1272. 1211.—A verdict cures a defect in setting out the title, though it cannot cure a defective title. 2 Burr. 1159. See title Amendment.

It is necessary to prove the defendant or his tenant in possession of the premises: for the rule is, that the landlord shall defend for the premises only whereof his tenants are in possession; and the party does not admit himself to be landlord of any premises which the plaintiff may make title to, but of such only as were in possession of those tenants. 1 Wils. 220.

A new trial may, upon proper grounds, be granted in ejectment, as well as in other cases. 4 Burr. 2224.

In real actions, where the freehold is recovered, the demandant has execution, by the writ of habere facias seisnam; in ejectment, therefore, it is but just, that a similar remedy shall be permitted to the plaintiff, who as he now has judgment to recover the possession of the land, may put the sentence of the law in execution by virtue of a writ of habere facias possessionem, directing the sheriff to give actual possession to the plaintiff, of the land recovered.

This writ may be sued out though the lessor of the plaintiff be dead, if tested the last day of the preceding term. 4 Burr. 1970. The legal relation to the day of the teste is proper to be supported in maintenance of a writ of possession on a judgment in ejectment. Ibid.

In ejectment, where there are divers defendants, and the freeholds are several, no defendant may defend for more than is in his own possession; and the plaintiff may take judgment against his ejector for what remains. 1 Vent. 355. 2 Keb. 524. 531.

If there be two defendants in ejectment, and one of them appears and confesses lease, entry, and ouster, but the other does not appear, in that case the plaintiff may enter a non-pros, or retraxit, against him, and go to trial, and have judgment against the other defendant. 1 Lord Raym. 717, 718. Also if an ejectment be brought against two persons, and after issue joined, one dies, and a venire is awarded as to the two defendants, and a verdict against two; here, upon suggestion of the death of one of them upon the roll, judgment shall be given for the plaintiff against the other for the whole: for it is said this action is grounded upon torts, which are several in their nature, and one may be found guilty and the other acquitted. Ibid.

Where one brings ejectment of land in two parishes, and the whole lies in one, he shall recover: also if a person brings ejectment of one acre in B. and part of it lies in A. he shall recover for such part as lies in B. And if one having title to a part only of lands, bringeth an ejectment for the whole, he shall recover his part of the lands. Plowd. 429. Cro. Car. 13.

A plaintiff shall recover only according to the right which he hath at the time of bringing his action: and one who hath title to the land in question, may on motion be made a defendant in the action with the tenant in possession, to defend his title. 1 Nels. Abr. 694. 1 Lil. 497, &c. As the possession of the land is primarily in question, and to be recovered, that concerns the tenant; and the title of the land, which is tried collaterally, that concerns some other, who may be admitted to be a defendant with the tenant: but none other is to be admitted a defendant, but he that hath been in possession, or receives the rents, &c.

If the plaintiff can prove his title accrued before the time of the demise, and that the defendant hath been longer in possession, he shall recover antecedent profits; but in such case the defendant will be at liberty to controver his title. Bull. Ni. Pri. 83.

Where an actual entry is necessary, the demise must be laid after it. 7 Term Rep. K. B. 433. An actual entry is necessary to avoid a fine, and the party so avoiding it cannot lay his demise in an ejectment to recover the mesne profits that accrued before such entry. 7 Term. Rep. K. B. 727. See also 1 East's Rep. 568.

As the plaintiff in ejectment is a mere nominal person, and a trustee for the lessor; if he release the action, the court may set aside the release, and he shall be committed for a contempt; so likewise if he release an action brought in his name for the mesne profits. 1 Salk. 260. Skinn. 247. If a man is made plaintiff in ejectment without his knowledge, and the defendant appearing, the plaintiff thereupon becomes nonsuit, after which execution is sued out against him; if it appears by his oath that he was made plaintiff without his knowledge or order, he shall be discharged. 34 Car. B. R. 5 Ann. 1 Lil. 500.

The lessor of the plaintiff in ejectment cannot release the action. Doe, d. Byne v. Brewer. Term. Rep. K. B. 55 G. 3. 300.

If there be a verdict and judgment against the plaintiff, he may bring another action of trespass and ejectment for the land, it being only to recover the possession, &c. wherein judgment is not final; and it is not like a writ of right, &c. where the title alone is tried. Wood's Inst. 547. Trin. 23 Car. B. R.

The reason of an ejectment being never final is not laid down in the general books on this subject, but in the notes to Eunomus, vol. iv. p. 189, it is thus ingeniously stated.—The reason why it is not or cannot be final seems to be this. That it is impossible from the structure of the record in this action, to plead a former, in bar of another, ejectment brought. —Because, 1. The plaintiff and defendant are nominal, and exist in most cases on record only; and consequently may be changed in a new action. But the identity both of plaintiff and defendant must be averred in pleading a former action in bar.—2. The term demised may be laid many different ways. An ejectment, however, though in its nature not final at law, is capable of being made so in equity: and the Court of Chancery will, on proper grounds, grant a perpetual injunction, and not permit the possession of lands to be disturbed by a vain incessant litigation of the same question. See 2 Eq. Ab. 171. c. 1. 243. c. 11. 222. c. 1. Parl. Cases (8vo.) title Injunction, ca. 1. 3. 2 Stra. 404.

Though the court may stay proceedings in a new ejectment until the costs of a former ejectment between the same parties, and also the costs of an action for mesne profits dependant thereon, are paid; yet they will not extend the rule to include the damages in the action for the mesne profits, however vexatious the proceedings of the lessors of the plaintiff may have been. 15 East's Rep. 233.

FORM of the DECLARATION in EJECTMENT, by Original; against the Casual Ejector, who gives Notice thereupon to the Tenant in Possession.

Michaelmas, the 29th of King George the Third.

BERKS to wit. { WILLIAM STILES, late of Newbury, in the said county, Gentleman, was attached, to answer Richard Smith, of a plea, wherefore with force and arms he entered into one messuage, with the appurtenances, in Sutton, in the county aforesaid, which John Rogers, Esq. demised to the said Richard Smith, for a term which is not yet expired, and ejected him from his said farm, and other wrongs to him did, to the great damage of the said Richard, and against the peace of the lord the King, &c. And whereupon the said Richard, by Robert Martin his attorney, complains, that whereas the said John Rogers, on the 1st day of October, in the twenty-ninth year of the reign of the lord the King that now is, at Sutton aforesaid, had demised to the same Richard the tenement aforesaid, with the appurtenances, to have and to hold the said tenement, with the appurtenances, to the said Richard and his assigns, from the feast of Saint Michael the Archangel then last past, to the end and term of five years from thence next following, and fully to be complete and ended; by virtue of which demise the said Richard entered into the said tenement, with the appurtenances, and was possessed thereof; and the said Richard being so possessed thereof, the said William afterwards, that is to say, on the said 1st day of October, in the said twenty-ninth year, with force and arms, that is to say, with swords, staves, and knives, entered into the said tenement, with the appurtenances, in the possession of the said Richard, which the said John Rogers demised to the said Richard in form aforesaid, for the term aforesaid, which is not yet expired, and ejected the said Richard out of his said farm, and other wrongs to him did, to the great damage of the said Richard, and against the peace of the said lord the King. Whereby the said Richard saith, that he is injured and damaged to the value of 20l. And thereupon he brings suit, &c.

Mr. George Saunders,

I am informed that you are in possession of, or claim title to, the premises mentioned in this declaration of ejectment, or to some part thereof; and I, being sued in this action as a casual ejector, and having no claim or title to the same, do advise you to appear next Hilary term in his Majesty's court of King's Bench wheresoever he shall then be in England, by some attorney of that court, and then and there by a rule to be made of the same court, to cause yourself to be made defendant in my stead; otherwise I shall suffer judgment to be entered against me, and you will be turned out of possession.

Your loving friend,

EIK, to a Reversion. An additional loan to a mortgagor who is the reversioner of the mortgaged estate. Bell's Scotch Dict.

EIK, to a Testament.—An addition to an inventory made up by an executor. Bell's Scotch Dict.

EINECIA, from the Fr. aisné, i. e. primogenitus.] Eldership. Statute of Ireland, 14 Hen. 3. See Esnecy.

EIRE, or EYRE, Fr. eire, viz. iter.] Is the court of justices itinerant; and justices in eyre are those whom Bracton in many places calls justiciarios itinerantes. These justices, in ancient time, were sent with a general commission into divers counties to hear such causes as were termed pleas of the crown: and this was done for the ease of the people, who must else have been hurried to the King's Bench, if the cause were too high for the county court: it is said they were sent but once in every seven years. Bract. lib. 3. c. 11. Horn's Mirror, lib. 2. The eyre of the forest is the justice seat; which, by an ancient custom, was held every three years by the justices of the forest, journeying up and down for that purpose. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 1. & 2. Brit. c. 2. Cromp. Jurisd. 156. Manw. par. 1. p. 121.—See titles Justices in Eyre.

ELECTION, electio.] In law, is when a man is left to his own free will, to take or do one thing or another, which he pleases. And if it be given of several things, he who is the first agent, and ought to do the first act, shall have the election: as if a person make a lease, rendering rent, or a garment, &c. the lessee shall have the election, as being the first agent, by the payment of the one, or delivery of the other. Co. Lit. 144. And if A. covenant to pay B. a pound of pepper or sugar, before Easter; it is at the election of A. at all times before Easter which of them he will pay: but if he pays it not before the said feast, then afterwards it is at the election of B. to demand, and have which he pleaseth. Dyer, 18. 5 Rep. 59. 11 Rep. 51.

If I give to you one of my horses in my stable, there you shall have the election; for you shall be the first agent, by taking or seizure of one of them. Co. Lit. 145. If things granted are annual, and to have continuance, the election (where the law gives it him) remains to the grantor, as well after the day as before: but it is otherwise when to be performed at once. Ibid. When nothing passes to the feoffee or grantee before election, to have the one thing or the other, the election ought to be made in the life of the parties; and the heir or executor cannot make the election: but where an estate or interest passes immediately to the feoffee, donee, &c. there election may be made by them, or their heirs or executors. 2 Rep. 36, 37. And when one and the same thing passeth to the donee or grantee, and such donee or grantee hath election in what manner he will take it, there the interest passeth immediately, and the party, his heirs, &c. may make election when they will. Co. Lit. 145. 2 Danv. Abr. 761.

Where the election creates the interest, nothing passes till election; and if no election can be made, no interest will arise. Hob. 174. If the election is given to several persons, there the first election made by any of the persons shall stand; as if a man leases two acres to A. for life, remainder of one acre to B. and of the other acre to C. Now B. or C. may elect which of the acres he will have, and the first election by one binds the other. Co. Lit. 145. 2 Rep. 36. If a man leases two acres for life, the remainder of one in fee to the same person; and, after, licenses the lessee to cut trees in one acre, this is an election that he shall have the fee in the other acre. 2 Danv. 762. A real election concerning lands is descendible; and election of a tenant in tail may prejudice his issue. He, in remainder, may make an election after the death of tenant for life; but if the tenant for life do make election, the remainder-man is concluded. Moor, Ca. 247. 832.

A person grants a manor, except one close called N. and there are two closes called by that name, one containing nine acres, and the other but three acres, the grantee shall not, in this case, choose which of the said closes he will have, but the grantor shall have election which close shall pass. 1 Leon. 268. But if one grants an acre of land out of a waste or common, and doth not say in what part, or how to be bounded, the grantee may make his election where he will. 1 Leon. 30. If a man hath three daughters, and he covenants with another that he shall have one of them to dispose of in marriage; it is at the covenantor's election which of his daughters the covenantee shall have, and after request, she is to be delivered to him. Moor, 72. 2 Danv. 762. Where there are three coparceners of lands, upon partition the eldest sister shall have the election: though if she herself make the partition, she loseth it, and shall take last of all. Co. Lit. 166.—See title Esnecy.

In consideration that a person had sold another certain goods, he promised to deliver him the value in such pipes of wine as he should choose; the plaintiff must make his election before he brings his action. Style, 49. An election which of two things shall be done, ought not to be made merely by bringing an action; but before, that the defendant may know which he is to do, and it is said he is not bound to tender either before the plaintiff hath made his choice which will be accepted. 1 Mod. 217. 1 Nels. Abr. 697.

A condition of a bond is, that the obligor shall pay 30*l.* or twenty kine, at the obligee's election, within such a time; the obligee at his peril, is to make his election within the time limited. 1 Leon. 69. Though in debt upon bond to pay 10*l.* on such a day, or four cows at the then election of the obligee, it was adjudged, that it was not enough for the defendant to plead that he was always ready, &c. if the obligee had made his election; for he ought to tender both at the day, by reason the word then relates to the day of payment, Moor, 246. 1 Nels. 694, 695.

If a man hath an election to do one of two things, and he cannot by any default of a stranger, or of himself, or the obligee, or by the act of God, do the one; he must at his peril do the other. 1 Lil. Abr. 506.

Where the law allows a man two actions to recover his right, it is at his election to bring which he pleaseth: and when a man's act may work two ways both arising out of his interest, he hath election given him to use it either way. Dyer, 20. 2 Rol. Abr. 787. Action of trespass upon the case, or action of trespass vi et armis, may be brought against one that rescues a prisoner, at the election of the party damnified by the rescous. And an action on the case, or on assize, lies against him that surcharges a common, at the election of him that is injured thereby. 1 Lil. 504, 505. Also for a rent-charge out of lands, there may be a writ of annuity or distress, at the election of the grantee: but after the death of the grantor, if the heir be not charged, the election to bring annuity ceaseth. Dyer, 344.

A man was indicted of felony for entering an house and taking away money, and found guilty, and burnt in the hand; after which the person who lost the money brought an action of trespass against the other for breaking his house, and taking away his money; and it was held that the action would lie; for though it was at his election at first, either to prefer an indictment or bring an action, yet by the indictment he had made no election, because that was not the prosecution of the party, but of the Crown. Style, 347.

If a bargain and sale be made of lands, which is inrolled, and at the same time the bargainor levies a fine thereof to the bargainee, he hath his election to take by one or the other. 4 Rep. 72. A wife hath her election which to take of a jointure made after marriage, or her dower, on the death of the husband, and not before. Dyer, 358. When a lessor hath election to charge the lessee, or his assignee, for rent; if he accepts the rent of the assignee, he hath determined his election. 3 Rep. 24.

If a person hath election to pay or perform one of two things at a day, and he do neither of them at that day, his election is gone: and where a grant is made of two acres of land, the one for life, the other in fee, or in tail, and before any election the feoffee makes a feoffment of both; in this case the election will be gone, and the feoffor may enter upon which he will for the forfeiture. 2 Rep. 37. If money on a mortgage be to be paid to a man, his heirs or executors, the mortgagor hath election to pay it to either: and if in a feoffment it be to pay to the feoffee, his heirs or assigns, and he enfeoff another, the feoffor may pay the money to the first or second feoffee, &c. Co. Lit 210.

In some cases, where one hath cause of suit, he may sue one person or another at his election; for there is an election of persons, as well as of things. Dyer, 204. 207. A man by deed binds himself and his heirs to pay money, and dies; the obligee may choose to sue the heir, or the executors, although both of them have assets. Poph. 151. One may have election, when he hath recovered a debt, to have his execution by elegit, fieri facias, or capias ad satisfaciendum; but where he takes an elegit, and hath no fruit of it, he may resort to another writ, though the election be entered on record. Hob. 57. Dyer, 60. 369.

There is no election against the King in his grants, &c. 1 Leon. 30. And an act becoming void, will determine an election. Hob. 152. As to election with respect to one action or another, see 1 Com. Dig. title Action. And this Dict. titles Condition, Agreement.

Election of a Clerk of Statutes-Merchant. A writ that lies for the choice of a clerk assigned to take bonds called statutes-merchant; and is granted out of the Chancery, upon suggestion that the clerk formerly assigned is gone to dwell at another place, or is under some impediment to attend the duty of his office, or hath not lands sufficient to answer his transgressions, if he should act amiss, &c. F. N. B. 164.

ELECTION OF ECCLESIASTICAL PERSONS. There is to be a free election for the dignities of the church. Stat. 9 Ed. 2. c. 14. And none shall disturb any person from making free election, on pain of great forfeiture. If any persons that have a voice in elections, take any reward for an election in any church, college, school, &c. the election shall be void: and if any of such societies resign their places to others for reward, they incur a forfeiture of double the sum; and the party giving it, and the party taking it, is incapable of such place. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6. See further titles Bishops, Deans.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT, AND ELECTION COMMITEES THEREON. See title Parliament.

ELECTION OF A VERDEROR OF THE FOREST, electione viridariorum forestæ.] A writ which lies for the choice of a verderor, where any of the verderors of the forest are dead, or removed from their offices, &c. It is directed to the sheriff; and, as appears by the ancient writs of this kind, the verderor is to be elected by the freeholders of the county, in the same manner as coroners. New Nat. Br. 366. See title Forest.

ELEEMOSYNA. Alms; dare in puram et perpetuam eleemosynam, to give in pure and perpetual alms, or frank-almoigne; as lands were commonly given in ancient times to religious uses. Cowel.—See titles Frank almoigne; Tenure.

ELEEMOSYNÆ. The possessions belonging to the churches. Blount.

ELEEMOSYNA REGIS, or elcemosyna aratri. A penny which King Ethelred ordered to be paid for every plough in England, towards the support of the poor: it was called Eleemosyna Regis, because it was first appointed by the King. Leg. Ethelred, cap. 1.

ELEEMOSYNARIA. The place in a religious house, where the common alms were reposited, and thence by the almoner distributed to the poor.

ELEEMOSYNARIUS. The almoner or peculiar officer who received the eleemosynary rents and gifts, and in due method distributed them to pious and charitable uses. There was such a chief officer in all the religious houses: and the greatest of our English bishops had anciently their almoners, as now the King hath. Lindwood's Provincial, lib. 1. tit. 12. —See title Almoner.

ELEEMOSYNARY CORPORATIONS. Corporate bodies constituted for the perpetual distribution of free alms, or bounty of the founder of them. See title Corporation.

ELEGIT, from the words in the writ elegit sibi liberari, because the plaintiff hath chosen this writ of execution. See 3 Comm. 418.] A writ of execution founded on the stat. W. 2. (3 E. 1.) c. 18. that lies for him who hath recovered debt or damages, or, upon a recognizance in any court against one not able in his goods to satisfy the same, directed to the sheriff, commanding him to make delivery of a moiety of the party's land, and all his goods, beasts of the plough excepted. And the creditor shall hold the said moiety of the land so delivered unto him, until his whole debt and damages are paid and satisfied; and during that term he is tenant by elegit. Reg. Orig. 299. Co. Lit. 289.

Upon an elegit, the sheriff is to deliver one half of all houses, lands, meadows and pastures, rents, reversions, and hereditaments wherein the defendant had any sole estate in fee, or for life, into whose hands soever the same do afterwards come; but not of a right only to land, an annuity, copyhold lands, &c. Dyer, 206. 7 Rep. 49. Plowd. 224. And by it the plaintiff, &c. elects omnia bona et catalla of the defendant, præter boves et afros de caruca sua; and also a moiety of all the lands which the defendant had at the time of the judgment recovered; but it ought to be sued within a year and a day after the judgment. F. N. B. 267.

But though, by this statute, the lands of the debtor are made liable, as well as his personal estate, yet if the creditor takes out an elegit, and it appears to the sheriff that there are goods and chattels sufficient of the debtor's to satisfy the debt, he ought not to extend the lands. 2 Inst. 395. But an elegit executed upon goods only, is not a fieri facias, for a fieri facias is executed by sale by the sheriff; but the elegit by the appraisement of the goods by a jury, and delivery to the party. 1 Sid. 184. 1 Lev. 92. 1 Keb. 105. 261. 465. 556. 692.

Upon this writ the sheriff is to empanel a jury, who are to make inquiry of all the goods and chattels of the debtor, and to appraise the same, and also to inquire as to his lands and tenements; and upon such inquisition the sheriff is to deliver all the goods and chattels (except the beasts of the plough), and a moiety of the lands, to the party, and must return his writ, in order to record such inquisition in that court out of which the elegit issued; and when the jury have found the seisin and value of the land, the sheriff, and not the jury, is to set out and deliver a moiety thereof to the plaintiff by metes and bounds. Cro. Car. 319.

The sheriff's return to an elegit stated, that he had delivered an equal moiety of a house: held that this return was void for not setting out the moiety by metes and bounds, and that the objection might be taken at nisi prius to an ejectment brought on the elegit. Fenny d. Masters, v. Durrant, Term Rep. K. B. Mic. 58 Geo. 3. 40.

Query? if tenant in elegit may not enter by virtue of the writ of elegit without a previous judgment in ejectment. Rogers v. Pitcher, 6 W. P. Taunton, 202.

All writs of execution may be good, though not returned, except an elegit; but that must be returned because an inquisition is to be taken upon it, and that the court may judge of the sufficiency thereof. 4 Rep. 65. 74. It has been ruled, that if more than a moiety of the lands is delivered on an elegit by the sheriff, the same is void for the whole. Sid. 91. 2 Salk. 563. And the sheriff cannot sell any thing but what is found in the inquisition; and therefore if he sell a term for years, &c. mis-recited in the inquisition, as to the commencement thereof, the sale is void. 4 Rep. 74.

In debt upon bond, the defendant before the trial conveyed his lands to another, &c. but he himself took the profits: notwithstanding this conveyance, a moiety of his lands was extended on an elegit. Dyer, 294. 3 Rep. 78. If two persons have each of them a judgment against one debtor, and he who hath the first judgment brings an elegit, and hath the moiety of the lands delivered to him in execution; and then the other judgment-creditor sues out another elegit, he shall have only a moiety of that moiety, which was not extended by the first judgment. Cro. Eliz. 483.

When lands are once taken in execution on an elegit, and the writ is returned and filed, the plaintiff shall have no other execution. 1 Lev. 92. And if the defendant hath lands in more counties than one, and the plaintiff awards an elegit to one county, and extends the lands upon the elegit, and afterwards files the writ, he cannot, after that, sue out an elegit into the other counties: but he may immediately, after entry of the judgment upon the judgment-roll, award as many elegits, into as many counties, as he thinks fit, and execute all, or any of them, at his pleasure. 1 Lil. Abr. 509. Cro. Jac. 246.

A man had lands in execution upon an elegit, and afterwards moved for a new elegit, upon proof that the defendant had other lands, not known to the creditor at the time when the execution was sued out; and it was adjudged, that if he had accepted of the first by the delivery of the sheriff, he could not afterwards have a new elegit; but when the sheriff returns the writ, he may waive it, and then have a new extent. Cro. Eliz. 310. 1 Nels. Abr. 699. Sed qu.

If the defendant dies in prison, so that there is no execution with satisfaction, the plaintiff shall have an elegit afterwards. 5 Rep. 86. And if all the lands extended on an elegit be evicted by a better title, the plaintiff may take out a new execution. 4 Rep. 66. Where one having land by elegit, is wholly evicted out of it, he may have a further execution, either against the defendant's lands or goods, as he might have had at first; save only, he must bring a scire facias against the defendant, or him that comes in under him; but if the eviction be of part of the land, or for a time only, so that the plaintiff may take his full execution by holding it over; there he cannot have any new execution, by the stat. 32 H. 8. c. 5. 2 Shep. Abr. 115.

Where an elegit is sued upon a judgment, the levying of goods thereon, for part only, is no impediment, but the plaintiff may bring another elegit pro residuo, and take the lands. 1 Lev 92. On a nihil returned upon an eligit, there may be brought a capias ad satisfaciendum, or fieri facias. 1 Leon. 176. And an elegit may be sued after a fieri facias returned nulla bona, or where a part is levied by it; and after a capias ad satisfaciendum returned non est inventus. Hob. 57.

A person in execution was suffered to escape, and then he died; the land which he had at the time of the judgment may be extended, by elegit, upon a scire facias brought against his heir, as ter-tenant. Dyer, 271.

A man may have an assise of the land which he hath in execution by elegit, if he be deforced thereof. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 18. And if tenant by elegit alien the land in fee, &c. he who hath right shall have against him, and the alienee, an assise of novel disseisin. Ibid. At a trial at bar in C. B. the court delivered for law, that where lands are actually extended, and delivered upon an elegit, a fine levied on those lands, and non-claim, will bar the interest of the tenant by elegit. 1 Mod. 217.

If tenant by elegit be put out of possession before he hath received satisfaction for his debt, by the heir at law, &c. he may bring action of trespass, or re-enter and hold over till satisfied: but, after satisfaction received, the defendant may enter on the tenant by elegit. 4 Rep. 28. 67. Tenants by elegit, statutes-merchant, &c. are not punishable for waste by action of waste: but the party, against whom execution is sued, is to have a writ of venire facias ad computandum, &c. and there the waste shall be recovered in the debt; though it is said there is an old writ of waste in the Register, for him in reversion against tenant by elegit, committing waste on lands which he hath in execution. 6 Rep. 37. New Nat. Br. 130. On tenant by elegit's accounting, if the money recovered by the plaintiff is levied out of the lands, the defendant shall recover his land; and if more be received by waste, &c. he shall have damages. Termes de Ley.—See this Dict. titles Estate, Extent, Execution.

ELF-ARROWS. Were flint-stones sharpened on each side in shape of arrow-heads, made use of in war by the ancient Britons; of which several have been found in England, and greater plenty in Scotland, where it is said the common people imagine they drop from the clouds, or are made by the elves or fairies.

ELISORS, Electors.] In cases of challenge to the sheriff and coroners for partiality, &c. the venire to summon a jury shall be directed to two clerks of the Court, or two persons of the county named by the Court and sworn. And these two, who are called Elisors, shall indifferently name or choose the jury; and their return is final; no challenge being allowed to their array. Fortesc. de Laud. leg. c. 25. Co. Lit. 158. See title Jury.

ELKE. A kind of yew to make bows of. Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 9.

ELOINE, from the Fr. esloisner.] To remove or send a great way off: in this sense it is used where it is said that if such as are within age be eloined, so that they cannot come to sue personally, their next friends shall be admitted to sue for them. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. cap. 15.

ELONGATA. Is a return of the sheriff in replevin, that cattle are not to be found, or are removed, so that he cannot make deliverance, &c. 2 Lil. Abr. 451. 458.

ELOPEMENT, from the Belg. E'e matrimonium et loopen currere; or more probably from the Sax. Geleoran, to depart; the Saxon r being easily perverted from its shape into a p. Blount.] Is where a married woman, of her own accord, goes away, and departs from her husband, and lives with an adulterer. See titles Adultery, Baron and Feme.

ELY. A royal franchise, or County-palatine. See title Counties-Palatine.

The Bishop of Ely has not a palatinate jurisdiction within the Isle, though exercising jura regalia there.—A writ of fieri facias directed, in the first instance, to the bailiff of the Isle of Ely, out of K. B. is erroneous and void, and the bailiff executing the same is guilty of a trespass against the party whose goods are taken in execution.—Process issued out of the courts at Westminster into the Isle, goes, in the first instance, to the sheriff of Cambridgeshire, who, thereupon, issues his mandate to the bailiff of the franchise. 3 East's Rep. 128.

EMBARGO. A prohibition upon shipping, not to go out of any port on a war breaking out, &c. See Imbargo.

EMBASSADOR. See Ambassador.

EMBEZZLEMENT: See Servants.

EMBLEMENTS, from the Fr. emblavence de bled corn sprung, or put up above ground.] The profits of sown land: but the word is sometimes used more largely, for any products that arise naturally from the ground, as grass, fruit, &c. In some cases he who sowed the corn shall have the emblements; and in others not: a lessee at will sows the land, he shall have the emblements; though if the lessee determines the will himself, he shall not have them, but the lessor. 5 Rep. 116. If lessee at will sows the land with grain, or other thing yielding annual profit, and the lessor enters before severance; yet the lessee shall have it: but where the lessee plants young fruit-trees, or other trees, or sows the land with acorns, &c. he shall not have these; and if such tenant, by good husbandry, make the grass to grow in great abundance; or sow the land with hay-seed, by which means it is increased, if the lessor enters on the lessee, the lessee shall not have it, because grass is the natural profit of the soil. Co. Lit. 55, 56.

Where tenant for life sows the land, and dies, his executors shall have the emblements, and not the lessor or him in reversion; by reason of the uncertainty of the estate. Cro. Eliz. 463. And if a tenant for life plants hops, and dies before severance, he in reversion shall not have them, but the executors of tenant for life. Cro. Car. 515. If tenant for years (if he so long live) sow the ground, and die before severance; the executor of the lessee shall have the corn: and where lessee for life leases for years, if the lessee for years sow the land, and after lessee for life dies before severance, the executor of lessee for years shall have the emblements. 2 Danv. Abr. 765.

So it is also if a man be tenant for the life of another; and cestui que vie, (he on whose life the land is held) dies after the corn sown, the tenant pur auter vie shall have the emblements. The same is also the rule if a life-estate be determined by the act of law. Therefore if a lease be made to husband and wife during coverture, (which gives them a determinable estate for life,) and the husband sows the land; and afterwards they are divorced à vinculo matrimonii, the husband shall in this case have the emblements; for the sentence of divorce is the act of the law. 5 Rep. 116. But if an estate for life be determined by the tenant's own act, (as by forfeiture for waste committed; or if a tenant, during widowhood, thinks proper to marry;)

in these and similar cases, as in that of a tenant at will determining his own tenure, the tenants shall not be entitled to take the emblements. 1 Inst. 55.

If tenant for years sows ground, and before his corn is severed, the term, which is certain expires; the lessor or he in reversion shall have the emblements; but he must first enter on the lands. 1 Lil. Abr. 511. A lessee for life or years sows the land, and after surrenders, &c. before severance, the lessor shall have the corn. 2 Danv. 764. If there be lessee for years, upon condition that if he commit waste, &c. his estate shall cease; if he sows the ground with corn, and after doth waste, the lessor shall have the corn. Co. Lit. 55. And where a lord enters on his tenant for a forfeiture, he shall have the corn on the ground. 4 Rep. 21.

Though if a feme copyholder for her widowhood sows the land, and before severance takes husband, so that her estate is determined, the lord shall have the emblements; yet if such a feme copyholder, durante viduitate, leases for one year according to custom, and the lessee sows the land, and afterwards the copyholder takes husband, the lessee shall have the corn. 2 Danv. 764. If a husband holds lands for life, in right of his wife, and sow the land, and after she dies before severance, he shall have the emblements. Dyer, 316. 1 Nels. Ab. 701. And where the wife hath an estate for years, life, or in fee, and the husband sows the land, and dieth, his executors shall have the corn. 1 Nels. 702. But if the husband and wife are joint-tenants, though the husband sow the land with corn, and dies before ripe, the wife, and not his executors, shall have the corn, she being the surviving joint-tenant. Co. Lit. 199.

When a widow is endowed with lands sown, she shall have the emblements, and not the heir. 2 Inst. 81. And a tenant in dower may dispose of corn sown on the ground; or it may go to her executors, if she die before severance. 2 Inst. 80, 81. And by the particular provisions of stat. 28. H. 8. c. 11. if a parson sows his glebe, and dies, his executors shall have the corn: and such parson may by will dispose thereof. 1 Rol. Abr. 655.

If tenant by statute-merchant sows the land, and before severance a casual profit happens, by which he is satisfied, yet he shall have the corn. Co. Lit. 55. Lands sown are delivered in execution upon an extent, the person to whom delivered shall have the corn on the ground. 2 Leon. 54. And judgment was given against a person, and then he sowed the land, and brought a writ of error to reverse the judgment, but it was affirmed; and adjudged that the recoverer shall have the corn. 2 Bulst. 213.

If a disseisor sows the land, and afterwards cuts the corn, but before it is carried away the disseisee enters, the disseisee shall have the corn. Dyer, 31. 11 Rep. 52. A person seised in fee of land dies, having a daughter, and his wife privement enseint with a son; the daughter enters and sows the land, and before severance of the corn, the son is born; in this case the daughter shall have the corn, her estate being lawful, and defeated by the act of God; and it is for the public good that the land should be sown. Co. Lit. 55.

A man seised in fee-simple sows land, and then devises the land by will, and dies before severance; the devisee shall have the corn; and not the devisor's executors. Winch. 52. Cro. Eliz. 61. If a person devises his lands sown, and says nothing of the corn, the corn shall go with the land to the devisee: and when a man seised of land, in fee or in tail, sows it, and dies without will, it goes to the executor, and not the heir. 10 Ed. 4. 1 b. 21 H. 6. 30 a. 37 H. 6. 35 b. A devisee for life dies, he in remainder shall have the emblements with the land. Hob. 132.

Tenant in fee sows the land, and devises it to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, and dies; A. dies before severance, B. in remainder shall have the corn, and not the executor of the first tenant for life. Cro. Eliz. 61. 464. Where there is a right to emblements, ingress, egress, and regress, are allowed by law, to enter, cut, and carry them away, when the estate is determined, &c. 1 Inst. 56.

EMBLERS DE GENTZ, Fr.] Carrying off people. Rot. Parl. 21 Ed. 3. n. 62.

EMBRACEOR, Fr. embrasour.] He that, when a matter is in trial between party and party, comes to the bar with one of the parties, having received some reward so to do, and speaks in the case; or privately labours the jury, or stands in the court to survey and overlook them, whereby they are awed or influenced, or put in fear or doubt of the matter. Stat. 19 H. 7. cap. 13. But lawyers, attorneys, &c. may speak in the case for their clients, and not be embraceors: also the plaintiff may labour the jurors to appear in his own cause; but a stranger must not do it: for the bare writing a letter to a person, or parol request for a juror to appear, not by the party himself, hath been held within the statutes against embracery and maintenance. Co. Lit. 369. Hob. 294. 1 Saund. 391. If the party himself instruct a juror, or promise any reward for his appearance, then the party is likewise an embraceor. And a juror may be guilty of embracery, where he, by indirect practices, gets himself sworn on the tales, to serve on one side. 1 Lil. 513. There are divers statutes relating to this offence and maintenance. See further title Maintenance, and post Embracery.—See also titles Jury; Decies tantum.

EMBRACERY. An attempt to influence a Jury corruptly to one side, by promises, persuasions, entreaties, money, entertainments, and the like. The punishment for the person embracing, (the Embraceor,) is by fine and imprisonment; and for the Juror so embraced, if it be by taking money, the punishment is (by various stats. of Ed. 3. viz. 5 E. 3. c. 10. 34 E. 3. c. 8. 38 E. 3. c. 12.) perpetual infamy, imprisonment for a year, and forfeiture of tenfold value. 4 Comm. 140. See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 85. and the preceding title.

EMBRING DAYS, from embers, cineres, so called, either because our ancestors, when they fasted, sat in ashes, or strewed them on their heads.] Those days which the ancient Fathers called Quatuor Tempora jejunii, and of great antiquity in the church: they are observed on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday next after Quadragesima Sunday, (or the first Sunday in Lent,) after Whitsunday, Holyrood-day in September, and St. Lucy's day, about the middle of December. These days are mentioned by Britton, c. 53. and other writers; and particularly in the stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 19. Our almanacks call them the Ember Weeks.

EMBROIDERY. By stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 36. no foreign embroidery, or gold or silver brocade, shall be imported, upon pain of being forfeited and burnt, and penalty of 100*l*. for each piece. No person shall sell, or expose to sale, any foreign embroidery, gold or silver thread, lace, fringe, brocade, or make up the same into any garment, upon pain of having it forfeited and burnt, and penalty of 100*l*. All such embroidery, &c. found, may be seized and burnt, and the mercer, &c. in whose custody it was found, shall forfeit 100*l*.—See titles Manufactures; Navigation Acts.

EMENDALS, emenda.] An old word still made use of in the accounts of the Society of the Inner Temple; where so much in emendals at the foot of an account, on the balance thereof, signifies so much money in the bank or stock of the houses, for reparation of losses or other emergent occasions: quod restaurationem damni tribuitur. Spelm.

EMENDARE, Emendam solvere.] To make amends for any crime or trespass committed. Leg. Edw. Confess. c. 35. Hence a capital crime, not to be atoned by fine, was said to be inemendabile. Leg. Canut. p. 2.

EMENDATIO. Hath been used for the power of amending and correcting abuses, according to stated rules and measures; as emendatio panni, the power of looking to the assize of cloth, that it be of just measure; emendatio panis & cervisiæ, the assizing of bread and beer, &c. privileges granted to lords of manors, and executed by their officers appointed in the court-leet, &c. Paroch. Antiq. 196.

EMPANEL. See Impanel.

EMPARLANCE. See Imparlance.

EMPEROR, imperator.] The highest ruler of large kingdoms and territories; a title anciently given to renowned and victorious generals of armies, who acquired great power and dominion. This title was formerly given to the Kings of England, as appears by a charter of King Edgar.

ENBREVER, Fr.] To write down in short. Brit. 56.

ENCAUSTUM. See Incaustum.

ENCHANTMENT. See Conjuration.

ENCHESON, old Fr.] An occasion, cause, or reason wherefore any thing is done. See the ancient Statutes.

ENCROACHMENT. See Incroachment.

ENDEAVOUR. Where one who has the use of his reason endeavours to commit felony, &c. he shall be punished by our laws, but not to that degree as if he had actually committed it: as if a man assault another on the highway, in order to a robbery, but takes nothing from him, this is not punished as a felony, because the felony was not accomplished; though, as a misdemeanour, it is liable to fine and imprisonment. 3 Inst. 68. 69. 161. 11 Rep. 98. And in this case, by stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 21. the offender shall be transported. See titles Intendment, Malicious Mischief, Robbery.

ENDOWMENT. The bestowing or assuring of dower on a woman. It is sometimes used metaphorically for the settling a provision upon a parson, or building of a church or chapel; and the severing a sufficient portion of tithes, &c. for a vicar, towards his perpetual maintenance, when the benefice is appropriated. See stats. 15 R. 2. c. 6. 4 H. 4. c. 12. See Dower, Tithes.

ENEMY, inimicus.] Is properly an alien or foreigner, who, in a public capacity, and in an hostile manner, invades any kingdom or country; and whether such persons come hither by themselves, or in company with English traitors, they cannot be punished as traitors, but shall be dealt with by martial law. H. P. C. 10. 15. But the subjects of a foreign prince coming into England, and living under the protection of the King, may, if they take up arms, &c. against the government, be punished as traitors, not as alien enemies. If a prisoner be rescued by enemies, the gaoler is not guilty of an escape, as he would have been if subjects had made the rescue, when he might have a legal remedy against them. See titles Alien, Escape; and as to adhering to and succouring the King's enemies, see title Treason.

ENFRANCHISE, Fr. enfranchir.] To make free, or incorporate a man into any society, &c. It is also used where one is made a free denizen, which is a kind of incorporation in the Commonwealth.

ENFRANCHISEMENT, Fr. from franchise, i. e. libertas.] Is when a person is incorporated into any society or body politic; and it signifies the act of incorporating. He that by charter is made a denizen, or freeman of England, is said to be enfranchised, and let into the general liberties of the subjects of the kingdom: and he who is made a citizen of London, or other city, or free burgess of any town corporate, as he is made partaker of those liberties that appertain to the corporation, is, in the common sense of the word, a person enfranchised. And when a man is enfranchised into the freedom of any city or borough, he hath a freehold in his freedom during life; and may not, for endeavouring any thing only against the corporation, lose and forfeit the same. 11 Rep. 91. See title Corporation. A villain was said to be enfranchised, when he was made free by his lord, and rendered capable of the benefits belonging to freemen.

ENGLECERY, or ENGLESCHERIE, Engleceria.] An old word signifying the being an Englishman. When Canutus the Dane came to be King of England, he, at the request of the Nobility, sent back his army into Denmark, but kept some Danes behind to be a guard to his person; and he made a law for the preservation of his Danes, (who were often privately made away with by the English,) that if an Englishman killed a Dane, he should be tried for the murder; or if he escaped, the town or hundred where the fact was done, was to be amerced sixty-six marks to the King: so that after this law, whenever a murder was committed, it was necessary to prove the party slain to be an Englishman, that the town might be exempted from the amercement; which proof was called Englecery, or Engleschire. And whereas if a person were privately slain, he was in ancient time accounted Francigena, which word comprehended every alien, especially the Danes: it was therefore ordained, that where any person was murdered, he should be adjudged Francigena, unless Englecery were proved, and that it was made manifest he was an Englishman. The manner of proving the person killed to be an Englishman, was by two witnesses who knew the father and mother, before the Coroner, &c. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 15. Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 30. 7 Rep. 16. This Englecery, by reason of the great abuses and trouble that afterwards were perceived to grow by it, was utterly taken away by stat. 14 Ed. 3. st. 1. c. 4.—See 4 Comm. 195. and this Dict. title Murder.

ENGLISH. Pleas, records, bonds, and proceedings in courts of justice, to be in English. Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 26. And see stats. 5 Geo. 2. c. 27. 6 Geo. 2. c. 14; and this Dict. titles Pleading, Process, &c.

ENTERPLEADER. See Interpleader.

ENTIERTE, from the French entierté, entireness.] Is a contradistinction in our books to moiety, denoting the whole: and a bond, damages, &c. are said to be entire, when they cannot be divided or apportioned.

ENTIRE TENANCY. Contrary to several tenancy, and signifying a sole possession in one man; whereas the other is a joint or common possession in two or more. Brook.

ENTRY, Fr. entrée, i. e. ingressus, introitus.] Signifies the taking possession of lands or tenements, where a man hath title of entry; and it is also used for a writ of possession. This entry into lands is where any man enters into or takes possession of any lands, &c. in his proper person; and is an actual entry when made by a man's self, or by attorney by warrant from him that hath the right; or it is an entry in law, for a continual claim is an entry implied by law, and has the same force with it. Lit. § 419. There is a right of entry, when the party claiming may, for his remedy, either enter into the land, or have an action to recover it: and a title of entry, where one hath lawful entry given him in the lands, which another hath, but has no action to recover till he hath entered. Plowd. 558. 10 Rep. 48. Finch's Law, 105.

ENTRY may be defined to be an extrajudicial and summary remedy, against certain species of injury by ouster, used by the legal owner, when another person, who hath no right, hath previously taken possession of lands or tenements. In this case, the party entitled may make a formal but peaceable entry thereon, declaring that thereby he takes possession; which notorious act of ownership is equivalent to a feodal investiture by the lord: or he may enter on any part of it in the same county, declaring it to be in the name of the whole. Lit. § 417. But if it lies in different counties, he must make different entries; for the notoriety of such entry or claim to the pares or freeholders of Westmorland, is not any notoriety to the pares or freeholders of Sussex. Also if there be two disseisors, the party disseised must make his entry on both; or if one disseisor has conveyed the lands with livery to two distinct feoffees, entry must be made on both. Co. Litt. 252. For as their seisin is distinct, so also must be the act which devests that seisin. If the claimant be deterred from entering by menaces or bodily fear, he may make claim as near to the estate as he can, with the like forms and solemnities: which claim is in force for only a year and a day. Litt. § 422. And this claim, if it be repeated once in the space of every year and day, (which is called continual claim,) has the same effect with, and in all respects amounts to, a legal entry. Ibid. § 419, 23.—See this Dict. title Claim. Such an entry gives a man seisin; or puts into immediate possession him that hath right of entry on the estate; and thereby makes him complete owner, and capable of conveying it from himself by either descent or purchase. Co. Lit. 15.

This remedy by entry takes place in three only of the five species of ouster, viz. Abatement, Intrusion, and Disseisin; for, as in these, the original entry of the wrong doer was unlawful, they may therefore be remedied by the mere entry of him who hath right. But, upon a Discontinuance, or Deforcement, the owner of the estate cannot enter, but is driven to his action: for herein the original entry being lawful, and thereby an apparent right of possession being gained, the law will not suffer that right to be overthrown by the mere act or entry of the claimant. Yet a man may enter on his tenant by sufferance: for such tenant hath no freehold, but only a bare possession; which may be defeated, like a tenancy at will, by the mere entry of the owner. But if the owner thinks it more expedient to suppose or admit such tenant to have gained a tortious freehold, he is then remediable by writ of entry, ad terminum qui preteriit. 1 Inst. 57. 237, 8. —See title Disseisin.

On the other hand, in case of Abatement, Intrusion, or Disseisin, where entries are generally lawful, this right of entry may be tolled, that is, taken away, by descent. Descents which take away entries, are, when any one, seised by any means whatsoever of the inheritance of a corporeal hereditament, dies, whereby the same descends to his heir: in this case, however feeble the right of the ancestor might be, the entry of any other person who claims title to the freehold is taken away; and he cannot recover possession against the heir by this summary method, but is driven to his action to gain a legal seisin of the estate. Lit. § 385. 413.

In general, therefore, no man can recover possession by mere entry on lands, which another hath by descent. Yet this rule hath some exceptions; especially if the claimant were under any legal disabilities during the life of the ancestor, either of infancy, coverture, imprisonment, insanity, or being out of the realm: in all which cases, there is no neglect or laches in the claimant, and therefore no descent shall bar or take away his entry. Co. Litt. 246. And this title of taking away entries dy descent is still farther narrowed by stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 33. which enacts, that if any person disseises or turns another out of possession, no descent to the heir of the disseisor shall take away the entry of him that has right to the land, unless the disseisor had peaceable possession five years next after the disseisin. But the statute, on feodal reasons, does not extend to any feoffee or donee of the disseisor, mediate or immediate. Ibid. 256.

By the statute of limitations, 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. it is enacted, that no entry shall be made by any man upon lands, unless within 20 years after his right shall accrue. And by stat. 4 & 5 An. c. 16. no entry shall be of force to satisfy the said statute of limitations, or to avoid a fine levied of lands, unless an action be thereupon commenced within one year after, and prosecuted with effect. See further title Claim.

This remedy by entry must be pursued, according to stat. 5 Ric. 2. st. 1. c. 8. in a peaceable and easy manner, and not with force or strong hand. For, if one turns or keeps another out of possession forcibly, this is an injury of both a civil and a criminal nature. The civil is remedied by immediate restitution: which puts the ancient possessor in statu quo; the criminal injury or public wrong, by breach of the King's peace, is punished by fine to the King. See this Dict. titles Fines, Forcible Entry.

THE WRIT OF ENTRY is a possessory remedy which disproves the title of the tenant or possessor, by shewing the unlawful means by which he entered, or continues possession. Finch, L. 261. The writ is directed to the Sheriff, requiring him to "Command the tenant of the land, that he render [in Latin, præcipe quod reddat] to the demandant the land in question, which he claims to be his right and inheritance; and into which, as he saith, the said tenant had not entry, but by (or after) a disseisin, intrusion, or the like, made to the said demandant, within the time limited by law for such actions; or that upon refusal he do appear in court on such a day, to shew wherefore he hath not done it." This is the original process, the præcipe, upon which all the rest of the suit is grounded; wherein it appears, that the tenant is required, either to deliver seisin of the lands, or to shew cause why he will not. This cause may be either a denial of the fact, of having entered by or under such means as are suggested, or a justification of his entry, by reason of title in himself, or in those under whom he makes claim; whereupon the possession of the land is awarded to him who produces the clearest right to possess it.

The Writs of Entry are of divers kinds, distinguished into four degrees, according to which the writs are varied. The first degree is a writ of entry sur disseisin, that lieth for the disseisee against a disseisor, upon a disseisin done by himself; and this is called a writ of entry in the nature of an assise.

Second, a writ of entry sur disseisin in le per, against the heir by descent, who is said to be in the per, as he comes in by his ancestor; and so it is if a disseisor make a feoffment in fee, gift in tail, &c. the feoffee and donee are in the per by the disseisor.

Third, A writ of entry sur disseisin in le per & cui, where the feoffee of a disseisor maketh a feoffment over to another; when the disseisee shall have this writ of entry sur disseisin, &c. of the lands in which such other had no right of entry but by the feoffee of the disseisor, to whom the disseisor demised the same, who unjustly, and without judgment, disseised the demandant. 1 Inst. 238.

These three degrees thus state the original wrong, and the title of the tenant who claims under such wrong. If more than two degrees, (that is two alienations or descents) were past, there lay no writ of entry at the Common Law. For, as it was provided for the quietness of men's inheritances, that no one, even though he had the true right of possession, should enter upon him who had the apparent right by descent or otherwise, but he was driven to his writ of entry to gain possession; so, after more than two descents, or two conveyances were passed, the demandant, even though he had the right both of possession and property, was not allowed this possessory action; but was driven to his writ of right, a long and final remedy, to punish his neglect in not sooner putting in his claim while the degrees subsisted; and for the ending of suits, and quieting of all controversies. 2 Inst. 153. But by the stat. of Marlbridge, 52 Hen. 3. c. 30. it was provided, that when the number of alienations or descents exceeded the usual degrees, a new writ should be allowed without any mention of degrees at all. And accordingly,

Fourthly, A new writ has been framed, called a writ of entry in the post, which only alleges the injury of the wrongdoer, without deducing all the intermediate title from him to the tenant; stating it in this manner, that the tenant had not entry, unless after, or subsequent to, the ouster, or injury done by the original dispossessor; and rightly concluding, that if the original title was wrongful, all claims derived from thence must participate of the same wrong. Upon the latter of these writs, it is, (the writ of entry sur disseisin in the post,) that the form of our common recoveries of landed estates is usually grounded. See title Fine and Recovery.

This remedial instrument of writ of entry is applicable to all the cases of ouster, except that of Discontinuance of tenant in tail, and some peculiar species of Deforcements. Such is that of the deforcement of dower, by not assigning any dower to the widow within the time limited by the law; for which she has her remedy by writ of dower, unde nihil habet. F. N. B. 147.—See title Dower.

But, in general, the writ of entry is the universal remedy to recover possession, when wrongfully withheld from the owner. It were therefore endless to recount all the several divisions of writs of entry, which the different circumstances of the respective demandants may require, and which are furnished by the laws of England, being plainly and clearly chalked out in that collection of legal forms, the Registrum omnium Brevium, or Register of such writs as are issuable out of the King's Courts; upon which Fitzherbert's Natura Brevium is a comment, which see, and the several appropriate titles in this Dict.

In the times of our Saxon ancestors, the right of possession seems to have been recoverable only by writ of entry. Gilb. Ten. 42. This writ was then usually brought in the County Court; and the proceedings in these actions were not then so tedious, (when the Courts were held, and process issued from, and was returnable therein, at the end of every three weeks,) as they became after the Conquest, when all causes were drawn into the King's Courts, and process issued only from Term to Term. Hence a new remedy was invented in many cases to do justice to the people, and to determine the possession in the proper counties by the King's Judges; this was the remedy by Assise; as to which, see title Assise in this Dict. and fully on this subject, 3 Comm. 174. 184.

Having said thus much in general on the titles Entry and Writs of Entry, subjects now in some measure rather unusual than obsolete, the following observations, extracts, &c. may be of use to the inquiring Student: should any of them seem a repetition of what has already been said, it will be generally found they state the point more at large, or on different authorities.

A Writ of Entry in the per and cui shall be maintained against none, but where the tenant is in by purchase or descent; for if the alienation or descent be put out of the degree upon which no writ may be made in the per and cui, then it shall be made in the post. Termes de Ley.

There are five things which put the writ of entry out of the degrees, viz. intrusion; disseisin upon disseisin; succession, where the disseisor was a person of religion, and his successor enters; judgment, when a person hath had judgment to recover against the disseisor; and escheat, on the disseisor's dying without heir, or committing felony, &c. on which the lord enters, &c. In all these cases, the disseisee or his heir, shall not have a writ of entry within the degrees of the per, but in the post; because they are not in by descent, or purchase. Termes de Ley.

Degrees as to entries are of two sorts, either by act in law, as in case of a descent; or by act of the party by lawful conveyance. But no estate gained by wrong doth make a degree; so that abatement, intrusion, &c. work not a degree; nor doth every change by lawful title, as an estate of tenant by the curtesy, by judgment, &c. or of any others that come in the post; though a tenancy in dower by assignment of the heir doth work a degree, because she is in by her husband; but an assignment of dower by a disseisor doth not, by reason she is in the post. Co. Lit. 239.

Though Entry on lands is taken away by descent on disseisins, or discontinuance, &c. yet a descent shall not take away the entry of lessee for seven years, nor of tenant by elegit, &c. who have but a chattel, and no freehold; otherwise it is of any estate for life, or any higher estate. Co. Lit. 249.

If a disseisor leases for years, and dies seised of the reversion, the entry of the disseisee is taken away, because he died seised of the fee and freehold: but if he had leased for life, &c. the entry of the disseisee would not be taken away. Co. Lit. 239. Where the disseisor of an infant dies seised, and after the infant comes of age, and the heir of the disseisor dies before entry; though he died not seised of an actual seisin, but a seisin in law; yet his dying seised takes away the entry of the disseisee. Ibid. If a disseisor makes a feoffment upon condition, and the feoffee dies seised, and the feoffer enters upon the heir for the breach of the condition, the disseisee may enter upon him; for by the entry of the disseisor, the descent is utterly defeated. Lit. sect. 409.

The title of entry in a feoffer, &c. that hath but a condition, cannot be taken away by any descent, because he has no remedy by action to recover the land; so that if a descent should take away his entry, it would bar him of his right for ever; and the condition remains, and cannot be devested and put out of possession, as the lands, &c. Co. Lit 240. If a man recovers lands, and after a stranger to the recovery dies seised, this shall not take away the entry of the recoverer; as it was but a title. 2 Danv. Abr. 561. But where a person recovers against another, and enters and sues execution, and after the recovere disseises him, and dies seised; this descent shall take away the entry of the recoveror, for the recovery was executed. Ibid.

If after recovery against tenant for life, he dies, and he in remainder enters before execution, and dies seised, the entry of the recoveror is not taken away. Co. Lit. 238. The entry of the tenant for life shall be good for him in remainder; and if tenant for life make a feoffment in fee, and a stranger enters for the forfeiture in the name of the reversioner, this will be good to vest the reversion in him. Lit. 128. 9 Rep. 106. If an infant under age makes a deed of feoffment, and after his full age the feoffee dies seised; or a lessee for life aliens the land, and the alienee dies seised thereof; or a devise be of lands upon condition, and the heir of the disseisor enters and dies seised: in these cases the entry is gone, and the parties shall be put to their action. Lit. 96. 9 H. 6. 25.

If there be tenant for life, remainder to the right heir of J. S. and the tenant for life is disseised; a descent is cast, and after J. S. dies, and tenant for life also dies: by this the entry of the heir of J. S. is not taken away, for his remainder was in custodiâ legis. 1 Rep. 134. Where an infant has cause of entry, and the descent happens while he is within age, it will not bar him of his entry: he that hath the right of entry, must be of age, within the four seas, of sound memory; and if it be a woman, she must be sole; and if the party be under age, beyond the seas, non compos mentis, in prison, or a feme covert, at the time of the descent, it shall not bar. Lit. 147. 402. 21 H. 6. 17.

The whole time from a disseisin is considerable; as where feme covert is disseised, and her husband dieth, and she takes another husband, and then a descent is cast; or if one ultra mare be disseised, and he return into England, and then go beyond sea again, and there is a descent; here the descent will bar the entry, because of the interim. 9 H. 7. 24. Dyer, 143. 32 H. 8. c. 33.

A woman tenant in tail took husband, who made a feoffment in fee, and died, and the wife without entry made a lease for years; and it was held, that the freehold was not reduced by the lease, without an entry made. 1 Leon. ca. 165. The entry of a disseisee, when he duly makes it, shall avoid all the mesne charges by the disseisor upon the land: but right of entry may be lost divers ways; as by acceptance of rent, by him who hath it, and the like. 1 Anderson, 133. Noy. Rep. 7. If a man is disseised of land, whereunto a common is appendant, the disseisee cannot use the common till he enters on the land to which the common is appendant; for if the disseisee might use it, so might the disseisor, which would be a double charge on the common: yet if a person be disseised of a manor, to which an advowson is appendant, he may present to the advowson before entry on the manor. Co. Lit. 122.

A disseisee enters into the land, and continues therein with the disseisor, and manures it with him, claiming nothing of his first estate; or if the disseisee enters, and takes the profit, as lessee, &c. of the disseisor; it is said these will be an entry that will reduce the first estate. 2 Danv. 790. If the disseisee commands a stranger to put in the cattle of such stranger in the land to feed there; this is an entry in law on the land. Co. Lit. 245.

Where entry may be made into land, or any thing, it shall not be in the party before entry: if entry cannot be made, but only claim, then it shall be in him by claim; and when neither entry nor claim can be made, it shall be in him by act of law. 1 Plowd. 133. In case the possession of land is in no man, but the freehold in law is in the heir that enters, his general entry into one part reduces all into his actual possession: but if an entry is to devest an estate, a general entry into parcel, is good only for that part. Co. Lit. 15. Where an entry is in any part, it must be in the name of all: if I enfeoff a person of an acre of ground upon condition, and of another acre on condition, and both conditions are broken; here entry into one in name of both acres is not good to reduce both: but if a man make a feoffment of divers parcels upon condition that is broken, there entry into part in name of all the rest is sufficient. Co. Lit. 252. 9 H. 7. 25.

A man hath right to enter into lands in divers villages in one county, if he enter upon part of it in one village in the name of all in that county; by this he shall have possession of the whole. Co. Lit. 252. Dyer, 227. 337. If a man disseise me of one acre at one time, and another acre at another time, in the same county; my entry into one of them in the name of both is good: though it will not be good, if the disseisin be by two several persons, or if the acres lie in several counties; in which case there ought to be several entries and actions. Co. Lit. 252.

If he who hath right of entry into a freehold, enters into part of it, it shall be adjudged an entry into all possessed by one tenant; but if there be several tenants possessed of the freehold, there must be several entries on the several tenants. 1 Lil. Abr. 515, 516. Special entry into a house with which lands are occupied, claiming the whole, is a good entry as to the whole house and lands. Ibid. If a husband enters to the use of his wife; or a man enters to the use of an infant, or any other, where the entry is lawful; this settles the possession before agreement of the parties: though it is otherwise where a person enters to the use of one whose entry is not lawful; for this vests nothing in him till agreement, and then he shall be a disseisor. 2 Danv. 787. If two joint-tenants are disseised, and the disseisor aliens, and one joint-tenant enters upon the alienee to the use of both; this settles the freehold in both of them. Ibid. 788. But if one coparcener, &c. enters especially claiming the whole land, she gains the part of her companion by abatement; and it shall not settle any possession in the other. Co. Lit. 243.

The heir is to enter into lands descended to him, to intitle him to the profits. Co. Lit. 214. If a younger son enters on lands in fee, where the eldest son dies leaving issue; though many descents are cast in his line, yet the heirs of the eldest son may make an entry on the lands; but if the youngest son convey away the lands in fee, and the feoffee dies seised, they may not enter; nor may they enter where the younger son disseises the eldest, and dies seised. Co. Lit. 237. 244. Lit. sect. 397.

A tenant in tail hath issue two sons, and the eldest dies, leaving his wife privement ensient of a son, and the younger brother enters, and then the wife of the eldest is delivered of a son, he may enter upon the younger brother. 2 Danv. 557. See title Descent.

An estate of freehold will not cease, without entry or claim: also a remainder of an estate of freehold cannot cease, without entry, &c. no more than estate of freehold in possession. Cro. Eliz. 360. A right of entry preserves a contingent remainder. 2 Lev. 35. And a grantee of a reversion may enter for a condition broken. Plowd. 176.

A lessee must enter into lands demised to him; and though the lessor dies before the lessee enters, yet he may enter; and if the lessee dies before entry, his executors or administrators may enter. The lessee may assign over his term before entry, having interesse termini; but he may not take a release to enlarge his estate; or bring trespass, &c. till actual entry. Though if there be words bargain and sell in a lease, &c. for consideration of money, the lessee or bargainee is in possession on executing the deed, to make a release, &c. Lit. 59. 454. Co. Lit. 46. 57. 270.

Where a lessor enters on his lessee for years, the rent is suspended. 1 Leon. 110. But without entry and expulsion, the lessee is not discharged of his rent to the lessor, unless it be where the lessor is attainted of treason, &c. then the rent is to be paid to the King, who is in possession without entry. Sid. 399. 1 Nels. Abr. 706.

There is no need of entry to avoid an estate in case of a limitation, because, thereby, the estate is determined without entry or claim; and the law casts it upon the party to whom it is limited. If A. devises lands to B. and his heirs, and dies, it is in the devisee immediately; but till entry he cannot bring a possessory action: and where a possession vests without entry, a reversion will vest without claim. 2 Mod. Rep. 7, 8. A bare entry on another, without an expulsion, makes only a seisin; so that the law will adjudge him in possession who hath the right. 3 Salk, 135.

Where a person is in a house with goods, &c. the house may be entered when the doors are open, to make execution. Cro. Eliz. 759. But it must be averred that the goods were in the house. Lutw. 1428. 1434. And a man cannot enter into a house, the doors being open, to demand a debt, unless he aver that the debtor is within the house at the same time. Cro. El. 6. 8. So entry may be made on a tenant where rent is in arrear, to take a distress, &c. See titles Execution, Rent, Demand.

In order to regain possession of lands by entry, &c. the manner of entry is thus: If it be in a house, and the door is open, you go into it, and say these words,—I do here enter, and take possession of this house. But if the door be shut, then set your foot on the groundsel, or against the door, and say the before words: and if it be land, then go upon the land, and say, I here enter and take possession of this land, &c. If another do it for you, he must say, I do here enter, &c. to the use of A. B. And it is necessary to make it before witnesses, and that a memorandum be made of it. Litt. 385. Co. Lit. 237, 238.

Where an ejectment will lie, the confession, of lease, entry, and ouster is sufficient in all cases, except in the case of a fine with proclamations, in which case it is necessary to prove an actual entry; and the lessor of the plaintiff directing one to deliver a declaration to the tenant in possession, will not amount to such an entry. See title Ejectment.

As to a power of Entry limited by way of use, see 1 Inst. 203, a. in n.

ENTRY, AD COMMUNEM LEGEM, at the Common Law. Is the writ of entry which lies where tenant for term of life, or for term of another's life, or by the curtesy, &c. aliens and dies; he in the reversion shall then have this writ against whomsoever is in possession of the land. New. Nat. Br. 461.

ENTRY, AD TERMINUM QUI PRETERIIT; at a term that has ended. A writ of entry anciently brought against tenant for years, who held over his term, and thereby kept out the lessor. See New Nat. Brev. 447, 8. But an ejectment is now the common mode of proceeding; and by stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. tenants for term of years, &c. holding over after demand made, are subject to double rent. See titles Rent, Ejectment, Tenant.

ENTRY, IN CASU CONSIMILI, in like case. Is a writ that lies for him in reversion by stat. W. 2. c. 24. against tenant for life, or tenant by the curtesy, who aliens in fee, &c. See Casu Consimili.

ENTRY, IN CASU PROVISO, in the case provided. Where a tenant in dower aliens in fee, or for term of life, or of another's life; then he in the reversion shall have this writ, provided by the stat. of Glouc. 6 Ed. 1. cap. 7. by which statute it is enacted, "that if a woman alien her dower in fee, or for life, the next heir, &c. shall recover by writ of entry."—See title Dower. And the writ may be brought against the tenant of the freehold of the land, on such alienation, during the life of the tenant in dower, &c. New. Nat. Br. 456.

The above four writs of entry may all be brought either in the per, or in the cui or post.

ENTRY SINE ASSENSU CAPITULI. A writ of entry, that lay where a bishop, abbot, &c. aliened lands or tenements of the church, without the assent of the chapter or Convent. F.N.B. 195.

Entry in Scotch Law refers to the acknowledgment of the title of the heir, &c. to be admitted by the superior.

ENURE. In law, to take place or be available; it is as much as effectum: as for example; a release made to tenant for life, shall enure, and be of force and effect to him in the reversion. Lit.

EODORBRICE. From the Sax. eoder, a hedge, and brice, ruptura.] Hedge-breaking: in which sense it is mentioned in the laws of King Alfred, cap. 45.

EORLE. Sax. for earl, &c. though made use of by the Danes for barons. See Earl.

EPIMENIA. Expences or gifts. Blount.

EPIPHANY. The day when the star appeared to the wise men at Christ's Nativity, generally called Twelfth Day.

EPISCOPALIA. Synodals, or other customary payments from the clergy to their bishop or diocesan; which were formerly collected by the rural deans, and by them transmitted to the bishop.—Mon. Ang. tom. 3. pag. 61. These customary payments have been otherwise called onus episcopale; and were remitted by special privilege to free churches and chapels of the King's foundation, which were exempt from episcopal jurisdiction. Ken. Gloss.

EPISCOPUS PUERORUM. It was a custom in former times, that some lay person about a certain feast should plait his hair, and put on the garments of a bishop, and in them exercise episcopal jurisdiction, and do several ludicrous actions, for which reason he was called bishop of the boys: and this custom obtained here long after several constitutions were made to abolish it. Mon. Ang. tom. 3. pag. 169.

In an old work, printed under the title of the Processionale of the Church of Sarum, is contained the service of that church on this occasion, which appears to have taken place on the day of the Holy Innocents. The service is very short, and is set to music. Blount.—From the monuments in some of the cathedrals it appears, that the Episcopus puerorum was himself a boy, (generally of the choir.) His office lasted about a month; and if he died while in office, he was buried in pontificalibus.

EQUALITY. The law delights in equality; so that when a charge is made upon one, and divers ought to bear it, he shall have relief against the rest. 2 Rep. 25. And where a man leaves a power to his wife to give an estate among three daughters, in such proportions as she shall think fit; it has been held she must divide it equally; unless good reason be given for doing otherwise. Preced. Canc. 256. See title Contribution.

In equity it is a maxim, that "EQUALITY IS EQUITY." See Francis's Maxims, fol. 9. &c.

EQUES AURATUS, Lat.] Is taken for a knight; because anciently none but knights were allowed to beautify and gild their armour with gold: but this word is rather used by the heralds than lawyers; for eques auratus is not a word in our law for knight, but miles, and formerly Chevalier. 4 Inst. 5.

EQUITY.

(See, Generally, title CHANCERY.)

ÆQUITAS; quasi, æqualitas.] Is defined to be a correction, or qualification of the law, generally made in that part wherein it faileth, or is too severe. In other words "the correction of that wherein the law, by reason of its universality, is deficient." 1 Comm. 62. It likewise signifies the extension of the words of the law to cases unexpressed, yet having the same reason; so that where one thing is enacted by statute, all other things are enacted that are of the like degree: for example; the statute of Glouc. gives action of waste against him that holds lands for life or years; and, by the equity thereof, a man shall have action of waste against a tenant that holds but for one year, or half-year, which is without the words of the act, but within the meaning of it; and the words that enact the one, by equity enact the other. Termes de Ley.

So that Equity is of two kinds; the one doth abridge and take from the letter of the law; and the other inlarge and add thereto. Æquitas est perfecta quædam ratio, quæ jus scriptum interpretatur & emendat. Co. Lit. 24. And statutes may be construed according to equity; especially where they give remedy for wrong, or are for expedition of justice, &c. Co. Lit. 24. 54. 76. 2 Inst. 106, 107. &c.

A Court of Equity cannot now be created by the King, but the same must be done by Act of Parliament. 4 Inst, 84.

The distinction between Law and Equity, as administered in different courts, is not at present known, nor seems to have ever been known, in any other country than England at any time—With us the Aula regia, which was anciently the supreme court of judicature, undoubtedly administered equal justice according to the rules of both, or either, as the case might chance to require: and, when that was broken to pieces, the idea of a Court of Equity, as distinguished from a Court of Law, did not subsist in the original plan of partition. For though Equity is mentioned by Bracton, l. 2. c. 7, pl. 23. as a thing contrasted to strict law, yet neither in that writer, nor in Glanvill or Fleta, nor yet in Britton, (composed under the auspices and in the name of Edward I. and treating particularly of courts, and their several jurisdictions,) is there a syllable to be found relating to the equitable jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery. It seems therefore probable, that when the courts of law, proceeding merely upon the ground of the King's original writs, and confining themselves strictly to that bottom, gave a harsh or imperfect judgment, the application for redress used to be to the King in person, assisted by his privy council; (from whence also arose the jurisdiction of the Court of Requests, which was virtually abolished by stat. 16. Car. 1. c. 10.) and they were wont to refer the matter either to the Chancellor and a select committee, or, by degrees, to the Chancellor only, who mitigated the severity, or supplied the defects of the judgments pronounced in the courts of law, upon weighing the circumstances of the case. This was the custom not only among our Saxon ancestors, before the institution of the Aula regia, but also after its dissolution, in the reign of King Edward I. and perhaps during its continuance, in that of Henry II. Ll. Ed. c. 2. Lamb. Arch. 59.

When, about the end of the reign of King Edward III. uses of land were introduced, and though totally discountenanced by the courts of Common Law, were considered as fiduciary deposits, and binding in conscience by the clergy, the separate jurisdiction of the Chancery as a court of equity began to be established. Spelm. Gloss. 106. 1 Lev. 242. John Waltham, who was bishop of Salisbury, and Chancellor to King Richard II. (by a strained interpretation of the statute of Westm. 2. [13 E. 1. c. 24.] enabling the clerks in chancery to form new writs according to the special circumstances of each case,) devised the writ of subpæna, returnable in the court of Chancery only, to make the feoffee to uses accountable to his cestui que use: which process was afterwards extended to other matters wholly determinable at the Common Law, upon fictitious suggestions; for which therefore the Chancellor is, by stat. 17 Rich. 2. c. 6. directed to give damages to the party unjustly aggrieved. But as the clergy had long attempted to turn their ecclesiastical courts into courts of equity, by entertaining suits pro læsione fidei, as a spiritual offence against conscience, in case of non-payment of debts, or any breach of civil contracts, till checked by the Constitutions of Clarendon, (10 Hen. 2. c. 15.) therefore probably the ecclesiastical chancellors, who then held the seal, were remiss in abridging their own new acquired jurisdiction; especially as the spiritual courts continued to grasp at the same authority as before, till finally prohibited by the unanimous concurrence of all the judges; however, it appears from the Parliament rolls, that in the reigns of Henry IV. and V. the Commons were repeatedly urgent to have the writ of subpæna entirely suppressed, as being a novelty devised against the form of the Common Law. But though the statue 4 Hen. 4. c. 23. was passed, whereby judgments at law are declared irrevocable, unless by attaint or writ of error, yet in Edward IV's time, the process by bill and subpæna was become the daily practice of the Court, though its jurisdiction was not then nearly so extensive as at present. Rot. Parl. 14 Ed. 4. no. 33.

In the time of Lord Chancellor Ellesmere, (A. D. 1616.) arose that notable dispute between the Courts of Law and Equity, set on foot by Sir Edward Coke, then Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench; whether a Court of Equity could give relief after or against a judgment at the Common Law. This contest was so warmly carried on, that indictments were preferred against the suitors, the solicitors, the counsel, and even a master in chancery, for having incurred a præmunire by questioning, in a Court of Equity, a judgment in the Court of King's Bench, obtained by gross fraud and imposition. This matter being brought before the King, was, by him, referred to his learned counsel for their advice and opinion; who reported so strongly in favour of the courts of equity, that his majesty gave judgment on their behalf. Whitelock of Parl. 2. 390. 1 Ch. Rep. Append. 11.

Lord Bacon, who succeeded Lord Ellesmere, reduced the practice of the court into a more regular system; his successors in the reign of Charles I. did little to improve upon his plan; till the appointment of Sir Heneage Finch in 1673, who became afterwards earl of Nottingham. He was a person of the greatest abilities and most uncorrupted integrity; a thorough master aud zealous defender of the laws aud constitution of his country; and endued with a pervading genius, that enabled him to discover and to pursue the true spirit of justice, notwithstanding the embarrassments raised by the narrow and technical notions which then prevailed in the courts of law, and the imperfect ideas of redress which had possessed the courts of equity. The reason and necessities of mankind, arising from the great change in property by the extension of trade, and the abolition of military tenures, cooperated in establishing his plan, and enabling him, in the course of nine years, to build a system of jurisprudence and jurisdiction, upon wide and national foundations, which have also been extended and improved by many great men, who have since presided in Chancery. See 3 Comm. 50—56.

The same jurisdiction is exercised, and the same system of redress pursued, in the Equity-Court of the Exchequer; with a distinction, however, as to some few matters peculiar to each tribunal, and in which the other cannot interfere.

Upon the abolition of the court of Wards, the care, which the Crown was bound to take as guardian of its Infant Tenants, was totally extinguished in every feodal view, but resulted to the King in his court of Chancery, together with the general protection of all other infants in the kingdom. F. N. B. 27.—When therefore a fatherless child has no other guardian, the Court of Chancery has a right to appoint one; and from all proceedings relative thereto, an appeal lies to the House of Lords. The Court of Exchequer can only appoint a guardian ad litem, to manage the defence of the infant, if a suit be commenced against him; a power which is incident to the jurisdiction of every court of justice. Cro. Jac. 641. 2 Lev. 163. T. Jon. 90. But when the interest of a minor comes before the court judicially, in the progress of a cause, or upon a bill for that purpose filed, either tribunal, indiscriminately, will take care of the property of the infant.

As to Idiots and Lunatics, the king himself used formerly to commit the custody of them to proper Committees in every particular case; but now, to avoid solicitations, and the very shadow of undue partiality, a warrant is issued by the King, under his royal sign manual, to the Chancellor, to perform this office for him: and if he acts improperly in granting such custodies, the complaint must be made to the King himself in council. 3 P. Wms. 108. See Reg. Br. 267. But the previous proceedings on the commission, to inquire whether or no the party be an idiot or a lunatic, are on the law side of the Court of Chancery, and can only be redressed (if erroneous) by writ of error in the regular course of law.

The king, as parens patriæ, has the general superintendance of all Charities; which he exercises by the Chancellor. And therefore, when necessary, the Attorney-General, at the relation of some informant (who is usually called the relator,) files ex officio an information in the court of Chancery to have the charity properly established.

By stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4. authority is given to the Lord Chancellor, and to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, respectively, to grant commissions under their several seals, to inquire into any abuses of charitable donations, and rectify the same by decree; which may be reviewed in the respective courts of the several chancellors, upon exceptions taken thereto. But, though this is done in the petty-bag office of the court of Chancery, because the commission is there returned, it is not a proceeding at Common Law, but treated as an original cause in the court of equity. The evidence below is not taken down in writing, and the respondent, in his answer to the exceptions, may allege what new matter he pleases; upon which they go to proof, and examine witnesses in writing upon all the matters in issue: and the court may decree the respondent to pay all the costs, though no such authority is given by the statute. And as it is thus considered as an original cause throughout, an appeal lies of course from the Chancellor's decree to the House of Peers, notwithstanding any loose opinions to the contrary. Duke's Char. Uses, 62. 128. 2 Vern. 118.

By the several statutes relating to Bankrupts, a summary jurisdiction is given to the chancellor, in many matters consequential or previous to the commissions thereby directed to be issued; from which the statutes give no appeal.

The jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery doth not however extend to some causes, wherein relief may be had in the Exchequer. No information can be brought in Chancery for such mistaken charities as are given to the King by the statutes for suppressing superstitious uses. Nor can Chancery give any relief against the King, or direct any act to be done by him, or make any decree disposing of or affecting his property; not even in cases where he is a royal trustee. Such causes must be determined in the Court of Exchequer, as a court of revenue; which alone has power over the King's treasure, and the officers employed in its management, unless where it properly belongs to the duchy court of Lancaster.

In all other matters, what is said of the court of Equity in the Court of Chancery will be equally applicable to the other courts of Equity. Whatever difference there may be in the forms of practice, it arises from the different constitution of their officers.—See 3 Comm. 426—429.

The learned Commentator then enters into a brief but comprehensive view of the general nature of Equity; to shew that in our courts it is not contrary to, but consistent with, law; a position which perhaps will be best understood by further explanation of the jurisdiction exercised by courts of equity, either as assistant to, concurrent with, or exclusive of, the jurisdiction of the courts of Common Law; which is here done in an abridgment from Fonblanque's Treatise of Equity, pp. 10. &c. in n.

EQUITY is assistant to the jurisdiction of the Courts of Law; 1st. By removing legal impediments to the fair decision of a question depending in courts of law. 2dly, By compelling a discovery, which may enable them to decide. 3dly, By perpetuating testimony, when in danger of being lost, before the matter to which it relates can be made the subject of judicial investigation. It may also be said to be assistant, by rendering the judgments of courts of law effective, as by providing for the safety of property in dispute pending a litigation; and by counteracting fraudulent judgments, &c.; and by putting a bound to vexatious and oppressive litigation.—It exercises a concurrent jurisdiction with courts of law, in most cases of fraud, accident, mistake, account, partition and dower. It claims an exclusive jurisdiction in all matters of trust and confidence; and wherever, upon the principles of universal justice, the interference of a court of judicature is necessary to prevent a wrong, and the positive law is silent. See Mitford's Treatise on the Pleadings in Chancery.

To pursue this division of the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity with that minuteness which is necessary to a particular acquaintance of its powers, would lead to an investigation too extensive. Some short notice shall be taken of the general objection that is urged against the claims of Courts of Equity to a concurrence of jurisdiction in some cases with Courts of Law. This concurrence of jurisdiction may, in the greater number of cases in which it is exercised, be justified by the propriety of preventing a multiplicity of suits; for as the mode of proceeding in courts of law requires the plaintiff to establish his case, without enabling him to draw the necessary evidence from the examination of the defendant, justice could never be attained at law in those cases where the principal facts to be proved by one party are confined to the knowledge of the other party. In such cases, therefore, it becomes necessary for the party, in want of such evidence, to resort to the extraordinary powers of a Court of Equity, which will compel the necessary discovery; and the court having acquired cognizance of the suit, for the purpose of discovery, will entertain it for the purpose of relief, in most cases of fraud, account, accident, and mistake; and for other reasons will entertain suits for partition and dower, though discovery be not necessary to the plaintiff's case.

The case, (and, it seems, the only case) in which fraud cannot be relieved against in equity, concurrently with courts of law, though discovery be sought, is the case of fraud, in obtaining a will; which since the case of Kerrick v. Bransby, 3 Brown's Parl. Cas. 358, is constantly referred to a court of law in the shape of an issue, devisavit vel non. That courts of equity have a concurrence of jurisdiction with courts of law, in all other matters of fraud. See White v. Hussey, Pre. Ch. 14. Hungerford v. Earle, 2 Vern. 261. Colt v. Woollaston, 2 Pr. Wms. 156. Stent v. Baillis, 2 P. Wms. 220. 2 Comyn's Digest. titles Chancery, Fraud.

The jurisdiction exercised by Courts of Equity in matters of account is, in many cases, bounded by the discovery: as where a suit is instituted for an account of waste of timber, without praying an injunction, the plaintiff cannot have a decree for relief. Jesus College v. Bloome, 3 Atk. 262. Piers v. Piers, 1 Vez. 521. But where the bill seeks an account of ore dug, the court will decree it. (Bishop of Winchester v. Knight, 1 P. Wms. 406.) because the working of a mine is a kind of trade. Story v. Lord Windsor, 2 Atk. 630. Yet, even in that case, the plaintiff must shew a possession. Sayer v. Pierce, 1 Vez. 232. Neither will Equity, in all cases, decree an account of mesne profits; for where a man has title to the possession of lands, and makes an entry, whereby he becomes entitled to damages at law for the time that possession was detained from him, he shall not, after his entry, turn that action at law into a suit in equity, and bring a bill for an account of the profits, except in the case of an infant, or some other very particular circumstances. Tilly v. Bridges, Pre. C. 252. Owen v. Aprice, 1 Ch. Rep. 17. The particular circumstances excepted by the Lord Keeper, in laying down this rule, extend to all those cases which involve an equity, which the plaintiff cannot make available at law. Coventry v. Hall, 2 Ch. Rep. 134. Duke of Bolton v. Deane, Pre. Ch. 5, 6. Dormer v. Fortescue, 3 Atk. 129, 30. Townsend, v. Ash, 3 Atk. 336. Norton v. Frecker, 1 Atk. 524. See also Curtis v. Curtis, Rolls, 2 Bro. C. R. 622.

The jurisdiction exercised by our courts of equity, in most cases of accident, presents a very striking instance of their anxiety to prevent innovation on the jurisdiction of courts of law: their interference being generally founded on some circumstance which prevents the party being relievable at law; as where a bond, or other instrument or security, is lost, equity will interfere, by compelling a discovery from the defendant, and will relieve upon such discovery; but the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief upon a mere suggestion that the bond, instrument or security is lost; but is required, for the purpose of relief, to annex to his bill an affidavit to such effect. 3 Atk. 17. Mitford's Treatise, 112. And, as a further security against innovation, it must appear that the loss of the deed or instrument obstructs the plaintiff in seeking relief at law: for the loss of a deed is not always a ground to come into a Court of Equity for relief; if there was no more in the case, although he is entitled to have a discovery of that, whether lost or not, courts of law admit evidence of the loss of a deed, proving the existence of it and its contents, just as a Court of Equity does. There are two grounds to come into equity for relief, annexing an affidavit to the bill. First, where the deed is destroyed or concealed by the defendant: and whenever that is the case, the plaintiff is entitled to have relief in this court, upon the reason in Lord Hunsdon's case. Hob. 109. Another is, where the plaintiff cannot recover at law, without making profert of the deed in pleading at law. Whitfield v. Fausset, 1 Vez. 392. 2 Atk. 61.

The judgment of the Court of King's Bench in Reed v. Brookman, (3 Term Rep. 151.) seems to have relieved the obligee from the necessity of coming into equity, upon the mere circumstance of the bond or instrument being lost; by allowing him to state such circumstances in his declaration, as a reason for not making profert of it; but, upon this case being cited in Chancery, as furnishing an objection to the plaintiff's suit in equity, he being relievable at law, Lord Thurlow observed, that the Court of King's Bench having determined to give relief in a case formerly relievable only in equity, was not a reason for excluding the ancient, particular, and, at least, concurrent, jurisdiction of courts of equity. Atkinson v. Leonard, 3 Bro. C. R. 218. This concurrence of jurisdiction as to this kind of accident, may therefore be considered to extend to all cases in which the deed or instrument has been destroyed, or is concealed by the defendant, or has been lost by the plaintiff; though of the contents of such instrument the plaintiff has other evidence, of which he might avail himself at law. But where the relief sought in equity is upon the loss of a bill of exchange, or promissory note, the plaintiff must, by his bill, offer to give security, as an indemnity to the defendant against any demand being made upon him in respect of such lost bill or note. Walmsley v. Child, 1 Vez. 341.

To establish the origin of any branch of legal or equitable jurisdiction is always difficult, and seldom necessary, provided the exercise of such jurisdiction is sanctioned by the dictates of reason, and found to be conducive to the ends of substantial justice; and such will appear to be the nature and tendency of the jurisdiction exercised by our courts of equity in cases of Partition, upon a reference to the difficulties which obstructed the mode of proceeding at Common Law: and though many of those difficulties are removed by stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 31. yet still, if the parties are in any degree complicated, it is extremely difficult to proceed at law, or where the tenants in possession are seised of particular estates only; for the persons entitled in remainder cannot be bound by the judgment, in a writ of partition. Mitford's Treatise, p. 110. Neither can a feme covert be bound by partition by writ, Co. Lit. 166 a. which it should seem, she may be by decree and commission in equity, Martyn v. Perryman, 1 Ch. Rep. 125.: on these considerations, and the almost constant occasion that the parties have for a discovery, is founded this branch of equitable jurisdiction; in the exercise of which our courts of equity are constantly governed by an anxious attention to the legal title of the plaintiff: for though, at law, it be sufficient to allege seisin, yet in equity, the plaintiff must shew his title. Cartwright v. Pultney, 2 Atk. 380. And if the defendant contest the legal title, the court will dismiss the bill. Bishop of Ely v. Kenrick, Bunb. 322. but see Parker v. Gerard, Ambler, 236. And as a further mean to prevent innovation and vexatious suits, courts of equity will never allow costs on bills of partition; courts of law allowing none on the proceeding by writ. Metcalf v. Beckwith, 2 P. Wms. 276.—Mitford's Treatise, 111. And this rule prevails, notwithstanding the unequal interests of the parties. Parker v. Gerard, Ambler, 236.—See, on this subject of Partition in Equity, also 1 Inst. 169. b. and the notes there, which are very ingeniously combated, we may say refuted, by Mr. Fonblanque, who sums up the result in the foregoing paragraph.

The jurisdiction of our courts of equity, in matters of Dower, for the purpose of assisting the widow with a discovery of the lands or title deeds, or of removing impediments to her rendering her legal title available at law, has never been doubted. But it has been questioned whether equity could give relief in those cases, in which there appeared to be no obstacle to her legal remedy. Wallis v. Everard, 3 Ch. R. 87. It seems now, however, to be settled, that the widow labours under so many disadvantages at law, from the embarrasments of trust terms, &c. that she is fully entitled to every assistance that a Court of Equity can give her, not only in paving the way for her to establish her right at law, but also by giving complete relief when the right is ascertained. Curtis v. Curtis, 2 Brown C. R. 634. and Lucas v. Calcraft, there cited. And in the exercise of this jurisdiction, courts of equity will even enforce a discovery against a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. Williams v. Lambe, 3 Bro. Ch. Rep. 264. And though the widow should die before she had established her right to dower, equity will, in favour of her personal representatives, decree an account of the rents and profits of the lands, of which she afterwards appeared dowable.

With respect to the exclusive jurisdiction exercised by our courts of equity in matters of trust, and in those cases where the principles of substantial justice entitle the party to relief, but the positive law is silent, it seems impossible to define with exactness its boundaries, or to enumerate with precision its various principles. In the course of this work, however, a variety of instances appear, from which the wisdom of this branch of equitable jurisdiction will be fully and satisfactorily established, and to which, at present, it may be sufficient to refer. See particularly titles Chancery, Fraud, Trust, &c. &c.

The essential difference (says Blackstone) between Law and Equity principally consists in the different modes of administering justice in each, in the mode of proof, the mode of trial, and the mode of relief. Upon these, and upon two other accidental grounds of jurisdiction, viz. the true construction of securities for money lent, and the form or effect of a trust or second use, hath been principally erected that structure of jurisprudence which prevails in our courts of equity, and is inwardly bottomed upon the same substantial foundations as the system of the courts of Common Law.

As to the mode of proof. When facts, or their leading circumstances, rest only in the knowledge of the party, a court of equity applies itself to his conscience, and purges him, upon oath, with regard to the truth of the transaction; and that being once discovered, the judgment is the same in equity as it would have been at law. But, for want of this discovery at law, the courts of equity have acquired a concurrent jurisdiction with every other court in all matters of account. 1 Chan. C. 57. As incident to accounts, they take a concurrent cognizance of the administration of personal assets. 2 P. Wms. 145. consequently of debts, legacies, the distribution of the residue, and the conduct of executors and administrators. 2 Chan. C. 152. As incident to accounts, they also take the concurrent jurisdiction of tithes, and all questions relating thereto. 1 Eq. C. Ab. 367. of all dealings in partnership, 2 Vern. 277. and many other mercantile transactions; and so of bailiffs, receivers, factors, and agents. Ibid. 638.

From the same fruitful source, the compulsive discovery upon oath, the courts of equity have acquired a jurisdiction over almost all matters of fraud. 2 Chan. C. 46. all matters in the private knowledge of the party, which, though concealed, are binding in conscience, and all judgments at law obtained through such fraud or concealment. And this not by impeaching or reversing the judgment itself, but by prohibiting the plaintiff from taking an advantage of a judgment obtained by suppressing the truth. 3 P. Wms. 148. Year book, 22 Ed. IV. 37. p. 21. See title Discovery.

The mode of trial, is by interrogatories administered to the witnesses, upon which their depositions are taken in writing, wherever they happen to reside. If, therefore, the cause arises in a foreign country, and the witnesses reside upon the spot; if in causes arising in England, the witnesses are abroad, or shortly to leave the kingdom; or if the witnesses residing at home are aged or infirm; any of these cases lays a ground for a court of equity to grant a commission to examine them, and (in consequence) to exercise the same jurisdiction which might have been exercised at law, if the witnesses could probably attend. See title Depositions.

With respect to the mode of relief. The want of a more specific remedy than can be obtained in the courts of law, gives a concurrent jurisdiction to a Court of Equity in a great variety of cases. To instance in executory agreements. A Court of Equity will compel them to be carried into strict execution, unless where it is improper or impossible; instead of giving damages for their non-performance. Eq. Ca. Ab. 16. And hence a fiction is established, that what ought to be done shall be considered as being actually done, and shall relate back to the time when it ought to have been done originally; and this fiction is so closely pursued through all its consequences, that it necessarily branches out into many rules of jurisprudence, which form a certain regular system. 3 P. Wms. 215. So, of waste, and other similar injuries, a Court of Equity takes a concurrent cognizance, in order to prevent them by injunction. 1 Ch. Rep. 14. 2 Ch. C. 32. Over questions that may be tried at law, in a great multiplicity of actions, a Court of Equity assumes a jurisdiction, to prevent the expence and vexation of endless litigation and suits. 1 Vern. 308. Pre. Ch. 261. 1 Pr. Wms. 672. Stra. 404. In various kinds of fraud it assumes a concurrent jurisdiction, not only for the sake of a discovery, but of a more extensive and specific relief. 2 P. Wms. 156. as by setting aside fraudulent deeds, decreeing re-conveyances, or directing an absolute conveyance merely to stand as a security. 1 Vern. 32. 1 P. Wms. 239. 1 Vern. 237. 2 Vern. 84. and thus, lastly, for the sake of a more beneficial and complete relief, by decreeing a sale of lands, a Court of Equity holds plea of all debts, incumbrances, and charges that may affect it, or issue thereout. 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 337.

As to the construction of securities for money lent; when Courts of Equity held the penalty of a bond to be the form, and that in substance it was only as a pledge to secure the repayment of the sum bonâ fide advanced, with a proper compensation for the use, they laid the foundation of a regular series of determinations, which have settled the doctrine of personal pledges or securities, and are equally applicable to mortgages of real property. The mortgagor continues owner of the land, the mortgagee of the money lent upon it: but this ownership is mutually transferred, and the mortgagor is barred from redemption, if, when called upon by the mortgagee, he does not redeem within a time limited by the Court; or he may, when out of possession, be barred, by length of time, by analogy to the statute of limitations. See also titles Bond; Mortgage; Penalty.

The form of a Trust, or second use, gives the Courts of Equity an exclusive jurisdiction, as to the subject matter of all settlements and devises in that form, and of all the long terms created in the present complicated mode of conveyancing. This is a very ample source of jurisdiction: but the trust is governed by very nearly the same rules as would govern the estate in a court of law, if no trustee was interposed; 2 P. Wms. 645. 668, 9. And by a regular positive system established in the Courts of Equity, the doctrine of trusts is now reduced to as great a certainty as that of legal estates in the Courts of Common Law. See 3 Comm. 436—440.

EQUITY OF REDEMPTION, on mortgages. If where money is due on a mortgage, the mortgagee is desirous to bar the equity of redemption, he may oblige the mortgagor either to pay the money, or to be foreclosed of his equity; which is done by proceedings in the Court of Chancery. But the Chancery cannot shorten the time of payment of the mortgage-money, where it is limited by express covenant, though it may lengthen it: and then upon non-payment, the practice is to forclose the equity of redemption of the mortgagor. 2 Vent. 364.

To foreclose the Equity, a bill in Chancery is exhibited; to which an answer is put in, and a decree being obtained, a Master in Chancery is to certify what is due for principal, interest, and costs, which is to be paid at a time prefixed by the decree, whereupon the premises are to be re-conveyed to the mortgagor; or, in default of payment, the mortgagor is ordered to be foreclosed from all equity of redemption, and to convey the premises absolutely to the mortgagee.

A fine or non-claim will bar equity of redemption: but in a common mortgage a covenant to restrain it shall not be regarded in Chancery. 2 Vent. 365. If the condition of a mortgage is, that the mortgagor only should redeem during life, or that he and the heirs of his body shall do it; yet the general heir shall have the equity of redemption, for if the principal and interest be offered, the land is free. 1 Vern. 39. 190. And it is held, though a bond be conditioned, that if the money be not paid at such a time, then, for a further sum, the mortgagee shall have the land absolutely, as a purchaser, &c. in such case a man may also redeem. Ibid. 488.—See at large this Dict. title Mortgage.

EQUIVALENT. Commissioners are appointed by statute to examine and state the debts due to Scotland on the Union by way of equivalent; and provision is made for payment of the same by a yearly annuity, &c. Stat. 5. Geo. 1. c. 20. See title Scotland.

EQUUS COOPERTUS. A horse equipped with saddle and furniture. Inq. 16. E. 1.

ERECTION of lands into a Barony, Earldom, &c. See title Peers.

ERIACH. By the Irish Brehon law, in case of murder, the brehon or judge compounded between the murderer and the friends of the deceased who prosecuted, by causing the malefactor to give unto them, or to the child or wife of him that was slain, a recompence, which was called an eriach. 4 Comm. 313. See Weregild.

ERMINE, OR ERMINAGE STREET. See Watling Street.

ERMINS, from the Fr. ermine.] A fur of great value, much used in robes of state. See title Customs.

ERN. The names of places ending in Ern are said to imply a melancholy situation; from the Sax. Ern, i. e. Locus Secretus.

ERNES. The loose scattered ears of corn that are left on the ground, after the binding or cocking of it: It is derived from the old Teutonic Ernde, Harvest; Ernden, to cut or mow corn: hence to ern is, in some places, to glean. Kennet's Gloss.

ERRANT, Itinerant.] Is applied to justices of the circuit, and bailiffs at large, &c. See Eyre.

ERRATICUM. A waif, or stray; an erring, or wandering beast. Constit. Norman. A. D. 1080.

ERROR, Fr. Erreur.]

Signifies something wrong in pleading or process, &c. whereupon a writ is brought for remedy thereof, called a Writ of Error; in Latin, de errore corrigendo.

A Writ of Error is a commission to judges of a superior court, by which they are authorised to examine the record, upon which a judgment was given in an inferior court, and, on such examination, to affirm or reverse the same, according to law. Jenk. Rep. 25. 2 Inst. 40. Yelv. 202. Hardw. 340. But yet if, by the writ of error, the plaintiff therein may recover, or be restored to any thing, it may be released by the name of an action. Co. Lit. 288 b. See post Div. II. V. There is also a writ of error to reverse a fine, and which must be prosecuted within twenty years, by stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 14. See titles Fine and Recovery.

A Writ of Error to some superior Court of Appeal is the principal method of redress for erroneous judgments in the King's courts of record, having power to hold plea of debt or trespass above 40*s.*—It lies for some supposed mistake in the proceedings of such Court; for, to amend errors in a base court, not of record, a writ of false judgment lies. Finch L. 484. The writ of error only lies upon matter of law, arising on the face of the proceedings; so that no evidence is required to substantiate or support it, there being no method of reversing an error in the determination of facts, but by an attaint or a new trial, to correct the mistakes of the former verdict. See Bro. P. C. 8vo. ed. 515.

Formerly suitors were much perplexed by writs of error brought upon very slight and trivial grounds; as mis-spellings, and other mistakes of the clerks, all which are now effectually helped by the statutes of amendment and jeofails; and particularly by stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 13. it is enacted, that all writs of error, wherein there shall be any variance from the original record, or other defect, may be amended by the Court, and made agreeable to the record: and where any verdict hath been given in any action, suit, &c. in any of the Courts at Westminster, or other court of record, the judgment thereon shall not be stayed or reversed for any defect or fault in form or substance in any bill, writ, &c. or for variance in any such writs from the declaration and other proceedings; but this statute not to extend to any appeal of felony or process, on indictment, information, and appeal. Such writ of error to be brought and prosecuted with effect within twenty years, by stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 14.—Stat. 16 & 17 C. 2. c. 8. enacts, that in all actions, real, personal, or mixed, the death of either party between verdict and judgment shall not be alledged for error.—By stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 80. imposing a stamp duty on warrants of attorney, it is provided, that no action shall be stayed, nor any judgment, sentence, &c. reversed, by reason of omission or defect in the entering, or filing of record, the memorandum or minute directed. By these and other statutes, all trifling exceptions are so thoroughly guarded against, that writs of error cannot now be maintained, but for some material mistake assigned. See titles Amendment; Judgment.

If a writ of error be brought to reverse any judgment of an inferior court of record, where the damages are less than 10*l.*: or if it is brought to reverse the judgment of any superior court after verdict, he that brings the writ, or that is plaintiff in error, must (except in some peculiar cases) find substantial bail; to prevent delays by frivolous pretences of appeal; and for securing payment of cots and damages. See title Costs. And as to bail in such cases, see stats. 3 Jac. 1. c. 8. 13 C. 2. st. 2. c. 2. 16 & 17 C. 2. c. 8. 19 G. 3. c. 70.

A writ of error lies from the inferior courts of record in England into the King's Bench, and not into the Common Pleas. Finch L. 480. Dy. 250. And before stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 28. it lay from the King's Bench in Ireland to the King's Bench in England. It likewise may be brought from the Common Pleas at Westminster to the King's Bench, and then from theKing's Bench the cause is removable to the House of Lords. From proceedings on the law side of the Exchequer, a writ of error lies into the Court of Exchequer-Chamber, before the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treasurer, and the Judges of K. B. and C. P. and from thence it lies to the House of Peers. From proceedings in K. B. in debt, detinue, covenant, account, case, ejectment, or trespass, originally begun there by bill, (except where the King is a party,) it lies to the Exchequer-Chamber, before the Justices of C. P. and Barons of the Exchequer; and from thence also to the House of Lords. Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 8.—But where the proceedings in K. B. do not first commence therein by bill, but by original writ sued of out of Chancery, this takes the case out of the general rule laid down by the statute; so that the writ of error then lies, without any intermediate stage of appeal, directly to the House of Lords, the dernier resort for the ultimate decision of every civil action. 1 Ro. Rep. 264. 1 Sid. 424. 1 Saund. 346. Carth. 180. Comb. 295.—Each Court of Appeal, in their respective stages, may, upon hearing the matter of law in which the error is assigned, reverse or affirm the judgment of the inferior courts; but none of them are final, save only the House of Peers, to whose judicial decisions all other tribunals must therefore submit, and conform their own. See 3 Comm. 406.—411.

In criminal cases also, judgments may be reversed by writ of error; which lies from all inferior criminal jurisdictions to the Court of K. B. and from K. B. to the House of Peers: It may be brought for notorious mistakes in the judgment or other parts of the record; as where a man is found guilty of perjury, and receives the judgment of felony, or for other less palpable errors, such as any irregularity, omission, or want of form, in the process of outlawry or proclamations; the want of a proper addition to the defendant's name, according to the statute (see title Abatement); for not properly naming the sheriff, or other officer of the court, or not duly describing where his county-court was held: for laying an offence committed in the time of the late King, to be done against the peace of the present; and for many other similar causes, which (though allowed out of tenderness to life and liberty) are not much to the credit or advantage of national justice. See titles Outlawry; Indictment, &c.

These writs of error to reverse judgments in cases of misdemeanors, are not to be allowed of course, but on sufficient probable cause shewn to the Attorney-General; and then they are understood to be grantable of common right, et ex debito justitiæ. But writs of error to reverse attainders in capital cases are allowed only ex gratiâ, and not without express warrant under the King's sign manual, or at least by the consent of the Attorney-General. 1 Vern. 170, 5. Those therefore can rarely be brought by the party himself, especially where he is attainted for an offence against the State; but they may be brought by his heir or executor after his death. But the easier and more effectual way, is to reverse such attainder by Act of Parliament. See titles Attainder; Judgment.

Having said thus much generally, we may now proceed particularly to inquire,

I. 1. By whom, against whom; and 2. at what time this Writ may be brought.
II. 1. In what Cases it will lie; and 2. how it is to be brought.
III. In what Court it is to be brought.
IV. How Errors are to be assigned; and what may be assigned for Error. See ante II. 1.
V. What Defence may be made by a Defendant in Error.
VI. Of the Judgment to be given on a Writ of Error.

I. 1. Any person damnified by error in record, or that may be supposed to be injured by it, may bring a writ of error to reverse it, whether he be a party or no; but principal and bail cannot join in a writ of error. And where there are several defendants, if one of them release the errors, he may be summoned and severed, and the others may reverse the judgment. 6 Rep. 26. Hob. 72.

Judgment against two, one brought a writ of error, and held it should be quashed with costs; that it could not be amended, and that if the other party would not join, the defendant who chose to bring a writ of error, must proceed by summons and severance. Hardw. 135, 136.

Defendants having agreed under a consolidation rule not to bring any writ of error, cannot do so, though there be manifest error in the record. 1 H. Blackst. 21.

No person can reverse a thing for error, unless the error be to his prejudice. 5 Rep. 38. One in remainder may have writ of error upon judgment given against tenant in tail: But he in reversion or remainder shall not have writ of error in the life-time of tenant for life, on judgment given against such tenant, because they cannot be parties grieved in his time. 2 Nels. Abr. 712.

No person can bring a writ of error to reverse a judgment who was not party or privy to the record, or who was not injured by the judgment, and therefore to receive advantage by the reversal thereof. 1 Rol. Abr. 747. Dyer 90.

So a writ of error does not lie against any but him who is party or privy to the first judgment, his heirs, executors, or administrators. 1 Rol. Abr. 747. Dyer 90.

And therefore, on a judgment for recovery of land, the writ must be brought against him who was party to the judgment, although he hath nothing in the land, and not against the tenant; and on such writ the judgment may be reversed; but there must go a scire facias against all the tertenants. 1 Rol. Abr. 749. 1 Rol. Rep. 302.

Upon this rule, that none shall have a writ of error to reverse a judgment, but he who is privy to, or hath some prejudice thereby, it hath been resolved, that if one hath lands on the part of his mother, and loseth them by erroneous judgment, and dies, the heir of the part of the mother shall have the writ of error. 1 Leon. 261. 2 Sid. 56. See Owen 68. Godb. 377.

So the younger son, when entitled to the land by the custom of Borough English, shall bring the writ of error, and not the heir at Common Law: for this remedy descends with the land. Owen 68. 1 Leon. 261. 4 Leon. 5.

So if there be an erroneous judgment in the case of tenant in tail-female, the issue female, and not the son, shall bring a writ of error. Dyer 90. 1 Leon. 261. 1 Rol. Abr. 747.

So if a man settles land to the use of himself and the heirs of his body, the remainder to his own right heirs, and dies, leaving issue only a daughter, who levies a fine, and dies without issue, and J. S. brings a writ of error as cousin and collateral heir of the daughter, yet he shall never reverse the fine; for there could no right descend to him from the daughter, because she had but an estate-tail, which determined by her death without issue; and it does not appear that the remainder in fee was in the daughter as right heir, wherefore J. S. shall not reverse the fine, quia de non apparentibus et non existentibus eadem est ratio, especially in a court of judicature, where the judges can take notice of nothing that does not come judicially before them, and appear in the pleading. Dyer 89. Cro. Eliz. 469. 3 Lev. 36.

If there be several parties to an erroneous fine, they shall all join with the party that is to enjoy the land, though they themselves can have nothing; and this is said to be necessary only by way of conformity. 1 Rol. Abr. 747. Dyer 89.

But if tenant for life, and he in remainder in fee, (being an infant,) join in a fine, the infant alone may bring error for the error in respect of the person of the infant, which is the cause of the action for him, and for no other. 1 Leon. 31. Cro. Eliz. 115.

A writ of error may be brought by him that is made party by the law, though he was not originally party to the suit, as he who comes in as a vouchee. 1 Rol. Abr. 748. 755.

Stat. 8. 9 W. 3. c. 11. § 7. applies to writs of error, &c. therefore a writ of error does not abate by the death of one of several plaintiffs in error. Clarke v. Rippon, Term Rep. K. B. East. 58 G. 3. 586.

If a man is indicted for felony, and thereupon a capias and exigent are awarded, but he dies before attainder, his administrators may have error upon this award of the exigent, because by the award of the exigent, his goods were forfeited; and this is ad grave damnum, &c. though the principal judgment can never be given. 11 Co. 41 b.

Writ of error lies in B. R. to reverse a fine levied in the Common Pleas, and to cancel the same if it be erroneous: And if there be not an original, or not proper writs of covenant, or if there be any fraud, &c. writ of error may be brought to make the fine void. Co. Lit. 9. See titles Fine and Recovery.

2. It was formerly holden that a writ of error could not be brought before the judgment given; and if it bore teste before, it was no supersedeas, for the words of the writ are, Si judicium redditum sit, &c. 1 Rol. Abr. 749. But it seems now agreed, that a writ of error that bears teste before the judgment is good; and this is the usual course for preventing and superseding execution: but the judgment must be given before the return of the writ. March 140. 1 Vent. 255. Moor 461. 3 Keb. 308. 1 Vent. 96. Latch. 133, and see 1 Term Rep. 279, and New Rep. C. P. i. 298.

But a writ of error, that bears teste before any plaint entered, is not good. March 140.

So where the defendant, upon an indictment of barretry, brought a writ of error bearing teste before the assise: it was disallowed, because, if such practice should obtain, it would disappoint all proceedings there. 1 Vent. 255. 3 Keb. 308.

The allowance of a writ of error may be served before the plaintiff is entitled to sign final judgment. 2 Bos. & Pul. 137. But the allowance of the writ of error, previous to the judgment being signed, is an irregularity permitted for the convenience of the party: for the judgment in the action is the true foundation of the writ of error. 2 Bos. & Pull. 479.

The court of K. B. will not infer that a writ of error was sued out for delay, because it was sued out before final judgment signed. And though it should be made returnable before final judgment, it will still operate as a supersedeas upon the judgment, which, when signed in the same Term, relates back to the first day thereof. 5 East's Rep. 145.

A writ of error cannot be brought after twenty years. Hardw. 345. The statute of limitations must be pleaded to a writ of error, as well as to an original action. Id. 346. See Limitation of Actions; Recovery.

II. 1. Writ of error will not lie in the Exchequer-Chamber on judgment in replevin in B. R. nor on judgment in action of scandalum magnatum. 2 Nels. 708, 709. But on judgment in replevin in C. B. there may be writ of error brought in B. R. The stat. 27 Eliz. c. 8. (see post Div. III.) is only to relieve on the merits of the cause, as it stood on the first judgment.

Error de recordo quod coram vobis residet lies in the court of B. R. for errors in fact in the judgment of the same court; as non-age of the parties, want of an original, &c. which doth not proceed from the error of the judges; and this writ is allowed without bail. Cro. Jac. 254. And errors in fact may be corrected in C. B. the same term, without this writ, which lies not in the Exchequer-Chamber. Ibid. 620.

If judgment is given in B. R. in civil actions, a writ of error will not lie in the same court, only for errors in fact triable by a jury; but upon a judgment in criminal cases, error will lie in B. R. whether the error be in fact or in law; though it lies also in Parliament. 3 Salk. 147.

Where a judgment in C. B. is affirmed upon a writ of error in B. R. and afterwards a scire facias is brought on that judgment, and the plaintiff hath judgment thereon, no writ of error lieth in the Exchequer-Chamber, because the record was not in B. R. by bill, but by writ of error. 1 Roll. Rep. 261. 3 Salk. 148.—See 1 Salk. 263.

Writ of error cannot be brought on any record which is not a judgment. 1 Salk. 145.—Nor upon an interlocutory judgment. 6 East's Rep. 333.

The Court of B. R. having allowed the sufficiency of a return to a writ of mandamus, and therefore refused to grant a peremptory writ, the party applying brought his writ of error in Parliament. Held that no writ of error lay in this case, it being merely an award of the court, and not a strict formal judgment. 3 Bro. P. C. (8vo. ed.) 505.

The Court of C. P. have held, that, though writ of error may lie on a judgment of nonsuit, yet the Court will, on motion to take out execution, grant it, as such writ of error must be evidently merely for the purpose of delay and vexation. 1 H. Black. Rep. Rep. 432.

No writ of error will lie of any judgment that is not given in a court of record; nor of a judgment given in an inferior court, as the county-court, &c. Co. Lit. 288. b. Nor of a decree or sentence in Chancery proceeding according to equity. 37 H. 6. Bro. Error. 95. 1 Rol. Abr. 744. But of a judgment given in the limited Court of Chancery, called the Petty Bag, which proceeds according to the Common Law, and holds plea of scire facias for repeal of the King's letters patent, &c. a writ of error lies in B. R. 1 Rol. Ab. 744. Dyer 315. 4 Inst. 80. Plow. 393.

Error lies for variance between the original writ and declaration, or want of an original: and where proceedings are so erroneous, as not to be amended; for faults in verdicts, executions, &c. or when any thing material is omitted in a judgment, writ of error lies, and the judgment shall be reversed: so where the styles of inferior courts are wrong, or insufficiently named, &c. their judgments may be reversed. But where faults are small, they sometimes pass as vitium clerici. 2 Nels. Abr. 714, 715, 721, &c. 728.

By the practice of the Court of Common Pleas, a defendant coming in by capias utlagatum the same term in which an exigent is returnable, may avoid the outlawry without a writ of error, by shewing that he purchased a supersedeas out of the same court, and delivered it to the sheriff before the quinto exactus, &c.; or by shewing any other matter apparent on record, which makes the outlawry erroneous, as the want of an original, or the omission of process, or want of form in a writ of proclamation, &c. or a return by a person appearing not to be sheriff, or a variance between the original and exigent, or other process, or the want of such addition as is required by stat. 1 H. 5. c. 5. 2 Hawk. P. C. 659—651. 1 Rol. Abr. 742, 3.—And see stat. 5 Eliz. c. 23. §§ 13, 14.

If one be attainted upon an erroneous indictment, he cannot be relieved but by writ of error, for the judgment being quod suspendatur, &c. which is the judgment of law due for the offence, it must be presumed to have been given, for that he was guilty of the offence; but if judgment of acquittal is given upon such indictment, the King need bring no writ of error; but the offender may be newly indicted, for the judgment being quod eat sine die, &c. may be given as well for the insufficiency of the indictment, as for the party's innocence. 3 Inst. 214.

Also any judgment whatsoever, given by persons who had no good commission to proceed against the person condemned, may be falsified, by shewing the special matter, without writ of error, because it is void; as where a commission authorizes to proceed on an indictment taken before A. B. C. and twelve others, and by colour thereof the commissioners proceed on an indictment taken before eight persons only. 1 Inst. 231. 2 Hawk. P. C. 459.

If one is attainted of felony, and after, by relation of a general pardon, the felony is pardoned, he shall be discharged, for he hath no remedy by writ of error to reverse the attainder. 6 Co. 5. a.

On error brought on a judgment of conviction for felony at the sessions, the Court will only look to the record of conviction, although the justices return also the record of a former acquittal. 1 Maul & Sel. Rep. 183.

Wherever a new jurisdiction is erected by act of parliament, and the court or judge, that exercises this jurisdiction, acts as a court or judge of record, according to the course of the Common Law, a writ of error lies on their judgments; but where they act in a summary method, or in a new course different from the Common Law, there a writ of error lies not, but a certiorari. 1 Salk. 263. See title Certiorari.

2. Error in the King's Bench is thus prosecuted: the cursitor of the county makes out the writ of error from a præcipe, or copy of the declaration left with him; which is to be allowed with the clerk of the errors, and a certificate of the allowance of the writ must be served on the attorney of the defendant in error. The proceedings are by scire facias ad audiendum errores against the plaintiff in the action, wherein judgment was obtained; and the writ of error being received by the sheriff to whom directed, he is to give notice to the plaintiff in error to shew cause why execution should not be on the judgment, and make a return to that purpose; then a rule is to be given with the clerk of the rules, for the plaintiff in error to assign his errors by such a day, which if he shall not do before the rule is out, the plaintiff in the original action may take out execution against him.

Two things are requisite to make a writ of error a Supersedeas of Execution; viz. the Allowance, (i. e. the delivery of the writ to the clerk of the errors;) and putting in bail. If the writ of error be allowed before judgment, the time for putting in bail, four days, runs from the judgment; if after judgment, from the time of the allowance. 1 Bos. & Pull. 478.

If the plaintiff in error assign errors in the record, then the defendant must plead in nullo est erratum, and thereupon enter the cause with the clerk of the papers, for the errors to be argued; and paper books for the counsel and judges are to be made out, &c. If some part of the record be not returned, a certiorari must be prayed to bring it into court; and if matters of fact are alleged in error, as non-age, death of the plaintiff, &c. a proper plea must be made thereto, and issue thereupon taken and tried, as in any other issue: but if only matters of law are assigned, the errors are argued by counsel on both sides, and the judgment is either reversed or affirmed: and when judgment is affirmed, the defendant in error may proceed against the defendant in the action, by taking out execution on the affirmetur, or bringing action of debt on the judgment; or he may prosecute the bail by scire facias upon their recognizance. But it is said by some, that an assignment of errors in fact and in law, is bad on demurrer; by others, that the assignment of error in law may stand, and the fact be considered as nothing. Sed quere, Where this is an error in fact, if the writ of error ought not to be coram vobis residens, i. e. in the court where the judgment was given. In this case, however, we must except the want of warrants of attorney, &c. which are facts; and it is every day's practice to assign such, with errors in law; and the usual course is, if defendant in error does not pray a certiorari, for the plaintiff to pray it.

When a judgment is reversed or affirmed in the Exchequer-Chamber, the transcript of the record thereof will be remitted back to the Court of K. B. to be entered up at the end of the judgment there: and if such judgment shall be affirmed in the Exchequer-Chamber, yet a writ of error may be brought thereupon returnable in parliament.

If you would bring a writ of error in parliament to reverse a judgment in B. R. there must be a petition to the King for his warrant, which petition has the allowance of the Attorney-

General, and then the King writes on the top of it Fiat Justitia; whereupon a writ of error is made out by the clerk of the errors. And then the Lord Chief Justice of B. R. carries the record, and a transcript thereof, up to the House of Lords in full Parliament, and after they are examined there, leaves the transcript with the Lords, but brings back the record: and this being done, the attorney for the defendant in error, gets some Lord to move that the plaintiff in error may assign his errors; but if for the plaintiff, motion is to be made, that upon his assigning errors, the defendant may appear and make his defence, and counsel be heard on both sides: then, after the judgment is either affirmed or reversed, the clerk of the parliament remands the transcript of the record into B. R: with the affirmation or reversal thereof, to be entered upon the record of the said court, which court, if affirmed, awards execution, &c. Dyer, 385.—See Cowp. 843.

A writ of error in parliament is made returnable immediately; or on a prorogation to the next session, and it doth not determine by a prorogation. But if a parliament is dissolved before the errors are heard, it is otherwise. And on motion, execution hath been granted in B. R. on a judgment in such a case, the record being never out of the court. Raym. 5. 2 Nels. Abr. 731.

Where a writ of error was brought in B. R. in the lifetime of Geo. I. but was not argued till after the accession of Geo. II. when the judgment was affirmed, on a writ of error in parliament, this judgment was reversed; it being held that the first writ of error, the King being sole plaintiff in the cause, was absolutely abated. This was the case of the Deanery of Armagh in Ireland. 3 Bro. P. C. (8vo. ed.) 507.

The party bringing the writ of error is to cause the roll where the judgment is entered, to be marked with the word error in the margin, that the other party may have notice on the record that the writ of error is brought, and this marking of the roll, on giving notice thereof, is as it were a supersedeas in itself to hinder execution: though a supersedeas is to be made out, allowed and left with the sheriff of the county; and the plaintiff's attorney is not obliged to search the record, whether writ of error is brought or not; but may make out execution upon the judgment, if no supersedeas be taken forth, or he hath no notice of the writ of error. Trin. 24 Car. B. R.

On a writ of error of a judgment in the Common Pleas, or other inferior court, in every adversary suit, the record itself shall be removed, that it may remain as a precedent and evidence of the law in the like cases. 1 Rol. Abr. 753. 5 Co. 39.

But in the case of a fine the transcript only is removed, for fines are only a more solemn acknowledgment or contract of the parties, and therefore are no memorials of the law, and need only be affirmed or vacated; if the former, the contract stands as it was; if the latter, the justices of B. R. may send for the fine itself, and reverse it, or they may send a writ to the treasurer and chamberlain to take it off the file; besides, should the record itself be removed and affirmed, it could not be ingrossed for want of a chirographer in B. R. 1 Rol. Abr. 752. 1 Bendl. 51. Dyer, 89. Godb. 248. 2 Rol. Rep. 233. F. N. B. 20.—See titles Fine of Lands, Recovery.

If the judges of the Common Pleas, or other judges upon a writ of error, will not certify all the record, the party that sues the writ of error may allege diminution of the record, and pray a writ to the justices that certified the record before, to certify the whole record. F. N. B. 25, a. But diminution cannot be alleged upon a writ of error brought upon a judgment in any inferior court. 1 Sid. 40.—Yet see infra.

By stats. 3 Jac. 1. c. 8. 13 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 2. 16 & 17 C. 2. c. 8. § 3. he that brings writ of error, to reverse a judgment in a superior court in all cases after a verdict, or in any action of debt, upon bond for payment of money only, or on a contract, must put in good sureties to prosecute his writ of error with effect, and pay the debt and damages if judgment be affirmed: and by stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 70. § 5. this is extended to writs of error to reverse judgments in inferior courts where the damages are under 10*l.* If bail be not put in, on the writ of error brought upon a judgment in the courts at Westminster, in those cases where bail is required, the writ of error is no supersedeas to the execution; though such writ is in being, until a nolle prosequi is entered, or judgment affirmed, &c. And it is the same where insufficient bail is given, on rule to put in better bail, or justify those put in, which if the plaintiff doth not do, execution is ordered upon the judgment, with a non obstante to the writ of error, &c. Mich. 9 W. 3. B. R.—See further title Supersedeas.

A plaintiff in error is, in the time appointed by the rule for that purpose, to certify the record into B. R. or the court will grant a nolle prosequi on the writ of error. Mich. 22 Car. B. R.—See post Div. V.

The court will not let the plaintiff in error quash his own writ of error; though they may grant leave to discontinue it. 5 Mod. 67. If a verdict is for a defendant in error, and judgment is affirmed, costs are allowed by stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 10. on occasion of the delay of execution. And by stat. 4 & 5 An. c. 16. upon quashing writs of error, for defect or variance from the record, &c. the defendant is to have costs as if judgment were affirmed. When a writ of error is not in delay of execution, as where it is brought after the execution is executed, the plaintiff shall not have damages and costs. Cro. Jac. 636.

When a writ of error is brought to reverse a judgment in an inferior court, though the record is not certified as it ought, yet execution cannot be sued; but on certificate of the neglect, &c. a writ of execution of the judgment may be issued. 1 Lil. Abr. 526. Upon a writ of error, if the clerk below will certify the record wrong, action on the case lies against him; and if he make no return, the plaintiff may have the writ of execution out of Chancery. Mod. Cas. 245.

If erroneous judgment be for the defendant in an inferior court, and it is reversed in B. R. and the merits appear for the plaintiff, he shall have judgment; but if the merits be against the plaintiff, the defendant shall have new judgment, in like manner as in the Exchequer-Chamber; for the judges are to reform, as well as to affirm or reverse. 7 Mod. 2, 3. If a writ of error to reverse a judgment be discontinued for want of prosecution, execution cannot be had upon the judgment, until the discontinuance is certified from the court where discontinued. 1 Lil. 518. If a writ of error is brought to remove a record of a judgment given in C. B. and the plaintiff in error leaves the record there, without removing it before the return of the writ; or in case there be a longer return day than is convenient in the writ of error, as if it is purchased the beginning of Michaelmas term, and made returnable in Hilary term; the court may award execution, although the writ of error be delivered. Jenk. Cent. 180. Dyer, 245.

III. Erroneous judgments given in the court of B. R. were only reformed by the parliament till stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 8. By that statute, a writ of error lies out of the Chancery upon all judgments given in the King's Bench, when the suit is by bill, (except the King is a party to the suit,) returnable in the Exchequer-Chamber, before the Judges of the Common Pleas, and Barons of the Exchequer, &c. who may examine the errors, and reverse or affirm the judgment; other than for errors, concerning the jurisdiction of the court, or want of form in writs, pleadings, &c. and after the errors are examined, and judgment affirmed or reversed, the record is sent back to the King's Bench, to proceed and award execution; but if the suit is by original writ, or where the King is party, writ of error lies only in parliament.

A qui-tam action of debt is a civil suit. Cowp. 382. And a writ of error on it lies from the King's Bench to the Exchequer-Chamber. Doug. 353.—See title Exchequer.

Not only on reversing or affirming a judgment, the Exchequer-Chamber is to send back the record into B. R: but also if the plaintiff in the writ of error is nonsuit, or if the suit is discontinued in the Court of Exchequer-Chamber, the record shall be sent back: and the Court of Exchequer shall give costs and damages to the plaintiff in the original action for his delay, &c. though if the plaintiff in error was plaintiff in the original action, there no costs can be given. 2 And. 122. 2 Nels. Abr. 707.

Where a writ of error determines in the Exchequer-Chamber by abatement or discontinuance, the judgment is not given in B. R. till a remittitur is entered. 1 Salk. 261. The Exchequer-Chamber doth not award a sci. fac. ad audiend. errores; but notice is given to the parties concerned. 1 Vent. 34.

The court of parliament is the supreme court, where, anciently, causes of great consequence, as between the Magnates Regni, were heard and determined: hence the dernier resort is to the House of Lords, to which a writ of error lies; and therefore, if a writ of error be brought of a judgment in the King's Bench into the Exchequer-Chamber, and there the judgment is reversed; yet a writ of error lies of such judgment into parliament, and the lords may reverse such second judgment. Show. Parl. Cas. 24. 110. 1 Vent. 334. Raym. 330. 2 Jon. 99. 2 Lev. 232.

So a writ of error lies into parliament upon a judgment in B. R. either in a cause brought there by writ of error, or originally commenced there. 1 Rol. Abr. 745.

And though upon a judgment in the King's Bench, since the stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 8. the party may elect either to bring a writ of error in the Exchequer-Chamber, or in parliament; yet if the cause commenced in the King's Bench by original writ, there lies no writ of error but into parliament; also if he elects to bring error in the Exchequer-Chamber regularly, he cannot after bring error in parliament upon the first judgment. 1 Saund. 346. Carth. 180. S. P.—See 2 Rol. Abr. 492. 2 Lev. 232.

But it is expressly provided, by stat. 27 Eliz. c. 8. that judgment given in the Exchequer-Chamber shall not be final, but that an appeal may be brought thereon in parliament, as before the statute was used in erroneous judgments in K. B.

By stat. 31 Eliz. c. 1. any three of the judges may proceed in hearing such writs of error in the Exchequer-Chamber, but the judgment must be given by six at least. And see stats. 16 Car. 2. c. 2. and 20 Car. 2. c. 4. for avoiding delays in judgments in that court.

To reverse a judgment given in the Court of Common Pleas, the writ of error is made returnable in the King's Bench, and error is not to be brought in parliament: but where a writ of error is brought in B. R. upon a judgment given in C. B. and the judgment is reversed or affirmed in B. R. the party grieved may have writ of error from B. R. returnable in parliament. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 1. 1 Lil. Abr. 519. 521. Erroneous judgment in the Court of Exchequer is to be examined by the Lord Chancellor, &c. with some of the justices, and such other sage persons as they think fit; and if any error be found, they shall correct the rolls, and send them into the Exchequer, in order to make execution, &c. Stat. 31. Ed. 3. cap. 12.

No writ of error lies in Banco or Banco Regis, upon a judgment given within the five ports; but by custom such judgment is examinable by bill in nature of a writ of error, coram domino custode seu gardiano quinque portum apud curiam suam de Shepway. 4 Inst. 224.—See title Cinque Ports.

If a judgment be given in the court of stannaries of the Dutchy of Cornwall, no writ of error lies upon this in Banco or Banco Regis, because it hath not been used; but of this there may be an appeal to the guardian of the Stannaries, and from him to the Prince; and when there is no Prince, to the King's Privy Council. 1 Rol. Abr. 745.—See 4 Inst. 230. 2 Danv. Abr. 304.

Upon a judgment given in the Hustings in London, a writ of error lies at St. Martin's before certain justices. 1 Rol. Abr. 745. 1 Lev. 309. 2 Saund. 253. S. P. and upon a judgment of the said justices, a writ of error lies in parliament. See 2 Leon. 107.—See title Dissenters.

In Wales, from the Great Sessions, a writ of error lay in personal actions to the council of the Marches of Wales; and if they gave an erroneous judgment, it was final; for stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 16. ordained this writ to the council there; and no writ of error was granted of such erroneous judgment: upon errors in real or mixed actions, however, in Wales, writ of error lay into the King's Bench. Jenk. Cent. 71. And so now it does in personal actions by stat. 1 W. & M. c. 27.—See title Courts of Wales.

In some cases a writ of error lies in the same court wherein the record is.

If upon a judgment in B. R. there be error in the process, or through the default of the clerks, it shall be reversed in the same court by writ of error sued there before the same justices. F. N. B. 21. Poph. 181. 1 Rol. Abr. 746.

So if one is indicted of treason or felony in B. B. or being indicted elsewhere, the indictment is removed in B. R. and by process of that court he is erroneously outlawed, and so returned; a writ of error may be brought in B. R. for the reversal thereof. 3 Inst. 214.

Also if an erroneous judgment in point of law be given in B. R. upon an indictment in London, a writ of error may be brought in the same court; for though in civil cases error does not lie in the same court, unless for a matter of fact; yet in criminal cases it lies as well for an error in law as fact. 1 Sid. 208.

But if an erroneous judgment be given, and the error lies in the judgment itself, and not in the process, a writ of error does not lie in B. R. of such judgment. 1 Rol. Abr. 746.

Under the acts for the union of Great Britain and Ireland, (see title Ireland) writs of error and appeal before that time determinable in the Irish House of Lords, are to be decided in the House of Lords of the united kingdom.

By an Irish act 40 Geo. 3. a court of Exchequer-Chamber is established in Ireland, similar to that in England under the statutes 27 Eliz. c. 8, &c.

IV. The parties, upon the removal of the record by the writ of error, have no day in court given to either of them; so that if the plaintiff in error delay to sue forth his sci. fac. ad audiend. errores, the defendant hath no way to compel him, but by suing out a scire facias quare executionem non, &c. And if thereupon the plaintiff in error doth not plead that his errors are assigned, but suffer judgment to pass upon two nihils, no errors afterwards assigned shall prevent execution. Carth 41. The sci. fac. ad audiendum errores is only used in B. R. In the Exchequer-Chamber notice is given. It is said the usual practice is, that the defendant in the writ of error, by consent, doth voluntarily take notice of the assignment of errors, and this consent is testified by his pleading In nullo est errat', and then there is no occasion for a scire facias ad audiend. error'. Ibid.

Errors are to be assigned in the term, or the writ of error will be quashed. 1 Lil. Abr. 524. When the record is in court by writ of error, the plaintiff in error is to assign his errors; and may have a scire facias before the record is entered: and the manner of assigning errors, according to the ancient practice, is to put a bill into court, and say in the bill, in hoc erratum est, &c. shewing in certain in what things. F. N. B. 20. The assignment of error, in omnibus erratum, is not good; for the judgment is founded upon the original writ, count, pleading, issue, process, trial, and so is manifold. Jenk. Cent. 84. Errors in law, not assigned in the record, may be assigned after a scire facias ad audiend' errores; as the record is in the court: but it is not so of a warrant of attorney, which is an error in fact, and not upon a record. Ibid. 140. 5 Rep. 37.

If one in execution brings error, he ought to assign the errors in his proper person: and in cases of outlawry for felony, errors sufficient must be certainly alleged in writing, before the writ of error is allowed. Jenk. Cent. 165. 179. Where a recovery is had, and error brought, if the original writ doth not abate by death: but is abateable only, as by entry into the land pending the writ, or coverture, acquisition of a dignity, a partial array returned, aid denied, &c. that should have been pleaded, and were not: these shall not be assigned for error; for they are waved. 9 Rep. 47. 21 H. 6. 29.

The assigning general errors is to say that the declaration, &c. is not sufficient in law: and that judgment was given for the plaintiff where it ought to have been for the defendant: and the errors of a judgment are now to be assigned on the record, to appear with it to the court.

If the plaintiff in error assigns errors in fact, and errors in law, which are not assignable together, and the defendant in error pleads in nullo est erratum; this is a confession of the error in fact, and the judgment must be reversed, for he should have demurred for the duplicity. Style, 69. 1 Lev. 76. Salk. 268. 6 Mod. 113. 206.

Also if an error in fact be well assigned, in nullo est erratum is a confession of it, for the defendant ought to have joined issue upon it, so as to have it tried by the country. 1 Sid. 93. Raym. 59. Because, in nullo est erratum is in the nature of a demurrer, which confesses the fact, if well pleaded, or well assigned.

But if an error in fact be ill assigned, in nullo est erratum is no confession of it; as if it be assigned, that such a one at the time of the return of the venire was not sheriff, and the record be removed into B. R. by certiorari, there in nullo est erratum is no confession of that error, because the record is not in court, that being no part of the record, for the plea is in nullo est arratum in recordo. Cro. Jac. 12. 29. 521. Raym. 231. Cro. Car. 421. 1 Rol. Ab. 758.

So if the plaintiff in error assigns an error in fact, viz. that the defendant, who was an infant, did not appear by guardian; but by attorney, and concludes with hoc paratus est verificare, instead of concluding to the country, as he ought to do, though the defendant in error pleads in nullo est erratum, yet it shall not amount to a confession, but shall be taken only for a demurrer. Yelv. 58.

Also if an error in fact, that is not assignable, be assigned, and in nullo est erratum be pleaded, it is no confession; as if it be assigned, that such a day there was no court of Common Pleas sitting, because that is against the record, and in such case in nullo est erratum is only a demurrer; so if a man says he did not appear, and the record says he did, in nullo est erratum it is no confession, but a demurrer, because it is against the record. Cro. Car. 12. 29. 52. Yelv. 58. Raym. 231. 1 Vent. 252. 3 Keb. 259. 1 Lev. 76.

It has been held that an error in fact cannot be assigned in the Exchequer-Chamber: though, by some authorities, errors in fact may be assigned as errors in law. 2 Mod. 194. 2 Nels. Abr. 708.

By stat. 20 Car. 2. c. 6. in actions real, personal, and mixed, the death of either party between verdict and judgment shall not be alleged for error.

It seems a general rule, that nothing can be assigned for error that contradicts the record; for the records of the courts of justice being things of the greatest credit, cannot be questioned but by matters of equal notoriety with themselves; wherefore, though the matter assigned for error should be proved by witnesses of the best credit, yet the judges would not admit of it. 1 Rol. Abr. 757.

An original writ of the same term, in which final judgment is given, will not warrant that judgment, if it appear upon the same record, that there have been proceedings of a preceding term. 1 Wils. 181.

Hence it is, that in a writ of error to reserve a fine, the plaintiff cannot assign, that the conusor died before the teste of the dedimus, because that contradicts the record of the conusance taken by the commissioners, which evidently shews that the conusor was then alive, because they took his conusance after they were armed with the commission, and the dedimus issued. Dyer, 89. 1 Rol. Abr. 757.—See title Fine and Recovery.

V. The defendant in error may plead a release of all errors, or a release of all suits, and these pleas, if found for him, will for ever bar the plaintiff in error. 1 Rol. Abr. 788.

So where by a writ of error, the plaintiff shall recover, or be restored to any personal thing, as debt, damage, or the like, a release of all actions personal is a good plea; and when land is to be recovered or restored in a writ of error, a release of actions real is a good bar; but where by a writ of error the plaintiff shall not be restored to any personal or real thing, a release of all actions real or personal is no bar. Co. Lit. 288, b. 8 Co. 152. 1 Rol. Abr. 788. 2 Rol. Abr. 405.

Also if a man loses in a real action, and he releases all his right to the land, and so where there is a fine levied, this shall bar him of his writ of error; for no person can bring a writ of error to reverse a judgment that is not intitled to the land, &c. for the courts of law will not turn out the present tenant, unless the demandant can make out a clear title; possession always carrying with it the presumption of a good title till the right owner appears. 1 Rol. Abr. 747, 788. Dyer, 90, a. 3 Leo. 36. Cro. Eliz. 469. 1 Rol. Abr. 789. If the tenant, pending a præcipe against him, aliens in fee, and after judgment is given against him, and he brings a writ of error; this feoffment is not any bar to the writ, because he was privy to the judgment after. 1 Rol. Abr. 788. Bridge. 77. 1 Rol. Rep. 306. In a writ of error to reverse a common recovery, it is no good plea that the plaintiff, pending the writ of error, hath entered into part, for before the possession was taken from him, he might have error to reverse the judgment, though not to have restitution. 1 Lev. 72.—See title Fine and Recovery.

In a sci. fac. against a ter-tenant, he may plead a release of error, though he be not privy to the judgment. 9 H. 6. 48. Bro. 9 S. C.

But the ter-tenants cannot plead in abatement of the writ of error, but only in bar as a release, &c. in maintenance of their title. 1 Lev. 72.

After in nullo est erratum pleaded, the party affirms the record to be perfect, and he his foreclosed to say there is error in it: though the court is not restrained from examining into it. 1 Salk. 270. The judges are not bound to search for errors in the record, which were not assigned; but may if they will; and if they find error they ought to reverse the judgment. Jenk. Cent. 159.

VI. A judgment, as being an entire thing, cannot be reversed in part, and stand good as to other part; or be reversed as to one party, and remain good against the rest: though if there be error in awarding execution, the execution only shall be reversed, and not the judgment. Hob. 90. Carth. 235. If judgment is entered against joint-defendants, when one of them is dead, the judgment shall be reversed for error as to all of them; for in such case the plaintiff ought to make a special entry of the death of the party, with Nihil ulterius versus eum fiat, and then taking judgment only against the others. Ibid. 149.

The Court of Exchequer-Chamber have not any authority, but to reverse or affirm the judgment, &c. for they cannot make execution. Cro. Eliz. 108. But where judgment is given for the defendant, and the plaintiff brings a writ of error; if the judgment is reversed, the court which reverses the judgment shall give judgment for the plaintiff as the other court ought to have done. Yelv. 117, 118.

When a record is removed into K. B. from a County-Palatine court by a writ of error, and that writ is non-prossed, the court of K. B. will award execution. 3 Term Rep. K. B. 657.

Where judgment for the defendant on a special verdict is reversed in the Exchequer-Chamber, that court on motion, will give a final judgment for the plaintiff. 1 Bos. & Pull. 30.

In the Exchequer-Chamber after reversal of a judgment, &c. in B. R. the court gave judgment that the plaintiff recover, &c. but because they wanted power to award a writ of inquiry, which was necessary, being on a demurrer, therefore it was sent back into B. R. for the execution of that writ, and thereupon to give final judgment: but if the judgment is against the plaintiff in B. R. upon a special verdict and that judgment is reversed in the Exchequer-Chamber, there being no writ of inquiry requisite, the Court of Exchequer-Chamber doth not only give judgment of reversal, but a complete judgment for the plaintiff in the action. Carth. 181.

The Court of Exchequer-Chamber is bound to allow double costs to the defendant in error, on the affirmance of a judgment of K. B. 2 H. Black. 284.—But interest is in their discretion. Id. and 2 Bos. & Pull. 219.—That court will allow interest to a defendant in error under stat. 3 H. 7. c. 10. on a judgment of non-pros, as well as on a judgment of affirmance. Such interest is now allowed at the rate of 5l. per cent. instead of 4l. per cent. as formerly. 1 Bos. & Pull. 29.

The court gave interest on affirmance in error of a judgment for the proceeds of stock fraudulently sold out by one holding a power of attorney to sell. Mitchell v. Minikin, 4 W. P. Taunton, 117.

If erroneous judgment be had by consent of parties, it may be reversed in the Exchequer Chamber; for consent of parties may not change the law; but if the consent is entered upon and made part of the record it may be good. Hob. 5. Cro. Eliz. 664. The reversal in the Exchequer-Chamber is res judicata: no writ of error lies upon such judgment, except in parliament; and it is by six judges at least, by stats. 27 Eliz. c. 8. 31 Eliz c. 1.

When judgment is given in B. R. for the plaintiff in error, there shall be only a judicium revocetur, &c. entered with costs: if for the defendant in error, that the plaintiff nil capiat per breve suum de errore. The Chief Justice of B. R. &c. or the eldest judge ought to allow a writ of error, which is in judgment of law a supersedeas until the errors are examined, and the judgment affirmed or reversed. Cro. Jac. 534. As a plaintiff having erroneous judgment may reverse it, and new judgment may be given for him; so if a judgment is reversed, the plaintiff may bring a new action for the same cause. 1 Lev. 310. Where a judgment is pleaded in bar of another action, &c. and judgment given on that plea; writ of error may be had to reverse the second judgment. Cro. Eliz. 503. Jenk. Cent. 259. And debt lies upon a judgment in B. R. after a writ of error brought, which is only a supersedeas to the execution. 1 Lev. 153. But the court will stay proceedings in such action on giving judgment.

In a writ of error upon a judgment in trespass against several, if the judgment be erroneous, because one of the defendants was within age, and appeared by attorney, the judgment shall be reserved in toto against all. 1 Rol. Abr. 776. Cro. Jac. 289. 303. Allen, 74, 75 Style, 121. 125. 406.

If judgment be given for the plaintiff on one count in a declaration, and a distinct judgment for the defendant on another, and the defendant bring a writ of error to reverse the judgment on the first count, the Court of Error cannot examine the legality of the judgment on the second count, no error being assigned on that part of the record. 6 Term Rep. K. B. 200.

A writ of error in Parliament may be non-prossed without carrying over the transcript to the court of error. 1 Maul & Selw. Rep. 101.

ESCALDARE. To scald: Escaldare porcos, was one of our ancient tenures in serjeanty; as appears by the inquisition of the serjeancies and knights fees in the 12th and 13th years of King John, within the counties of Essex and Hertford. Lib. Rub. Scaccar' MS. 137.

ESCAMBIO, derived from the Span. cambier to change.] Was a licence granted to make over bills of exchange to another beyond the sea; for by the stat. 5 R. 2. c. 2. no merchant ought to exchange or return money beyond sea without the King's licence. *Reg. ## ESCAPE.

Escapium, from the Fr. eschapper, i. e. effugere, to fly from.] A violent or privy evasion out of some lawful restraint; as where a man is arrested or imprisoned, and gets away before he is delivered by due course of law. Staundf. P. C. cap. 26, 27.—Termes de Ley. See also title Rescue.

Escapes are either (A.) in civil, or (B.) in criminal, cases.

(A.) As to Escapes in Civil Cases.

I. 1. Where the party shall be said to be legally committed, so that the suffering him to go at large will be adjudged an Escape; 2. What Degree of Liberty, or going at large, shall be deemed an Escape; 3. What Persons are answerable for an Escape.

II. Of the difference between voluntary and negligent Escapes; and Escapes on Mesne Process, and Execution.

III. 1. Of the nature of the Action to be brought for an Escape; and 2. Of the manner of laying it.

IV. Of the Party's Defence sued for the Escape; and therein of pleading fresh Suit.

I. 1. It seems agreed as a general rule, that wherever a sheriff or other officer hath a person in custody, by virtue of an authority from a court which hath jurisdiction over the matter, that the suffering such a person to go at large is an escape, for he cannot judge of the validity of the process or other proceedings of such court, and therefore cannot take advantage of any errors in them; hence the law allows him, in an action of false imprisonment, to plead such authority, which will excuse him, though it be erroneous; but if the court has no jurisdiction of the matter, then all is void, and consequently the officer not punishable for suffering a person taken upon such void authority to escape. Moor, 274. Dyer, 66. 175. 306. Poph. 203. 1 Leon. 30. 5 Co. 64. 8 Co. 141. b. Cro. Jac. 280. 289. 2 Bulst. 64. 237. 256. If a ca. sa. issue after a year and a day, without suing out a scire facias, this error will not excuse the sheriff in an escape. Cro. Car. 288. Sulk. 273. But though a sheriff may not take advantage of an erroneous process, yet he shall of a void process, on which it is no escape to let a prisoner go.

If at the petition of A. and the rest of the creditors of B. a commission under the statutes against bankrupts is issued out against B. and thereupon the commissioners sit and offer interrogatories to C. and he refuses to be examined, and by them is thereupon committed to prison, and the gaoler suffers him to escape, as the commissioners had sufficient authority to commit, and A. was prejudiced by the escape, he may maintain an action against the gaoler. 1 Rol. Rep. 47. Moor 834 pl. 1123. S. C.

The sheriff cannot be charged with an escape before he had the party in actual custody by a legal authority; and therefore if an officer, having a warrant to arrest a man, see him shut up in a house, and challenge him as his prisoner, but never actually have him in his custody, and the party get free, the officer cannot be charged with an escape. Bro. Escape 22.

But if A. is arrested, and in the actual custody of the sheriff, and afterwards another writ is delivered to him at the suit of J. S. upon the delivery of the writ, A., by construction of law, is immediately in the sheriff's custody, without an actual arrest; and if he escapes, the plaintiff may declare that he was arrested by virtue of the second writ, which is the operation it has by law, and not according to the fact. 5 Co. 89. But where the sheriff, not having actually arrested a defendant, but accepted the undertaking of an attorney to put in bail, who put in bail, and the sheriff had returned a cepi corpus, held per Lord Mansfield at Surry assizes, summer 1775, in Hodgson and Akerman, Esq. that the sheriff was not liable, upon a writ of non est inventus, on another process, to an action, either for an escape or a false return, or for negligence in not taking the defendant, no actual negligence being proved; and the plaintiff was nonsuited.

Note, the writ returned cepi corpus was a latitat, returnable three or four days after the other process, which was an original, but that difference was not, in this case, considered as material.

If a person out upon bail renders himself in discharge of his bail, and a reddidit se is entered in the judge's book, and a committitur filed in the office, and the prisoner afterwards escapes; yet if no notice was given to the marshal of such render, nor no entry made of the commitment in his book, the prisoner shall not be deemed in custody so as to charge the marshal with an escape; but it seems this matter cannot be insisted upon after trial. 1 Salk. 272, 3. Vide post.

It hath been held, that entering a committitur upon the roll was not sufficient to charge the marshal with any escape, without proving an actual imprisonment: but that proving the party to be actually in prison, though there be no entry made in the marshal's book, is sufficient. 1 Sid. 220. 1 Keb. 775.

And now, for the greater security of creditors, and the better to enable them to prove the actual custody of the prisoner, it is enacted, by stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. § 9. "That if any one, desiring to charge any person with any action or execution, shall desire to be informed by the marshal or warden, or their respective deputies, or by any other keeper of any other prison, whether such person be a prisoner in his custody, or not, the said marshal or warden, or such other keeper, shall give a true note in writing thereof, to the person so requesting the same, or to his lawful attorney, upon demand at his office for that purpose, or in default thereof, shall forfeit the sum of 50*l.* and if such marshal or warden, or their respective deputy, &c. exercising the said office, or other keeper, &c. of any other prison, shall give a note in writing that such person is an actual prisoner in his or their custody, every such note shall be taken as a sufficient evidence that such person was at that time a prisoner in actual custody."

A committitur upon the roll is good evidence in escape, without an entry in the marshal's book. Ld. Raym. 705.

2. Every person in prison by process of law is to be kept in salvâ et arctâ custodia, in order to compel them the more speedily to pay their debts, and make satisfaction to their creditors. Plowd. 36. 3 Co. 44. 2 Inst. 381. 1 Rol. Abr. 806.

If therefore a defendant being taken in execution, be afterwards seen at large, for any the shortest time, even before the return of the writ, this is an escape. 2 Bl. Rep. 1048. and see 1 Bos. & Pull. 24. that a defendant so taken in execution cannot be allowed to go about even with an officer.

Persons in the King's Bench and Fleet prisons are to be actually detained within the said prisons; and if they escape action of debt lies against the warden, &c. 1 R. 2. c. 12. But now the marshal or warden grant the liberty of the rules to such as they think proper, (not criminally charged,) on proper security. Keepers of those prisons suffering prisoners, either upon contempt or mesne process, or in execution, to be out of the rules, (except on rule of court, &c.) are guilty of an escape; and persons conniving at an escape shall forfeit 500*l.* &c. by 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. And by this statute, where any prisoner in execution escapes, the creditor may have any other new execution against him.

If the bailiff of a liberty, who has the return and execution of writs, remove a prisoner taken in execution to the county-gaol, situated out of the liberty, and there deliver him into the custody of the sheriff, this is an escape for which an action of debt lies. 2 Term Rep. 5.

By stat. 5 An. c. 9. if any person in custody, for not performing any decree in Chancery, &c. escape, the party for whom the money is decreed may have the same remedy against the sheriff, as if the prisoner had been in custody on execution. A prisoner in execution should not be allowed to go out of the gaol; for if he goes out, though he returns again, it is an escape. 3 Rep. 43, 44. 2 Inst. 360. 381. And yet in London, by special custom there, in some cases the prisoner may go abroad with his keeper, and it will be no escape. Ibid.—See Hob. 202. Where the justice of the court, and plaintiff in the suit, agree that the prisoner shall be at liberty, and he go out and return at his time, it is no escape: but this may not be without the sheriff's consent. Dyer, 275.

If a plaintiff by word license the sheriff to deliver the prisoner, no action will lie for this as an escape. 27 H. 8. 24.

If there be an escape by the plaintiff's consent, when he did not intend it, the law is hard that the debt should be thereby discharged; as where one was in execution in B. R. and some proposals being made to the plaintiff in behalf of the prisoner, seeing there was some likelihood of an accommodation, the plaintiff consented to a meeting in a certain place in London, and desired the prisoner might be there, who came accordingly: this was held to be an escape with the plaintiff's consent, and he could never after be in execution at his suit for the same matter. 2 Mod. 136.

It hath been adjudged no escape to let a prisoner go where the sheriff hath the prisoner in custody, if it be before the return of the writ: it is sufficient if the officer have the party at the return of the writ, &c. Moor, 299. 1 Salk. 401. 2 Nels. 739, 740. See post, II. Yet it hath been held, that where a habeas corpus is granted to bring a person into court, if the sheriff on the way let him go at large in the county, or carry him round about a great way, &c. it will be an escape. 1 Mod. 116. And an escape in one place is an escape in all places; for a prisoner being once escaped, and at large, it shall be intended he is confined to no place. 1 Lil. Abr. 537. Committing the marshal of the Marshalsea to prison, was held an escape in law of all the prisoners there. See Style 375.

A sheriff who carries a prisoner taken in execution to a lock-up house within his own bailiwick, and keeps him there 14 days before the return of the writ, is not thereby guilty of an escape. 4 W. P. Taunton, 608.

If a woman, warden of the Fleet prison, marries her prisoner, or if a sheriff, &c. marries a woman in execution with him, in either case it will be deemed an escape in law. Plowd. 17.

If a man hath judgment against two persons, and both are taken in execution, if the sheriff suffer one of them to escape, he shall be answerable for the whole debt, though he hath one of them still in custody. 1 Rol. Abr. 810. But in an action on the case, tried before Lord Mansfield, in Surry, for an escape of one of two defendants, under very favourable circumstances for the officer, his Lordship left it to the jury whether they would find the whole of plaintiff's debt in damages, or only half; and the jury found only half.

By stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3. cap. 27. sect. 8. it is enacted, "That if the marshal or warden for the time being, or their respective deputy or deputies, or other keeper or keepers of any other prison or prisons, shall, after one day's notice in writing given for that purpose, refuse to show any prisoner committed in execution to the creditor at whose suit such prisoner was committed or charged, or to his attorney, every such refusal shall be adjudged to be an escape in law."

3. In civil actions the sheriff is to answer for the escape of his bailiff: as the bailiff is for that of his servant: and action on the case lies against the sheriff for an escape upon mesne process, because the plaintiff is prejudiced in his suit by it. Cro. Eliz. 623, 625. 1 Danv. Abr. 183.—See also Cro. Jac. 419. Dyer, 241.—See Bull. Ni. Pri. 59, 60. Where a person is in custody on mesne process, and being outlawed after judgment at the suit of another, the judgment-creditor brings a warrant on a capias utlagatum, and delivers it to the sheriff's officer, who hath him in custody; if the officer afterwards permits the person to escape, though he refuse to execute the warrant, the sheriff is chargeable in action on the case. 5 Rep. 89.

Where one has the custody of a gaol of freehold or inheritance, and commits it to another person, who is insufficient, the superior is answerable for all escapes suffered by his inferior; but if the inferior be sufficient, the action should be brought against him, and not against the superior. See 9 Co. 98. 2 Jon. 60. 2 Lev. 158. 1 Vent. 314. 2 Mod. 119. 4 Rep. 98.

Also by stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 27. sect. 11. it is enacted, "That the offices of marshal of the King's Bench prison and warden of the Fleet shall be executed by the several persons to whom the inheritance of the prisons, prison-houses, &c. of the said prisons, or either of them, shall then belong respectively, in his or their respective proper person, &c. or by their sufficient deputies; for which deputies, and for all forfeitures, escapes, and other misdemeanors in their offices by such deputies permitted, &c. the said person in whom the aforesaid inheritances respectively are, shall be answerable; and the profits and inheritances of the said offices shall be sequestered, &c. to make satisfaction for such forfeitures, escapes, &c. respectively, as if permitted, &c. by the persons themselves, in whom the respective inheritance of the said prisons shall then be."

A prisoner escapes out of the King's Bench, or Marshalsea, or the Fleet; the keeper of the prison out of which he escaped is to be charged with it; but if the escape be from either of the Compters, the action must be brought against the sheriffs of London. Dyer, 278. 3 Rep. 52.

Action of escape against the warden of the Fleet for an escape upon mesne process; the prisoner returns to the Fleet the same day, and the plaintiff afterwards proceeds to final judgment against him, yet the action lies against the warden. 1 Wils. 293. In an escape upon mesne process out of the borough court, brought in B. R. against the bailiff thereof, the defendant shall not take advantage in B. R. of any error in the process below. 1 Wils. 255.

Action of escape will not lie against the executor or administrator of a sheriff, &c. for an escape, because it was personal, and moritur cum persona: but it may be otherwise if there be a judgment recovered against the sheriff before he died. Dyer, 322. See post, III. 2.

If there are two sheriffs of the same place, and an action of escape is brought against them both, if one of them dies, yet the writ shall not abate; for it being in nature of a trespass, and merely personal, the party can only have remedy against the survivor. Cro. Eliz. 625. But the death should be suggested. By stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. sect. 7, the death of one plaintiff or defendant, where the action will survive to, or against the survivor, shall not abate the suit. But the death must be suggested on the roll. See title Abatement.

An old sheriff omits turning over a prisoner in execution to the new sheriff, it is said to be an escape; so where there are two executions against a man, and in the indenture of turning over mention is made but of one, &c. 3 Rep. 71.

A sheriff who takes a bail bond, and on enquiry denies that he has taken one, cannot be therefore sued for an escape. 5 W. P. Taunton, 325.

The sheriff having a writ against G. B. arrested M. B. who was the real debtor, and at the time of contracting the debt had represented himself as G. B. The Court of K. B. held that the sheriff having been informed of these circumstances while he had the real debtor in his custody, was not bound to detain him, and therefore that an action would not lie against him for an escape. Morgans v. Bridges, Term Rep. K. B. Tr. 58 Geo. 3. 647.

II. There are two kinds of escapes; voluntary and negligent: Voluntary, is when one arrests another for felony, or other crime, and lets him go by consent; in which case the party that permits the escape is esteemed guilty of the crime committed, and must answer for it: Negligent escape, is when one is arrested, and afterwards escapes against the will of him that arrested him, or had him in custody; and is not pursued by fresh suit, and taken again before the party pursuing hath lost sight of him. Cromp. Jus. 36. And for these negligent escapes, the gaoler, &c. is to be fined. One negligent escape will not amount to a forfeiture of a gaoler's office, as one voluntary one will; but many negligent escapes will do it: and the fine for suffering a negligent escape of a person attainted, was by the Common Law of course 100*l.* and in other cases at the discretion of the court. 3 Lev. 288. 2 Lev. 81.—See post as to Escapes in Criminal Cases.

If any prisoner escapes who was in execution, his creditors may retake him by cap. ad satisfac. or bring action of debt on the judgment, or a scire facias against him, &c. 1 Vent. 269. 3 Salk. 160. If a man escapes with the consent of the gaoler, in a civil case, he cannot retake him. 3 Rep. 32. 52. 1 Sid. 330. But the plaintiff may retake him at any time. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27.

If the plaintiff permit the prisoner to escape, he cannot afterwards retake him; and if the body and goods, &c. of a conusor are taken in execution upon a statute-merchant, if the conusee agree that he shall go at large, it is a discharge of the whole execution, and the conusor shall have his lands again: it is otherwise if the sheriff had permitted him to escape, the execution on the lands would not be discharged. 2 Nels. Abr. 737.

A difference is to be observed between permissive and negligent escapes, with respect to the sheriff; for if a sheriff suffer a prisoner voluntarily to go at large, the sheriff cannot retake him even upon fresh suit; and if he does, the prisoner may have an action of trespass against him. Carter, 212.

An escape from the rules of the King's Bench prison, without the Marshal's knowledge, is not a voluntary escape. 2 Term Rep. 126.

If the marshal of the King's Bench, or warden of the Fleet, or any other who hath the keeping of prisons in fee, suffer a voluntary escape, it is a forfeiture of the office. 3 Mod. 146. Carter, 212. And there is likewise a farther penalty of 500*l.* added by 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. above-mentioned.

B. being in custody, at the suit of A., in a joint action against B. and C., B. justifies bail in an action entitled by mistake A. v. B., and a rule so entitled is served on the marshal of K. B. who thereupon discharges B. out of custody; he not being charged in custody in any more than one action at the suit of A; the court of K. B. held that the marshal was liable in an action for an escape. 5 East's Rep. 292.

There is this difference between an escape on mesne process and execution; if the sheriff arrest a person on mesne process, and he is rescued by J. S. he may return the rescue, and such return is good, and no action of escape lies against him after such return; but the court will issue process against such rescuer, or fine him; for in this case, though the sheriff may, yet he is not obliged to raise the posse comitatûs. 1 Rol. Abr. 807. 1 Jon. 207. 1 Rol. Rep. 388. 3 Lev. 46. But after judgment on a capias ad satisfaciendum, the sheriff cannot return a rescue, for in such case the sheriff is obliged to raise the posse comitatûs, if needful, and therefore, if he return a rescue, an action of escape lies, or a new capias; for the return of an ineffectual execution is as none. 1 Rol. Abr. 837. Cro. Car. 240, 255. 8 Co. 42.—See Ni. Pri. 59, 60. and 6 Rep. 51. Cro. Eliz. 868. and this Dictionary, title Rescue.

If a sheriff having arrested a defendant on mesne process, keep him in his custody after the return of the writ, and then carry him to prison, he is not liable to an action on the case as for an escape; if the jury find that the plaintiff has not been delayed or prejudiced in his suit. 5 Term Rep. K. B. 37.

III. 1. At Common Law the plaintiff had no remedy against the sheriff for an escape, whether upon mesne process or in execution, but by special action upon the case. 2 Inst. 382. 1 Show. 176. 2 Saund. 34. Hard. 30.

But now by an equitable construction of Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. cap. 11. action of debt is given against the sheriff; and see 2 H. Black. 108. and by stat. 1. Rich. 2. cap. 12. against the warden of the Fleet, (which extends to all gaolers and keepers of prisons, though infants or feme coverts. 2 Inst. 382.) for escapes in execution.

The plaintiff, at his election, may maintain either an action upon the case, or debt, for an escape in execution. Cro. Jac. 361. 533. 619. Cro. Eliz. 877. Dyer, 278, b. See 1 Jon. 144. 1 Sid. 364. S. C.

If a prisoner in custody upon a capias utlagatum is suffered to escape, the plaintiff may either maintain an action qui tam against the sheriff, or bring an action of debt against him, in his own right. Cro. Jac. 361. 533. 619. Cro. Eliz. 877.

An action of escape is not a local action, and therefore if one escape out of the Marshalsea, which is in Surrey, the action may be laid in Middlesex. Dyer. 278, b. See 1 Jon. 144. 1 Sid. 364. S. C.

It is usual now, on an escape on mesne process, to declare against the sheriff, &c. in case; on execution, in debt.

The distinction seems now to be thus settled.—If a sheriff or gaoler suffers a prisoner, who is taken upon mesne process, to escape, he is liable to an action on the case. Cro. Eliz. 625. Comb. 69.—But if, after judgment, a gaoler or sheriff permits a debtor to escape, who is charged in execution for a certain sum: the debt immediately becomes his own, and he is compellable by action of debt, being for a sum liquidated and ascertained, to satisfy the creditor his whole demand. 2 Inst. 382.

In debt against the sheriff or gaoler for an escape, the jury cannot give a less sum than a creditor would have recovered against the prisoner, viz. the sum indorsed on the writ, and the legal fees of execution. 2 Term Rep. 126.

The nominal plaintiff in ejectment, in whose name the mesne profits have been recovered, may sue for an escape of the defendant in execution thereon 2 Maul. & Selw. Rep. 473.

An action of debt will lie against the gaoler for the escape of a prisoner in execution, though the escape was without his knowledge; in such case he can avail himself of nothing but the act of God, or the king's enemies as an excuse. 2 H. Blackst. 103.

2. In this action it is not necessary to set forth all the formalities required by law in other cases. Cro. Eliz. 877. See 2 Show. 424.

Therefore, if upon a judgment obtained by the testator, the executor brings a scire facias, and has judgment, whereupon a capias ad satisfac. issues, and B. is arrested, and suffered to escape, the plaintiff in an action against the sheriff for this escape, may declare briefly upon the judgment in the scire facias, without shewing the gradual proceedings at length, as is usually done in an action of debt upon a judgment. Carth. 148, 149. 3 Mod. 324. S. C. Cro. Eliz. 877.

So if a defendant is arrested on a special capias, founded on an original returnable in B. R. in action for his escape, it is not necessary to set forth the original.

If the plaintiff declares that he sued out a writ of execution against J. S. without setting forth any judgment, and that the defendant suffered him to escape; this is an incurable fault; for by this means he lost the benefit of pleading nul tiel record, which he might do if the plaintiff had set forth the judgment. 1 Saund. 37, 38. 1 Lev. 191. and 1 Sid. 306. S. C. See title Debt.

If A. recovers against B. as executor, and has him in execution, and the sheriff suffers him to escape, the action must be brought as executor in the detinet only, and not in the debet and detinet. 1 Lutw. 893. Comb. 114. S. C.

If the plaintiff declares, that the prisoner was committed, and escaped, but does not say, prout patet per accordum; yet, upon a general demurrer, this shall be good; for the gist of the action was the escape, and the commitment only inducement. 2 Salk. 565. 5 Mod. 8. S. C. See 3 Lev. 393.

If in escape the plaintiff declares, that he had J. S. and his wife in execution, and that the defendant suffered them to escape, and the jury find specially, that the husband only was taken in execution (it being for a debt due from the wife before coverture), and that he escaped; this is sufficient, and the plaintiff shall have judgment; for the substance of the issue is found, though not pursuant to the declaration. 1 Sid. 5.

So in an action on the case for the escape of A. where the jury found that A. was taken by J. S. the former sheriff, and not by the defendant, the present sheriff; but finding that he was legally in his custody, and that he suffered him to escape, the plaintiff had judgment. Cro. Jac. 380.

An administratrix may maintain an action in her own name against the marshal for the escape of a prisoner in execution on a judgment obtained by her as administratrix. 2 Term Rep. 126.

Under a count for a voluntary escape, the plaintiff may give evidence of a negligent escape: and the defendant may plead a re-taking on a fresh pursuit to such count without traversing the voluntary escape. Id. Ibid.

In debt for an escape against the sheriff, the indorsement of non est inventus on the ca. sa. is sufficient evidence of its having been delivered to him. But a legal arrest must be proved in such action. Cowp. 63.

By the stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 27. sect. 12. it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for any person having cause of action against the warden of the Fleet prison, upon bill filed in the courts of Common Pleas or Exchequer against the warden, and a rule being given to plead thereto, to be out eight days at most after filing such bill, to sign judgment against the warden, unless he plead to the bill within three days after such rule is out."

IV. If the prison takes fire, by means whereof the prisoners escape, this shall excuse the sheriff, and he may well plead it. 1 Rol. Abr. 808.

So if the prison is broke by the King's enemies, this shall excuse the sheriff, for he can have no remedy over against them. 4 Co. 14. 1 Rol. Abr. 808.

But if the prison was broke by rebels and traitors, the King's subjects, this shall not excuse him, for he may have his remedy over against these. Ibid.

In an action of debt against a gaoler for the escape of a prisoner in execution, (which action will lie though the escape were without the knowledge or fault of the gaoler,) in such case the gaoler can avail himself of nothing but the act of God or the King's enemies as an excuse. 2 H. Blackst. 168.

When a prisoner tortiously escapes from the custody of the gaoler, he may be retaken; and the sheriff, &c. may pursue a person escaping into that or any other county; and if he retakes the prisoner on fresh pursuit before action brought, it shall excuse the sheriff, for there the prisoner shall be said to be in execution still. 3 Rep. 44. Cro. Jac. 657. 1 Jon. 144. 1 Rol. Abr. 808. And where the sheriff is to answer the debt and damages for such escape, he shall have his counter-remedy against the party escaping; and may take him at any time and place, and imprison him till he hath satisfied the sheriff as much as he hath paid to the plaintiff; or he may bring an action upon the case against the prisoner, and so relieve himself. 5 Rep. 52. Cro. Eliz. 393.

It was formerly held that the sheriff, &c. might give fresh pursuit in evidence, and need not have pleaded it. See 1 Mod. 116. 1 Sid. 13.

But now, by stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 27. sect. 6. it is enacted, "That no retaking on fresh pursuit shall be given in evidence, unless the same be specially pleaded; nor shall any special plea be allowed, unless oath be first made in writing by the defendant, and filed in the proper office of the respective courts, that the prisoner, for whose escape such action is brought, did, without his consent, privity, or knowledge, make such escape; and if such affidavit shall at any time afterwards appear to be false, and the defendant shall be convicted thereof by due course of law, he shall forfeit the sum of 500*l.*" See title Sheriff.

A voluntary return of a prisoner, after an escape, before action brought, is equivalent to a retaking on a fresh pursuit: but it must be pleaded. 2 Term Rep. 126.

Plea that if the prisoner escaped several times (without specifying them) he returned as often, is bad. 1 Bos. & Pull. 413.

A bailiff who has arrested a prisoner on mesne process, may retake him before the return of the writ, though he voluntarily permitted him to escape immediately after the arrest. 2 Term Rep. K. B. 172.

In an action against the sheriff for the escape of a prisoner on mesne process the plaintiff was nonsuited, because he could not prove any debt against the prisoner. 4 Term Rep. K. B. 611.

Bail put in after the term in which the writ is returnable, is not an answer to an action against the sheriff for an escape brought before bail was put in. Moses v. Norris, Term Rep. K. B. Mic. 56 Geo. 3. 397.

(B.) Escapes in Criminal Cases.

[See 37 Geo. 3. c. 140. § 6. by which the laws touching escape of felons under sentence of death are applied to offenders under sentence of a naval court-martial, if allowed the benefit of a conditional pardon.]

I. 1. What shall be deemed an Escape; 2. where it shall be adjudged Voluntary, and where Negligent.

II. Where the Prisoner may be re-taken after an Escape; and where the Escape is excused by such a Re-taking, or by Killing the Prisoner if he cannot be re-taken.

III. 1. How the Officer suffering an Escape is to be indicted; and 2. how the Escape is to be tried and adjudged.

IV. Of the Punishment of, 1. voluntary, and 2. negligent Escapes: and 3. Of Persons aiding and assisting Prisoners to attempt their Escape.

I. 1. A man must be committed to prison by lawful mittimus; or breach of prison and escaping is not felony. If a party is committed for treason, to break prison and escape is but felony; but if a prisoner let out traitors it will be treason. H. P. C. 109. 2 Inst. 590. Where one is imprisoned for petit larceny, or killing a man se defendendo, &c. to break prison and escape is not felony; and if a prison be set on fire, not by the privity of the prisoner, he may break prison for the safety of his life. 2 Inst. 590. A gaoler refusing to receive a person arrested by the constable for felony, whereby he is let go, is guilty of an escape; but there must be an actual arrest; which arrest must be justifiable to make an escape; for if it be for a supposed crime, where no crime was committed, and the party is neither indicted nor appealed, &c. it is no escape to suffer a person to go at large. Fitz. Coron. 224. Bro. Esca. 27, 28. If a private person arrest another for suspicion of felony, he is to deliver him to a public officer, who ought to have the custody of him; for if he let him go it will be an escape. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19. And if no officer will receive him, he is to deliver him to the township where arrested, or get him bailed.

A. a mere private man, knows B. to have committed felony, and there upon arrests him; he is lawfully in custody of A. until he be discharged, by delivering him to a constable or common gaol; and therefore if he voluntarily suffers such person to escape, though he were no officer, nor B. indicted, it is felony in A. But it is otherwise if he never takes him, nor attempts it, and lets him go. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 591. Justices of peace in their sessions are empowered to inquire of escapes of persons arrested, and imprisoned for felony. Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 3.

2. There can be no doubt, but that wherever an officer, who hath the custody of a prisoner charged with and guilty of a capital offence, doth knowingly give him his liberty, with an intent to save him either from his trial or execution, he is guilty of a voluntary escape; and thereby involved in the guilt of the same crime of which the prisoner was guilty and stood charged with. And it seems to be the opinion of Sir Matthew Hale, that in some cases an officer may be adjudged guilty of such escape, who hath not such intent, but only means to give his prisoner that liberty which, by the law, he hath no colour of right to give him.

Thus, to bail a person not bailable by law is a negligent escape. Plowd. 476.

If the gaoler so closely pursue the prisoner, who flies from him, that he retake him without losing sight of him, the law looks on the prisoner so far in his power all the time, as not to adjudge such a flight to amount at all to an escape; but if the gaoler once lose sight of the prisoner, and afterwards retake him, he seems, in strictness, to be guilty of an escape; and à fortiori therefore, if he kill him in the pursuit, he is in like manner guilty, though he never lost sight of him, and could not otherwise take him, not only because the King loses the benefit he might have had from the attainder of the prisoner, by the forfeiture of his goods, &c. but also because the public justice is not so well satisfied by the killing him in such an extra-judicial manner. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19. See post, Div. II.

II. It seems to be clearly agreed by all the books, that an officer making a fresh pursuit after a prisoner, who hath escaped through his negligence, may retake him at any time after, whether he find him in the same or in a different county. And it is said generally in some books, than an officer who hath negligently suffered a prisoner to escape, may retake him wherever he finds him, without mentioning any fresh pursuit; and indeed, since the liberty gained by the prisoner is wholly owing to his own wrong, there seems to be no reason he should take any manner of advantage from it. But where a gaoler hath voluntarily suffered a prisoner to escape, it is said by some that he can no more justify the retaking him, than if he had never had him in custody before, because by his own free consent he hath admitted, that he hath nothing to do with him.

Wherever a prisoner, by the negligence of his keeper, gets so far out of his power that the keeper loses sight of him, the keeper is finable at the discretion of the court, notwithstanding he retook him immediately after; for it seems agreed, that this is to be adjudged a negligent escape, which implies an offence, and consequently that it must be punishable. It is true, indeed, that in an action against a gaoler for suffering one arrested in a civil action to escape, it is a good excuse for the gaoler, that, before the action brought, he took the prisoner upon fresh suit, which is well maintained by shewing that he pursued him immediately after notice of the escape, though it were some hours after it, and retook him; but it does not from hence follow, that the like excuse will serve for the negligent escape of a criminal, because this is an offence against the public, but the other is only a private damage to the party: neither will it be an hardship to the officer to be exposed to such punishment as the court, in discretion, shall think fit to impose upon him for the negligent escape of a criminal, as it would be to be liable to an action of escape: for suffering a person in his custody, in a civil action, to escape; for that in the former case the court would moderate his fine according to the circumstances of the whole matter, and would certainly mitigate, if not wholly excuse it, if he should appear to have taken all reasonable care: but in the other case, if he should be liable to an action, his judgment would not lie in the discretion of the court, but he would be bound to pay the whole debt for which the party was in custody, if the escape should be adjudged against him. However it is certain, that it will be no advantage to a gaoler to re-take his prisoner after he has been fined for the escape, as is shewn in the precedent section of Hawk. P. C. also it is clear that he cannot execute himself by killing a prisoner in the pursuit, though he could not possibly retake him; but must, in such case, be contented to submit to such fine as his negligence shall appear to deserve. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

III. 1. The indictment must expressly shew, that the party was actually in the defendant's custody for a crime, action, or commitment for it; and that it is not sufficient to say that he was in the defendant's custody, and charged with such a crime; for that a person in custody may be so charged, and yet not be in custody by reason of such charge: and it seems also, that every such indictment must expressly shew that the prisoner went at large. Also it seems necessary to shew the time when the offence was committed, for which the party was in custody, not only that it may appear that it was prior to the escape, but also that it was subsequent to the last general pardon. Also it seems clear, that every indictment for a voluntary escape must allege that the defendant felonicè & voluntariè A. B. ad largum ire permisit; and must also shew the species of the crime for which the party was imprisoned; for it is not sufficient to say in general, that he was in custody for felony, &c.

The crime of the prisoner escaping, for which the gaoler is answerable, must be such as it was at the time of the escape; as where a person is committed for dangerously wounding another, it is trespass only, and not felony, till the party wounded is dead: and he who suffers another to escape, who was in custody for felony, cannot be arraigned for such escape as for felony, until the principal is attainted, but he may be indicted and tried for misprision before the attainder of the principal. And in high treason it is said the escape is immediately punishable, whether the party escaping be ever convicted or not. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19. See post, IV, 1.

2. Where persons, being present in a court of record, are committed to prison by such court, the keeper of the gaol is bound to have them always ready, whenever the court shall demand them of him; and if he shall fail to produce them at such demand, the court will adjudge him guilty of an escape, without any further inquiry, unless he have some reasonable matter to alledge in his excuse; as that the prison was set on fire, or broke open by enemies, &c. for he shall be concluded, by the record of the commitment, to deny that the prisoners were in his custody. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

As to other prisoners who are not so committed, but are in the custody of a gaoler, sheriff, constable, or other person, by any other means whatsoever, it seems agreed, that the person who has them in custody is in no case punishable for their escape, except in some special cases, until it be presented; for by stat. West. 1. c. 3. it is enacted, that "Nothing be demanded nor taken, nor levied by the sheriff, nor by any other, for the escape of a thief or felon, until it be judged for an escape by the justices in eyre; and that he who does otherwise, shall restore to him or them that have paid it, as much as he or they have taken or received, and as much also unto the King."

It hath been adjudged, that this statute restrains not the court of King's Bench from receiving such presentments; for that its jurisdiction includes in it that of justices in eyre, and this court is itself the highest court of eyre. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

It is further enacted by stat. 31 Ed. 3. c. 14. "That the escape of thieves and felons, and the chattels of felons and of fugitives, and also escapes of clerks convicts, out of their ordinary's prison, from thenceforth to be judged before any of the King's justices, shall be levied from time to time, as they shall fall, as well of the time past as time to come." By which it seems to be implied, that other justices, as well as those in eyre, may take cognizance of escapes; and it is certain, that justices of gaol-delivery may punish justices of peace for a negligent escape, in admitting persons to bail, who are not bailable. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

And it is further enacted, by stat. 1 Rich. 3. cap. 3. "That justices of peace shall have authority to inquire, in their sessions, of all manner of escapes of every person arrested and imprisoned for felony."

Wherever an escape is fineable, the presentment of it is traversable; but where the offence is amerciable only, there the presentment is of itself conclusive; such amercements being reckoned among those minima de quibus non curat lex; and this distinction seems to be well warranted by the old books. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

IV. 1. A voluntary escape amounts to the same kind of crime, and is punishable in the same degree, as the offence of which the party was guilty, and for which he was in custody, whether it be treason, felony, or trespass; and whether the person escaping were actually committed to some gaol, or under an arrest only, and not committed; and whether he were attainted, or only accused of such crime, and neither indicted nor appealed: and it is said to be no excuse of such escape, that the prisoner had been acquitted on an indictment of death, and only committed till the year and day be passed, to give the widow or heir of the deceased an opportunity of bringing their appeal. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

But the officer cannot be thus punished till the original delinquent hath actually received judgment, or been attainted upon verdict, confession, or outlawry of the crime for which he was so committed or arrested: otherwise it might happen that the officer might be punished for treason or felony, and the person arrested and escaping might be acquitted of the charge against him. But, before the conviction of the principal party, the officer thus neglecting his duty may be fined and imprisoned for a misdemeanor. 1 Hal. P.C. 588, 589. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

Also such an escape, suffered by one who wrongfully takes upon him the keeping of a gaol, seems to be punishable in the same manner as if he were never so rightfully entitled to such custody; for that the crime is in both cases of the very same ill consequence to the public; and there seems to be no reason that a wrongful officer should have greater favour than a rightful, and that for no other reason, but because he is a wrongful one. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

Also if the warrant of a commitment do plainly and expressly charge the party with treason or felony, but in some other respect be not strictly formal, yet it seems that it may be probably argued, that the gaoler suffering an escape is as much punishable, as if the warrant were perfectly right. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

None shall suffer capitally for the crime of another; so that a principal gaoler is only fineable for a voluntary escape suffered by his deputy. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

2. Whoever de facto occupies the office of gaoler is liable to answer for a negligent escape; and it is no way material whether his title to the office be legal or not. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19. A sheriff is as much liable to answer for an escape suffered by his bailiff, as if he had actually suffered it himself, and the court may charge either the sheriff or bailiff for such an escape; and if a deputy gaoler be not sufficient to answer a negligent escape, his principal must answer for him; but if the gaoler who suffers an escape have an estate for life or years in the office, it is not agreed how far he in reversion is liable to be punished. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

Wherever a person is found guilty upon an indictment, or presentment, of a negligent escape of a criminal actually in his custody, he ought to be condemned in a certain sum to be paid to the King, which seems most properly to be called a Fine.

It hath been holden, that a negligent escape may be pardoned by the King before it happens, but that a voluntary one cannot so be pardoned. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

And it seems by the Common Law, the penalty for suffering the negligent escape of a person attainted, was of course 100*l.* and for suffering such escape of a person indicted, and not attainted, was 5*l.*; but if the person escaping were neither attainted nor indicted, it seems that it was left to the discretion of the court to assess such a reasonable forfeiture as should seem proper; and if the party had twice escaped, it seems that the penalties above-mentioned were of course to be doubled; yet it seems that the forfeiture was to be no greater for suffering a prisoner, committed on two several accusations, to escape, than if he had been committed but on one. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

As to the manner offences of this kind are punishable by statute, it is recited by stat. 5 Ed. 3. c. 8. "That persons indicted of felonies in times past, had removed the indictments before the King, and there yielded themselves, and by the marshals of the King's Bench had been incontinently let to bail, and after had done many evil deeds, &c." And thereupon it is enacted, "That if any such prisoner be wandering out of prison, by bail, or without bail, and that he be found at the King's suit, or at the suit of the party, the marshal which shall be found thereof guilty, shall have half a year's imprisonment, and be ransomed at the King's will; and the justices shall thereof make inquiry when they see time; and as to the marshals, it shall be done within the verge that which reason will. And in case that the marshals suffer, by their assent, such prisoners to escape, they shall be at law, as before the time of the statute they had been. And the King intendeth not by this statute to lose the escape, where he ought to have the same."

By stat. 56 Geo. 3. c. 23. § 44, 45. if any person having the custody of any convict confined in the general Penitentiary at Milbank near Westminster, who shall negligently permit any such convict to escape, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment.

Also it is enacted by stat. 19 H. 7. c. 10. "That every sheriff have the custody of the King's common gaols during the time of his office, except all gaols whereof any person or persons have the keeping of estates of inheritance.—And that all letters patent made for term of life, or years, of the keeping of the said gaols, &c. shall be annulled and void."—The penalties for escapes inflicted by the subsequent part of this statute are expired.

3. By stat. 16 Geo. 2. c. 31. it is enacted, That persons who any ways assist a prisoner, committed for treason or felony, to attempt his escape from any gaol, shall be adjudged guilty of felony and be transported; and if the prisoner be committed for petit larceny, or other inferior offence, or upon process for 100*l.* debt, &c. the offenders are liable to fine and imprisonment. And where any person conveys any arms, instrument, or disguise, to a prisoner in gaol for felony, &c. or for his use, without the privity of the gaoler, in order to an escape, though no escape be actually made, it is likewise felony and transportation. Also if one assist any prisoner to escape from any constable, or other officer or person in whose custody he is, by virtue of a warrant of commitment for felony, it is declared to be the like offence.

See also stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 23. § 5. 24 Geo. 3. c. 56. where to assist felons convict to make their escape from the persons to whom they are delivered to be transported is felony without clergy. See 3 P. Wms. 439.

The indictment of the above stat. 16 Geo. 2. c. 31. must state that the instruments were conveyed to the prisoner with a design to effectuate his escape. But no indictment can be maintained on this statute for contributing to the escape of a prisoner committed on suspicion only. See Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 21. § 11.

By stats. 13 Geo. 3. c. 31. 44 Geo. 3. c. 92. and 45 Geo. 3. c. 92. to render more easy the apprehending and bringing to trial offenders escaping from one part of the United Kingdom to the other, and also from one county to the other, it is enacted, That offenders escaping from England to Scotland, or from Great Britain to Ireland, or vice versa, may be apprehended and conveyed back to the place from whence they escaped. By the said act 44 Geo. 3. c. 92 offenders escaping with stolen goods from one part to another of the United Kingdom, may be tried in the place where the goods shall be found in their custody, and receivers in the place where they receive. By 54 Geo. 3. c. 186. all warrants issued in England, Scotland, or Ireland, may be executed in any part of the United Kingdom.

By the said acts 13 Geo. 3. c. 31. 44 Geo. 3. c. 92. and 45 Geo. 3. c. 92. persons committing offences in one county may be pursued and apprehended in any other county. See titles Justices, Ireland.

By stat. 52 Geo. 3. c. 156. for the more effectual punishment of persons aiding Prisoners of War to escape from his majesty's dominions, it is enacted that every person who shall aid and assist any alien enemy, being a prisoner of war in his majesty's dominions, whether confined in any prison, or suffered to be at large in any place, to escape from prison or from his majesty's dominions if at large on his parole, shall be guilty of felony, and punishable by transportation for life, or fourteen years or seven years. Persons assisting any prisoner on parole in quitting the place where he is, though not assisting him in quitting the coast, shall be considered as aiding in his escape. Persons owing allegiance to his majesty aiding the escape of prisoners when on the high seas are declared equally punishable.

Escape-Warrant. If any person committed or charged in custody in the King's Bench or Fleet prison, in execution, or on mesne process, &c. go at large; on oath thereof before a judge of the court where the action was brought, an escape-warrant shall be granted, directed to all sheriffs, &c. throughout England, to retake the prisoner, and commit him to gaol where taken, there to remain till the debt is satisfied: and a person may be taken on a Sunday upon an escape-warrant. Stat. 1 Ann. c. 6. And the judges of the respective courts may grant warrants, upon oath to be made before persons commissioned by them to take affidavits in the country, (such oath being first filed) as they might do upon oath made before themselves. 5 Ann. c. 9.

A sheriff ought not to receive a person taken on escape-warrant, &c. from any but an officer; not from the rabble, &c. which is illegal. 3 Salk. 149. A person being arrested and carried to Newgate by virtue of an escape-warrant, moved to be discharged, because he said he was abroad by a day-rule when taken; but it appearing by affidavit that he was taken upon the escape-warrant before the court of B. R. sat that morning, they refused to set him at liberty. 2 Ld. Raym. 927.

ESCHEAT. Escaeta: from the old French eschoir, to fall or happen.] The casual descent, in the nature of forfeiture, of lands and tenements within his manor to a lord; either on failure of issue of the tenant dying seised, or on account of the feleny of such tenant. See this Dict. title Tenure, II. 7.

Blackstone defines it "an obstruction of the course of descent, and a consequent determination of the tenure, by some unforeseen contingency, in which case the land naturally results back, by a kind of reversion, to the original grantor, or lord of the fee." 2 Comm. cap. 15.

Escheats are frequently divided into those propter defectum sanguinis, and those propter delictum tenentis; but both species may be included under the first denomination; since he that is attainted suffers an extinction of his blood, as well as he that dies without relations. See Fleta. lib. 6. c 1.

Inheritable blood is wanting, 1. When the tenant dies without any relations on the part of any of his ancestors. 2. When he dies without any relations on the part of those ancestors from whom his estate descended. 3. When he dies without any relations of the whole blood. When he is attainted for treason or felony.—In all these cases the lands escheat to the lord.—See titles Descent, Attainder. Bastards and Aliens cannot inherit.

Great care must be taken to distinguish between forfeiture of lands to the King, and this species of escheat to the lord; which, by reason of their similitude in some circumstances, and because the crown is very frequently the immediate lord of the fee, and therefore entitled to both, have been often confounded together. But, in fact, escheat operates in subordination to this more ancient and superior law of forfeiture. 2 Inst. 64. Salk. 85. See title Forfeiture, Tenure.

The doctrine of escheat upon attainder, taken singly, is this; that the blood of the tenant, by the commission of any felony; (under which denomination all treasons were formerly comprised. 3 Inst. 15. Stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 2. § 12.) is corrupted and stained, and the original donation of the feud is thereby determined. Upon the thorough demonstration of which guilt, by legal attainder, the feudal covenant and mutual bond of fealty are held to be broken, the estate instantly falls back from the offender to the lord of the fee, and the inheritable quality of his blood is extinguished and blotted out for ever. In consequence of which corruption and extinction of hereditary blood, the land of all felons would immediately revest in the lord, but that the superior law of forfeiture intervenes, and intercepts it in its passage: in case of treason, for ever; in case of other felony, for only a year and a day. 2 Inst. 36. See title Tenure, II. 7.

It has been holden, that a saving against the corruption of blood in a statute concerning felony, doth by consequence save the land to the heir, so as not to escheat; because the escheat to the lord for felony is only pro defectu tenentis, occasioned by the corruption of blood: but it hath been adjudged, that a saving against the corruption of blood, in a statute concerning treason, doth not save the land to the heir: for in treason the land goes to the King by way of immediate forfeiture. 3 Inst. 47. 1 Salk. 85.

Inheritances of things not lying in tenure, as of rents, commons, &c. cannot escheat to the lord, because there is no tenure; nor descend, by reason the blood is corrupted: though they are forfeited to the King by an attainder of treason, and the profits of them shall be also forfeited to the King on attainder of felony during the life of the offender: and after his death it is said the inheritance shall be extinguished. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 49. which see.

In cases of escheat, the blood of the tenant being utterly corrupted and extinguished, it follows, not only that all that he has at the time of his offence committed shall escheat from him, but also that he shall be incapable of inheriting any thing for the future. This farther illustrates the distinction between forfeiture and escheat. If therefore a father be seised in fee, and the son commits treason and is attainted, and then the father dies: the land shall escheat to the lord, because the son by the corruption of his blood, is incapable to be heir, and there can be no other heir during his life, but nothing shall be forfeited to the King, for the son never had any interest in the lands to forfeit. Co. Lit. 13. In this case the escheat operates, and not the forfeiture; but in the following instance the forfeiture works, and not the escheat. As where a new felony is created by act of parliament, and it is provided (as is frequently the case) that it shall not extend to corruption of blood; here the lands of the felon shall not escheat to the lord, but yet the profits of them shall be forfeited to the King for a year and a day, and so long after as the offender lives. 3 Inst. 47. See titles Attainder, Forfeiture.

Husband and wife, tenants in special bail; the husband is attainted of treason and executed, leaving issue; on the death of the wife the lands shall escheat, because the issue in tail ought to make his conveyance by father and mother, and from the father he cannot by reason of the attainder. Dyer, 322. If tenant in fee-simple is attainted of treason, and executed, upon his death the fee is vested in the King, without office found; yet he must bring a scire facias against the tertenants; lands shall never escheat to a lord of whom they are holden, until office found. 3 Rep. 10.

Escheat seldom happens to the lord for want of an heir to an estate; but when it doth, before the lord enters, the homage jury of the lord's court ought to present it. 2 Inst. 36. Land shall escheat to the lord where heirs are born after attainder of felony. 3 Rep. 40. Though if the King pardon a felon before conviction, the lord shall not have his lands by escheat; for the lord hath no title before attainder. Owen, 87. 2 Nels. Abr. 744. If, on appeal of death or other felony, process is awarded against the party, and pending the process he conveyeth away the land, and after is outlawed, the conveyance is good to defeat the lord of his escheat: but if where a person is indicted of felony, pending the process against him, he conveys away his land, and afterwards is outlawed, the conveyance shall not prevent the lord of his escheat. Co. Lit. 13. See further this Dict. titles Attainder, Corruption of Blood, Forfeiture.

As a consequence of this doctrine of escheat, all lands of inheritance immediately revesting in the lord, the wife of the felon was liable to lose her dower, till the stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. and still by stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 11. the wife of one attaint of high treason shall not be endowed. See title Dower.

There is one singular instance in which lands held in fee-simple are not liable to escheat to the lord, even when their owner is no more, and hath left no heirs to inherit them. And this is the case of a Corporation; for if that comes by any accident to be dissolved, the donor or his heirs shall have the land again in reversion, and not the lord by the escheat; which is perhaps the only instance where a reversion can be expectant on a grant in fee simple absolute. See title Corporation.

It has been decided that where a cestui que trust dies without heirs, the trust does not escheat to the Crown, so that the lands may be recovered in a court of equity by the King; but that the trustee shall hold them for his own benefit. Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Black. Rep. 123.

ESCHEATOR, escaetor.] Was an officer appointed by the Lord Treasurer, &c. in every county, to make inquests of titles by escheat; which inquests were to be taken by good and lawful men of the county, impannelled by the sheriff. Stats. 14 Ed. 3. c. 8. 34 Ed. 3. c. 13. 8 H. 6. c. 16. These escheators found officers after the death of the King's tenants, who held by knight-service, or otherwise of the King; and certified their inquisitions into the Exchequer; and Fitzherbert called them officers of record. F. N. B. 100. No escheator could continue in his office above one year: and whereas, before the statute of Westm. 1. c. 24. Escheators, sheriffs, &c. would seize into the king's hands the freehold of the subjects, and thereby disseise them; by this act it is provided that no seizure can be made of lands or tenements into the King's hands, before office found. 2 Inst. 206. And no lands can be granted before the King's title is found by inquisition. Stat. 18 H. 6. c. 6. The office of escheator is an ancient office, and was formerly of great use to the crown; but having its chief dependance on the court of wards, which is taken away by act of parliament, it is now in a manner out of date. 4 Inst. 225. ESCROW. A deed delivered to a third person, to be the deed of the party making it, upon a future condition, when a certain thing is performed, and then it is to be delivered to the party to whom made. It is to be delivered to a stranger, mentioning the condition; and has relation to the first delivery. 2 Rol. Abr. 25, 26. Co. Lit. 31. A delivery as an escrow signifies, in fact, as a scrowl or writing, which is not to take effect as a deed, till the condition be performed. Co. Lit. 36. See title Deed, II. 7.

Where the vendor of a leasehold estate delivered the conveyance as an Escrow, to take effect on payment of the residue of the purchase money, the court of C. P. held that the property in the title deeds of the estate was so vested in the vendee, that the vendor obtaining possession of them, and pawning them, &c. did not confer on the pawnee any right of detaining them after tender of the residue of the purchase money. Hooper v. Ramsbottom, 6 *W. ESPERONS. Spurs, esperons de or, gilt spurs. 7 Co. Rep. 13.

ESPERVARIUS. Fr. espervier.] A sparrow-hawk. Chart. Forest. cap. 4.

ESPLEES, expletiæ, from expleo.] The products which ground or land yield; as the hay of the meadows, the herbage of the pasture, corn of the arable; rent and services, &c. And of an advowson, the taking of tithes in gross by the parson; of wood, the felling of wood; of an orchard, the fruits growing there; of a mill, the taking of toll, &c. These and such like issues are termed esplees. And it is observed that in a writ of right of land, advowson, &c. the demandant ought to allege in his count, that he or his ancestors took the esplees of the thing in demand; otherwise the pleading will not be good. Termes de Ley. Sometimes this word hath been applied to the farm, or lands, &c. themselves.—Plac. Parl. 30 Ed. 1.

ESPOUSALS, sponsalia.] Are a contract or mutual promise between a man and woman to marry each other; and where marriages may be consummated, espousals go before them. Marriage or matrimony is said to be an espousal de præsenti, and a conjunction of man and woman in a constant society. Wood's Inst. 57. See title Marriage.

ESQUIRE, from the Fr. Esqu. and the Lat. Scutum, in Greek σκυτος, which signifies an hide of which shields were anciently made and afterwards covered.] An Esquire was originally he who attending a knight in the time of war, did carry his shield, whence he was called Escurier in French, and Scutifer or Armiger, (i. e. armour-bearer) in Latin.

Hotoman saith, that those whom the French call Esquires were a military kind of vassals, having jus sculi, viz. liberty to bear a shield, and in it the ensigns of their family, in token of their gentility or dignity: but this addition hath not now for a long time had any relation to the office or employment of the person to whom it hath been attributed, as to carrying of arms, &c. but has been merely a title of dignity, and next in degree to a knight.

A sheriff of a county being a superior officer, retains the title of Esquire during his life; in respect of the great trust he has in the common-wealth. The chiefs of some ancient families are esquires by prescription. Blount.

Esquires and Gentlemen are confounded together by Sir Edward Coke, 2 Inst. 668. He there observes that every Esquire is a Gentleman, and a gentleman is defined to be one qui arma gerit, who bears coat armour; the grant of which adds gentility to a man's family. It is indeed a matter somewhat unsettled what constitutes the distinction, or who is a real Esquire: for it is not an estate, however large, that confers this rank upon its owner. Camden, who was himself a herald, distinguishes them the most accurately. And he reckons up four sorts of them. 1. The eldest sons of knights and their eldest sons in perpetual succession. 2. The eldest sons of younger sons of peers, and their eldest sons in like perpetual succession; both which species of esquires Spelman calls armigeri natalitii; as he denominates the sons themselves of peers armigeri honorarii.—3. Esquires created by the King's letters patent or other investiture, and their eldest sons; see post Esquires of the King. 4. Esquires by virtue of their offices; as justices of the peace and others who bear any office of trust under the crown: [if styled Esquires by the King in their commissions and appointments.] To these may be added esquires of Knights of the Bath, each of whom constitutes three at his installation; and all foreign, nay Irish peers; for not only these, but even the eldest sons of peers of Great Britain, though frequently titular lords, are only esquires in law, and must so be named in all legal proceedings.—Barristers at law seem also now in full possession of the title of Esquire, though originally, as it should seem, attained by usurpation; and being perhaps nearly the same kind of unnecessary addition to their superior degree, as if it were to be annexed or prefixed to that of M.A. or LL.D.

The Court of C. P. however refused to hear an affidavit read, because a Barrister named in it was not called Esquire. 1 Wils. 224.—See 1 Comm. 406. and the notes there. Spelm. Gloss. 43. and this Dict. title Precedency.

Esquires of the King. Are such who have the title by creation: these, when they are created, have put about their necks a collar of S.S. and a pair of silver spurs is bestowed on them: and they were wont to bear before the Prince in war a shield or lance. There are four esquires of the King's body, to attend on his Majesty's person. Camd. 111. These are now disused.

ESSENDI QUIETUM DE TOLONIO. A writ to be quit of toll; it lies for citizens and burgesses of any city or town that by charter or prescription ought to be exempted from toll, where the same is exacted of them. Reg. Orig. 258. See titles Toll, Corporation, London.

ESSOIGN, or ESSOIN. Essonium, Fr. Essoine—Essonzic Scotch.] An excuse for him that is summoned to appear and answer to an action, or to perform suit to a court baron, &c. by reason of sickness and infirmity, or other just cause of absence. It is a kind of imparlance, or craving of a longer time, that lies in real, personal, and mixed actions: and the plaintiff as well as the defendant shall be essoigned to save his default. Co. Lit. 131. For the mode of entering an Essoin, see Rast. 520.

The causes that serve to essoin, and the essoins are divers, under these heads. 1. Essoin de ultra mare, whereby the defendant shall have forty days. 2. De terrâ sanctâ, where defendant shall have a year and a day. 3. De malo veniendi, which is likewise called the common essoign. 4. De malo lecti, wherein the defendant may by writ be viewed by four knights. 5. De servitio Regis: Bract. lib. 5. Britton, cap. 122. Fleta, lib. 6. And besides the common essoign de malo veniendi, i. e. by falling sick in coming to the court, and other essoins abovementioned, there were several other excuses, to save a default in real actions; as constraint of enemies, the falling among thieves, floods of water, and breaking down of bridges, &c. 2 Co. Inst. 125.

After issue joined in dower, quare impedit, &c. one essoin only shall be allowed. Stat. 52 H. 3. c. 13. And in writs of assise, attaints, &c. after the tenant hath appeared, he shall not be essoigned; but the inquest shall be taken by default. St. 3 Ed. 1. c. 42. Essoin ultra mare will not be allowed, if the tenant be within the four seas; but it shall be turned to a default, c. 44. There is no essoin permitted for an appellant. St. 13 Ed. 1. c. 28. Nor doth essoin lie where any judgment is given; or the party is distrained by his lands; the sheriff is commanded to make him appear; after the party is seen in court, &c. 12 Ed. 2. st. 2.

An essoin de servitio Regis lies not when the party is a woman; in a writ of dower; where the party hath an attorney in his suit, &c. Ibid. The essoign day in court is regularly the first day of the term; but the fourth day after is allowed of favour. 1 Lill. 540. 569. 1 Inst. 135. 3 T. R. 185. A corporation (defendants) are not entitled to an essoin. And the court discourages essoins, and will be glad to use any means to prevent such delay of the defendant. 2 Term Rep. 16. 2 Wils. 164. An essoin lies not on a capias to arrest; and the plaintiff may declare and sign judgment, if no plea. 2 Str. 1194.

There cannot be an essoign in a personal action; and if, on the return of a writ in a personal action the defendant cast an essoign, which is not adjourned to a particular day, and it is not quashed, and the plaintiff deliver his declaration on the first day of the following term, the defendant is not entitled to an imparlance. 2 Term Rep. K. B. 16.

Essoin Day of the Term. The first return in every term, is, properly speaking, the first day in that term: and thereon the court sits to take essoins, or excuses for such as do not appear according to the summons of the writ; wherefore this is usually called the essoin day of the term. But the person summoned hath three days' grace, beyond the return of the writ in which to make his appearance, and if he appears on the fourth day inclusive, the quarto die post, it is sufficient. 3 Comm. 277. 3 Term Rep. K. B. 185. See title Term.

Essoin de Malo Villæ. Is when the defendant is in court the first day; but gone without pleading, and being afterwards surprised by sickness, &c. cannot attend, but sends two essoiners, who openly protest in court that he is detained by sickness in such a village, that he cannot come, pro lucrari et pro perdere; and this will be admitted, for it lies on the plaintiff to prove whether the essoin is true or not.

ESTATE.

Fr. Estat. Lat. Status.] That title or interest which a man hath in lands or tenements, &c.

An Estate in lands, tenements, and hereditaments, (says Blackstone) signifies such interest as the tenant hath therein; so that if a man grants all his estate in Dale to A. and his heirs, every thing that he can possibly grant shall pass thereby. Co Lit. 345. It signifies the [state] condition, or circumstance in which the owner stands with regard to his property. And, to ascertain this with precision and accuracy, estates may be considered in a threefold view; first, with regard to the quantity of interest which the tenant has in the tenement; secondly, with regard to the time at which that quantity of interest is to be enjoyed; and thirdly, with regard to the number and connections of the tenants.

First, with regard to the quantity of interest which the tenant has in the tenement, this is measured by its duration and extent. Thus, either his right of possession is to subsist for an uncertain period, during his own life, or the life of another man; to determine at his own decease, or to remain to his descendants after him; or it is circumscribed within a certain number of years, months, or days; or, lastly, it is infinite and unlimited, being vested in him and his representatives for ever. And this occasions the primary division of estates into such as are freehold, and such as are less than freehold.

An estate of freehold, liberum tenementum, or frank-tenement, is defined by Britton, c. 32. to be "the possession of the soil by a freeman." And St. Germyn, (Dr. & Stud. b, 2. d, 22.) tells us, "that the possession of the land is called, in the law of England, the frank-tenement, or freehold." Such estate therefore, and no other, as requires actual possession of the land is, legally speaking, freehold: which actual possession can, by the course of the Common Law be only given by the ceremony called livery of seisin, which is the same as the feodal investiture. And from these principles we may extract this description of a freehold; that it is such an estate in lands as is conveyed by livery of seisin; or, in tenements of an incorporeal nature, by what is equivalent thereto. And accordingly it is laid down by Littleton, § 59. that where a freehold shall pass, it behoveth to have livery of seisin. As therefore estates of inheritance and estates for life, could not, by Common Law, be conveyed without livery of seisin, these are properly estates of freehold; and, as no other estates were conveyed with the same solemnity, therefore [no others are properly freehold estates. 2 Comm. 103, 104.

Mr. Christian, in his note on the above passage, says; a freehold estate seems to be any estate of inheritance, or for life, in either a corporeal or incorporeal hereditament, existing in or arising from real property of free tenure; that is, now, of all which is not copyhold. The learned Commentator himself has elsewhere informed us, that "tithes and spiritual dues are freehold estates, whether the land out of which they issue are bond or free; being a separate and distinct inheritance from the lands themselves." And, in this view, they must be distinguished and excepted from other incorporeal hereditaments issuing out of lands, as rents, &c. which in general will follow the nature of their principal, and cannot be freehold, unless the stock from which they spring be freehold also. 1 Blackst. Tracts, 116.

Estates of freehold may then be considered, either as estates of inheritance, or estates not of inheritance. The former are again divided into inheritances absolute, otherwise called fee-simple, and inheritances limited; one species of which is usually called fee-tail.

As to estates and tenants in fee-simple, see this Dict. titles Fee and Fee-simple, Tenure, III. 5.

Limited Fees, or such estates of inheritance as are clogged and confined with conditions or qualifications of any sort, may be divided into two kinds. 1. Qualified or base fees. 2. Fees conditional; so called at the Common Law, and afterwards fees tail, in consequence of the statute de donis. As to these latter, see this Dict. titles Tail and Fee Tail, Tenures.—A base or qualified Fee is such a one as has a qualification subjoined thereto, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end. As in the case of a grant to A. and his heirs tenants of the manor of Dale; in this instance, whenever the heirs of A. cease to be tenants of that manor, the grant is entirely defeated. This estate is a fee, because, by possibility, it may endure for ever in a man and his heirs: yet, as that donation depends upon the concurrence of collateral circumstances, which qualify and debase the purity of the donation, it is therefore a qualified or base fee. 2 Comm. 109. See 1 Inst. 27.

Of estates of freehold, not of inheritance, but for life only, some may be called conventional, as being expressly created by the act of the parties; others are merely legal, or created by construction and operation of law. See title Freehold.—As to estates for life, expressly created by deed or grant, see this Dict. title Life Estate.—As to the estate of tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, see title Tail, and Fee-Tail. As to tenant by the Curtesy, and Tenant in Dower, see those titles.

Of estates less than freehold there are three sorts; 1. Estates for years. 2. Estates at will: as to both which see this Dict. title Lease. 3. Estates by sufferance: as to which, see this Dict. title Sufferance.

Besides these several divisions of estates, in point of interest, another species may be mentioned, viz. Estates upon Condition; as to which, see at large title Condition, and titles Mortgage, Statute-Merchant, Statute-Staple, Elegit.

According to the above division, Estates are considered solely with regard to their duration, or the quantity of interest which the owners have therein. With regard to the time of their enjoyment, when the actual receipt of the rents and profits begins, Estates may be considered as either in possession or expectancy.—Of expectancies, there are two sorts; one created by the act of the parties, called a Remainder; the other by act of law, called a Reversion.—Of estates in possession, (which are sometimes called estates executed, whereby a present interest passes to and abides in the tenant, not depending on any subsequent circumstance or contingency, as in the cases of estates executory) little or nothing is to be peculiarly observed; all the estates already spoken of, and treated of under the titles referred to, are of this kind. But the doctrine of estates in expectancy contains some of the nicest and most abstruse learning in the English law.—And as to so much of it as relates to Remainders and Reversions see this Dict. under those titles, and titles Executory Devise, Limitation.

Estates, with regard to the certainty, and the time of the enjoyment of them, are distinguished by Fearne in the introduction to his Essay on Contingent Remainders and Executory Devises, into, 1. Estates vested in possession. 2. Estates vested in interest, as reversions; vested remainders; such executory devises, future uses, conditional limitations, and other future interests as are not referred to, or made to depend on, a period or event that is uncertain. 3. Estates contingent; as Contingent Remainders; and such executory devises, future uses, conditional limitations, and other future interests as are referred to, or made to depend on an event that is uncertain.—An estate is vested when there is an immediate fixed right of present or future enjoyment.—An estate is vested in possession when there exists a right of present enjoyment.—An estate is vested in interest when there is a present fixed right of future enjoyment. An estate is contingent when a right of enjoyment is to accrue on an event which is dubious and uncertain.

With respect to the number and connections of their owners, the tenants who occupy and hold them, Estates of any quantity or length of duration, whether in actual possession or expectancy, may be held in four different ways; severalty, in joint-tenancy; in coparcenary; in common.—He that holds lands in severalty, or is sole tenant thereof, is he that holds them in his own right only, without any other being joined or connected with him in point of interest during his estate therein. This is the most common and usual way of holding an estate; and all estates are supposed to be of this sort, unless where they are expressly declared to be otherwise; and in laying down general rules and doctrines, they are usually applied to such estates as are held in severalty. As to estates in joint-tenancy, in coparcenary, and in common, see titles Joint Tenants, Parceners.

As to the title to estates, see this Dict. Title; and the references there; and as to the different nature of estates, according to their several tenures, see this Dict. title Tenure.

Estates are acquired divers ways; viz. by descent from a father to the son; &c. Conveyance, or grant from one man to another; by gift or purchase; deed or will: and a fee-simple is the largest estate that can be in law. 1 Lil. 541.

Estates are real of lands, &c. or personal, of goods or chattels; otherwise distinguished into freeholds, that descend to the heir, and chattels which go to the executors: some estates are made by the words of deeds, and others made by law; as an estate in frank marriage given to a cousin, makes a gift in tail.

Also there is an estate that is implied, where tenant in tail bargains and sells his land to a man and his heirs; by this he hath an estate descendible, and determinable upon the death of the tenant in tail. Co. Lit. 10 Rep. 97. If I give lands in Dale to a certain person for life, and after to his heirs or right heirs, he hath the fee-simple; and if it be to his heirs male, he will have an estate-tail. 1 Rep. 66. A man grants to one and his heirs and assigns for his life, and a year over; this is an estate for life only. 39 E. 3. 25. Lit. 46. If a lease be made, and not expressed for what number of years, it is an estate at will. 2 Shep. Abr. 81.

The word estate generally in deeds, grants, and conveyances, comprehends the whole in which the party hath an interest or property, and will pass the same. 3 Mod. 46. A person in possession of an estate mortgaged in fee, by will gave it to his two daughters and their heirs; one of them married, and then died: and it being a question, whether her share should be held real or personal estate, and go to the heir, or her husband administrator? It was adjudged for the heir; for here the mortgaged lands shall descend as other lands of inheritance, and be subject to the same rules. Preced. Canc. 266. In such case, if the mortgage in fee be paid off, the money shall be considered as land, and belong to his heirs, as the estate in the land would have done. Ibid. See tit. Mortgage.

If a lessee for term of twenty years, accepts of a lease of the same land for ten years, by the lessee's acceptance of the new lease, the term of twenty years is determined in law. 2 Rol. Abr. 469.

Lease for years to R. B. rendering rent: the next year a lease was made of the same lands to the lady P. for ninety-nine years; the next year the said lands were demised to the said R. B. for forty-one years, who accepted the lease, but that did not extinguish his first lease; because the lessor, by making the intermediate lease to the lady P. had only a reversion, and could not afterwards give any interest to R. B. But if it had not been for this intermediate lease, then the acceptance of the second lease for forty-one years had been a surrender of the first. Hutt. 104.

If a man hath a lease for years, which is good in law, and afterwards accepts a new lease of the same lands, which is void in law, this is no surrender in law of the good lease. Hutt. 105. Baker v. Willoughby; Mills v. Whitewood, ibid. S. P.

A man, in consideration of a marriage to be had with M. R. made an estate to her for life of certain lands, in full satisfaction of her dower; afterwards they married, and the husband died, and the widow brought a writ of dower against the heir, who pleaded in bar the acceptance of the estate for life: adjudged no good plea; for such acceptance did not bar her of her dower at the Common Law, because she had no title of dower when the acceptance was made; and besides, no collateral acceptance can bar any right of inheritance or freehold. See 4 Rex. 1. Vernon's case, and this Dict. title Dower.

A man made a lease of a manor for thirty years, excepting the wood, &c. and afterwards made a lease of the woods to the same lessee for sixty years, and a third lease to him of the manor for thirty years, without any exception; resolved, that by the acceptance of this future lease, the lease for sixty years was surrendered; because, by such acceptance, the lessee had affirmed, that the lessor had authority to make a new lease. 5 Rep. 11. Ive's case.

In a special verdict in trespass, the case was, a lease was made to husband and wife for their lives; and afterwards they accepted a new lease for themselves and their son: habendum to all three of them, a die datûs indenturæ for the term of their lives, with a letter of attorney to make livery; adjudged, that the acceptance of a second lease, to commence a die datûs, was a surrender of the first, and this by the express agreement in writing of the lessees themselves; for otherwise the lessor had no power to make a new lease. Moor, 686.

ESTOPPEL, from the Fr. Estouper, i. e. Oppilare, obstipare.] An impediment or bar to a right of action arising from a man's own act: or where he is forbidden by law to speak against his own deed, for by his act or acceptance he may be estopped to allege or speak the truth. F. N. B. 142. Co. Lit. 332. If a person is bound in an obligation by the name of A. B. and is afterwards sued by that name on the obligation; now he shall not be received to say in abatement, that he is misnamed, but shall answer according to the obligation, though it be wrong; and forasmuch as he is the same person that was bound, he is estopped, and forbidden in law to say contrary to his own deed; otherwise he might take advantage of his own wrong, which the law will not suffer. Termes de ley. If a man enters into a bond, with condition to give to another all the goods which are devised to him by the father; in this case the obligor is estopped to plead that the father made no will; but he may plead that he had not any goods devised to him by his father. 1 Nels. Abr. 751.

So on bond conditioned to perform the covenants in a certain indenture mentioned, the defendant is estopped from pleading that no such indenture was executed. 2 Bos. & Pull. 299. But see 3 Term Rep. K. B. 438, that the defendant may plead such plea as tends to shew there was no consideration for the bond. See also 3 Term Rep. 439. 441.

In a deed, all the parties are estopped to say any thing against what is contained in it: it stops a lessee to say that the lessor had nothing in the land, &c. And parties and privies are bound by estoppel. Lit. 58. Co. Lit. 352. 4 Rep. 53.

None but privies and parties shall regularly have advantage by estoppels: But if a man makes a lease of part a term, whereby he is estopped; and after assign away the term, the assignee will be estopped also. 30 H. 6. 2. 4 Rep. 56. In estoppels, both parties must be estopped; and therefore, where an infant or feme covert makes a lease, they are not estopped to say, that it is not their deed, because they are not bound by it; and as to them it is void. Cro. Eliz. 36. See title Deed. And though estoppels conclude parties to deeds to say the truth, yet jurors are not concluded, who are sworn ad veritatem de et super præmissis dicendam: For they may find any thing that is out of the record; and are not estopped to find truth in a special verdict. 4 Rep. 53. Lut. 705.

An estoppel shall bind only the heir, who claims the right of him to whom the estoppel was. 8 Rep. 53. Acceptance of rent from a disseisor by the disseisee, may be an estoppel: And a widow accepting less than her thirds for dower, is an estoppel, &c. 2 Danv. Abr. 130. 671.

Our books mention three kinds of estoppel, viz. By matter of record, by matter in writing, and by matter in pais. Co. Lit. 352. If a feoffment be made to two, and their heirs, and the feoffor afterwards levies a fine to them, and the heirs of one of them; this will be an estoppel to the other to demand fee-simple according to the deed; for the fine shall enure as a release. 6 Rep. 7. 44. Tenant in tail suffers a recovery, that his issue may avoid; he himself shall be estopped and concluded by it, and may not demand the land against his own recovery. 3 Rep. 3.

The taking of a lease by indenture of a man's own land, whereof he is seised in fee, is an estoppel to claim the fee during the term. Moor Ca. 323. And. 121. A lease is made to one man for eighty years, and then to another by deed indented for the same term, this second lease may be good by way of estoppel: And if the first determine by surrender, forfeiture, &c. the second lessee shall have the land. Co. Rep. 155. If a lessor, at the time of making the lease, hath nothing in the land, but after he gets it by purchase or descent, it is a good lease by estoppel. Dyer, 256. Plowd. 344. Co. Lit. 47. A recital in a deed shall not estop a person, unless it be of a particular fact, or where it is material; when it may be an estoppel. Cro. Eliz. 362.

The lord, by deed indented, reciting that his tenant holds of him by such services, whereas he doth not, confirms to the tenant, saving the services; it is no estoppel to the tenant. 35 H. 6. 33. Plowd. 130. If one make a deed by duress of imprisonment, and when he is at large makes a defeasance to it: he is estopped to say it was per duress. Bro. Defeas. 17. Where the condition of a bond is in the particularity, as to infeoff J. S. of the manor of D. or to pay such a sum of money as he stands bound to pay to W. S. or to stand to the sentence of J. S. in a matter of tithes in question between them; here the party is estopped to deny any of these things, which in the condition he did grant; But if a condition be in the generality, to enfeoff one of all his lands in D. or to be nonsuit in all actions, &c. it is no estoppel. Dyer. 196. 18 Ed. 4. 5*b*.

If a man in pleading confess the thing he is charged with he cannot afterwards deny it: Though a plaintiff shall not be estopped to allege any thing against that which before he hath said in his writ or declaration; and one may not be estopped by the record upon which he was nonsuited. 21 H. 7. 24. 2 Leon. 3. 17.

An estoppel ought to be certain and affirmative, and a matter alleged that is not traversable, shall not estop; one may not be estopped by acceptance before his title accrued; an estoppel must be insisted and relied on; and where there is estoppel against estoppel, it puts the matter at large. Co. Lit. 352. Hob. 207. Estoppels are to be pleaded relying on the estoppel; without demanding judgment si actio, &c. 4 Rep. 53. See title Pleading.

If a verdict be found on any fact or title, distinctly put in issue in an action of trespass, such verdict may be pleaded by way of estoppel in another action between the same parties or their privies, in respect of the same fact or title 3 East's Rep. 346.

If the heir apparent of a copyholder in fee surrender in the life time of his ancestor, and survive him, the heir of such surrenderor is not estopped by that surrender of his ancestor from claiming against the surrenderee. Goodtitle v. Morse, 3 Term Rep. K. B. 365.

Devisees of contingent remainders in a copyhold not being in the seisin cannot make a surrender of their interest, nor will such surrender operate by estoppel against the parties or their heirs. Doe, d. Blacksell, v. Tomkins, 11 East's Rep. 185.

ESTOVERS. See title Common of Estovers. This word hath been taken for any kind of sustenance; as Bracton uses it, for that sustenance or allowance, which a man committed for felony is to have out of his lands or goods for himself and his family during his imprisonment. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 18. And the stat. 6 Ed. 1. cap. 3. applies it to an allowance in meat, clothes, &c. In which sense it has been used for a wife's alimony.

ESTOVERIIS HABENDIS, Writ de. A writ at Common Law, for a woman divorced from her husband, a mensâ & thoro, to recover her alimony, sometimes called her estovers. 1 Lev. 6. See title Baron and Feme.

ESTRAY, Extrahura, from the old Fr. Estrayeur.] Is any valuable animal that is not wild, found within a lordship, and whose owner is not known. In which case, if it be tried and proclaimed according to law, in the church, and two nearest market-towns, on two market days, and is not claimed by the owner within a year and a day, it belongs to the king; and now, most commonly, by grant of the crown, to the lord of the liberty. Brit. cap. 17.

It has been suggested that the true reason of the law thus giving the estray to the king or his grantee, and not to the finder, is, that the owner has thus the best chance of having his property restored to him; and it lessens the temptation to commit thefts, as it prevents a man from pretending that he had found as an estray, what he had actually stolen: or according to the vulgar phrase, that he had found which never was lost.

Any beasts may be estrays, that are by nature tame or reclaimable, and in which there is a valuable property, as sheep, oxen, swine, and horses.—But animals upon which the law sets no value, as a dog or cat: and animals feræ naturæ, as a bear or wolf, cannot be considered as estrays. 1 Comm. 298. Swans may be estrays, but no other fowl, and are to be proclaimed, &c. 1 Rol. Abr. 878. If the beast stray to another lordship within the year, after it hath been an estray, the first lord cannot re-take it, for until the year and day be past, and proclamation made as aforesaid, he hath no property; and therefore the possession of the second lord is good against him. Cro. Eliz. 716. Finch. L. 177. If the cattle were never proclaimed, the owner may take them at any time: And where a beast is proclaimed as the law directs, if the owner claim it in a year and a day, he shall have it again, but must pay the lord for keeping. 1 Rol. Abr. 879. Finch. 177. But if any person finds and takes care of another's property, not being intitled to it as an estray, the owner may recover it or its value, without paying the expences of keeping. 2 Blackst. Rep. 1117.

An owner may seize an estray, without telling the marks, or proving the property, (which may be done at the trial, if contested,) and tendering amends generally is good in this case, without shewing the particular sum; because the owner of the estray is no wrong-doer, and knows not how long it has been in the possession of the lord, &c. which makes it different from trespass, where a certain sum must be tendered. 2 Salk. 686. In case of an estray the lord ought to make a demand of what the amends should be for the keeping; and then if the party thinks the demand unreasonable, he must tender sufficient amends; but if what he tenders is not enough, the lord shall take issue, and it is to be settled by the jury. Noy, 144. A beast estray is not to be used in any manner, except in case of necessity; as to milk a cow or the like, but not to ride an horse. Cro. Jac. 148. 1 Rol. 673. Estrays of the Forest are mentioned in the statute of 27 H. 8. cap. 7. The King's cattle cannot be estrays or forfeited, &c.

ESTREAT, Extractum.] The true extract, copy, or note, of some original writing or record, and especially of fines, amercements, &c. entered on the rolls of a court, to be levied by the bailiff or other officer. F. N. B. 57. 76. See stats. Westm. 1 & 3 Ed. 1. c. 45. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 8. 27 Ed. 1. st. 1. c. 2. 3 H. 7. c. 1. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 22. ESTRECIATUS, Streightened, applied to roads. R. Hoveden, p. 783.

ESTREPE, Fr. Estropier.] To make spoil in lands to the damage of another, as of the reversioner, &c.

ESTREPEMENT, Estrepamentum from the Fr. Estropier, mutilare, or from the Lat. Extirpare.] Any spoil made by tenant for life, upon any lands or woods, to the prejudice of him in reversion; it also signifies the making land barren by continual ploughing. Stat. 6 Ed. 1. cap. 13. It seems by the derivation that estrepement is the unreasonable drawing away the heart of the ground, by ploughing and sowing it continually, without manuring or other good husbandry, whereby it is impaired: and yet estropier signifying mutilare, may no less be applied to the cutting down trees, or lopping them further than the law allows. In ancient records, we often find vastum & estrepamentum facere; to make strip and waste.

This word is used for a writ, which lies in two cases; the one, by the stat. of Glouc. 6 E. 1. c. 13. when a person having an action depending, as a formedon, writ of right, &c. sues to prohibit the tenant from making waste during the suit: the other is for the demandant, who is adjudged to recover seisin of the land in question, after judgment and before execution sued by the writ of habere facias possessionem, to prevent waste being made till he gets into possession. Reg. Orig. 76. Reg. Judic. 33. F. N. B. 60, 61. 3 Inst. 328.

In suing out these two writs, this difference was formerly observed; that in actions merely possessory, where no damages are recovered, a writ of estrepement might be had at any time pendente lite, nay, even at the time of suing out the original writ or first process: but in an action where damages were recovered, the demandant could only have a writ of estrepement, if he was apprehensive of waste, after verdict had; for with regard to waste done before the verdict was given, it was presumed the jury would consider that in assessing the damages. F. N. B. 60, 61. But now it seems to be held by an equitable construction of the stat. of Glouc. and in advancement of the remedy, that a writ of estrepement to prevent waste, may be had in every stage, as well of such actions wherein damages are recovered, as of those wherein only possession is had of the lands; for perhaps the tenant may not be able to satisfy the demandant his full damages. Ib. 61. And therefore now in an action of waste itself to recover the place wasted, and also damages, a writ of estrepement will lie as well before as after judgment. For the plaintiff cannot recover damages for more waste than is contained in his original complaint; neither is he at liberty to assign or give in evidence any waste made after suing out the writ: it is therefore reasonable that he should have this writ of preventive justice, since he is in his present suit debarred of any further remedy. 5 Rep. 115.

If a writ of estrepement forbidding waste, be directed and delivered to the tenant himself, as it may be, and he afterwards proceeds to commit waste, an action may be carried on upon the foundation of this writ, wherein the only plea of the tenant can be, non fecit vastum contra prohibitionem; and if upon verdict it be found that he did, the plaintiff may recover costs and damages; or the party may proceed to punish the defendant for the contempt. Moor, 100.

As a writ of estrepement may be directed either to the tenant and his servants, or to the sheriff; if it be directed to the tenant and his servant, and they are duly served with it, if they afterwards commit waste, they may be committed to prison for this contempt of the writ. But it is said not to be so when directed to the sheriff, because he may raise the posse comitatus to resist them who make waste. Hob. 85. Though it hath been adjudged, that the sheriff may likewise imprison offenders if he be put to it; and that he may make a warrant to others to do it. 5 Rep. 115. 2 Inst. 329.

The writ of estrepement lies properly where the plaintiff in a real action shall not recover damages by his action; and as it were supplies damages; for damages and costs may be recovered for waste after the writ of estrepement is brought. See Moor, 100. 2 Inst. 328. If tenants commit waste in houses assigned a feme for dower, on her bringing action of dower, writ of estrepement lies. 5 Rep. 115. See Cro. Eliz. 114. Moor, 622. But pending a writ of partition between coparceners, if the tenant commit waste, this writ will not be granted; because there is equal interest between the parties, and the writ will not lie, but where the interest of the tenant is to be disproved. Goldsh. 50. 2 Nels. Abr. 754.

In the Chancery, on filing of a bill, and before answer, the court will grant an injunction to stay waste, &c. 1 Lil. 547. See titles Chancery, Waste.

ETATE PROBANDA. See Ætate.

ETHELING or ÆTHELING, Sax.] Signifies noble; and among the English Saxons, it was the title of the prince, or the king's eldest son. Camden. See Adeling.

EVASION, Evasio.] A subtle endeavouring to set aside truth, or to escape the punishment of the law; which will not be endured. If a person says to another that he will not strike him but will give him a pot of ale to strike first, and accordingly he strikes, the returning of it is punishable; and if the person first striking be killed, it is murder; for no man shall evade the justice of the law by such a pretence to cover his malice. 1 H. P. C. 81. No one may plead ignorance of the law to evade it, &c.

EVENINGS. The delivery at even or night of a certain portion of grass or corn, &c. to a customary tenant, who performs the service of cutting, mowing, or reaping for his lord, given him as a gratuity or encouragement. Kennet's Gloss.

EVESDROPPERS. See Eaves-droppers.

EVICTION, from evinco, to overcome.] A recovery of land, &c. by form of law. If land is evicted, before the time of payment of rent, on a lease, no rent shall be paid by the lessee. 10 Rep. 128. Where lands taken on extent are evicted or recovered by better title, the plaintiff shall have a new execution. 4 Rep. 66. If a widow is evicted of her dower or thirds, she shall be endowed in the other lands of the heir. 2 Danv. Abr. 670. And if on an exchange of lands, either party is evicted of the lands given in exchange, he may enter on his own lands. 4 Rep. 121.

EVIDENCE.

EVIDENTIA.] Proof by testimony of witnesses, on oath; or by writings or records.

It is called Evidence, because thereby the point in issue in a cause to be tried, is to be made evident to the jury; for probationes debent esse evidentes & perspicuæ. Co. Lit. 283.

EVIDENCE.

The evidence to a jury ought to be upon the oath of witnesses; or upon matters of record, or by deeds proved, or other like authenticated matter. 1 Lil. Abr. 547. And evidence containeth testimony of witnesses, and all other proofs to be given and produced to a jury for the finding of any issue joined between parties. Co. Lit. 283.

The system of evidence, as now established in our courts of Common Law, is very full, comprehensive, and refined: a summary of the law on the subject is here presented.

The nature of the present work will not allow room for the numberless niceties and distinctions of what is, or is not, legal evidence to a jury. A few of the general heads and leading maxims relative to this point, as well in civil as criminal cases, together with some observations on the manner of giving Evidence, are first selected.

Evidence, as has been already remarked, signifies that which demonstrates, makes evident or clear, or ascertains the truth of the very fact or point in issue, either on the one side or on the other; and no evidence ought to be admitted to any other point. Therefore upon an action of debt, when the defendant denies his bond by the plea of non est factum, and the issue is, whether it be the defendant's deed or no, he cannot give a release of this bond in Evidence, for that does not destroy the bond, and therefore does not prove the issue which he has chosen to rely upon, viz. that the bond has no existence.

Again; Evidence in the trial by jury is of two kinds, either that which is given in proof, or that which the jury may receive by their own private knowledge.—As to the latter, see title Jury.—The former, or Proofs, (to which in common speech the name of Evidence is usually confined,) are either written, or parol, that is by word of mouth. Written proofs, or Evidence, are, 1. Records; and, 2. Ancient deeds of 30 years standing, which prove themselves; but 3. Modern deeds; and, 4. Other writings must be attested and verified by parol evidence of witnesses. And the one general rule that runs through all the doctrine of trials is this, that the best evidence the nature of the case will admit of shall always be required, if possible to be had; but if not possible, then the best evidence that can be had shall be allowed. For if it be found there is any better evidence existing than is produced, the very not producing it is a presumption, that it would have detected some falsehood that at present is concealed. Thus, in order to prove a lease for years, nothing else shall be admitted, but the very deed of lease itself, if in being; but if that positively be proved to be burnt or destroyed, (not relying on any loose negative, as that it cannot be found, or the like,) then an attested copy may be produced; or parol evidence given of its contents. So, no evidence of a discourse with another will be admitted, but the man himself must be produced; yet in some cases, (as in proof of any general customs, or matters of common tradition or repute,) the courts admit of hearsay evidence, or an account of what persons deceased have declared in their lifetime; but such evidence will not be received of any particular facts. So too, books of accounts, or shop-books, are not allowed of themselves to be given in evidence for the owner, but a servant who made the entry may have recourse to them to refresh his memory: and, if such servant (who was accustomed to make those entries) be dead, and his hand be proved, the book may be read in evidence. Bull. N. P. 282, 283. Salk. 285. But as this kind of evidence, even thus regulated, would be much too hard upon the buyer at any long distance of time, the stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 12. (the penners of which seem to have imagined that the books of themselves were evidence at Common Law,) confines this species of proof to such transactions as have happened within one year before the action brought; unless between merchant and merchant in the usual intercourse of trade. For accounts of so recent a date, if erroneous, may more easily be unravelled and adjusted.

With regard to parol Evidence, or Witnesses; there is a process to bring them in by writ of subpœna ad testificandum; which commands them, laying aside all pretences and excuses, to appear at the trial, on pain of one hundred pounds to be forfeited to the king; to which the stat. 5 Eliz. c. 9. has added a penalty of 10*l.* to the party aggrieved, and damages equivalent to the loss sustained by want of his evidence. But no witness, unless his reasonable expences be tendered him, is bound to appear at all; nor if he appears, is he bound to give evidence till such charges are actually paid him: except he resides within the bills of mortality, and is summoned to give evidence within the same. This compulsory process, to bring in unwilling witnesses, and the additional terrors of an attachment in case of disobedience, are of excellent use in the thorough investigation of truth.

All witnesses, of whatever religion or country, that have the use of their reason, are to be received and examined, except such as are infamous, or such as are interested in the event of the cause. All others are competent witnesses; though the jury, from other circumstances, will judge of their credibility. Infamous persons are such as may be challenged as jurors, propter delictum: and therefore shall never be admitted to give evidence to inform that jury, with whom they were too scandalous to associate. Interested witnesses may be examined upon a voir dire, if suspected to be secretly concerned in the event; or their interest may be proved in court. Which last is the only method of supporting an objection to the former class; for no man is to be examined to prove his own infamy. And no counsel, attorney, or other person, intrusted with the secrets of the cause by the party himself, shall be compelled, or perhaps allowed, to give evidence of such conversation or matters of privacy, as came to his knowledge by virtue of such trust and confidence: but he may be examined as to mere matters of fact,—as the execution of a deed or the like, which might have come to his knowledge without being intrusted in the cause. Bull. N. P. 284. 1 Vent. 97.

One witness (if credible) is sufficient evidence to a jury of any single fact; though, undoubtedly, the concurrence of two or more corroborates the proof. Yet our law considers that there are many transactions to which only one person is privy; and therefore does not always demand the testimony of two, as the civil law requires.

Positive proof is always required, where from the nature of the case it appears it might possibly have been had. But, next to positive proof, circumstantial evidence, or the doctrine of presumptions, must take place: for when the fact itself cannot be demonstratively evinced, that which comes nearest to the proof of the fact is the proof of such circumstances which either necessarily or usually attend such facts; and these are called presumptions, which are only to be relied upon till the contrary be actually proved. Stabitur præsumptione donec probetur in contrarium. Co. Lit. 373. Violent presumption is many times equal to full proof; for there those circumstances appear, which necessarily attend the fact. Ibid. 6. As if a landlord sues for rent due at Michaelmas 1754, and the tenant cannot prove the payment, but produces an acquittance for rent due at a subsequent time, in full of all demands, this is a violent presumption of his having paid the former rent, and is equivalent to full proof; for though the actual payment is not proved, yet the acquittance in full of all demands is proved, which could not be without such payment; and it therefore induces so forcible a presumption, that no proof shall be admitted to the contrary. Gilb. Evid. 161. Probable presumption arising from such circumstances as usually attend the fact, hath also its due weight; as if, in a suit for rent due in 1754, the tenant proves the payment of the rent due in 1755, this will prevail to exonerate the tenant; (Co. Lit. 373.) unless it be clearly shewn that the rent of 1754, was retained for some special reason, or that there was some fraud or mistake: for otherwise it will be presumed to have been paid before that in 1755, as it is most usualy to receive first the rents of longest standing. Light, or rash presumptions, have no weight or validity at all.

The oath administered to the witness, is not only that what he deposes shall be true, but that he shall also depose the whole truth: so that he is not to conceal any part of what he knows, whether interrogated particularly to that point or not. And all this evidence is to be given in open court, in the presence of the parties, their attorney, the counsel, and all by-standers; and before the judge and jury: each party having liberty to except to its competency, which exceptions are publicly stated, and by the judge are openly and publicly allowed or disallowed, in the face of the country. And if either in his directions or decisions he mis-states the law by ignorance, inadvertence, or design, the counsel on either side may require him publicly to seal a bill of Exceptions; stating the point wherein he is supposed to err: See title Bill of Exceptions.—Or if the legal effect of a record or other evidence is doubted, this may be tried on a Demurrer to Evidence: see that title.—3 Comm. 367—372.

The true theory of Evidence is admirably explained in Bull. Ni. Pri. part VI. from Gilbert's Law of Evidence; and it concludes with taking a view of all the general Rules of Evidence together, from whence the following abstract is given.

1. The first general rule is that the best evidence must be given that the nature of the thing is capable of. The true meaning of this rule is that no such evidence shall be brought as ex naturâ rei supposes still a greater evidence behind, in the party's possession or power; for such evidence is altogether insufficient and proves nothing. But if it is proved that an original deed, will, &c. is in the hands, of the adverse party, or is destroyed without default of the party who ought to produce it, a copy will be admitted; because then such copy is the best evidence.

2. No person interested in the question can be a witness. There is no rule in more general use, and none that is so little understood. See 1 Term Rep. 302. And there are some exceptions to it, e. g. 1. A party interested will be admitted in a criminal prosecution in most instances; 2. he may be admitted for the sake of trade and the common usage of business; as porters, apprentices, &c. to prove delivery of goods, &c. though it tend to clear themselves of neglect. See 3 Term Rep. 29. Str. 647. 1083. 3. Where no other evidence is reasonably to be expected. 4. Where he acquires the interest by his own act, after the party who calls him as a witness has a right to his evidence. 5. Where the possibility of interest is very remote. See 1 Term Rep. 163, 164. and more at length, this title, Div. II. 1.

By stat. 46 Geo. 3. c. 37. it is expressly declared, that a witness cannot by law refuse to answer a question relevant to the matter in issue, (the answering of which has no tendency to accuse himself, or to expose him to penalty or forfeiture of any nature whatsoever,) by reason only, or on the sole ground that the answering of such question may establish or tend to establish that he owes a debt, or is otherwise subject to a civil suit, either at the instance of his Majesty, or of any other person or persons.

3. The third general rule is, that hearsay is no evidence. —For no evidence is to be admitted but what is upon oath, and if the first speech were without oath, another oath that there was such a speech makes it no more. Besides, if the speaker be living, it is not the best evidence. But hearsay has been admitted in corroboration of a witness's testimony.

4. In all cases where a general character or behaviour is put in issue, evidence of particular facts may be admitted; but not where it comes in collaterally.

5. Ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione suppletur, nam quod ex facto oritur ambiguum, verificatione facti tollitur.

6. In every issue the affirmative is to be proved. A negative cannot regularly be proved, and therefore it is sufficient to deny what is affirmed until it be proved: but when the affirmative is proved, the other party may contest it with opposite proofs, of some matter or propesition totally inconsistent with what is affirmed.

In general, where the issue is on the life or death of a person once existing, the proof lies on the party asserting the death. 2 East's Rep. 312.—But see stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 6. post, II. 3.

Where the law presumes the affirmative of any fact, the negative of such fact must be proved by the party averring it in pleading. 3 East's Rep. 192.

7. No evidence need be given of what is agreed by the pleadings. For the jury are only sworn to try the matter in issue between the parties, so that nothing else is properly before them.

8. Whensoever a man cannot have the advantage of the special matter by pleading, he may give it in evidence on the general issue. See title Pleading.

9. If the substance of the issue be proved, it is sufficient. As to this, see also titles Pleading; Modo et Forma.

The doctrine of Evidence IN CRIMINAL CASES is, in most respects, the same as that upon civil actions. There are however a few leading points, wherein by several statutes and resolutions a difference is made between civil and criminal evidence.

1. In all cases of High Treason, Petit Treason, and Misprision of Treason, by stats. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. and 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 11. two lawful witnesses are required to convict a prisoner; unless he shall willingly and without violence confess the same. By stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 10. a further exception is made as to treasons in counterfeiting the King's seals or signatures, and treasons concerning coin current within this realm; and more particularly by c. 11. the offences of importing counterfeit foreign money current in this kingdom, and impairing, counterfeiting, or forging any current coin. The stats. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 25. 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 28. in their subsequent extensions of this species of treason do also provide, that the offenders may be indicted, arraigned, tried, convicted, and attainted, by the like evidence, and in such manner and form, as may be had and used against offenders for counterfeiting the King's money. But by stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3. in prosecutions for these treasons to which that act extends, the same rule (of requiring two witnesses) is again enforced; with this addition, that the confession of the prisoner, which shall countervail the necessity of such proof, must be in open court. In the construction of which act it hath been holden, that a confession of the prisoner, taken out of court, before a magistrate or person having competent authority to take it, and proved by two witnesses, is sufficient to convict him of treason. Foster, 240. 244. But hasty unguarded confessions, made to persons having no such authority, ought not to be admitted as evidence under this statute. And indeed, even in cases of felony at the Common Law, they are the weakest and most suspicious of all testimony; ever liable to be obtained by artifice, false hopes, promises of favour, or menaces; seldom remembered accurately, or reported with due precision; and incapable in their nature of being disproved by other negative evidence. By the same stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3. it is declared that both witnesses must be to the same overt act of treason; or one to one overt act, and the other to another overt act of the same species of treason, and not of distinct heads or kinds: and no evidence shall be admitted to prove any overt act not expressly laid in the indictment. See 2 State Trials, 144. Foster, 235. And therefore in Sir John Fenwick's case, in King William's time, where there was but one witness, an act of parliament, (stat. 8 W. 3. c. 4.) was made on purpose to attaint him of treason, and he was executed. 5 State Trials, 40. But, in almost every other accusation, one positive witness is sufficient; except in cases of indictments for perjury, where one witness is not sufficient, because then there is only one oath against another. 10 Mod. 194.

2. From the reversal of colonel Sydney's attainder by act of parliament in 1689, (8 State Trials, 472.) it may be collected that the mere similitude of hand-writing in two papers shewn to a jury, without other concurrent testimony, is no evidence that both were written by the same person; (2 Hawk. P. C. 431.) yet undoubtedly the testimony of witnesses, well acquainted with the party's hand, that they believe the paper in question to have been written by him, is evidence to be left to a jury. Lord Preston's case, A. D. 1690. 1694. 4 State Trials, 463. Francia's case, A. D. 1716. 6 State Trials, 69. Layer's case, A. D. 1722. Ibid. 279. Henzey's case, A. D. 1758. 4 Burr. 644.—See post, II. 3.

All presumptive evidence of felony should be admitted cautiously: for the law holds that it is better that ten guilty persons escape, than that one innocent suffer. And Sir Matthew Hale, in particular, lays down two rules most prudent and necessary to be observed. 1. Never to convict a man for stealing the goods of a person unknown, merely because he will give no account how he came by them, unless an actual felony be proved of such goods: and, 2. Never to convict any person of murder or manslaughter, till at least the body be found dead: on account of two instances he mentions, where persons were executed for the murder of others, who were then alive, but missing. 2 Hal. P. C. 200.

Lastly, it was an ancient and commonly received practice, (1 State Trials, passim) that as counsel was not allowed to any prisoner accused of a capital crime, so neither should he be suffered to exculpate himself by the testimony of any witnesses. And therefore it deserves to be remembered to the honour of Mary I. that she first desired such evidence to be received in a court of justice. Afterwards in one particular instance (when embezzling the queen's military stores was made felony by stat. 31 Eliz. c. 4.) it was provided that any person, impeached for such felony, "should be received and admitted to make any lawful proof that he could, by lawful witness or otherwise, for his discharge and defence;" and in general the courts grew so heartily ashamed of a doctrine so unreasonable and oppressive, that a practice was gradually introduced of examining witnesses for the prisoner, but not upon oath. 2 Bulst. 147. Cro. Car. 292. The consequence of this still was, that the jury gave less credit to the prisoner's evidence, than to that produced by the Crown. Sir Edward Coke protests very strongly against this tyrannical practice: declaring that he never read in any act of parliament, book, case, or record, that in criminal cases the party accused shall not have witnesses sworn for him; and therefore there is not so much as scintilla juris against it. 3 Inst. 79. See also 2 Hal. P. C. 283. and his Summary, 264. And the House of Commons were so sensible of this absurdity, that in the bill for abolishing hostilities between England and Scotland, (Stat. 4 Jac. 1. c. 1.) when felonies committed by Englishmen in Scotland were ordered to be tried in one of the three Northern counties, they insisted on a clause, and carried it against the efforts of both the Crown and the House of Lords, against the practice in the courts of England, and the express law of Scotland, "that in all such trials for the better discovery of the truth, and the better information of the consciences of the jury and justices, there shall be allowed to the party arraigned the benefit of such credible witnesses to be examined upon oath, as can be produced for his clearing and justification. At length, by stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3. the same measure of justice was established throughout all the realm, in cases of treason within the act: and it was afterwards declared by stat. 1 Ann. st. 2. c. 9. that in all cases of treason and felony, all witnesses for the prisoner should be examined upon oath, in like manner as the witnesses against him. 4 Comm. 356—360.

Having given the foregoing general view, more minute information on this subject may be thus classed;

I. Of written Evidence: Wherein of matters of Record, as also of Writings under Seal, and other Writings and Depositions in Chancery or other Courts.

II. Unwritten Evidence: Wherein—
1. Who may be Witnesses.
2. Of the Number of Witnesses, and of compelling them to appear; as also of the Manner of their giving Evidence.
3. Of parol, presumptive, and hear-say Evidence.

I. Evidence by records and writings, is where acts of parliaments, statutes, judgments, fines and recoveries, proceedings of courts, and deeds, &c. are admitted as evidence. A general act of parliament may be given in evidence, and need not be pleaded; and of these the printed statute-book is good evidence: but in the case of a private act, a copy of it is to be examined by the records of parliament, and is to be pleaded. Trials per pais, 177. 232.

Local or personal acts of parliament printed by the King's printer may be produced in evidence, if they have a clause inserted in them for that purpose. See title Statutes.

The Gazette has been held evidence of all acts of state. 5 Term Rep. 436.—So the articles of war, printed by the King's printer have been held evidence of such articles. 5 T. R. 442. 446.

Journals and other proceedings in the House of Commons have been held to be no evidence. State Trials, vol. 3. 470. but see page 800 of the same volume.—Journals of the House of Lords have been held evidence to prove an address of the Lords to the King, and the King's answer. 5 Term. Rep. K. B. 455.—A history of England, or printed trial, may not be read as evidence. 1 Lill. 557. Camden's Britannia was not allowed as evidence: but it has been held that an history may be evidence of the general history of the realm, though not of a particular custom, &c. Skinner's Rep. 623.

An exemplification of the inrolment of letters patent under the great seal, may be pleaded in evidence. 3 Inst. 173. This exemplification is a copy or transcript of letters patent made from the inrolment thereof, and sealed with the great seal. But neither an exemplification nor constat was pleadable at Common Law, because there was only the tenor of an inrolment; and the tenor of a record is not pleadable, but they are now pleadable by stats. 3 & 4 E. 6. c. 4. 13 Eliz. c. 6.

A patent may be exemplified under the great seal in Chancery; and also any record or judgment in any of the courts at Westminster, under the proper seal of each court: all which exemplifications may be given in evidence to a jury. 1 Lill. 583. Shep. 134. A rule made, or writ filed, in any court at Westminster, may be exemplified in the court where made or filed. But nothing but matter of record ought to be exemplified. 3 Inst. 173.

Records and inrolments prove themselves; and a copy of a record or inrolments sworn to, may be given in evidence. Co. Lit. 117. 262. A transcript of a record in another court may be given in evidence to a jury. 1 Lil. Abr. 551. There is a difference between pleading a record, and giving the record in evidence; if it be pleaded, it must be sub pede sigilli, or the judges cannot judge thereof: though where it is given in evidence, if it be not under the seal, the jury may find the same, if they have other good matter of inducement to prove it. Style's Rep. 22.

To prove a copy of a record it is sufficient to prove that the paper agrees with what the officer of the court read as the contents of the record: it is not necessary for the persons examining to exchange papers, and read them alternately. 2 W. P. Taunton, 52. but query?

A Fine or Recovery may be given in evidence, without vouching the roll of the recovery; for the part indented is the usual evidence that there is such a fine; but it is said the fine ought to be shewn with the proclamations under seal. 10 Rep. 92. 2 Rol. Abr. 574.

By stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 20. where any person has purchased or shall purchase for a valuable consideration, any estate, whereof a recovery was necessary to complete the title, such person, and all claiming under him, having been in possession from the time of such purchase, shall and may after the end of 20 years from the time of such purchase, produce in evidence the deed, making a tenant to the præcipe, and declaring the uses; and the deed so produced (the execution thereof being duly proved) shall be deemed sufficient evidence that such recovery was duly suffered, in case no record can be found of such recovery, or the same should appear not regularly entered. Provided the person making such deed had a sufficient estate, and power to make a tenant to the præcipe, and to suffer such common recovery.

A record of an inferior court hath been rejected in evidence, and the party put to prove what was done: And proceedings of county courts, courts baron, &c. may be tried by a jury; for it hath been adjudged that they cannot be proved by the rolls, but by witnesses. Lit. 75. But court rolls of a court baron, when shewn, are good evidence; and in many cases, copies of the court rolls are allowed as evidence. Trials per pais, 178. 228.

An ancient Customary of a Manor, delivered down with the court rolls from steward to steward, although not signed by any person, is good evidence to prove the course of descent within the manor. 1 Term Rep. K. B. 466.

An entry in the court-rolls of a manor, stating the mode of descent of lands in the manor, is admissible evidence of the mode of descent, although no instances of any person's having taken according to it be proved. 5 T. R. K. B. 26.

Parchment writings preserved among the muniments of a manor, purporting to be signed by several copyholders of the manor, stating that an unlimited right of common had been found inconvenient, and they had agreed to stock the common in a restricted manner, were admitted as evidence of reputation as to the general right of common. 13 East's Rep. 10.

A surrender of and admittance to a copyhold may be proved by the original entries on the court rolls without shewing a copy stamped as required by law. 16 East's Rep. 208.

Inrolment of a deed is proved on certifying it by an examined attested copy; though inrolment of a deed which needs no inrolment, or by which the estate does not pass, is only evidence to some purposes. 3 Lev. 387.

By stat. 10 An. c. 18. where any bargain and sale inrolled is pleaded with a profert, the party to answer such profert may produce a copy of the inrolment.

With respect to the production of Deeds in evidence, the general rule is, that the deed itself must be given in evidence, and must be proved by one witness at the least. But if the opposite party produce the deed on notice, it shall be read without any proof of the execution. Bull N. P. 254. 2 Term Rep. 41, 3 W. P. Taunton, 60.

But where an instrument was produced at the trial by one of the parties, in consequence of a notice from the other, which appeared to have been executed by the party producing it and others, and to be attested by a witness, the court held that the production of it in that manner did not dispense with the necessity of proving the instrument by the subscribing witness, though unknown before to the party calling for it. 8 East's Rep. 548.

An ancient deed proves itself, where possession has gone accordingly: but later deeds must be proved by witnesses. Co. Lit. 6.

An old deed proved to have been found among deeds and evidences of lands, may be given in evidence to a jury; though the executing of it cannot be proved and made out. 3 Salk. 153. A deed may be good evidence, though the seal is broken off; and where a deed is burnt, &c. the judges may allow it to be proved by witnesses, that there was such a deed, and this be given in evidence. 1 Lev. 25.

Every instrument, to the signing of which there is a witness, must be proved by that witness, if living and to be found: or by proving the hand-writing of the witness, in case he is dead, or domiciled in a foreign country, or cannot be found, so that there may be a presumption of his death. See 7 T. Rep. K. B. 266. 1 Bos. & Pul. 360. 2 East's Rep. 183. 250.

A deed, though sealed and delivered, if not stamped according to act of parliament, cannot be pleaded or given in evidence in any court. See stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. cap. 21. and several subsequent statutes; the latter of which extend to bills, notes, receipts, agreements, &c. And these stamps have been frequently the means of detecting forgeries; for the Stamp-Office put secret marks on the stamps, which from time to time are varied: so that where a deed is forged of a date antecedent, it may easily be discovered by stamps being upon it not in use at the time it bears date. A deed cannot be proved by a counterpart of it or copy, if the original is in being, and may be had; though it may be when the original cannot be procured. Co. Lit. 225. 10 Rep. 92. The counterpart of an ancient deed hath been allowed to be given in evidence. Mod. Cas. 225. But it hath been held that the counterpart of a deed, without other circumstances, is not sufficient evidence; unless in case of a fine, when a counterpart is good evidence of itself. 1 Salk. 287.

Where a deed was cancelled by fraud, that being proved, it was allowed to be evidence in an action under the deed. Hetl. 138. The recital of a deed is no evidence without shewing the deed, or proving that there was such a deed, and it is lost. Co. Lit. 352. Vaugh. 74. Recital of a lease, in a deed of release, is good evidence that there was such a lease against the releasor, and those claiming under him, but not against others, except there be proof that there was such a lease. 1 Salk. 286. A settlement set forth in a bill in Chancery, and admitted in the answer; and where it was proved that the deed was in the possession of such a one, &c. hath been adjudged a good evidence of the deed of settlement where not to be found. 5 Mod. 384.

The probate of a will, when it concerns personal estate only, may be given in evidence: but where title of lands is claimed under a will, the original will must be shewn, not the probate: though if the will be proved in the Chancery, copies of the proceedings there will be evidence. 2 Rol. Abr. 687. Trials per pais, 234. 1 Salk. 286. and Raym. 335. In certain cases the Ledger-book of the Ecclesiastical Court in which the will is entered, is sufficient evidence, being a roll or record of the court. Bull. N. P. 245, 6.

The original book of acts directing letters of administration to be granted, with the surrogate's fiat for the same, is evidence of the title of the party to whom the administration is directed to be granted of the intestate's effects, without producing the letters of administration themselves, notwithstanding subsequent letters of administration granted to another, the first not being recalled. 8 East's Rep. 187.

A bill in Chancery has been admitted as slight evidence against the complainant: but see 7 Term Rep. K. B. 2. that it is no evidence of the matters stated in it, not even of those on which the prayer for relief is founded; except perhaps in the instance of a family pedigree set forth in the bill. 7 T. R. 2. n. a. An answer in Chancery is evidence against the defendant himself, though not against others. 1 Vent. 66. Trials per pais, 167. But see 4 East's Rep. 53. and 2 Bos. & Pull. 548. When a party gives an answer in Chancery in evidence at a trial, though he insist to read only such a part of it, yet the other side may require to have the whole read. 5 Mod. 10. As in case of a writing permitted to be read to prove one part of an evidence, which may be read to prove any other part of the evidence given to the jury.

Depositions of witnesses in Chancery between the same parties may be given in evidence at law, if the witnesses are dead, and the bill and answer proved. Trials per pais, 167. 207. 234. Regularly depositions in Chancery, of a witness, may not be given in evidence if he be alive; unless he be in another kingdom, not subject to the dominion of our King. Ibid. 359. But depositions in Chancery, after answer between the same parties, may be read as evidence, though the witnesses are not dead, if they cannot be found on search. Shower, 3. 1 Salk. 278. Depositions in Chancery in perpetuam rei memoriam, are not to be given in evidence, so long as the parties are living. 1 Salk. 286. And it hath been adjudged that these depositions to perpetuate testimony, on a bill exhibited, shall not be admitted as evidence at a trial at law, except an answer be put in. Raym. 335. If depositions are taken out of the realm, he who makes them is supposed there still, and they shall be read as evidence; but if it appears he is in England, they cannot be read, but he must come in person. 1 Lill. 555. Things done beyond sea may be given in evidence to a jury; and the testimony of a public notary, of things done in a foreign country, will be good evidence. 6 Rep. 47.

Depositions cannot be given in evidence against any person who was not party to the suit; and the reason is, because he had not liberty to cross-examine the witnesses; and it is against natural justice that a man should be concluded in a cause to which he never was a party. Hardr. 22. 472. Bunb. 50. pl. 84.—91. pl. 148.—321. pl. 403. 9 Mod. 229. Carth. 181. Vern. 113. *Gilb. The answer of the obligor of a bond to a bill filed for a discovery, in which he admitted the bond to have been executed by him, is only secondary evidence, and cannot be received as evidence per se of the execution, without proving that due diligence had been used to discover who the subscribing witness was, who was alleged to be unknown. Call v. Dunning, 4 East's Rep. 53.

Depositions made in an ancient suit instituted against a former lord of a manor by a copyholder, were held to be admissible evidence for the lord of the manor in a subsequent suit. Freeman v. Phillips, Term Rep. K. B. Hil. 56 G. 3. 486.

Depositions were admitted in evidence, though framed on leading interrogatories of a nature not admissible in a trial. Williams v. Williams, Term Rep. K. B. Hil. 56 Geo. 3. 497.

Upon a plea of plene administravit, plaintiff in order to shew assets, gave in evidence a copy of an answer in Chancery by a person of the same name as defendant, and sustaining the character of executor to a person of the same name as his testator; held that on the face of such copy there was prima facie presumptive evidence of identity. Henwell v. Lyon, Term Rep. K. B. Mic. 59 G. 3. 182.

Depositions in the Ecclesiastical courts may not be given in evidence to a jury at a trial; but a sentence may in a cause of tithes, &c. And the sentence of the Spiritual court is conclusive evidence in causes within their jurisdiction. 1 Salk. 290. 2 Nels. Abr. 761.

Depositions before a coroner are admitted as evidence, the witnesses being dead. 1 Lev. 180. Likewise they have been admitted where a witness hath gone beyond sea. 2 Nels. Abr. 760. The confession of a prisoner before a magistrate, &c. may be given in evidence against him. See 2 Hawk. P. C. 46. and the notes there. The examination of an offender need not to be on oath, but must be subscribed by him, if he confesses the fact; and then be given in evidence upon oath by the justice of the peace who took the same. The examination of others must be on oath, and proved by the justice or his clerk, &c. as to their evidence, if they are dead, unable to travel, or kept away by the prisoner. H. P. C. 19. 162. Kel. 18. 55. Wood's Inst. 647.

The examination of an informer before a justice, taken on oath, and subscribed, may be given in evidence on a trial if he be dead, or not able to travel, &c. which is to be made out on oath. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46.

A parish certificate of more than thirty years date, acknowledging the pauper's grandfather and father to belong to the appellant parish, produced by a rated inhabitant of the appellant parish, is evidence. 2 Maul. & Selw. Rep. 337.

By stats. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 10. Justices of peace shall examine persons brought before them for felony and those who brought them, and certify such examination to the next gaol-delivery: but the examination of the prisoner shall be without oath, and the others upon oath; and these examinations shall be read against an offender upon an indictment, if the witnesses be dead. Bull. N. P. 242.

The examination of a pregnant woman taken before a justice of peace under stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 31. is admissible evidence on application to the quarter sessions to make an order of filiation on the putative father, if the woman die before such application is made; and if not contradicted, ought to be conclusive. 5 Term Rep. K. B. 373.

A verdict against one, under whom either the plaintiff or defendant claims, may be given in evidence against the party so claiming; but not if neither claim under it. Mich. 1656, B. R. In ejectment where the plaintiff hath title to several lands, and brings action of ejectment against several defendants, if he recovers against one, he shall not give that verdict in evidence against the rest. 3 Mod. 141.

In an action on a foreign judgment, it is not sufficient to prove the judge's hand-writing subscribed to it, without proving that the seal affixed thereto is the seal of the court. Henry v. Adey, 3 East's Rep. 221.

The judgment book is no evidence of the judgment entered therein, though the record has not been made up, and though the party interested in proving the judgment be no party to the action. 2 New Rep. 474.

In a court of Common Law, a decree in Chancery is no evidence. Letters may be produced as evidence against a man, in treason, &c. Although a witness swear to the hand and contents of a letter, if he never saw the party write, he shall not be allowed as evidence. Skin. 673. In general cases the witness should have gained his knowledge from seeing the party write; but under some circumstances, that is not necessary; as where the hand-writing to be proved is of a person residing abroad, one who has frequently received letters from him in a course of correspondence would be admitted to prove it, though he had never seen him write. So where the antiquity of the writing makes it impossible for any living witness to swear he ever saw the party write. On an indictment for writing a treasonable libel, proof of the hand-writing is sufficient, without proof of the actual writing. Bull. N. P. 236.

There is no difference between civil actions and criminal prosecutions as to the evidence of papers.—In neither case is the party bound to produce evidence against himself: but even in a criminal prosecution notice may be given to him to produce papers in his possession; and in case of his refusal or neglect, other evidence may be given of their contents. 2 Term Rep. K. B. 201. n.

A copy of an attorney's bill, the original of which has been delivered to the defendant may be admitted in evidence without proof of notice to produce the original. 2 Bos. & Pull. 237. And notice to the defendant's attorney or agent in such case is sufficient. Ibid.

Where a prisoner got possession of a forged note and swallowed it, parol evidence was permitted to be given of its contents, without any notice being given to produce it. Cited 14 East's Rep. 276.

Since no witnesses are present when goldsmiths' notes or promissory notes are given, such notes are allowed as evidence of the receipt of money, or other thing. 1 Salk. 283.

A receipt is not conclusive evidence against the party signing it, but he may shew that he did not receive the sum or thing in question. 2 Term Rep. K. B. 366.

A church-book, some writers say, is not to be admitted as evidence, though others say it may. Cro. Eliz. 411. It is said copies of public books of corporations, &c. shall be evidence. 1 Lev. 25. 1 Lil. 551. But as to books of corporations, where things are entered not of record, the originals are to be produced as evidence.

The mere production in court of a diploma of doctor of physic under the seal of one of the Universities, is not in itself evidence to shew that the party named therein is entitled to that degree. 8 Term Rep. K. B. 303.

A pedigree drawn by a herald at arms will not be admitted for evidence, without shewing the records or ancient books from whence taken; for the entries in the herald's office are no records, but only circumstantial evidence. See title Court of Chivalry as to visitation books. But a copy of an inscription on a grave-stone has been given in evidence in such a case. 2 Rol. Abr. 686, 687. An almanack, wherein the father had writ the day of the nativity of his son, was allowed in evidence to prove the non-age of the son. Raym. 84.

Every instrument, to the signing of which there is a witness, should be proved by that witness if living; or by proving the hand writing of the witness, in case he is domiciled in a foreign country, or in case he cannot be found, so that there may be a presumption of his death. 7 Term Rep. K. B. 266.

If the subscribing witness to a bond be interested therein, as well at the time of the attestation as at the trial, such witness cannot be examined to prove the execution, nor is proof of his hand writing sufficient for that purpose. Swire v. Bell, 5 Term Rep. 371.

The attesting witness to a bond wrote the attestation without seeing the obligor execute; and that person gave evidence that the obligor signed the bond, but did not seal and deliver it: the court of C. P. held, that the signing the bond which purported to be sealed with the obligor's seal, was evidence to be left to a jury of the sealing and delivery. 7 W. P. Taunton, 251. And the court held that the attesting witness to the deed denying, having seen the deed executed, other evidence of the execution was admissible. Ibid.

In an action on a promisory note, the subscribing witness being dead, proof of his hand-writing and that the defendant was present when the note was prepared, was held sufficient without proving the hand-writing of the defendant. But query if proof of the witness's hand-writing would alone have been sufficient? Nelson v. Whittall, Term Rep. K. B. Mich. 58 Geo. 3. pa. 19.

II. 1. The King cannot be a witness under his sign manual, &c. 2 Rol. Abr. 686. Though it has been allowed he may, in relation to a promise made in behalf of another. Hob. 213. A peer produced as an evidence ought to be sworn. 3 Keb. 631. It is no exception to an evidence that he is a judge, or a juror, to try the person; for a judge may give evidence, going off from the Bench. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. And a juror may be an evidence as to his particular knowledge; but then it must be on examination in open court, not before his brother jurors. 1 Lill. 552. Members of corporations shall be admitted or refused to give evidence in actions brought by corporations, as their interest is small or great; whereby it may be judged whether they will be partial or not. 2 Lev. 231. 241. But they will not generally be admitted; though inhabitants not free of the corporation may be good witnesses for the corporation, as their interest is not concerned; and members may be disfranchised on these occasions. Ibid. 236.

In actions against church-wardens and overseers of the poor for recovery of money mispent on the parish account the evidence of the parishioners not receiving alms shall be allowed. Stat, 3 & 4 W. & M. cap. 11. In informations or indictments for not repairing highways and bridges, the evidence of the inhabitants of the town, corporation, &c. where such highways lie, shall be admitted. Stat. 1 Ann. cap. 18.

By stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 29. In actions on penal statutes, inhabitants of any place are witnesses to prove an offence, though the penalty be given to the poor, or otherwise for the benefit of the said parish or place, provided the penalty does not exceed 20*l.*

Kinsmen though never so near, tenants, servants, masters, attornies for their clients, and all others that are not infamous and which want not understanding, or are not parties in interest, may give evidence in a cause, though the credit of servants is left to the jury. 2 Rol. Abr. 685. 1 Vent. 243. A counsellor, attorney, or solicitor, is not to be examined as an evidence against their clients, because they are obliged to keep their secrets; but they may be examined as to any thing of their own knowledge before retained, not as counsel or attorney, &c. 1 Vent. 97.

The bail cannot be an evidence for his principal. If the plaintiff makes one a defendant in the suit, on purpose to impeach his testimony, under a pretence of his being a party in interest, he may nevertheless be examined de bene esse; and if the plaintiff prove no cause of action against him, his evidence shall be allowed in the cause. 2 Lill. Abr. 701. But in civil suits, and indictments for trespasses, &c. the plaintiff or prosecutor usually goes through his evidence, and those defendants who are not affected, are sometimes, by direction of the judge, acquitted, and then give evidence for the other defendant or defendants, and sometimes they have been examined without the form of an acquittal. If a man makes himself a party in interest, after a plaintiff or defendant has an interest in his evidence, he may not by this deprive them of the benefit of his testimony. Skin. Rep. 586.

One that hath a legacy given him by will, is not a good witness to prove the will; but if he release his legacy he may be a good evidence. Skin. 704. It is the same of a deed; he that claims any benefit by it may not be an evidence to prove that deed, in regard of his interest: and a person any ways concerned in the same title of land in question, will not be admitted as evidence. Ibid. 705. But it has been held that an heir apparent may be a witness concerning a title of land; and yet a remainder-man, who hath a present interest, cannot. 1 Salk. 385. If a legatee is permitted to be sworn and examined, the counsel cannot afterwards except against his evidence. 1 Ld. Raym. 730.

To obviate all difficulties and inconveniences, it is enacted by stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 6. that any devise to a person being witness to any will or codicil, shall be void: and such person shall be admitted as a witness.—And that any creditor attesting a will or codicil, by which his debt is charged upon land, shall be admitted as a witness to the execution, notwithstanding such charge.—The credit of every such witness being left to the consideration of the court and jury.

Witnesses competent at law are competent to prove a nuncupative will, by stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. § 14. The son of a legatee is nowitness to a will in the spiritual court; nevertheless it is held, he may be a good evidence to prove a nuncupative will, within the intent of the statute of frauds. 1 L. Ray. 85. See title Will.

A grantee who is a bare trustee, it is said, is a good witness to prove the execution of the deed made to himself. 1 P. Wil. 290. If an action is brought against many persons for taking of goods, one of them concerned may be admitted as an evidence against the rest. Comberb. 367. See 1 Mod. 282. In criminal cases, as of robbery on the highway, in action against the hundred; in rapes of women, or where a woman is married by force, &c. a man or a woman may be an evidence in their own cause. 1 Vent. 243. And in private enormous cheats, a person may give evidence in his own cause, where nobody else can be a witness of the circumstances of the fact, but he that suffers. 1 Salk. 286. Upon an information on the statute against usury, he that borrows the money, after he hath paid it, may be an evidence, but not before. Raym. 191.

In an action upon a joint contract against two, one who has suffered judgment by default is not an admissible witness against the other to prove that he joined in the contract. 4 W. P. Taunton, 752.

An alien infidel may not be an evidence; but a Jew may, and be sworn on the Old Testament. 1 Inst. 6. A quaker shall not be permitted to give evidence in any criminal cause (unless he will take an oath:) Though, on other occasions, his solemn affirmation shall be accepted instead of an oath. Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 34. See title Quaker.—The oath of a Gentoo, sworn according to the circumstances of his religion, has been admitted in a civil matter. 1 Atk. 21. And by Willes, C. J. an infidel in general is an admissible witness for the term does not imply that he is an atheist; but wherever it appears that a witness has no idea of a God or religion, he shall not be permitted to give his testimony. 1 Atk. 40. 45.

Persons non sanæ memoriæ; those that are attainted of conspiracy, or in a præmunire upon the statute 5 Eliz. c. 1. Popish recusants convict, on the stat. 3. Jac. 1. c. 5. are disabled to give evidence; but see contra, 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 12. § 6. So persons convicted of felony, perjury, &c. And if one by judgment hath stood in the pillory, or been whipped; for his infamy he shall not be admitted to give evidence whilst the judgment is in force: But the record of conviction must be produced on objecting against his testimony; and the witness shall not be asked any question to accuse himself, though his credit may be impeached by other evidences, as to his character in general, so as not to make proof of particular crimes whereof he hath not been convicted. 3 Inst. 108. 219. 3 Lev. 426. If after a man hath stood in the pillory, &c. he be pardoned, he may be an evidence: And notwithstanding judgment of the pillory infers infamy at Common Law, by the civil and canon law it imports no infamy, unless the cause for which the person was convicted was infamous; and therefore such may be a good witness to a will, if not convicted of any infamous act. 3 Lev. 426, 427. It has been held, that it is not standing in a pillory disables a person to give evidence, but standing there upon a judgment for an infamous crime, as forgery, &c. If for a libel, a man may be a witness. 5 Mod. 74. 3 Nels. Abr. 557.

Persons excommunicated cannot be witnesses, because being excluded out of the church, they are supposed not to be under the influence of any religion. But persons outlawed may be witnesses, because they are punished in their properties, and not in the loss of their reputation: and the outlawry has no manner of influence on their credibility. Bull. N. P. 292, 293.

A man is convicted of felony, and afterwards pardoned, he may be a good evidence. Raym. 369. So where burnt in the hand, which is quasi a statute pardon; and it is said this burning in the hand restores the offender to his credit. Ibid. 330. A person who was condemned to be hanged for burglary, but having a pardon for transportation, hath been allowed to be a good evidence. 5 Mod. 18. One outlawed for treason and pardoned, may be an evidence. State Trials, vol. 3. 515. Persons acquitted, or guilty of the same crime, (while they remain unconvicted,) may be evidence against their fellows. Kel. 17. Though no evidence ought to be given of what an accomplice hath said, who is not in the same indictment. State Trials vol. 2. 414. An informer may be a witness, though he is to have part of the forfeiture, where no other witnesses can be had. Wood's Instit. 598. Members of either House of Parliament may be witnesses on impeachments. State Trials, vol. 2. 632.

Ideots, madmen, and children, (see tit. Infants,) are excluded from giving evidence for want of skill and discernment.

2. In addition to what has been already said as to the number of witnesses, we may mention that it is required by stat. 29 Car. 2. cap. 3. "That all devises of lands shall be attested and subscribed in the presence of the testator, by three or four credible witnesses, or else shall be void." See title Will.

If a witness, served with a process in a civil cause, refuse to appear, being tendered reasonable charges, and having no lawful excuse, action on the case lies against him, whereon damages shall be recovered: And a feme covert not appearing, action may be brought against the husband and her. Stat. 5 Eliz. cap. 9. 1 Leon. 112.

If there is a doubt that a witness will not attend, the best way is to serve him with the original subpœna, keeping a copy: and if he is at any distance from the place of trial, tender reasonable charges: if he does not appear at the trial, call him three times on his subpœna, and then, if occasion requires, the party may bring his action, or move for an attachment.

In a criminal cause, if a witness refuse to appear and give evidence, being served with process, the court will put off the trial, and grant attachment against him; and, as refusing to give evidence is a great contempt, the party may be committed and fined. 1 Salk. 278.

Preventing evidence to be given against a criminal is punishable by fine and imprisonment; and a person was fined one thousand marks in such a case. Hill. 1663. B. R. Persons dissuading a witness from giving evidence, &c. and jurors or others disclosing evidence given, are likewise offences punished by fine and imprisonment. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22.

By stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 71. § 16. (made to prevent horse-stealing, and which see under that head,) the justice before whom complaint shall be made for any offence against the act, may summon any person, other than the party complained against, to appear before him to give evidence; and in case such person shall wilfully refuse or neglect to attend, or give evidence, he shall forfeit 10*l.* and in default of payment, or in case of inability, shall stand committed to gaol for not more than two months, nor less than one. And similar punishments are inflicted by other statutes.

Where necessity requires, witnesses may be examined apart in court, till they have given all they have to say in evidence; so that what one has deposed, may not induce another to give his evidence to the same effect. Fortesc. 54.

A witness shall not be examined where his evidence tends to clear or accuse himself of a crime. State Trials, vol. 1. 557. Nor is he bound to give any answer by which he confesses or accuses himself of any crime. And a witness shall not be cross-examined till he hath gone through the evidence on the side whereon produced. Ibid. vol. 2. 772. But a witness cannot by law refuse to answer on the ground only that his answer may establish a debt due from him to the King, or any other. Stat. 46 Geo. 3. c. 37. See ante.

The court, in criminal cases, is to examine the witnesses, and not the prisoner or prosecutors. Ibid. vol. 1. 143. Though, in case of the court, counsel are frequently admitted to examine the evidence. A witness shall not be permitted to read his evidence, but he may look on his notes to refresh his memory. Ibid. vol. 4. 45. A witness may not recite his evidence to the jury, after gone from the bar, and he hath given his evidence in court: if he doth, the verdict may be set aside. Cro. Eliz. 159. One that is to be a witness at a trial, ought not to be examined before the trial, but by the consent of both parties, and a rule of court for that purpose; and sometimes by a judge's order at chambers witnesses are examined on interrogatories, where such witness is about to leave the kingdom.

No evidence ought to be produced against a man in a trial for his life, but what is given in his presence. State Trials, vol. 4. 227. And evidence shall not be given against the prisoner for any other crime than that for which prosecuted. Ibid. vol. 3. 947. But upon an indictment for disposing of and putting away a forged bank note, knowing it to be forged, the prosecutor may give evidence of other forged notes having been uttered by the prisoner, in order to prove his knowledge of the forgery. Rex v. Wylie, New Rep. i. 92. A prisoner may bring evidence to prove that the witnesses gave a different testimony before a justice of peace, or at another trial: though he may not call witnesses to disprove what his own witnesses have sworn. State Trials, vol. 2. 623. 792. And no objection can be made to the evidence after verdict given. Ibid. vol. 4. 35. It is justifiable to maintain or subsist an evidence, but not to give him any reward; for this, if proved, will avoid his testimony. Ibid. vol. 2. 470.

A witness shall not be examined to any thing that does not relate to the matter in issue. Ibid. vol. 2. 343. And where an issue is not perfect, no evidence can be applied, nor can the justices proceed to trial. Brownl. 42. 47. 435. If evidence doth not warrant and maintain the same thing that is in issue, the evidence is defective, and may be demurred upon; but proving the substance is sufficient. Trials per pais, 425. Evidence may be given of facts before and after the time they are laid in the indictment. And where a place is laid only for a venue in an indictment, or an appeal, (and not made part of the description of the fact,) proof of the same crime may be made at any other place in the same county; and after a crime hath been proved in the county where laid, evidence may be given of other instances of the same crime in another county, to satisfy the jury. 2 Hawk. P. C. 46.

But where a certain place is made part of the description of the fact against the defendant, the least variation as to such place between the evidence and indictment is fatal. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. It hath been also adjudged, that where an indictment sets forth all the special matter, in respect whereof the law implies malice, variance between the indictment and evidence as to the circumstances of the fact, doth not hurt; so that the substance of the matter be found by the evidence. Ibid.

3. It seems to have been agreed, as a general rule, (even before the statute of frauds and perjuries,) that no parol evidence could be admitted to controul what appeared on the face of a deed or will, not only from the danger of perjury, but from a presumption, that whatsoever the parties at that time had in contemplation, was reduced into writing. 5 Co. 68. a. b. 3 Co. 155. a. Kelw. 49.

But this rule has received a relaxation, especially in the courts of equity, where a distinction has been taken between evidence that may be offered to a jury, and such as may be used only to inform the conscience of the court; viz. that in the first case no such evidence should be admitted, because the jury might be inveigled thereby; but that in the second it could do no hurt, because the court were judges of the whole matter, and could distinguish what weight and stress ought to be laid on such evidence. 2 Vern. 98. 337. 625.

Also to ascertain a fact, parol evidence hath been admitted to explain the intent of the testator: as where the testator had two sons both named John, and he devised lands to his son John; here parol evidence was admitted to shew which of his sons he meant; and it being proved that one of his sons of that name had been absent several years beyond sea, and that the testator apprehended that he was dead, the devise was held good, and that the other should take; for without such evidence the will must be void. 2 Vern. 98. 337. 625. So parol evidence may be admitted to explain the intent of a testator in cancelling a will. Cowp. 53.

Parol evidence to prove that a bond was given, in lieu of dower, refused. 1 Wils. 34. Parol proof admitted that the testator intended his wife executrix should have the residue undisposed of. Id. 313. Debt upon bond with condition for payment of money to Lydia Dovey, who is a third person, she declares the defendant owes her nothing, and upon proof thereof, a verdict was for the defendant; such declaration was properly given in evidence, for Lydia Dovey is to be considered as the real plaintiff. Id. 257.

In trover for a bond, parol evidence was admitted to support the general description of the instrument in the declaration, without notice having been given to the defendant to produce it. 14 East's Rep. 274.

Parol evidence shall not be admitted to annul or substantially vary a written agreement, where there is no latent ambiguity. 3 Wils. 275. Str. 794. 3 Term Rep. 590. 2 Bos. & Pull. 565. But parol evidence may be admitted to explain a written instrument or agreement which, on the face of it, appears to be equivocal. 8 Term Rep. 379.

Parol evidence shall not be received to prove an additional rent payable by a tenant, beyond that expressed in the written agreement for a lease. 2 Bl. Rep. 1249.

Parol evidence may be admitted to prove other considerations than those mentioned in a deed; as where the conditions mentioned in the deed were 10,000*l. and* natural love and affection, and the premises were worth 30,000*l.* an issue was directed to try whether natural love and affection made any part of the consideration; and it being found that they did not, the deed was set aside. 7 Bro. P. C. 70. cited 3 Term Rep. 473.

In an action on a policy, the property of the ship may be proved by parol evidence of the possession of the assured, unless disproved by the production of the written documents of the ship under the register acts. (See title Navigation Acts.) And such parol evidence of ownership, arising from possession at a particular period, was not disproved by shewing a prior register in the name of another, and a subsequent register to the same person. 4 East's Rep. 130.

Parol evidence of what passed at the time of effecting a policy of insurance is not admissible to restrain the effect of the policy. 1 W. P. Taunton, 115.

What a dead witness has sworn on a former trial between the same parties is evidence in the cause, and may either be read from the judge's notes, or proved upon oath by the notes or recollection of any person who heard it. 3 W. P. Taunton, 262.

By the statute of frauds, several things must be evidenced by writing, of which, before that statute, parol evidence had been sufficient. See this Dict. title Fraud.

Sometimes violent presumption will be admitted for evidence without witnesses; as where a person is run through the body in a house, and one is seen to come out of the house with a bloody sword, &c. But on this the court ought not to judge hastily. 1 Inst. 6. 673. And though presumptive and circumstantial evidence may be sufficient in felony, it is not so in treason. State Trials, vol. 4. p. 307.

Persons once in being shall be intended still living, if the contrary is not proved. 2 Rol. Rep. 461. But now, by stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 6. it is enacted, "that if any person or persons, for whose life or lives estates have been, or shall be granted, shall remain beyond the seas, or elsewhere absent themselves in this realm, by the space of seven years together, and no sufficient and evident proof made of the life or lives of such person or persons respectively, in any action commenced for the recovery of such tenements by the lessors or reversioners, in every such case the person or persons, upon whose life or lives such estate depended, shall be accounted as naturally dead; and in every action brought for the recovery of the said tenements, by the lessors or reversioners, their heirs or assigns, the judges, before whom such action shall be brought, shall direct the jury to give their verdict, as if the person so remaining beyond the seas, or otherwise absenting himself, were dead." See titles Life Estate; Presumption.

A clerk of the post-office, accustomed to inspect franks for the detection of forgeries, has been admitted to prove that the hand-writing of an instrument is an imitated, and not a natural hand, though he never saw the party write: and also to prove that two writings, suspected to be imitated hands, were written by the same person. 4 Term Rep. K. B. 497.

An instrument executed abroad, and witnessed by a foreigner residing there, may be proved by evidence of the hand-writing of the witness and of the contracting party, but not by the latter alone. 7 Term Rep. K. B. 265.

If a subscribing witness to a deed be abroad out of the jurisdiction of the court, and not amenable to its process, evidence of his hand-writing is admissible, though it do not appear whether he is settled abroad. 2 East's Rep. 250. & see Id. 183.

So if he has set out to leave the kingdom. 1 W. P. Taunton, 461. So also if upon diligent enquiry, an attesting witness is not to be found, having absconded from his creditors. Id. 364.

As to Hearsay Evidence, it seems that the two principal cases, if indeed not the exclusive cases, in which it is admissible, are pedigrees and prescriptions. See 3 Term Rep. 707. Unless we add cases in which no other evidence can be procured, as with respect to possession of premises, &c. See 2 Term Rep. 53. 55.

Neither the hearsay of a pauper, nor his ex-parte examination in writing taken on oath before magistrates touching his settlement, are admissible evidence. 2 East's Rep. 27. 54. 64.

Hearsay evidence of the declaration of a deceased father as to the place of birth of his bastard child, is not admissible to prove the birth-settlement of such child. 8 East's Rep. 539.

Declarations of a party accompanying an act done, and tending to explain such act, are evidence for the latter purpose as part of the res gesta.

It seems agreed, that what another has been heard to say, is no evidence, because the party was not on oath; also because the party, who is affected thereby, had not an opportunity of cross-examining; but such speeches or discourses may be made use of by way of inducement or illustration of what is properly evidence. 1 Mod. 383. Skin. 402.

Also what a witness hath been heard to say at another time may be given in evidence, in order either to invalidate or confirm the testimony he gives in court. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. So what a person accused of a crime hath been heard to say at another time, may be given in evidence at his trial, for or against him. Id. ib.

A witness by hearsay of a stranger shall not be allowed, except perhaps to confirm the evidence of a witness that spoke of his knowledge. Wood's Instit. 644.

If a person who gave evidence in a former trial be dead; upon proof of his death, any person who heard him give evidence may be admitted to give the same evidence between the same parties; but a copy of the record of the trial when the evidence was given ought to be produced. 3 Inst. 2. 2 *Lil. Evidence given at one trial in criminal cases, has been held not to be evidence at another's trial. 2 State Trials, 863.

EWAGE, from the Fr. eau, water.] Toll paid for water-passage; see Aquage.

EWBRICE, Sax. ew, i. e. conjugium, and bryce, fractio.] Adultery or marriage-breaking: from this Saxon word ew, marriage, we derive our present English woo, to court.

EWE, euva.] A German word signifying law; it is mentioned in Leg. W. 1.

EXACTION, is defined to be a wrong done by an officer, or one in pretended authority, by taking a reward or fee for that which the law allows not. The difference between exaction and extortion is this: extortion is where an officer extorts more than his due, when something is due to him; and exaction is, when he wrests a fee or reward where none is due; for which the offender is to be fined and imprisoned, and render to the party twice as much as the money he so takes. Co. Lit. 368. 10 Rep. 100. See title Extortion.

EXACTOR REGIS. The King's exactor or collector of Taxes; sometimes taken for the sheriff. Niger Liber Scacc. par. 1. cap. ult.

EXAMINATION, examinatio.] A searching by, or cognizance of a magistrate. See this Dict. titles Commitment; Evidence; Justice.

With respect to examinations touching church benefices, see title Benefice.

EXAMINERS IN THE CHANCERY, examinatores.] Two officers of that court, who examine, upon oath, witnesses produced by either side, in London, or near it, on such interrogatories as the parties to any suit exhibit for that purpose; and sometimes the parties themselves are, by particular order, likewise examined by them. In the country, witnesses are examined by commissioners, (usually attornies not concerned in the cause,) on the parties joining in commission, &c. See title Depositions.

EXANNUAL ROLL. In the old way of exhibiting sheriff's accounts, the illeviable fines and desperate debts were transcribed into a roll under this name; which was yearly read, to see what might be gotten. Hale's Sher. Acco. 67.

EXCAMBION, Exchange. See title Exchange.

EXCAMBIATORES. A word used anciently for exchangers of land: but Cowel supposes them to be such as we now call brokers, that deal upon the Exchange between merchants.

EXCEPTION, exceptio.] Is a stop or stay to an action; and divided into dilatory and peremptory. Bract. lib. 5. tract. 5. In law proceedings, it is a denial of a matter alleged in bar to the action; and in Chancery it is what is alleged against the sufficiency of an answer, &c. The counsel in a cause are to take all their exceptions to the record at one time; and before the court hath delivered any opinion thereon. 1 Lil. Abr. 559. And on an indictment for treason, &c. exception is to be taken for mis-naming, false Latin, &c. before any evidence is given in court, or the indictment shall be good. Stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3. See titles Indictment; Treason.

Where, by a general pardon, any particular crime is excepted: if a person be attainted, &c. of that offence, he shall have no benefit of the pardon. 6 Rep. 13. 2 Nels. Abr. 765. And when a pardon is with an exception as to persons, the party who pleads it ought to shew that he is not any of the parties excepted. 1 Lev. 26. A negative expression may be taken to enure to the same intent as an exception; for an exception in its nature is but a denial of what is taken to be good by the other party, either in point of law or pleading. And exceptio in non exceptis firmat regulam. 1 Lill. 559.

Exception, in Scotch Law is used synonimously with Defence.

Exception to Evidence, &c. See this Dict. titles Bill of Exceptions; Witness.

Exception in Deeds and Writings, Keeps the things from passing thereby; being a saving out of the deed, as if the same had not been granted: but it is to be a particular thing out of a general one, as a room out of an house, ground out of a manor, timber out of land, &c. And it must not be of a thing expressly granted in a deed: also it must be of what is severable from, and not inseparably incident to, the grant. Co. Lit. 47. 1 Lev. 287. Cro. El. 244.

Where an exception goeth to the whole thing granted or demised, the exception is void. Cro. El. 6. A man makes a lease of a manor, excepting all courts, &c. the exception is void as to the courts; for having leased the manor, it cannot be such without courts. Hob. 108. Moor, 870. A lease was made of all a man's lands in L. excepting his manor of H. and he had no lands in L. but the said manor; it was adjudged that the manor passed, and that the exception was void. Hob. 170. 2 Nels. Abr. 764. A lease of an house and shops, except the shops; though this may extend to other shops, it is void as to the shops belonging to the house demised, because it is repugnant to the lease. Dyer, 265.

If an exception crosses the grant, or is repugnant to it, the same is void: and if there be a saving or exception out of an exception, it may make a particular thing as if never excepted; as if a lease be made of a rectory, excepting the parsonage-house, saving to the lessee a chamber; this chamber not being excepted out of the lease, shall pass by the lease of the rectory. Hob. 72. 170. Cro. El. 372. Owen, 20.

By exception of trees, the soil is not excepted, but only sufficient nutriment for the trees: for the lessee shall have the pasture growing under them, though the lessor shall have all the benefit of the trees, mast, fruit, &c. and the trees are parcel of the inheritance. 5 Rep. 11. 11 Rep. 48. 50. But it has been adjudged, that, by an exception of woods, underwood, and coppices, the soil of the coppices is excepted. Poph. 146. Cro. Jac. 487. If a lessee for years assign over his term, excepting the trees, &c. the exception is not good, because no one can have a special property in the trees, but the owner of the land. 2 Nels. 764. Though where lessee for life makes a lease for years, excepting the wood, &c. this may be a good exception, although he hath not any interest in it but as a lessee, in regard he is chargeable in waste, &c. and hath not granted his whole term. Cro. Jac. 296. 1 Lill. Abr. 560. These exceptions are commonly in leases for life and years; and must be always of a thing in esse. Co. Lit. 47. See titles Grant; Deed; Lease; Condition.

Exceptio rei Judicatæ, An exception or defence in the Scotch Law, that the matter has been adjudged in another court or country, and the judgment carried into effect.

EXCHANGE.

EXCHANGE, Excambium or cambium; with the Civilians, permutatio.] The King's Exchange, is the place appointed by the King for exchange of plate or bullion for the King's coin, &c. These places have been divers heretofore; but now there is only one, viz. the Mint in the Tower. See stats. 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c. 12. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 19. and this Dict. titles Coin; Money.—There is also a Royal Exchange of Merchants in London.

Exchange among merchants is a commerce of money, or a bartering or exchanging of the money of one city or country for that of another: money, in this sense, is either real or imaginary; real, any species current in any country at a certain price, at which it passes by the authority of the State, and of its own intrinsic value; and by imaginary money is understood, all the denominations made use of to express any sum of money, which is not the just value of any real species. Lex Mercatoria.

The methods of exchange for money used in England ought to be par pro pari, according to value for value: and our exchange is grounded on the weight and fineness of our own money, and the weight and fineness of that of other countries, according to their several standards, proportionable in their valuation; which being truly and justly made, reduces the price of the exchange of money of any nation or country to a certainty. But this course of exchange is of late abused, and money is become a merchandise, that rises and falls in its price in regard to the plenty and scarcity of it. At London, all exchanges are made upon the pound sterling of 20*s.* In the Low Countries, France and Germany, upon the French crown; Spain and Italy, &c. upon the ducat; and at Florence, Venice, and other places in the Streights, by the dollar and florin. See tit. Bill of Exchange.

Exchanges of Goods and Merchandise, Were the original and natural way of commerce, precedent to buying; for there was no buying till money was invented; though in exchanging both parties are as buyers and sellers, and both equally warrant. 3 Salk. 157.

If A. and B. agree to exchange horses, and B. give a sum of money to A. to bind the bargain, A. may maintain an action against B. for not delivering his horse, without alleging any delivery of or offer to deliver his own to B., for the payment of earnest-money vests the property of A.'s horse in B. But in such an action A. must allege a special demand on B. for his horse. 5 Term Rep. K. B. 409.

Exchange of Lands. A mutual grant of equal interest in lands or tenements, the one in consideration of the other: and is used peculiarly in our Common Law for that compensation which the warrantor must make to the warrantee, value for value, if the land warranted be recovered from the warrantee. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 16. Accomp. Conv. 1 vol. 170. Also there is a tacit condition of re-entry in this deed, on the lands given in exchange, in case of eviction; and on the warranty to vouch and recover over in value, &c. For if either of the parties is evicted, even of a part, the exchange is defeated. 4 Rep. 121. Cro. Eliz. 903.

The word Exchange is so individually requisite and appropriated by law to this case, that it cannot be supplied by any other word, or expressed by any circumlocution. 1 Inst. 50, 51. The estates exchanged must be equal in quantity of interest, value is immaterial; as fee-simple for fee-simple, a lease for 20 years for a lease for 20 years, and the like. Litt. § 64, 65. And the exchange may be of things that lie either in grant or in livery. But no livery of seisin, even in exchanges of freehold, is necessary to perfect the conveyance; for each party stands in place of the other, and occupies his right, and each of them hath already had corporal possession of his own land. Litt. § 62.—Entry however must be made on both sides; for if either party die before entry, the exchange is void for want of sufficient notoriety. 1 Inst. 50.

An exchange may be made of lands in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, &c. The estates granted are to be equal, as fee-simple for fee-simple, &c. though the lands need not be of equal value, or of the like nature; for a rent in fee issuing out of land, may be exchanged for land in fee. Lit. 63, 64. Co. Lit. 50, 51. If an exchange be made between tenant for life and tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, the exchange is good; because their estates are equal: 11 Rep. 80. Moor, 665.

An exchange made between tenant in tail, and another of unequal interest, may be good during his life; but his issue, when of full age, shall avoid it. And exchanges made by infants; by persons non sanæ memoriæ; a husband of the wife's lands, &c. are not void, but voidable only; by the infant at his full age, the heir of the person non sanæ memoriæ, and the feme after the death of the husband, who may waive the possession, and disagree to them. Perk. § 277. 281.

Two joint-tenants and two tenants in common may exchange their lands: and, by this deed, freeholds pass without livery and seisin; but the word exchange is to be used; and there must be execution of the exchange, by entry on the lands in the life of the parties, or the exchange will be void. 1 Inst. 51. 1 Mod. 91. See titles Lease, Release, as to making exchange by those conveyances.

Littleton expresses himself concerning an exchange as of a transaction between two; and in the case of Eton College, 2 Wils. part 3. p. 483. the court held, that an exchange in the strict legal sense of the word, cannot be between three; the principles of it not being applicable to more than two distinct contracting parties, for want of the mutuality and reciprocity on which its operation so entirely depends; and the case abovementioned, of tenants in common exchanging with joint tenants, is not irreconcileable to this rule; because though four persons may be named, yet they constitute only two distinct parties; and consequently there is the same reciprocity as if the transaction were between two persons only. And this applies to any number of persons, if so conjoined, as to make only two distinct relative parties. 1 Inst. 50. b. 51. a. in notis.

Sometimes lands intended to pass by exchange, not having the qualities and incidents of exchanged lands, may pass by way of gift or grant; as if two persons are seised of two acres of land, and one of them by deed gives his acre to the other, and the other his acre to him, and each of them gives livery of seisin upon his acre given in exchange; here the acres will pass from one to the other, but not in a way of exchange, because there was no word of exchange in the deed. Litt. sect. 62. Perk. 253.

A man grants to another lands in fee-simple, for lands in tail by way of exchange; or land in tail, for lands for life, &c. these deeds will not take effect as exchanges. Fitz. Exchange 15. 64. Co. Lit. 64. If tenant in tail give his land in exchange, for other land of the same estate-tail, the issue in tail may make it good if he will, or avoid the exchange. 1 Rep. 96. A feoffment is made to A. and B. and the heirs of A. and they exchange the land for other lands, this will be good, and they shall hold the lands in the same nature that the land given in exchange was held. Perk. § 277.

If a lord release to the tenant his services in tail, in exchange of land given to the lord in exchange in tail also, it is ill: but if lessee for life of one acre, give another acre to his lessor in tail, in exchange for a release from him of that acre, habendum in tail in like manner, it is a good exchange. Perk. § 219. 276. 283. In case two persons make an exchange of land, and limit no estate, each shall have an estate for life by implication: but if an express estate be limited to one for life, and none to the other, it will be void. 19 H. 6. 27. And to make a good exchange, both the things must be in esse at the time of the exchange. Co. Lit. 50. 3 Ed. 4. 10.

But an exhange may be made to take effect in futuro, as well as presently; for if it be that after the feast of Easter, A. B. shall have such lands in D. in exchange for his lands in S. this is good. Perk. § 265.

By a special kind of agreement, an exchange may be of unequal estates. Moor, c. 209. The condition and warranty in exchanges run to the parties in privity; not to an assignee, &c. And if after two have exchanged lands, one of them releases to the other the warranty in law, it will not destroy the exchange. 4 Rep. 122. 1 Rol. Abr. 815. The parties themselves, and all privies and strangers, for the most part, may take advantage of exchanges void by any defect or accident: contra, if they are voidable, &c. 1 Rep. 105. Dyer, 285.

Exchange of Church Livings. These exchanges are now seldom used, except that parsons sometimes exchange their churches, and resign them into the bishop's hands; and this is not a perfect exchange till the parties are inducted; for if either dies before they both are inducted, the exchange is void. Wood's Inst. 284. 2 Comm. 323.

By Stat. 31 El. c. 6. § 8. If any incumbent of any benefice with cure of souls, shall corruptly resign or exchange the same; or corruptly take for or in any respect of the resigning or exchanging the same, directly or indirectly, any pension, sum of money, or other benefit whatsoever; as well the giver as the taker, shall lose double the value of the sum; half to the Crown, and half to him that shall sue for the same. See this Dict. titles Simony, Advowson.

If two parsons by one instrument agree to exchange their benefices, and in order thereto resign them into the hands of the Ordinary, such exchange being executed on both parts is good, and each may enjoy the other's living: but the patrons must present them again to each living; and if they refuse to do it, or the Ordinary will not admit them respectively, then the exchange is not executed; and in such case either clerk may return to his former living, even though one of them should be admitted, instituted, and inducted to the benefice of the other; which is expressed in the exchange itself, and the protestation usually added to it. 2 Rep. 74. Rol. Abr. 814.

EXCHANGEORS. Those that return money by bills of exchange. See Excambiatores. 5 R. 2. c. 2.

EXCHEQUER.

Scaccarium, from the Fr. eschequier, i. e. abacus, tabula lusoria, or from the Germ. schaiz, viz. thesaurus.] An ancient court of record, wherein all causes touching the revenue and rights of the crown are heard and determined; and where the revenues of the crown are received. Camden in his Britan. p. 113. saith, This court took its name à tabulâ ad quam assidebant, the cloth which covered it being party coloured, or chequered: we had it from the Normans, as appears by the Grand Custumary, cap. 56. where it is described to be an assembly of high justiciers, to whom it appertained to amend that which the inferior justiciers had misdone, and unadvisedly judged, and to do right to all, as from the Prince's mouth; and this seems the origin of the Court of Exchequer-Chamber.

The Court of Exchequer is inferior in rank not only to the court of King's Bench, but to the Common Pleas also; it is a very ancient court of record, set up by William the Conqueror as a part of the aula Regia, though regulated and reduced to its present order by King Edward I. and intended principally to order the revenues of the crown, and to recover the king's debts and duties. 4 Inst. 103—116. It is called the Exchequer, scaccarium, from the chequed cloth, resembling a chess-board, which covers the table there, and on which, when certain of the king's accounts are made up, the sums are marked and scored with counters. It consists of two divisions: the receipt of the Exchequer, which manages the royal revenue; and the court or judicial part of it; which latter is again subdivided into a court of Equity, and a court of Common Law.

The Court of Equity is held in the Exchequer-Chamber, before the Lord Treasurer, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Chief Baron, and three puisne Barons. These Mr. Selden conjectures (Titles of Hon. 2. 5. 16.) to have been anciently made out of such as were Barons of the kingdom, or parliamentary Barons: and thence to have derived their name; which conjecture receives great strength from Bracton's explanation of Magna Charta, c. 14. which directs that the earls and barons be amerced by their peers; that is, says he, by the barons of the Exchequer, l. 3. tr. 2. c. 1. § 3.

In this court of equity, the clergy have long used to exhibit their bills for the non-payment of tithes, in which case the surmise of being the King's debtor is no fiction, they being bound to pay him their first fruits and annual tenths. But the Chancery has of late years obtained a large share in this business. See this Dict. titles Chancery, Equity, Tithes.

An appeal from the equity side of this court lies immediately to the House of Peers; but from the Common Law side, in pursuance of the stat. 31 E. 3. c. 12. a writ of error must be first brought into the court of Exchequer-Chamber. And from the determination there had, there lies in the dernier resort, a writ of error to the House of Lords. 3 Comm. 44. See this Dict. titles Decree, Equity, Error.

In this Court of Equity the proceedings are by English bill and answer, as in Chancery.

In this court the Attorney-General brings bills for any matters concerning the King; and any person grieved in any cause prosecuted against him on behalf of the King, may bring his bill against the Attorney-General to be relieved in equity, in which case the plaintiff must attend the King's Attorney with a copy of the bill, and procure him to answer the same; and Mr. Attorney may call any that are interested in the cause, or any officer or others, to instruct him in the making of his answer so as the King be not prejudiced thereby; and his answer is to be put in without oath. 4 Inst. 109. 112. 118.

By stat. 57 Geo. 3. c. 18. the Lord Chief Baron of the court, for the time being, is empowered to hear and determine all causes, matters, and things, at any time depending in the said Court of Exchequer, as a Court of Equity; and if the Chief Baron should, from illness, &c. be prevented from sitting for those purposes, his Majesty may, from time to time, appoint by warrant under the sign manual, revocable at pleasure, any other of the Barons of the degree of the coif, to hear and determine the same. The Lord Chief Baron, &c. may sit in the Court of Equity, whether the other Barons of the Court are sitting or not; and decrees under this act are declared valid, subject only to appeal to the House of Lords, or to rehearing by the Chief Baron, or other Barons so appointed.

The primary and original business of the Court of Exchequer is to call the King's debtors to account, by bill filed by the attorney-general; and to recover any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, any goods, chattels, or other profits or benefits, belonging to the crown. So that by their original constitution the jurisdiction of the courts of Common Pleas, King's Bench and Exchequer, was entirely separate and distinct: the Common Pleas being intended to decide all controversies between subject and subject; the King's Bench to correct all crimes and misdemeanors that amount to a breach of the King's peace; and the Exchequer, to adjust and recover the King's revenue. See this Dict. title Courts, King's Bench, Common-Pleas. But as, by a fiction, almost all sorts of civil actions are now allowed to be brought in the King's Bench, in like manner by another fiction, all kinds of personal suits may be prosecuted in the court of Exchequer. For as all the officers and ministers of this court have, like those of other superior courts, the privilege of suing and being sued only in their own court, so also the King's debtors and farmers, and all accomptants of the Exchequer, are privileged to sue and implead all manner of persons in the same court of equity that they themselves are called into. They have likewise privilege to sue and implead one another, or any stranger, in the same kind of Common Law actions (where the personalty only is concerned) as are prosecuted in the court of Common Pleas.

This gives origin to the Common Law part of their jurisdiction, which was merely for the benefit of the King's accomptants; and is exercised by the barons only of the Exchequer, and not the treasurer or chancellor. The writ upon which all proceedings here are grounded is called a quo minùs: in which the plaintiff suggests that he is the King's farmer or debtor, and that the defendant hath done him the injury or damage complained of; quo minùs sufficiens existit, (by which he is the less able,) to pay the King his debt or rent. And these suits are expressly directed by what is called the statute of Rutland, 10 E. 1. c. 11. to be confined to such matters only, as specially concern the King or his ministers of the Exchequer. And by the articuli super cartas, 28 Ed. 1. c. 4. it is enacted, that no Common Pleas be thenceforth holden in the Exchequer, contrary to the form of the great charter. But now, by the suggestion of privilege, any person may be admitted to sue in the Exchequer, as well as the King's accomptant. The surmise of being debtor to the King is therefore become matter of form, and mere words of course, and the court is open to all the nation equally. The same holds with regard to the equity side of the court: for there any person may file a bill against another upon a bare suggestion that he is the King's accomptant; but whether he is so or not is never controverted.

Some persons think there was an Exchequer under the Anglo-Saxon Kings; but our best historians are of opinion, that it was erected by King William the First, its model being taken from the transmarine Exchequer, established in Normandy long before that time. Madox's Hist. Exchq.

In the reign of Henry the First there was an Exchequer, which has continued ever since; and the judges of the court were at that time styled Barones Scaccarii, and administered justice to the subjects. In ancient times the Barons of the Exchequer dealt in affairs relating to the state, or public service of the crown and realm: and were greatly concerned in the preservation of the prerogative, as well as the revenue of the crown; for at the Exchequer it was the care of the Treasurer and Barons to see that the rights of the crown were no ways invaded. Lex Constitutionis, 198.

On account of the authority and dignity of the court of Exchequer, anciently it was held in the King's palace; and the acts thereof were not to be examined or controlled in any other of the King's ordinary courts of justice: the Exchequer was the great repository of records, wherein the records of the other courts at Westminster, &c. were brought to be laid up in the Treasury there. And writs of the Chancery were sometimes made forth at the Exchequer; writs of summons to assemble parliaments, &c. Ibid.

The Exchequer has been commonly held at Westminster, the usual place of the King's residence; but it hath been sometimes holden at other places, as the King pleased; as at Winchester, &c. And in the Exchequer there are reckoned seven courts; viz. the court of Pleas; the court of Accounts; the court of Receipts; the court of the Exchequer-Chamber (being the assembly of all the judges of England for difficult matters in law); the court of Exchequer-Chamber, for Errors in the court of Exchequer; for Errors in the King's Bench; and the court of Equity in the Exchequer Chamber. 4 Inst. 119.

But, according to the usual division for the dispatch of all common business, the Exchequer is divided (as has been already noticed) into two parts; one whereof is conversant especially in the judicial hearing and deciding of causes pertaining to the Prince's coffers, anciently called Scaccarium Computorum; the other is the Receipt of the Exchequer, which is properly employed in the receiving and payment of money. And it has been observed, that about the time of the Conquest there was very little money in specie in the realm; for then the tenants of knight's fees answered their lords by military services: and till the reign of King Henry 1. the rents or farms due to the King were generally rendered in provisions and necessaries for his household; but in that reign the same were changed into money; and afterwards, in succeeding times, the crown revenue was changed or paid into the Exchequer chiefly in gold and silver. Lex Constitutionis, p. 208.

By statute, all sheriffs, bailiffs, &c. are to account in the Exchequer before the Treasurer and Barons: and annual rolls are to be made of the profits of counties, &c. Also inquisitors shall be appointed in every county, of debts due to the King. 51 H. 3. st. 5, 10 Ed. 1. Stat. Rutl. And all fines of counties for the whole year are to be sent into the Exchequer. Stat. de Vicecom. 14 Ed. 2. c. 1. Persons impeached in the Exchequer may plead in their own discharge; and there shall be writs for discharging persons, &c. 5 R. 2, c. 10. 14. The officers of the receipt may receive and take for their fees 1*d.* in the pound for sums issued out. &c. 5 & 6 W. & M. cap. 20.

Officers of the Exchequer are without delay to receive money brought thither: and the money on the receipt is to be kept in chests under three different locks and keys, kept by three several officers, &c. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 28.

The Exchequer is now said to be the last of the four courts at Westminster governed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Lord Chief Baron, and three other Barons, who are the sovereign auditors of England, and the judges of the court. There also sits in this court a Cursitor Baron, who administers the oath of all high-sheriffs, under-sheriffs, bailiffs, auditors, receivers, collectors, controllers, surveyors, and searchers of all the customs in England.

The Chancellor, and who is Under Treasurer, hath the custody of the seal of this court. The King's Attorney-General is made privy to all manner of pleas, that are not ordinary and of course, which rise upon the process of the court; and he puts into court in his own name, informations of concealments of customs, seizures, &c. And also for intrusions, wastes, and encroachments upon any of the King's lands; or upon penal statutes, forfeitures, &c.

The Remembrancers keep the records of the court betwixt the King and his subjects, and enter the rules and orders there made: one is called the King's Remembrancer, and the other the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer. The Remembrancer for the King hath all manner of informations upon penal statutes used in his office only; and he calls to account, in open court, all the great Accountants of the Crown, Collectors of Customs, &c. he makes out writs of privilege, enters judgments of pleas; and all matters upon English bill are remaining in his office.

The Remembrancer for the Lord Treasurer makes out all the estreats; he sets down in his book the debts of all sheriffs, and takes their foreign accounts; and issues out writs and process in many cases, &c. And these Remembrancers have several attornies to do business under them, who, by statute, are not to issue out of the Remembrancer's office any writs upon supposition, but upon just grounds, &c. 1 Jac. 1. c. 26. See as to regulation of the office of these Remembrancers, stat. 57 Geo. 3. c. 60. post.

There are two Chamberlains that keep the keys of the Treasury where the records lie, with the book of Domesday, &c. They may sit in court if they please, but not intermeddle with any thing, unless it be relating to the sheriffs, in the pricking whereof they have a vote. See post, stat. 23 Geo. 3. at the end of this article. And, besides the Chamberlains, there is a Clerk of the Pipe, in whose custody are conveyed out of the King's and Treasurer's Remembrancer, &c. as water through a pipe, all accounts and debts due to the King.

The Controller of the Pipe, who is said to be the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The Clerk of the Estreats, who receives the estreats from the Remembrancer's office, and writeth them out to be served for the King, &c. The Foreign Apposer, who apposes or makes a charge on all sheriffs, &c. of their green wax, i. e. fines, issues, amerciaments, recognisance, &c. certified in estreats annexed to the writ, under the seal, in green wax, and delivereth the same to the Clerk of the Estreats to be put in process. The Auditors, that take the accounts of the King's Receivers, Collectors, &c. and perfect them. The four Tellers, whose business to receive and pay all money is well known. The Clerk of the Pells, from his parchment rolls, called Pellis Receptorum. The Clerk of the Nihils, who makes a roll of such sums as the sheriff upon process returns Nihil, &c. The Clerk of the Pleas, in whose office all officers and privileged persons are to sue and be sued; and here are divers Under Clerks employed in suits commenced or depending in this court. There is a Clerk of the Summons; Secondaries in the offices of the Remembrancers; Secondaries of the Pipe; Marshal, &c.

By stat. 23 Geo. c. 82. the offices of the two Chamberlains, the Tally-cutter, Usher of the Exchequer, and the second Clerks to each Teller, shall, after the death, surrender, forfeiture, or removal of the persons interested in them, be abolished. § 1. 4.

Upon the death &c. of the two Chamberlains, instead of the tally now used to denote the receipt of money, there shall be substituted an indented cheque receipt. § 2.—And upon the death, &c. of the Usher, the chief officer in each office shall supply his place. § 3.

After the death, &c. of the present Auditor, Clerk of the Pells, either of the four Tellers, or two Chamberlains, the payment of all salaries, fees, and emoluments to the said officers shall cease; and in lieu thereof, certain annual salaries are made payable; viz. To the Auditor 4000*l.* his chief Clerk 1000*l.* Clerk of the Pells 3000*l.* his first Clerk 1000*l.* The four Tellers each 2700*l.* Each of their first Clerks 1000*l.* These are to appoint such other clerks and officers as they think fit, to be appoved of by the Treasury. § 5.

All fees as heretofore (see stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 99.) to be received by the first clerk to the Clerk of the Pells; [200*l.* of whose salary is on that account;] two thirds thereof to be applied to the sinking fund, and one third to pay the above salaries. § 9.

The houses of the Auditor, four Tellers, and Usher shall, after the death, &c. of the present possessors, be vested in his Majesty, and not annexed to the offices. § 10—And no office in the receipt of the Exchequer may be granted either in possession or reversion, in any other manner than subject to this act. § 11.

By stat. 57 Geo. 3. c. 60. for regulating certain offices in the Court of Exchequer in England, after the termination of the existing interest in the following offices, the duties thereof shall be discharged in person and not by deputy; subject to the regulation of the Lords of the Treasury, as to fees, &c. the surplus of which, after payment of such officers as shall be found necessary, is to become part of the Consolidated Fund, for the public benefit. The offices mentioned in this act are the King's Remembrancer, Clerk of the Pleas, Clerk of the Pipe, Comptroller of the Pipe, Marshal, Foreign Ap-poser, Surveyor and Receiver-General of Green Wax, Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, Clerk of Foreign Estreats, Clerk of the Nihils, Comptroller of the First Fruits: and in the Alienation Office, three Commissioners, the Receiver General, two entering Clerks, Master in Chancery, and solicitor of the Exchequer.

By stat. 57 Geo. 3. c. 84. the like regulations are made as to the offices of Auditor, the Four Tellers and Clerk of the Pells in the Exchequer in England, and of the Auditor, Teller, and Clerk of the Pells, in the Exchequer of Ireland. And persons appointed to the offices so regulated are rendered incapable of sitting in Parliament.

Disputes having arisen as to the right of appointment to the office of Clerk of the Pleas in the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, the Lord Chief Baron having claimed the right of appointment, but which was finally determined against him on appeal to the House of Lords; the stat. 56 Geo. 3. c. 122. (continued by 59 Geo. 3. c. 93.) was passed for impounding and securing the profits of the office during the litigation.

The Court of Exchequer in Scotland was established in its present form by stat. 6 Ann. c. 26. The judges by that act are declared to be the High Treasurer of Great Britain, with a Chief Baron and other four Barons, chosen from Serjeants at law, or English Barristers, or Scotch Advocates of five years' standing. This Court has a peculiar jurisdiction in the Customs and Excise, and in all revenue matters, and in all forfeitures and penalties arising to the Crown. The judges of this Court are also commissioned to pass signatures authorising charters and gifts by the Crown.

The Court of Exchequer-Chamber was first erected in England by statute 31 Ed. 3. c. 12. to determine causes upon writs of error, from the Common Law side of the Court of Exchequer. And to that end it consists of the Lord Chancellor, and Lord Treasurer, taking unto them the justices of the King's Bench and Common Pleas. In imitation of which, a second Court of Exchequer-Chamber was erected by stat. 27 Eliz. c. 8. consisting of the justices of the Common Pleas, and the Barons of the Exchequer; before whom writs of error may be brought to reverse judgments in certain suits originally begun in the court of King's Bench. See this Dict. title Error. 3 Com. 56.

Into the court also of Exchequer-Chamber, (which then consists of all the judges of the three superior courts, and sometimes the Lord Chancellor also,) are sometimes adjourned from the other courts such causes as the judges, upon argument, find to be of great weight and difficulty, before any judgment is given upon them in the court below. 4 Inst. 119. 2 Bulst. 146.

In the abovementioned court of Exchequer-Chamber, established under stat. 27 Eliz. c. 8. there are no more than two return-days in every term; one is called the general affirmance day, being appointed by the judges, to be held a few days after the beginning of every term, for the general affirmance or reversal of judgments: the other is the adjournment day, which is usually held a day or two before the end of every term. On the first of these days judgments are affirmed or reversed, or writs of error non-prossed; the intent of the latter is, to finish such matters as were left undone at the former; on which last day also (as well as on the first) judgments may be affirmed or reversed, or writs of error non-prossed, on paying a fee extraordinary to the clerk of the Errors, and setting down the cause for affirmance two days before the adjournment day. Impey, K. B. 678.

The Court of Exchequer-Chamber in Ireland was established by the Irish act 40 Geo. 3. c. 39. but requires further regulations for making its proceedings effective. It consists of the Chief Justices, Chief Baron, and the rest of the Justices and Barons, or any nine of them.

EXCISE.

From the Belg. acciise tributum.] An inland imposition paid sometimes on the consumption of the commodity, or frequently upon the retail sale, which is the last stage before the consumption.

This is doubtless, (says Blackstone, 1 Comm. 318.) impartially speaking, the most economical way of taxing the subject; the charges of levying, collecting, and managing the excise duties being considerably less in proportion than in other branches of the revenue. It also renders the commodity cheaper to the consumer than charging it with customs to the same amount would do. But at the same time, the rigour and arbitrary proceedings of excise laws, seem hardly compatible with the temper of a free nation. For the frauds that might be committed in this branch of the revenue, unless a strict watch is kept, make it necessary wherever it is established, to give the officers a power of entering and searching the houses of such as deal in exciseable commodities, at any hour of the day; and in many cases of the night likewise. And (for the same reasons) the proceedings in case of transgressions are summary and sudden, to the exclusion of the trial by jury.

Its original establishment was in 1643, when it was introduced by the Parliament then in rebellion against King Charles I. Its progress was gradual, being at first laid upon those persons and commodities where it was supposed the hardship would be least perceivable; viz. The makers and venders of beer, ale, cyder, and perry; and was afterwards imposed on such a multitude of commodities, that it might fairly be denominated general.

Upon the restoration of Charles II. it having then been long established, and its produce well known, some part of it was given to the crown by way of purchase for the feodal tenures and other oppressive parts of the hereditary revenue. And notwithstanding the objections eternally raised against it by the interested or the patriotic, it has from time to time been imposed on a vast variety of articles.

By the Consolidating Act, 43 Geo. 3. c. 69. (and see stat. 59 Geo. 3. c. 53) the following articles and matters are subject to a duty of Excise in Great Britain; viz. Auctions, of lands and goods—Beer, Bricks, and Tiles—Candles—Cocoa Nuts and Coffee—Cyder and Perry—Glass—Hides and Skins—Hops—Licences; to auctioneers, brewers, wax and tallow-candle makers, grocers, glass-makers, tanners, &c. maltsters, paper-makers, plate, dealers in, calico-printers, &c. soap-makers, distillers, rectifiers, dealers in spirits, starch makers, sweet wine brewers, tobacco manufacturers and dealers, vinegar makers, wine retailers, wire-drawers—Malt—Mead or Metheglin—Paper—Pepper—Printed and stained papers, linens, cottons, and silks—Salt—Soap—Spirits—Starch—Sweets—Tea—Tobacco and Snuff—Verjuice—Vinegar—Wines imported—Wire.—The list is at present somewhat shorter in Ireland.

It has been very judiciously observed that the grievances of the excise exist more, perhaps, in apprehension than in reality.—Actions and prosecutions against officers, commissioners, and justices, for misconduct in excise cases, are very rarely heard of in courts of law. It is certainly an evil that a fair dealer cannot have the benefit of any secret improvement in the management of his trade or manufactory; yet it seems more than equivalent to the Public at large, that by the survey of the excise, the commodity is preserved from many shameful adulterations; as experience has fully proved since wine was made subject to the excise laws.

The Excise, like the Customs, is necessarily regulated by a multiplicity of statutes; the abridgment of which would form no small volume. See title Customs.—The following short extracts from Burn's Justice, title Excise, where this subject is more fully stated, will convey the information most useful to the student.

One principal head office of Excise is to be kept in London, or within ten miles thereof, to which all other offices in the kingdom shall be subordinate and accountable; which said office shall be managed by such commissioners as the King shall appoint. Stats. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. § 46. 5 W. c. 20. § 16.

And all the places within the Bills of Mortality shall be under the immediate care and management of the said head-office; and such and so many subordinate commissioners and sub-commissioners, and other officers, shall be appointed by the King in other places, as he shall think fit. Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. § 48.

The excise office in all places where it shall be appointed, shall be kept open from eight in the morning till 2 in the afternoon. Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 26. § 12.

The commissioners or sub-commissioners shall appoint under their hands and seals, such persons as they shall think needful in each market-town, to be there, upon every market-day, in some known and public place; for receiving entries and duties, and performing all other things touching the revenue of excise: and if such office be not so kept in each market town, the commissioners or others neglecting or refusing, shall, for every market day, forfeit 10*l.* And such person as shall come to such market town to make his entry or payment, and tender the same accordingly, and be able to prove such tender by oath of one witness, shall not be liable to any penalty for such weekly or monthly entries or payments as should have been made or paid on such market day. Stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 11. § 10.

The kingdom of England and Wales (exclusive of the bills of Mortality) is divided into about 50 collections; some called by names of particular counties; others by the names of great towns; where one county is divided into several collections, or where a collection comprehends the contiguous parts of several counties, every collection is subdivided into several districts, within which there is a Supervisor; and each district is parcelled into out-rides, and foot-walks, within each of which there is a Gauger, or surveying officer. Gilb. Exch. Append.

The commissioners or sub-commissioners, in their respective circuits and divisions, shall constitute under their hands and seals such and so many gaugers as they shall find needful. Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. § 33.

In order to which, he who would be made a gauger, must procure a certificate that he is above 21, and under 30 years of age: that he understands the four first rules of arithmetic; that he is of the communion of the church of England; how he has been employed, or what business he hath followed; that he is not incumbered with debts; whether single or married; and if married, how many children he has, for if he has above two he cannot (by the rules of the office) be admitted. Gilb. Exch. Append.

He must also nominate two persons to be his sureties; and it must be certified that they are of sufficient ability, and that the said certificate is of his own hand-writing: such certificate, written by him, must be signed by the supervisor of excise where the party applying lives. At the bottom of his certificate must be his affidavit, that neither he, nor any else to his knowledge, hath directly or indirectly, given or promised to give any treat, fee, gratuity, or reward, for his obtaining or endeavouring to obtain an order for his being instructed. When an order for instruction is granted, it is directed to an experienced officer, who receives such person as his pupil: and the like books as officers have, being delivered to such pupil, he goes with and attends the officer who instructs him, and he takes surveys, and in his own book makes the like entries, as if he was an officer, until the instructor certifies that he is fully instructed. After he is thus certified for, and until he is employed, he is called an expectant, being to wait till a vacancy happens. Gilb. Exch. Append.

No person shall be capable of intermeddling with any office relating to the Excise, until he shall, before two justices in the county where his employment shall be, or before a baron of the Exchequer, take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, together with an oath of office, which is to be certified to and recorded by the next Quarter Sessions. Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. § 47, 48. and see stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 11. § 57.

The business of the Supervisor is to be continually surveying the houses and places of the persons within his district liable to duties: and to observe and see whether the officers duly make their surveys, and make due entries thereof in their books and in their specimen-papers; and every supervisor is in his own book to enter what he himself does each day and part thereof; and also set down the behaviour, good and bad, the diligence or negligence of the several officers of his district; and at the end of every six weeks to draw out a diary of every day's business, and of the remarks made each day of the several officers in his district, and to transmit such diary at the end of every six weeks to the chief office. Each commissioner takes and peruses a proportion of these diaries, and when he meets with any remarkable complaint against any officer, he communicates it to the rest, who thereupon come to an agreement, either to admonish, reprimand, reduce, or discharge. For small faults, officers are admonished; for great ones reprimanded; for greater, reduced: but for the greatest discharged. The commissioner who peruses the diary writes in the margin, admonish, reprimand, or as the case is. Gilb. Exch. Append.

These diaries, after having been thus written upon are delivered to the clerk of the diaries, who in a book, called the reprimand-book, places the admonitions, reprimands, and the like, to each officer's account, and writes every offender word thereof. Which reprimand-book is resorted to upon discovering new faults; and if it is there found that the officer has before been admonished and reprimanded so often that there are no hopes of his amending, he is then discharged. The said book is likewise resorted to when application is made for advancing or preferring an officer into a better post. Frequent admonitions or reprimands are a bar to preferment, unless they are of old standing; but if for three years last he stands pretty clear of admonitions and reprimands, those of elder date are not much regarded. The Collector's business is, every six weeks, to go his rounds, and in the intervals of rounds, he is to be assisting in prosecuting offenders before the justices; he is also to peruse the supervisor's diaries; and where he finds an officer complained of, is to examine him and the supervisor, and having heard both, is in the margin to write his opinion of each fact: he is also to have an eye how the supervisors and officers of his collection perform their duties, and from the vouchers he transcribes into his book the charge on each particular person in his collection. For faults gaugers are reduced, either to be only assistants, or from foot-walks to out-rides; supervisors are reduced to be again only gaugers; and collectors are reduced to be supervisors. In some instances discharged officers, after having for a competent time been thereby kept out of pay, are again restored; but if twice discharged, are never again restored, unless one of the discharges appears to have been occasioned by a misrepresentation of the case. Gilb. Exch. Append.

The stat. 49 Geo. 3. c. 66. abolishes all holidays at the Excise offices, except Christmas day, Good Friday, general fast days, the Restoration of Charles the IId. King's birth-day, the Queen's, and that of the Prince of Wales. The Chief office is to be kept open from eight till three o'clock. s. 2.

EXCOMMENGEMENT, Law French.] Excommunition. Stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 3.

EXCOMMUNICATION, Excommunicatio.] An ecclesiastical censure, divided into the greater and the lesser; by the latter a person is excluded from the communion of the church only; by the former, from that communion, and also from the company of the faithful; and incapacitated from performing any legal act.

The sentence of excommunication was instituted originally for preserving the purity of the church; but ecclesiastics did not scruple to convert it into an engine for promoting their own power, and inflicted it on the most frivolous occasions. Roberts. Hist. Emp. Charles V. 2 vol. 109. &c.

If the judge of any spiritual court excommunicates a man for a cause of which he hath not the legal cognizance, the party may have an action against him at common law; and he is also liable to be indicted at the suit of the King. 1 Inst. 134. 2 Inst. 527. 623.

By stat. 52 Geo. 3. c. 127. for the better regulation of ecclesiastical courts in England, it is enacted, that after passing the act, excommunication, together with all proceedings following thereupon, shall in all cases (except those after specified in the act) be discontinued: and that in all causes cognizable in the ecclesiastical courts, when any person duly cited to appear in, or required to comply with the orders or decrees (as well final as interlocutory) of, any ecclesiastical courts, shall refuse to appear or to obey such order or decree, or when any person shall commit a contempt in the face of such court, no sentence of excommunication shall be given or pronounced: but instead thereof the judge shall pronounce such person contumacious and in contempt, and within ten days shall signify the same into Chancery in a form annexed to the act, as hath heretofore been done in signifying excommunications: and thereupon a writ de Contumace capiendo (in form annexed to the act) shall issue out of Chancery directed and returnable, and of like force as the former writ de excommunicato capiendo; and upon the appearance, or obedience or submission of the party, the ecclesiastical judge shall pronounce him absolved from the contumacy, and shall order him to be discharged.—The jurisdiction of ecclesiastical courts to excommunicate, is reserved in definitive sentences, &c. pronounced as spiritual censures for offences of ecclesiastical cognisance: But it is provided that no person so pronounced excommunicate shall incur any civil penalty or incapacity whatever, except such imprisonment, not exceeding six months, as the ecclesiastical court shall direct, and which sentence shall be signified into Chancery, and thereon the writ de excom. cap. shall issue and be forwarded, and the party be kept in custody for the term directed, or until absolved. The like enactments were made as to Ireland, by stat. 54 G. 3. c. 68. The ancient decisions as to excommunication, and the effect of it, and the proceedings therein, are here preserved as matter of curious information and as applying in some particulars by analogy to the provisions of the statutes in cases of sentences of contumacy.

An excommunicated person was disabled to do any act required to be done by one that is probus and legalis homo. He could not serve upon juries, nor be a witness in any court, nor bring an action, either real or personal, to recover lands or money due to him. Litt. § 201.

In some cases persons incur excommunication ipso facto by act of parliament; but they are first to be convicted of the offence by law, and the conviction is transmitted to the Ordinary. Dyer, 275. 1 Ventr. 146.

By stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 4. "if any person shall smite, or lay violent hands upon any other, either in any church of church-yard, then ipso facto every person so offending shall be deemed excommunicate, and be excluded from the fellowship and company of Christ's congregation."

And it is further enacted by the said statute, "That if any person shall maliciously strike any person with any weapon in any church or church-yard, or shall draw any weapon in any church or church-yard, to the intent to strike another with the same weapon, then every person so offending shall stand ipso facto excommunicated as aforesaid." See title Church.

By the stat. 3 Jac. 1. cap. 5. §§ 11 & 12. it is enacted, "That every popish recusant convict shall stand to all intents and purposes disabled, as a person lawfully excommunicated." See this Dict. title Papist.

By stat. 9 E. 3. Bishops may excommunicate, not only all perturbers of the peace of the church, but also felons, and other offenders, &c. And by the ecclesiastical laws, excommunicated persons are not permitted to have Christian burial.

The bishop's certificate, if he die before the return of the writ, shall not be received, for his successor shall certify; the significavit must mention that the party lived within the diocese where he was excommunicated, and by what bishop; if it be pleaded, the time when is to be shewn; and excommunication must be declared in the ecclesiastical court before they proceed, &c. 8 Rep. 68. Cro. Jac. 82. Moor, Ca. 667. Latch. 174. Hetley, 86. See this Dict. title Abatement, I. 2. 6.

It is not necessary that the party should be resident in the diocese at the time of the excommunication; it is sufficient if he were there at the time of the citation. 7 Term Rep. K. B. 153.

It hath been adjudged that the spiritual court hath not power to meddle with the body of any persons whatsoever, or to send process to take them; for if a person is excommunicated for contempt, &c. they ought to certify it into the Chancery, whence it is sent into B. R. and thence issues process. Cro. Eliz. 741. See post, title Excommunicato Capiendo.

If a person be unjustly excommunicated for a matter of which the spiritual court hath not conuzance, and he is taken on a writ of excommunicato capiendo, the party grieved shall have a writ out of Chancery to the sheriff, to deliver him out of prison. 2 Inst. 623. 12 Co. 76. F. N. B. 141.

So if the spiritual court proceeds inverso ordine; as if they refuse a copy of the libel, &c. a prohibition shall go with a clause to absolve and deliver the party injured. 1 Sid. 232.

Also if a man be excommunicated, and offers to obey and perform the sentence, and the bishop refuseth to accept it, and to assoil him, he shall have a writ to the bishop, requiring him, upon performance of the sentence, to assoil him; and the reason thereof is, for that by the excommunication the party is disabled to sue any action, or to have any remedy for any wrong done unto him, so long as he shall remain excommunicate; and also the party grieved may have his action upon his case against the bishop, in like manner as he may when the bishop doth excommunicate him for a matter which belongeth not to the ecclesiastical conuzance; also the bishop, in those cases, may be indicted at the suit of the King. 2 Inst. 623.

But if the excommunication be for a just cause, the party must make present satisfaction before he can be absolved, or he must put in caution, that he will hereafter perform that which the bishop shall reasonably and according to law enjoin him; which caution, in the Civil Law, is of three sorts: 1. Fidejussoria, as when a man bindeth himself with sureties to perform somewhat. 2. Pignoratio, or realis cautio, as when a man engageth goods or mortgageth lands for the performance. 3. Juratoria, when the party who is to perform any thing taketh a corporal oath to do it; which last is now the most frequent method.

This method of taking caution was held to be against law. 1 Bulst. 122.———But was afterwards, on great debate, held to be good; and that the bishop having a discretionary power herein, it was as much in his option to take caution by obligation as by either of the two other methods. 2 Lev. 36. Raym. 225.

If the sentence of the greater instead of the lesser excommunication be pronounced, it is only a ground of appeal: the court of K. B. will not quash the writ de excom. cap. for that objection. 7 Term Rep. 153.

If after a person is excommunicated, there comes a general act of pardon, which pardons all contempts, &c. it seems that this offence is taken away without any formal absolution. See Cro. Car. 199. Cro. Jac. 212. 8 Co. 68. 1 Jon. 227. 2 Lev. 36. Gibs. Cod. 1110.

EXCOMMUNICATO CAPIENDO. A writ directed to the sheriff for apprehending him who stands obstinately excommunicated. If within forty days after sentence of excommunication has been published in the Church, the offender does not submit and abide by the sentence of the Spiritual Court, the bishop may signify, i. e. certify, such contempt to the King in Chancery. Upon which there issues out this writ to the sheriff of the county, called, from the bishop's certificate, a significavit: or, from its effect, a writ de excommunicato capiendo. And the sheriff shall thereupon take the offender and imprison him in the county gaol till he is reconciled to the church, and such reconciliation certified by the bishop. F. N. B. 62.

This writ (except in cases of definitive sentences pronounced as spiritual censures for offences of ecclesiastical cognisance, is now, by the statutes 52 Geo. 3. c. 127. 54 Geo. 3. c. 68.) superseded by the writ de contumace capiendo. See the provisions of the statutes under title Excommunication.

By the stat. 5 Eliz. c. 23. writs de excommunicato capiendo, shall issue out of the Court of Chancery in term time, and be returnable in B. R. &c. They shall be brought sealed into the King's Bench, and there opened and delivered of record to the sheriff, and there must be twenty days between the teste and the return: and if the sheriff return a non est inventus on the writ, a capias with proclamation is to be granted for the party to yield his body to gaol under the penalty of 10*l.* And if he do not appear on the first capias and proclamation, a second is to go forth, and he is to forfeit 20*l.* &c. This statute is extended to writs de contumace capiendo, under stat. 52 Geo. 3. c. 127.

But, by the statute, if in the excommunicato capiendo, the party excommunicated hath not a sufficient addition, as to his place of dwelling, &c. according to 1 H. 5. c. 5. he shall not incur the penalties in this act for his contempt, in not rendering himself prisoner upon the capias, &c. 2 Inst. 661.

A writ de excom. cap. stating that the defendant was excommunicated in a cause of defamation and slander merely spiritual, is good. 7 Term. Rep. K. B. 153.

EXCOMMUNICATO DELIBERANDO. A writ to the sheriff for delivery of an excommunicate person out of prison, upon certificate from the ordinary of his conformity to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction. F. N. B. 63. Reg. Orig. 67. And where a man is unduly excommunicated, he may be delivered, in some cases, by an habeas corpus; and sometimes by pleading, as well as by an excommunicato deliberando: also sometimes by prohibition, &c. And on a general pardon, the party may have a writ to the bishop to absolve him. 12 Rep. 76. Latch. 205. Godb. 272. If a plaintiff in an action be excommunicate, and after he gets letters of absolution, on shewing them in court, he may have a re-summons, &c. upon his original. 1 Inst. 133.

EXCOMMUNICATO RECIPIENDO, or rather Recapiendo.] A writ whereby persons excommunicated being for their obstinacy committed to prison, and unlawfully delivered, before they have given caution to obey the authority of the church, are commanded to be sought after, retaken, and imprisoned again. Reg. Orig. 67.—If a person after his commitment escapes, and the sheriff has not returned his writ, a capias excommunicatum de novo shall go, otherwise if the writ be returned. Mod. Ca. 78.

EXCULPATION, Letters of. The warrant to an offender indicted, for citing witnesses in his own defence. Scotch Dict.

EXECUTION, Executio.] Signifies the last performance of an act, as of a judgment, &c. It is the obtaining possession of any thing recovered by judgment of law. 1 Inst. 289.

Sir Edw. Coke, in his Reports, makes two sorts of executions; one final, another with a quousque, tending to an end: an execution final is that which makes money of the defendant's goods, or extends his lands, and delivers them to the plaintiff, which he accepts in satisfaction, and is the end of the suit, and all that the king's writ requires to be done; the other writ with a quousque, though it tendeth to an end, is not final: as in case of a capias ad satisfaciendum, which is not a final execution, but the body of the party is to be taken, to the intent the plaintiff be satisfied his debt, &c. and the imprisonment of the defendant not being absolute, but until he do satisfy the same. 6 Rep. 87.

Execution, in the usual legal sense of the word, is a judicial writ grounded on the judgment of the court from whence it issues: and is supposed to be granted by the court at the request of the party at whose suit it is issued, to give him satisfaction on the judgment which he hath obtained; and therefore an execution cannot be sued out in one court, upon a judgment obtained in another. Impey, K. B.

This execution, or putting the law in force, is performed in different manners, according to the nature of the action upon which it is founded, and of the judgment which is had or recovered.

If the plaintiff recovers in an action real or mixed, whereby the seisin or possession of land is awarded to him, the writ of execution shall be an Habere facias seisinam, or writ of seisin of a freehold; or an Habere facias possessionem, or writ of possession of a chattel interest. Finch L. 470. See this Dict. those titles. These are writs directed to the sheriff of the county, commanding him to give actual possession to the plaintiff of the land so recovered, in the execution of which the sheriff may take with him the posse comitatûs, or power of the county, and may justify breaking open doors, if the possession be not quietly delivered. See post, III, 3. But if it be peaceably yielded up, the delivery of a twig, a turf, or the ring of a door, in the name of seisin, is sufficient execution of the writ. 3 Comm. 412.

Upon a presentation to a benefice recovered in a quare impedit, or assise of darrein presentment, the execution is by a writ de clerico admittendo; directed not to the sheriff, but to the bishop or archbishop, and requiring him to admit and institute the clerk of the plaintiff. See titles Admittendo clerico, Advowson.

In other actions, where the judgment is that something special be done or rendered by the defendant, then, in order to compel him so to do, and to see the judgment executed, a special writ of execution issues to the sheriff according to the nature of the case. As upon an assise of nuisance, or quod permittat prosternere, where one part of the judgment is that the nuisance be removed, a writ goes to the sheriff to abate it at the charge of the party; which likewise issues in case of an indictment. Comb. 10. See title Nuisance.

Upon a replevin the writ of execution is the writ de retorno habendo; to have a return of the cattle distrained; and if the distress be eloigned, the defendant shall have a Capias in Withernam; but on the plaintiff's tendering the damages, and submitting to a fine, the process in Withernam shall be stayed. 2 Leon. 174. See titles Replevin; Distress; Withernam. In detinue, after judgment the plaintiff shall have a distringas to compel the defendant to deliver the goods by repeated distresses of his chattels: (1 Ro. Ab. 737. Rast. Ent. 215:) or else a scire facias against any third person in whose hands they may happen to be, to shew cause why they should not be delivered: and if the defendant still continues obstinate, then (if the judgment be by default or on demurrer) the sheriff shall summon an inquest to ascertain the value of the goods, and the plaintiff's damages: which (being either so assessed, or by the verdict in case of an issue, Bro. Ab. tit. Damages, 29.) shall be levied on the person or goods of the defendant. See title Detinue. So that after all, in Replevin and Detinue, the only actions for recovering the specific possession of personal chattels, if the wrong-doer be very perverse, he cannot be compelled to the restitution of the identical thing taken or detained; but he has still his election to deliver the goods or their value. Keilw. 64.

Executions, in actions where money only is recovered, as a debt or damages, are of five sorts. 1. Against the body of the defendant. 2. Against his goods and chattels. 3. Against his goods and the profits of his lands. 4. Against his goods and the possession of his lands. 5. Against all three, his body, lands, and goods.

1. The first of these species of execution is by writ of capias ad satisfaciendum, (shortly called a Ca. sa.) to take and imprison the body of the debtor till satisfaction be made for the debt, costs, and damages. See this Dict. title Capias. Sir Edward Coke gives a singular instance where a defendant in 14 Ed. 3. was discharged from a capias because he was of so advanced an age that he could not undergo the pain of imprisonment. 1 Inst. 289. This writ is an execution of the highest nature, inasmuch as it deprives a man of his liberty till he makes the satisfaction awarded; and therefore when a man is once taken in execution upon this writ, no other process can be sued out against his lands or goods. Only by stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 24. if the defendant dies while charged in execution upon this writ, the plaintiff may, after his death, sue out a new execution against his lands, goods, or chattels.

If a Ca. sa. is sued out, and a non est inventus is returned thereon, the plaintiff may sue out a process against the bail, if any were given; who stipulate in this triple alternative, that the defendant shall, if condemned in the suit, satisfy the plaintiff his debt and costs, or surrender himself a prisoner; or that they will pay it for him: as therefore the two former branches of the alternative are neither of them complied with, the latter must immediately take place. Lutw. 1269, 1273. In order to which a writ of scire facias may be sued out against the bail, commanding them to shew cause why the plaintiff should not have execution against them for his debt and damages; and on such writ, if they shew no sufficient cause, or the defendant does not surrender himself on the day of the return, or of shewing cause, the plaintiff may have judgment against the bail; and take out a writ of Ca. sa. or other process of execution against them. See titles Bail; Scire Facias—Post.

2. The next species of execution is against the goods and chattels of the defendant, and is called a writ of Fieri Facias, from the words in it where the sheriff is commanded that he cause to be made of the goods and chattels of the defendant, the sum or debt recovered. This lies as well against privileged persons, peers, &c. as other common persons; and against executors or administrators, with regard to the goods of the deceased. The sheriff may not break open any outer doors to execute either this writ or the writ of Ca. sa. but must enter peaceably; and may then break open any inner door belonging to the defendant, in order to take the goods. 5 Rep. 92. Palm. 54. See post, III, 3. And the sheriff may sell the goods and chattels of the defendant, even an estate for years, which is a chattel real, (8 Rep. 171.) till he has raised enough to satisfy the judgment and costs; first paying the landlord of the premises upon which the goods are found the arrears of rent then due, not exceeding one year's rent in the whole. Stat. 8 An. c. 14. See titles Distress; Rent. If part only of the debt be levied on a Fieri Facias, the plaintiff may have a Ca. sa. for the residue. 1 Ro. Ab. 904. Cro. Eliz. 344. See further this Dict. titles Fieri Facias; Venditioni Exponas.

3. A third species of execution is by writ of Levari facias; which affects a man's goods, and the profits of his lands, by commanding the sheriff to levy the plaintiff's debt on the lands and goods of the defendant; whereby the sheriff may seize all his goods, and receive the rents and profits of his lands, till satisfaction be made to the plaintiff. Finch, L. 471. Little use is now made of this writ; the remedy by elegit, which takes possession of the lands themselves, being much more effectual. But, as a species of this levari facias may be considered a writ of execution proper only to ecclesiastics, which is given when the sheriff, upon a common writ of execution sued, returns that the defendant is a beneficed clerk, having no lay fee. In this case a writ goes to the bishop of the diocese, in the nature of a levari or fieri facias, to levy the debt and damages de bonis ecclesiasticis, which are not to be touched by lay hands: and thereupon the bishop sends out a sequestration of the profits of the clerk's benefice, directed to the churchwardens to collect the same, and pay them to the plaintiff till the full sum be raised. Reg. Orig. 300. Burn E. L. 329. 2 Inst. 472. Jenk. 207. See further title Levari Facias.

4. The fourth species of execution is by the writ of Elegit, which is a judicial writ given by stat. W. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 18. either upon judgment for a debt or damages, or upon the forfeiture of a recognizance taken in the King's court. By the common law, a man could only have satisfaction of goods, chattels, and the present profits of lands, by the two writs of execution last-mentioned, (2 and 3;) but not the possession of the lands themselves, which was a natural consequence of the feodal principles prohibiting alienation of lands. See this Dict. title Tenure.

By this writ of Elegit, the defendant's goods and chattels are not sold, but only appraised; and all of them, except oxen and beasts of the plough, are delivered to the plaintiff at such reasonable appraisement and price, in part of satisfaction of his debt. If the goods are not sufficient, then the moiety, or one half of his freehold lands, which he had at the time of the judgment given, whether held in his own name, or any other in trust for him, are also to be delivered to the plaintiff: to hold till out of the rents and profits thereof the debt be levied, or till the defendant's interest be expired; as till the death of the defendant, if he be tenant for life, or in tail. 2 Inst. 395. Stat. 29 Car. 2 c. 3.

It is upon feodal principles also, that copyhold lands are not liable to be taken in execution upon a judgment. 1 Ro. Ab. 888. But in case of a debt to the King, it appears by Magna Charta, c. 8. that it was allowed by the common law for him to take possession of the lands till the debt was paid.

This execution, or seizing of lands by elegit, is of so high a nature, that after it the body of the defendant cannot be taken: but if execution can only be had of the goods because there are no lands, and such goods are not sufficient to pay the debt, a Ca. sa. may then be had after the elegit; for such elegit is in this case no more in effect than a fieri facias. Hob. 58.

Thus it appears that body and goods may be taken in execution; or land and goods; but not body and land too upon any judgment between subject and subject, in the course of the common law; but

5. Upon some prosecutions given by statute; as in the case of recognizances or debts acknowledged on Statute Merchant, or Statute Staple; (pursuant to stat. 13 E. 1. de Mercatoribus; 27 E. 3. c. 9. see this Dict. those titles;) upon forfeiture of these the body, lands, and goods may all be taken at once in execution to compel the payment of the debt. The process hereon is usually called an Extent or extendi facias; because the sheriff is to cause the lands, &c. to be appraised to their full extended value, before he delivers them to the plaintiff, that it may be certainly known how soon the debt will be satisfied. F. N. B. 131. See this Dict. title Extent.

By stat. 33 H. 8. c. 39. all obligations made to the King shall have the same force, and of consequence the same remedy to recover them, as a statute-staple: though indeed before this statute, the King was entitled to sue out execution against the body, lands, and goods of his accountant or debtor. 3 Rep. 12. And his debt shall, in suing out execution, be preferred to that of every other creditor who hath not obtained judgment before the King commenced his suit. Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 39. § 74.

The King's judgment also affects lands which the King's debtor hath at or after the time of contracting his debt, or which any of his officers mentioned in stat. 13 Eliz. c. 4. hath at or after the time of his entering on the office: so that if such officer of the Crown aliens for a valuable consideration, the land shall be liable to the King's debt, even in the hands of a bonâ fide purchaser: though the debt due to the King was contracted by the vendor many years after the alienation. 10 Rep. 55, 6. 8 Rep. 171. And see stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 35. which enables the Court of Exchequer, on application by the Attorney-General by motion, to order the estate of any debtor to the King, and of the heirs and assigns of such debtor, in any lands extended, to be sold as the court shall direct; the conveyance to be made by the remembrancer of the court, by Bargain and Sale, to be inrolled in that court.

Judgments between subject and subject related, even at common law, no farther back than the first day of the Term in which they were recovered, in respect of the lands of the debtor; and did not bind his goods and chattels but from the date of the writ of execution: and now by the statute of frauds, 29 Car. 2. c. 3. the judgment shall not bind the land in the hands of a bonâ fide purchaser, but only from the day of actually signing the same, which is directed by the statute to be punctually entered on the record: nor shall the writ of execution bind the goods in the hands of a stranger or a purchaser, (Skin. 257.) but only from the actual delivery of the writ to the sheriff or other officer, who is therefore ordered to indorse on the back of it the day of his receiving the same. See further this Dict. title Judgment: and as to the prerogative of the crown, post, IV, 2. and on the subject in general, 3 Comm. c. 26.

The Reader may now pursue his inquiries under the following divisions:

I. Of the Nature and several Kinds of Executions, and what Things were liable thereto at Common Law, &c.

II. Of the Judgments on which the several Executions may be taken out, and where the Party shall be concluded by the Election of one of them, &c.

III. 1. By whom, against whom. 2. At what Time, Executions may be sued. 3. By whom, and how they shall be executed. 4. How they are to be released and discharged.

IV. 1. To what time Executions shall relate, so as to avoid Alienation; 2. Of the King's Prerogative in respect of Executions.

V. 1. Of the Party's Remedy against irregular Executions; 2. Of the Offence of obstructing Executions.

The writs of execution at Common Law were only a fieri facias on the goods and chattels, and a levari facias to levy the debt or damages upon the land and chattels: The ca. sa. was given by construction of the stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 17. and the elegit, by stat. Westm. 2. c. 18. which makes the body liable, and the future profits of lands, &c. 1 Inst. 154. 2 Inst. 394.

The reason why by the Common Law, where a subject had execution for debt or damages, he could not have the body of the defendant, or his lands, in execution, (unless it were in special cases,) was, that the defendant's body might be at liberty, not only to follow his own affairs and business, but also to serve his King and country; and taking away the possession of his lands would hinder the following of his husbandry and tillage. 2 Inst. 394.

Though neither the body nor lands of the debtor on a judgment could be taken in execution at Common Law, but only his goods; yet in action of debt against an heir, upon the bond of his ancestor, his land which he had by descent was subject to be taken in execution. 3 Rep. 11. In action of debt against the heir upon his ancestor's bond, there was judgment by nihil dicit: and it was held that the plaintiff should have execution against the heir, of any of his own lands or goods. Dyer, 89, 149. Judgment was had against the heir by nil dicit, and a scire facias being brought against him to have execution, he pleaded riens per descent; it was adjudged that this plea was too late after the judgment by nil dicit, and the execution shall be on his own lands. Dyer, 344.

But there is a difference between a scire facias and an action of debt brought against an heir upon a bond of his ancestor, in which the heir is named. Poph. 193. On a judgment for the debt of an ancestor, where the heir hath made over lands descended to him, execution may be taken against such heir to the value of the land, &c. for the debt of his ancestor, as if it were his own debt. Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 14. § 5. See title Fraud.

If a person have judgment given against him for debt or damages, or be bound in a recognizance, and dieth, and his heir be within age, no execution shall be sued of the lands during the minority; and against an heir within age, no execution shall be sued upon a statute-merchant or staple, &c. 1 Inst. 290.

No execution for damages recovered in a real action, shall be had by capias ad satisfaciendum: but where a man hath judgment to recover lands and damages, he may have execution of both together. 8 Rep. 141.

Whatever may be assigned or granted may be taken on an execution. Nothing can be taken in execution that cannot be sold, as deeds, writings, &c. Bank-notes, &c. cannot be taken in execution; as they remain, in some measure, choses in action. Hardw. 53.

If there are chattels sufficient, the sheriff ought not to take the lands; nor may things fixed to the freehold, goods bought bonâ fide, goods pawned, &c. be taken in execution. 8 Rep. 143. And if a defendant hides his goods in secret places, so that the plaintiff cannot take them in execution, it is said no action will lie against him. 5 Rep. 92, 93.

The sheriff cannot take the goods of a stranger, for he is to take the goods of the party only at his peril. And if a bailiff on a fi. fa. against the goods of A. take those of B. an action of trespass lies against the sheriff. Doug. 40. If on execution against one of two partners, the partnership effects be taken and sold, the court will order the sheriff to pay over to the other, a share of the produce, proportioned to his share in the partnership effects, to be ascertained by the master. Doug. 650. Eddie v. Davidson.

If the plaintiff cannot find sufficient effects to satisfy his judgment, the court will order the sheriff to retain for his use money which he has levied in an action at the suit of the defendant. Doug. 231. But Money, the surplus of a former execution against the defendant's goods, was refused to be stayed in the hands of a former sheriff, for the purpose of satisfying another execution at the suit of the same plaintiff against the same defendant, who had no other effects on which the sheriff in office could levy. Fieldhouse v. Croft, 4 East's Rep. 510. and see 9 East's Rep. 48.

By stat. 56 Geo. 3. c. 50. for regulating the sale of farming stock taken in execution, it is enacted that no sheriff, &c. shall sell or carry off from any lands any straw, chaff, turnips, or manure, in any case whatever, nor any hay or other produce, contrary to the covenants to which the tenant is subject, of which the tenant must give notice; but shall dispose of such crops or produce subject to agreement to spend them on the land; and sheriffs are indemnified for acting under the provisions of the act.

II. When a judgment is signed, execution may be taken out immediately upon it, and need not be delayed till it is entered, it being a perfect judgment of the court before entered. Co. Lit. 505. And if the judges of the court of B. R. see one against whom there is a judgment of that court walk in Westminster-Hall, they may send an officer to take him up if the plaintiff desire it, without a writ of execution. 7 Mod. 52. If execution be not sued within a year and a day after judgment, where there is no fault in the defendant, as if writ of error be not brought, &c. there must be a scire facias to revive the judgment, which, in that time, may be had without moving the court; but if it be of longer standing, the court is to be moved for it. 1 Inst. 290. 2 Inst. 771. But if the defendant be outlawed after judgment, (as he may where he cannot be taken in execution, or hath no lands or goods to pay the debt, &c. when the suit is commenced by original,) the plaintiff need not renew the judgment by scire facias to obtain execution after a year. 1 Inst. 290.

It hath been adjudged that, by the Common Law, if a man was outlawed after judgment in debt, the plaintiff was at the end of his suit, and he could have no other process after that personally, but was put to his new original, &c. 2 Nels. Abr. 772. If one be arrested upon process in B. R. and puts in bail; and afterwards the plaintiff recovers, and the defendant renders not himself according to law, in safeguard of his bail, the plaintiff may, at his election, take execution against the principal, or his bail, after judgment against them; but if he takes the bail, he shall never afterwards meddle with the principal. Cro. Jac. 320.

If one recovers jointly against two in debt, the execution must be joint against them: the court cannot divide an execution which is entire, and grounded on the judgment. Mich. 24 Car. B. R.

A man and his wife recovered in an action of debt against the defendant 100*l.* and damages; then the wife died, and the husband prayed to have execution upon this judgment: the court at first inclined, that it should not survive to the husband, but that administration ought to be committed of it, as a thing in action; but at last they agreed that the husband might take out execution, for that by the judgment it became his debt due to him in his own right. Cro. Car. 608. 1 Mod. Rep. 179, 180. See titles Baron and Feme.

If judgment be against two, on the death of one the plaintiff shall have execution by scire facias against the survivor; and though he pleads that the other defendant has an heir alive, &c. it will not prevent it. Raym. 26. And where two persons recover in debt, and before execution one of them dies; it has been held that execution may be sued in both their names by the survivor, and it will be no error which may be done without a scire facias. Noy, 150. An execution may be executed after the death of the defendant; for his executor being privy, is bound as well as the testator; and where execution is once begun it cannot be delayed, unless there appears irregularity; and audita querela is no supersedeas to it, nor shall any thing stop the sheriff from selling, &c. Cro. Eliz. 73. Comberb. 33. 389.

Though a man can have but one execution; yet it must be intended an execution with satisfaction, and the body of the defendant is no satisfaction, only a pledge for the debt. 5 Rep. 486. When therefore a person dies in execution, it is without satisfaction; so that the plaintiff may have a fieri facias against the goods, or elegit against the lands. This was not so at Common Law, Hob. 57. but it is given by stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 24. Where a person however was taken on a capias utlagatum, and died in prison, the plaintiff having chosen this execution, which is the highest in law, it has been held that the defendant dying, the law will adjudge it a satisfaction. Cro. Eliz. 850.

If a sheriff make a seizure under a writ of fieri facias, the plaintiff cannot take the defendant in execution under a writ of ca. sa. until the writ of fi. fa. is returned, though he abandon the seizure of the goods. Miller v. Parnel, 6 W. P. Taunton, 370.

If an execution be executed and filed, the party can have no other execution upon that judgment; because there can be but one execution with satisfaction upon one judgment: but if the execution be not returned and filed, another execution may be had: and if only part of the debt be levied on a fieri facias, another writ of execution may be sued out for the residue thereof. 1 Lill. Abr. 565. If one take out any writs of execution, and they have no effect, he may have other writs on their failure. Hob. 57.

In case any prisoner committed in execution shall escape, any creditor at whose suit he stands charged, may retake him by a new capias ad satisfaciendum, or sue forth any other kind of execution, as if the body of such prisoner had never been taken in execution. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. See title Escape. Where two are bound jointly and severally, and judgment is had against both of them, if one in execution escapes, the creditor may take out execution against the other; but if he go by licence of the creditor, then the other will be discharged. Cro. Car. 53. If one in execution be delivered by privilege of parliament, when the privilege ceases the plaintiff may sue out a new execution against him. Stat. 1. Jac. 1. c. 13.

See stat. 41 Geo. 3. (U. K.) c. 90. by which it is provided, that where in any suit between party and party in England, any order shall be made for payment of money by the Court of Chancery, a copy thereof shall be certified into the Court of Chancery in Ireland and inrolled there, and process issued thereon: and so vice versa, on order of the Court of Chancery of Ireland, which shall, in like manner, be enforced and executed in England. § 5, 6.

III. 1. No person is entitled to, or can sue out execution, who is not privy to the judgment, or intitled to the thing recovered, as heir, executor, or administrator to him who has judgment. 1 Rol. Abr. 889.

If one have judgment to recover lands, and die before execution, his heir shall have it; and where tenant in tail recovers and dies before the execution without issue, he in remainder may sue out execution: an heir is to have execution for lands, and the executor or administrator for damages. Co. Litt, 251. Dyer, 26. The executors of executors may sue out execution of a judgment; but an administrator getting judgment in behalf of the intestate, and then dying, neither his executor or administrator shall take out the execution, but the administrator de bonis non administratis of the first intestate. 5 Rep. 9. And see stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 8.

But if an administrator, durante minori ætate of an executor, recovers in debt, and before execution the executor comes of age, he shall have a scire facias on this judgment; for carrying on the suit in right of the executor, made the executor privy thereto. 1 Rol. Abr. 888, 889.

After interlocutory judgment against a woman upon a contract, she marries, yet the plaintiff may proceed to judgment and execution against her without joining the husband by scire facias. And a capias ad satisfaciendum against her following the judgment, is at all events regular, though the plaintiff had notice of the marriage before. 4 East's Rep. 521.

If a man has judgment for the arrears of rent, and dies, his executor shall sue out execution, and not the heir; for by the recovery it becomes a chattel vested, to which the executor is entitled. 1 Rol. Abr. 880.

If a statute be entered into, to husband and wife, and the husband dies, the wife shall take out execution. 1 Rol. Abr. 889. So if husband and wife recover lands and damages, and the husband dies, the wife shall have execution of the damages, and not the executors of the husband. 1 Rol. Abr. 342. 889, 890. See titles Baron and Feme.

If there be judgment in debt against two, and one dies, a scire facias lies against the other alone, reciting the death: and he cannot plead that the heir of him that is dead has assets by descent, and demand judgment, if he ought to be charged alone; for at Common Law, the charge upon a judgment being personal, survived, and the statute of Westm. 2. that gives the elegit does not take away the remedy of the plaintiff at Common Law; and therefore the party may take out his execution which way he pleases; for the words of the statute are, fit in electione; but if he should after the allowance of this writ, and revival of the judgment, take out an elegit to charge the land, the party may have remedy by suggestion, or else by audita querela. Raym. 26. 1 Lev. 30. 1 Keb. 92. 123. S. C.

By the Common Law, if judgment be given against a man for debt or damages, and the defendant dies before execution sued, his heir within age is not liable to execution during his minority; but the parol must demur (i. e. the plea must stand still) in such case till he comes of age. Co. Lit. 290. a. 1 Rol. Abr. 140.

And this privilege of infancy does not only protect the infant, but all others who are affected by the judgment; as if there be father and two daughters, and judgment be given for debt against the father, who dies, one of the daughters being within age, partition being made, the eldest shall not be charged alone, but shall have the benefit of her sister's minority, which puts a stop to the execution. Co. Lit. 290. a.

There can be no execution taken out against a member of parliament during privilege of parliament: also no capias can issue against a peer; for even in the case of a private person at Common Law, the body was not liable to creditors; and the statute of Ed. 3. which subjects the body does not extend to peers, because their persons are sacred: the law also supposes that persons thus distinguished by the King have wherewithal otherwise to satisfy their creditors. 6 Co. 52. Hob. 61. Cro. Car. 205.

A capias ad satisfaciendum may be executed upon a prisoner in prison for felony; and if he be acquitted of the felony, the sheriff is to keep him. 1 Lil. Abr. 567. But where a person is in prison for criminal matters, he ought not to be charged with a civil action without leave of the court; yet if he be charged, he shall not be discharged. Raym. 58. See 7 Mod. 153. and this Dict. title Prisoner.

A ca. sa. will lie against a man who is outlawed for felony, and he may be taken in execution at the suit of a common person. Owen, 69. And if he was taken upon a capias utlagat. which was at the King's suit, he shall be in execution at the suit of the party if he will. Moor, 566. But this is not prayer of the party: and if after a judgment given, the judges of their own heads, or at the request of any person, without prayer of the plaintiff, commit the defendant to prison; by this he shall not be said to be in execution for the plaintiff. Dyer, 297. If one arrested be in prison for debt, and judgment is had against him; though it be in arrest on a latitat or capias, he shall not be in execution upon the judgment, unless the plaintiff prays it of record, or sues a capias ad satisfaciendum, and delivers it to the sheriff. Dyer, 167. 306. Jenk. Cent. 165.

In ejectment against a feme sole who married before trial, and verdict and judgment against her by her original name: held that it was regular to issue an habere facias possessionem, and fi. fa. against her by the same name, though the latter was inoperative. Doe, d. Taggart, v. Butcher, Term Rep. K. B. Hil. 55 Geo. 3. 557.

2. At Common Law in real actions, where land was recovered, the demandant, after the year, might take out a scire facias to revive his judgment; because the judgment being particular in the real action, quoad the lands with a certain description, the law required that the execution of that judgment should be entered upon the roll, that it might be seen whether execution was delivered of the same thing of which judgment was given: a scire facias issued to show cause why execution should not be. 2 Inst. 471. 5 Co. 88. Cro. Eliz. 416. 6 Mod. 288.

But if the plaintiff, after he had obtained judgment in any personal action, had lain quiet, and had taken no process of execution within the year, he was put to a new original upon his judgment, and no scire facias was issuable at law on the judgment, because there was not a judgment for any particular thing in the personal action, with which the execution could be compared; therefore after a reasonable time, which was a year and a day, it was presumed to be executed, and the law allowed him no scire facias to shew cause why there should not be execution; but if the party had slipped his time, he was put to his action on the judgment, and the defendant was obliged to shew how that debt of which the judgment was an evidence, was discharged. 2 Inst. 469. Carth. 30, 31. 1 Sid. 351.

To remedy this, and to make the forms of proceeding more uniform in both actions, the stat. of Westm. 2. cap. 45. gave the scire facias to the plaintiff to revive the judgment, where he had omitted to sue execution within the year after judgment obtained.

A scire facias lies on a judgment in ejectment; for the words of the act are, Sive servitia, sive consuetudines, sive alia quæcunque irrotulata, which comprehend all judgments, and give the like remedy on them by scire facias, as the demandant had on a judgment in a real action at Common Law. 1 Sid. 351. 2 Salk. 600.

But though the general rule be that the plaintiff cannot take out execution after the year and day without a scire facias, yet the rule must be understood with some restrictions.

If a Fi. fa. Ca. sa. or Elegit be taken out within the year, and returned and awarded on the roll, the same may be continued from term to term to the time of the execution thereof, although after the year; and be as effectual as if the judgment had been revived by scire facias. N. on R. E. 5 Geo. 2. But a Fi. fa. must be left with the proper officer before he will make the entry on the roll returned by the sheriff. Imp. K. B.

If the defendant brings a writ of error, and thereby hinders the plaintiff from taking his execution within the year, and the plaintiff in error is nonsuit, or the judgment affirmed, the defendant in error may proceed to execution after the year without a scire facias, because the writ of error was a supersedeas to the execution, and the plaintiff must acquiesce till he hears the judgment above; besides, while the cause is still sub judice, it is not known whether the plaintiff shall recover or not, and the year for the execution ought to be accounted from the final judgment given. Cro. Jac. 364. Yelv. 7. 1 Rol. Abr. 899. 4 Leon. 197. 5 Co. 88. Carth. 236, 237. 6 Mod. 288.

The Court refused to stay execution after verdict and judgment, which was affirmed on error, until the trial of an indictment for perjury against two of the plaintiff's witnesses in the action. Warwick v. Bruce, Term Rep. K. B. East. 55 G. 3. 140.

Leave refused to take out an execution, after a writ of error, where it did not appear but that the declaration of the defendant, that he would sue out a writ of error and delay the plaintiff, was made before an action pending. An affidavit for grounding a rule for leave to take out execution, notwithstanding a writ of error may be sworn before judgment signed. Baskett v. Barnard, Term Rep. K. B. Trin. 55 G. 3. 330.

If the plaintiff hath a judgment, with stay of execution for a year, he may, after the year, take out his execution without the scire facias, because the delay is by consent of parties, and in favour of the defendant; and the indulgence of the plaintiff shall not turn to his prejudice, nor ought the defendant to be allowed any advantage of it, when it appears to be done for his advantage, and at his instance. 6 Mod. 288. 1 Rol. Rep. 104.

But if the defendant had been tied up by an injunction out of Chancery for a year, yet he cannot take out execution without a scire facias, because the courts of law do not take notice of Chancery injunctions as they do of writs of error; besides in that case, it had been no breach of the injunction to have taken out the execution within the year, and continued it down by vic' non misit breve, which cannot be done in the case of a writ of error, because that removes the record out of the court where the judgment was; and therefore there can be no proceedings below till it be affirmed, and returned to the inferior courts. 1 Salk. 322. 6 Mod. 288. S. C.

In debt, if defendant acknowledge the action for part, and as to the remainder pleads to issue, and the plaintiff hath judgment for that he confesseth; here he may not have execution till the issue is tried for that which he is to recover damages: though if he releases the damages, he may have execution presently for the rest. Rol. 897.

3. All judgments of inferior courts in debt are to be executed in the peculiar jurisdictions where given, and cannot be removed to be executed by the superior courts. Cro. Car. 34.

Now by stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 70. § 4. where final judgment shall be obtained in any suit in any inferior court of record, any of the courts at Westminster, on affidavit thereof, and that execution has issued against the defendant's person or effects, and that they are not to be found within the jurisdiction of such inferior court, may cause the record of the judgment to be removed into such superior court, to issue execution thereon in the same manner as in judgment obtained in the said superior courts.

If a judgment given in another court be affirmed or reversed for error in B. R. because the proceedings in the court below are entered upon record in the King's Bench, the party shall have execution in that court; and so if a judgment of debt, &c. in the Common Pleas be affirmed in B. R. on a writ of error. 5 Rep. 88. Though where the record of a judgment given in C. B. is removed into B. R. the party cannot take out execution upon it, without a scire facias quare executionem habere non debeat, 1 Lill. Abr. 562. And where a writ of error is brought in the Exchequer Chamber, to reverse a judgment in B. R. if the judgment is affirmed there, yet that court cannot make out execution upon the judgment affirmed; but the record must be transmitted back to the court of King's Bench, where execution must be done. 1 Lill. 565. See title Error.

As an execution is an entire thing, he who begins must end it; a new sheriff may distrain an old one to sell the goods on a distringas nuper vicecom' and to bring the money into court, or sell and deliver the money to the new sheriff; and the authority of the old sheriff continues by virtue of the first writ, so that when he hath seized, he is compellable to return the writ, and liable to answer the value according to the return; likewise by the seizure the property of the goods, &c. is divested out of the defendant, and he is discharged, whereby no further remedy can be had against him. 1 Salk. 322. 3 Salk. 159.

A sheriff shall have his fees for executions upon a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum for the whole debt upon a fieri fac. according to the sum levied; and on an elegit it is held by some, that he shall have fees according to what is levied, and by others, for the whole debt recovered, because the plaintiff may keep the land till he is satisfied the entire debt. 1 Salk. 333. Where the sheriff hath a fieri facias or ca. sa. against a man, and before execution he pays him the money, execution may not be done afterwards; if it be, trespass or false imprisonment lies. 5 Rep. 93. 12 Car. B. R. See title Sheriff.

It is laid down as a general rule in our books, that the sheriff, in executing any judicial writ, cannot break open the door of a dwelling-house; this privilege, which the law allows to a man's habitation, arises from the great regard the law has to every man's safety and quiet, and therefore protects them from the inconveniences which must necessarily attend an unlimited power in the sheriff and his officers in this respect; hence, every man's house is called his castle. 5 Co. 91. &c. 3 Inst. 162. Moor, 668. Yelv. 28. Cro. Eliz. 908. Dalt. Sher. 350.

Yet in favour of executions, which are the life of the law, and especially in cases of great necessity or where the safety of the King and Commonwealth are concerned, this general case hath the following exceptions:

1st. That whenever the process is at the suit of the king, the sheriff or his officer may, after request to have the door opened, and refusal, break and enter the house to do execution, either on the party's goods, or take his body, as the case shall be. 5 Co. 91. b.

2dly. So in a writ of seisin or habere facias possessionem in ejectment, the sheriff may justify breaking open the door if denied entrance by the tenant; for the end of the writ being to give the party full and actual possession, consequently the sheriff must have all power necessary for this end: besides, in this case, the law does not, after the judgment, look upon the house as belonging to the tenant, but to him who has recovered. 5 Co. 91.

3dly. Also this privilege of a man's house relates only to such execution as affects himself; and therefore if a fieri facias be directed to the sheriff to levy the goods of A. and it happens that A.'s goods are in the house of B. if after request made by the sheriff to B. to deliver these goods, he refuses, the sheriff may well justify the breaking and entering his house. 5 Co. 93. a. 1 Sid. 186.

4thly. It hath been adjudged that the sheriff, on a fieri facias, may break open the door of a barn, standing at a distance from the dwelling-house, without requesting the owner to open the door; in the same manner as he may enter a close, &c. 1 Sid. 186. 1 Keb. 698. S. C.

5thly. So on a fieri facias, when a sheriff or his officers are once in the house, they may break open any chamber-door or trunks for the completing execution. 2 Show. 87.

7thly. That if the sheriff, in executing a writ, breaks open a door, where he has no authority for so doing by law, yet the execution is good, and the party has no other remedy but an action of trespass against the sheriff. 5 Co. 93. a.

A sheriff finding the doors open may enter a house to search for the body of a debtor, under a writ of cap. ad satis. 4 W. P. Taunton, 619.

If the sheriff refuses to execute any judicial writ, this is a contempt to the court, for which an attachment will be granted. 1 Salk. 323.

So if he executes the writ, and makes a false return, the party injured may have an action on the case against him. 1 Salk. 323.

Although a sheriff make a warrant and seizure of goods under a fi. fa. last delivered to him, yet the plaintiff in a fi. fa. first delivered to the sheriff, is entitled to be first satisfied out of the fruits of that seizure. And if a second fi. fa. be delivered to a sheriff after he has the defendant's goods in possession under the prior fi. fa. of another, the goods are bound by the second execution, subject to the first execution, from the date of the delivery of the last writ to the sheriff; and that without warrant on the second writ, or further seizure. Jones v. Atherton, 7 W. P. Taunton, 56.

4. By a release of all suits execution is gone; for no one can have execution without prayer and suit, but the King only, in whose case the judges ought to award execution ex officio, without any suit: and a release of all executions bars the King. By release of all debts or duties, the defendant is discharged of the execution, because the debt or duty on which it is founded is discharged: but if the body of a man be taken in execution, and the plaintiff release all actions, yet he shall remain in execution. Co. Lit. 291. If a judgment is given in action of debt, and the defendant taken in execution, the plaintiff releaseth the judgment, the body shall be discharged of the execution. And if the plaintiff after judgment releaseth all demands, the execution is discharged. Ibid. Where one is in execution at my suit, and I bid the sheriff let him go; this is a good discharge and release both to the party and sheriff. Poph. 207.

A defendant cannot be taken in execution twice on the same judgment, though he were discharged the first time by the plaintiff's consent, upon an express undertaking that he should be liable to be taken in execution again if he failed to comply with the terms agreed on, which he did. Blackburn, v. Stupart, 2 East's Rep. 213.—See title Debtors.

But if the plaintiff make a release to the defendant being in execution, or other act amounting to a discharge; it will not be a discharge ipso facto, but by this means he may have the same. 5 Rep. 86. Dyer, 152.

If one of two defendants taken on a joint ca. sa. be discharged under an insolvent act, that will not operate as a discharge of the other. 5 East's Rep. 147.

A defendant superseded for not being charged in execution within two terms after judgment, cannot be again arrested and taken in execution upon the same judgment. Aliter if superseded for want of proceeding in time before judgment. 7 East's Rep. 330.

The court will not stay judgment and execution on a summary application, because the plaintiffs after verdict became alien enemies. 9 East's Rep. 324.

By stat. 32 Geo. 2. c. 28. usually called the Lords' Act, if a defendant charged in execution for any debt not exceeding 100*l.* (extended by stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 44. for five years to 200*l.*; extended by 33 Geo. 3. c. 5. to 300*l.* amended by 37 Geo. 3. c. 85. and made perpetual by 39 Geo. 3. c. 50.) will surrender all his effects to his creditors (except his apparel, bedding, and tools of his trade, not amounting in the whole to the value of 10*l.*) and will make oath of his punctual compliance with the statute, such prisoner may be discharged, unless the creditor insists on detaining him; in which case he shall allow him 3*s.* 6*d.* per week, to be paid on the first day of every week, and on failure of regular payment the prisoner shall be discharged. Yet the creditor may at any future time have execution against the lands and goods of such defendant, though never more against his person. And the creditors may, as in case of bankruptcy, compel, under pain of transportation for seven years, such debtor to make a discovery and surrender of all his effects for their benefit; whereupon he is also entitled to the like discharge of his person.

Persons thus charged in execution, in order to take the benefit of these acts, are to exhibit a petition to the court whence the process issued, with an account of their whole estate upon oath, praying to be discharged, &c. And thereupon the court shall order the prisoner to be brought up, and his creditors summoned at a certain day, when the court, in a summary way, is to examine into the same, &c. and order the estate and effects of the prisoner to be assigned to the creditors by indorsement on the back of the petition. § 13.

The prisoners (except in London and Westminster) before they petition any of the courts from whence the process issued, for a rule to be brought up, are to give notice to their creditors in writing, that they design to petition, and also a true copy of the account or schedule of their whole estates which they intend to deliver into the court, &c. And then, upon such petition, the prisoners shall have a rule of court to be brought to the next assizes for the county, at an expence not exceeding 12*d.* a mile, to be paid to the officer out of the effects of the prisoners, &c. And the creditors must be summoned to appear at the said assizes, by order served on them, or left at their houses thirty days before; and at the assizes the judges, on examination, shall determine the matter, and give judgment and relief; a record of which judgment is to be returned and certified to the court whence the process issued, on which the prisoners were taken in execution. No person charged in execution shall be allowed to exhibit a petition to any court at law to be discharged, pursuant to the above acts, unless it be done before the end of the next term after he is charged. § 14, 15.

By stat. 49 Geo. 3. c. 6. persons in custody for contempts of courts of equity, for non-payment of money or costs, are declared entitled to the benefit of stats. 32 Geo. 3. c. 28. &c.

By stat. 48 Geo. 3. c. 123. persons having lain in prison for a year in execution on the judgment of any court whatever, whether of record or not, for any debt or damages not exceeding 20*l.* may be discharged on application to the courts at Westminster in term time; their future estate remaining liable.

A plaintiff who has lain in prison more than a year under an execution for the costs of a nonsuit, not amounting to 20*l.* is entitled to his discharge under the said act 48 Geo. 3. c. 123. Roylance v. Hauling, Term Rep. K. B. Mic. 55 Geo. 3. 282.

If a creditor who detains a defendant in custody pay any part of his weekly allowance in a spurious or foreign coin (e. g. French) the defendant is entitled to his discharge. And the turnkey of a prison is not such an agent for a prisoner in execution that by his acceptance of such spurious coin he can bind a prisoner. Agatter v. Wilson, 7 W. P. Taunton, 7.

See further title Insolvent Debtors.

IV. 1. Writs of execution bind the property of goods only from the time of the delivery of the writs to the sheriff; who, upon receipt thereof, indorses the day of the month when received: but land is bound from the day of the judgment. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. Cro. Car. 149. But the judgment must be docketed according to the directions of stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20. by which, for the greater security of purchasers, it is enacted, that the clerk of the essoins of the court of C. B. the clerk of the doggets of the court of King's Bench, and the master of the office of pleas in the court of Exchequer, shall make and put into an alphabetical dogget, by the defendant's names, a particular of all judgments, as well by confession, nòn sum informatus, nihil dicit, &c. as on verdict entered in their several courts, &c. and that no judgment not doggeted, and entered in the books as aforesaid, shall affect any lands or tenements as to purchasers or mortgagees, or have any preference against heirs, executors, or administrators, in their administration of their ancestors, testators, or intestate's estates. See title Judgment.

Notwithstanding this statute, if after the writ delivered to the sheriff, and before execution is executed, the defendant becomes bankrupt, that will hinder execution. 3 Salk. 159. See title Bankrupt.

The plaintiff takes out execution by fieri facias against the defendant; all the goods and chattels that he had at the time of the execution will be liable to it: and where debt or damages are recovered, the plaintiff shall have execution of any land the defendant had at the time of the judgment; not of the lands he had the day when the first writ was purchased. Rol. Abr. 892. By stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. sheriffs may deliver in execution all lands whereof others shall be seised in trust for him against whom execution is had on a judgment, &c.

The sale of goods for a valuable consideration, after judgment, and before execution awarded, is good. And if judgment be given against a lessee for years, and afterwards he selleth the term before execution, the term assigned bonâ fide is not liable; also if he assign it by fraud, and the assignee sells it to another for a valuable consideration, it is not liable to execution in the hands of the second assignee. Godb. 161. 2 Nels. Abr. 783. If a person has a bill of sale of any goods in nature of a security for money, he shall be preferred for his debt to one who hath obtained a judgment against the debtor before those goods are sold; for, till execution lodged in the sheriff's hands, a man is owner of his goods, and may dispose of them as he thinks fit, and they are not bound by the judgment. Preced. Ch. 286. But where a man generally keeps possession of goods after sale, it will make the same void against others, by the statute of fraudulent conveyances. And where, on an execution, the owner of the goods, by agreement, was to have the possession of them upon certain terms; afterwards another got judgment against the same person, and took those goods in execution: it was adjudged they were liable, and that the first execution was by fraud, and void against any subsequent creditor; because there was no change of the possession, and so no alteration of property. Ibid. 287. See title Fraud.

A fieri facias being executed fraudulently, a fieri facias at the suit of another person afterwards shall stand good, and be preferred; and on trial, it is a matter proper to be left to a jury. 1 Wils. 44.

Where two writs of fieri facias against the same defendant are delivered to the sheriff on different days, and no sale is actually made of the defendant's goods, the first execution must have the priority, even though the seizure was first made under the subsequent execution. 1 Term Rep. 729. But where the sheriff has given a bill of sale to the person claiming under the second execution, this entitles the latter to secure his debt, and the sheriff is liable to the plaintiff who delivered the first writ. Ib. 731.

Execution may be made of lands that the defendant hath by purchase after the judgment; although he sell the same before execution. Roll. 892.

The stat. 8 Ann. c. 14. directs that where there is an execution against goods or chattels, of a tenant for life, or years, the plaintiff before removal of the goods by the execution is to pay the landlord the rent of the land, &c. so as there be not above a year due; and if more be due, paying a year's rent, the plaintiff may proceed in his execution, and the sheriff shall levy the rent paid, as well as the execution money.

But a ground-landlord cannot come in for a year's rent in the case of an execution against an under lessee; for the statute only extends to the immediate landlord. Str. 787. And the landlord must give the sheriff notice, or he is not bound. 1 Str. 97. Vide 2 Wils. 140.

2. The King, by his prerogative, may have execution of the body, lands, or goods of his debtor, at his election. Hob. 60. 2 Inst. 19. 2 Rol. Abr. 472.

As to the King's execution of goods, the same relates to the time of the awarding thereof, which is the teste of the writ, as it was in the case of a common person at law; for though by the 29 Car. 2. cap. 3. no execution shall bind the property of goods, but from the time of the delivery of the writ to the sheriff; yet as this act does not extend to the King, an extent of a later teste supersedes an execution of the goods by a former writ; because by the King's prerogative at Common Law, if there had been an execution at the subject's suit and afterwards an extent, the execution was superseded till the extent was executed, because the public ought to be preferred to private property. 2 New. Abr. 365.

If the King's debt be prior on record, it binds the lands of the debtor, into whose hands soever they come, because it is in the nature of an original charge upon the land itself, and therefore must subject every body that claims under it; but if the lands were aliened in whole, or in part, as by granting a jointure before the debt contracted, such alienee claims prior to the charge, and in such case the land is not subject. See 2 Roll. Abr. 156, 157. Moor, 126. 3 Leon. 239, 240. 4 Leon. 10.

Execution for the King's debt, or prerogative execution, is always preferred before any other executions. 7 Rep. 20. And if a defendant is taken by capias ad satisfaciendum, and before the return thereof a prerogative writ issues from the Exchequer, for the debt of the King, tested a day before he was taken, here he shall be held in execution for the King's debt and that of the subject. Dyer, 197. Lands entailed in the hands of the issue in tail, when subject to the King's extent, and where not, see 7 Rep. 21. See also this Dict. titles King, Extent.

Process sued out by the crown against a defendant to recover penalties, upon which judgment for the crown is afterwards obtained, entitles the King's execution to have priority within 33 Hen. 8. c. 39. § 74. before the execution of a subject, whose execution had issued and been commenced on a judgment recovered against the same defendant prior to the King's judgment, but subsequent to the commencement of the King's process: the King's writ of execution having been delivered to the sheriff before the actual sale of the defendant's goods under the plaintiff's execution. Butler, v. Butler, 1 East. 338. Att. Gen. v. Aldersey, Mich. 1786. S. P. ib.

V. 1. An execution may be set aside as irregular, by supersedeas; and the party have restitution, &c. Carthew. 460, 461, 468. It hath been resolved, that a writ of error is a supersedeas from the time of the allowance: though if a writ of execution be executed before the writ of error is allowed, it may be returned afterwards. 1 Salk. 321. No writ of execution shall be stayed by any writ of error or su- persedeas, after verdict and judgment, in any action upon the case for payment of money, covenant, detinue, trespass, &c. until recognizance be entered into as directed by 3 Jac. 1. cap. 8. &c. Judgment was had against a person at Bristol, and his goods attached there; and the court of B. R. being moved to stay the execution until a writ of error brought should be determined, they granted a habeas corpus, but nothing to stay the execution. 1 Bulst. 268. See title Error.

A defendant cannot plead to any writ of execution, (though he may in bar of execution to a scire facias brought;) but if he hath any matter after judgment to discharge him of the execution, he is to have audita querela. Co. Lit. 290. Or, move the court for relief, which is now the usual method.

If husband and wife are taken in execution for the debt of the wife, the wife shall be discharged; for the husband being in execution, the wife shall not be so also, and because the wife hath nothing liable to the execution. 1 Lev. 51.

The execution of a liberate is good without being returned; and where a man is taken upon a ca. sa. the execution is good, though the writ is not returned: and so in all cases where no inquest is to be taken, but only lands delivered, or seisin had, &c. which are only matters of fact. 4 Rep. 67. 5 Rep. 89.

2. There were anciently castles, fortresses, and liberties, where they resisted the sheriff in executing the King's writs, which creating great inconvenience, the statute of Westm. 2. cap. 39. (13 Ed. 1.) hindered the sheriff from returning rescuers to the King's writ of execution, and directed him to take the posse comitatus. See the Stat. and 2 New Abr. 368.

The judges construed the words of the statute to extend only to executions, and not to writs on mesne process; that the sheriff was not obliged to carry the posse comitatus where the man was bailable, for they did not presume that in such cases the King's writ would be disobeyed. 2 New Abr. 368.

The original of commitment for contempts seems to be derived from this statute; for since the sheriff was to commit those who resisted the process, the judges who awarded such process must have the same authority to vindicate it; hence, if any one offers any contempt to his process, either by word or deed, he is subject to imprisonment during pleasure, viz. from whence they shall not be delivered without the King's special commandment. 2 New Abr. 368. See titles Debt, Error.

Execution of Criminals, must in all cases, as well capital as otherwise, be performed by the sheriff or his deputy; whose warrant for so doing was anciently by precept under the hand and seal of the judge, as is still practised in the court of the Lord High Steward upon the execution of a peer. 2 Hale, 409. Though in the court of the peers in parliament it is done by writ from the King; afterwards it was established, that, in case of life, the judges may command execution to be done without any writ. Finch, 478. And now the usage is for the judge to sign the calendar, a list of all the prisoners' names, with the separate judgments in the margin, which is left with the sheriff; the sheriff, on receipt of this warrant, is to do execution within a convenient time, which in the country is left at large: in London, the Recorder, after reporting to the King in person the case of the several prisoners, and receiving his royal pleasure that the law must take its course, issues his warrant to the sheriffs, directing them to do execution at the day and place assigned. See 4 State Trials, 332. Fost. 43. 4 Comm. 403.

It is held by Coke (3 Inst. 52.) and Hale (2 H. P. C. 272. 412.) that even the King cannot change the punishment of the law, by altering hanging (or burning when used,) into beheading; though, when beheading is part of the sentence, the King may remit the rest. And notwithstanding some examples to the contrary, Coke maintains that judicandum est legibus non exemplis. But others have thought, and more justly, that this prerogative being founded in mercy, and immemorially exercised by the crown, is part of the Common Law. Fost. 270. F. N. B. 244 b. 19 Rym. Fœd. 284. For hitherto, in every instance, all these exchanges have been for more merciful kinds of death; and how far this may also fall within the King's power of granting conditional pardons, (viz. by remitting a severer kind of death, on condition that the criminal submits to a milder,) is a matter that may bear consideration. 4 Comm. 404.—There are ancient precedents wherein men condemned to be hanged for felony have been beheaded by force of a special warrant from the King. Bract. 104. Staundf. 13.

Subsequent justices have no power by the stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 7. to award execution of persons condemned by former judges; but if judgment has not been passed on the offenders, the other justices may give judgment, and award execution, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. Execution ought to be in the same county where the criminal was tried and convicted; except the record of the attainder be removed into B. R. which may award execution in the county where it sits. 3 Inst. 31. 211. 217.

If, upon a record removed, an outlawed person confess himself to be the same person, execution shall be had; but if he deny it, and the King's Attorney confesses he is not, he shall be discharged; though if the Attorney-General take issue upon it, the same shall be tried. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 402. 463. If a person, when attainted, stands mute to a demand why execution shall not go against him, the ordinary execution shall be awarded. 2 Hawk. P. C. In case a man condemned to die, come to life after he is hanged, as the judgment is not executed till he is dead, he must be hung again. Finch, 389. 2 Hal. P. C. 412. 2 Hawk. P. C. 4 Comm. 406. And so was the law of old; for if a criminal thus escaped and fled to sanctuary, he was not permitted to abjure the realm. Fitz. Ab. title Coroner, 335.

The body of a traitor or felon is forfeited to the King by the execution; and he may dispose of it as he pleases. The execution of persons under the age of discretion is usually respited, in order to obtain a pardon. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. § 8.

By the stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 37. persons convicted of murder are to be executed the day next but one after sentence; [unless that happens to be Sunday, for which reason murderers are generally tried on a Friday, to afford them a merciful respite of one day more to prepare for eternity;] and their bodies delivered to surgeons to be anatomised. The judge may stay the sentence, and appoint the body to be hung in chains or anatomised, but not buried.—And, by the said statute, to rescue the body of any such malefactor from the custody of the sheriff after execution, is made felony, punishable by transportation for seven years.—And to rescue such criminal going to, or during execution, is felony without benefit of clergy. See this Dict. title Rescue. Under this act, the time and place of the execution are part of the judgment, but in no other case whatever. 4 Comm. 404. See further title Murder; and as to these executions in general, titles Treason, Felony, and other proper titles.

In order to enable the Crown to extend its clemency to criminals in Scotland, it is provided by stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 26. § 10. that where the punishment is either capital or consists in dismembring, it shall not be inflicted in places south of the Forth, in less than 30 days, and north of the Forth, in less than 40 days, after judgment.

Execution may be avoided by a reprieve or a pardon, whereof the former is only temporary, the latter (as to which, see this Dict. title Pardon) is permanent.

A Reprieve, from reprendre to take back, or more immediately from the participle repris,] is the withdrawing of a sentence for an interval of time, whereby the execution is suspended. This may be ex arbitrio judicis, either before or after judgment; as where the judge is not satisfied with the verdict, or the evidence is suspicious, or the indictment is insufficient, or he is doubtful whether the offence be within clergy; or sometimes if it be a small felony, or any favourable circumstances appear in the criminal's character, in order to give room to apply to the crown for either an absolute or conditional pardon. These arbitrary reprieves may be granted or taken off by the justices of gaol delivery, although their session be finished, and their commissions expired; but this rather by common usage than of strict right. 2 Hal. P. C 412.

Reprieves may also be ex necessitate legis.

If a woman quick with child be condemned either for treason or felony, she may allege her being with child in order to get the execution respited; and thereupon the sheriff or marshal shall be commanded to take her into a private room, and to impanel a jury of matrons to try and examine whether she be quick with child or not; and if they find her quick with child, the execution shall be respited till her delivery. But it is agreed, that a woman cannot demand such respite of execution by reason of her being quick with child more than once; and that she can neither save herself by this means from pleading upon her arraignment, nor from having judgment pronounced against her upon her conviction. Also it is said, both by Staundford and Coke, that a woman can have no advantage from being found with child, unless she be also found quick with child. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 51. § 9, 10.

Another cause of regular reprieve is if the offender become non compos between the judgment and the award of execution. 1 Hal. P. C. 370. For regularly, though a man be compos when he commits a capital crime, yet if he becomes non compos after, he shall not be indicted; if after indictment, he shall not be convicted; if after conviction, he shall not receive judgment; if after judgment, he shall not be ordered for execution: for the law knows not but he might have offered some reason, if in his senses, to have stayed these respective proceedings. It is therefore an invariable rule, when any time intervenes between the attainder and the award of execution, to demand of the prisoner what he hath to allege why execution should not be awarded against him; and if he appears to be insane, the Judge, in his discretion, may and ought to reprieve him.

The party may also plead in bar of execution; which plea may be either pregnancy, (of which above,) the King's pardon, an act of grace; (see title Pardon;) or lastly, diversity of person, viz. that he is not the same that was attainted, and the like. In this last case a jury shall be impannelled to try this collateral issue, namely, the identity of his person, and not whether guilty or innocent, for that has been decided before; and in these collateral issues the trial shall be instanter, and no time allowed the prisoner to make his defence, or produce his witnesses, unless he will make oath that he is not the person attainted. 1 Sid. 72, Fost. 42. Neither shall any peremptory challenges of the jury be allowed the prisoner; though formerly such challenges were held to be allowable whenever a man's life was in question. 1 Lev. 61. Fost. 42. 46.—Staundf. P. C. 163. Co. Lit. 157. Hal. Sum. 259.

Every Judge who hath power to order execution, hath power to grant a reprieve; and execution is often stayed on condition of transportation. See Stat. 8 Geo. 3. c. 15. for a power given to judges of assise to reprieve for the purpose of obtaining a conditional pardon. See also this Dict. titles Transportation, Felony, Clergy. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 51. But no prisoner convicted of any felony for which he cannot have his clergy, at the sessions at the Old Bailey for London and Middlesex, &c. ought to be reprieved but in open Sessions; and reprieves are not to be granted otherwise, but by the King's express warrant. Kel. 42.

EXECUTIONE FACIENDA IN WITHERNAMIUM. See title Replevin.

EXECUTIONE JUDICII, is a writ directed to the judge of an inferior court to do execution upon a judgment therein, or to return some reasonable cause wherefore he delays the execution. F. N. B. 20. If execution be not done on the first writ, an alias shall issue, and a pluries with this clause, vel causam nobis significes quare, &c. And if upon this writ execution is not done, or some reasonable cause returned why it is delayed, the party shall have an attachment against him who ought to have done the execution, returnable in B. R. or C. B. New Nat. Br. 43. If the judgment be in a court of record, this writ shall be directed to the justices of the court where the judgment was given, and not unto the officer of the court; for if the officer will not execute the writs directed unto him, nor return them as he ought, the judges of the court may amerce him. New Nat. B. R. 43. See Execution, III. 3. and the Stat. 19 Geo. 3 c. 70. there mentioned.

One may have a writ de executione judicii out of the Chancery to execute a judgment in an inferior court, although a writ of error be brought to remove the record, and reverse the judgment; if he that brings the writ of error do not take care to have the record transcribed, and the writ of error returned up in due time. 1 Lil. Abr. 562.

EXECUTIVE POWER. The supreme executive power of these kingdoms is vested, by our laws, in a single person, the King or Queen, for the time being. 1 Comm. 190. &c. See title King.

EXECUTOR, Lat.] One appointed by a man's last will and testament to perform or execute the contents thereof after the testator's decease; and to have the disposing of all the testator's substance, according to the tenor of the will: he answers to the hæres designatus, or testamentarius in the Civil Law, as to debts, goods, and chattels of his testator. Termes de Ley.

The rights, powers, and duties of EXECUTORS and ADMINISTRATORS, being in many respects similar, and the several determinations in the books being generally applicable to both, it seems most methodical and useful to consider them together; for which purpose reference is made from title Administrator to this place. The present summary is founded on the Commentaries, having various points and heads from other sources interwoven on that excellent groundwork. See 2 Comm. c. 32.

I. 1. In case a person makes no disposition of his effects by will, he is said to die intestate; and in such cases it is said, that by the old law the king was entitled to seize upon his goods, as the general trustee of the kingdom. 9 Rep. 38.—This prerogative the king continued to exercise for some time, by his own ministers of justice; and probably in the county-court, where matters of all kinds were determined; and it was granted as a franchise to many lords of manors and others, who have to this day a prescriptive right to grant administration to their intestate tenants and suitors, in their own Courts baron, and other courts, or to have their wills there proved, in case they make any. 9 Rep. 37. Afterwards the crown, in favour of the church invested the prelates with this branch of the prerogative; and then the Ordinary might seize the goods, and keep them without wasting; and also might give, alien, or sell them at his will, and dispose of the money in pios usus; being thus, probably, merely the king's almoner in his diocese. Finch Law, 173, 174. Plowd. 77.

As the Ordinary had thus the disposition of intestates' effects, the probate of wills of course followed; for it was thought just and natural that the will of the deceased should be proved to the satisfaction of the prelate, whose right of distributing his goods was superseded thereby.

By degrees, through an abuse of this power of the Ordinary, often complained of before it was redressed, the Popish clergy secured the intestate's estate to themselves, without paying even his lawful debts; for which reason it was enacted by stat. Westm. 2. (13 E. 1. A. D. 1285.) c. 19. that the Ordinary shall be bound to pay the debts of the intestate, so far as his goods will extend, in the same manner as executors were bound in case of a will.—But still the residue remained in the hands of the Ordinary; and the continued abuse of this power at length produced the stat. 31 E. 4. c. 11. (A. D. 1357,) which provides, that in case of intestacy, the Ordinary shall depute the nearest and most lawful friends of the deceased to administer his goods, which administrators are put upon the same footing, with regard to suits, and to accounting, as executors.—The next and most lawful friend is interpreted to be the next of blood, who is under no legal disabilities. 9 Rep. 39.—The stat. 21 H. 8. c. 5. enlarges the power of the ecclesiastical judge a little more; permitting him to grant administration either to the widow or the next of kin, or to both of them, at his discretion; and where two or more persons are in the same degree of kindred, gives the Ordinary his election to accept which he pleases. 1 Sid. 179. Raym. 93. 1 Show. 351. 1 Salk. 36.

On this footing now stands the general law relative to the appointment of administrators—Who are the next of blood, or as it is usually called Next of kin, is stated post, III. and V. 8.

2. The Ordinary ought not to repeal letters of administration which he hath duly granted; but if they are granted to such persons who ought not by law to have them, he may revoke them. 1 Lill. 38. For just cause they may be revoked, as where a person is a lunatic, &c. And if granted where not grantable, they may be repealed by the delegates. 1 Lev. 157. 186. If administration is granted, and afterwards a will is produced and proved, the administration shall be revoked; and all acts done by the administrator are void. 2 Rol. Abr. 907. If a citation is granted against a stranger administrator, and his administration is revoked by sentence, yet all acts done by him bonâ fide as administrator are good till the revocation; the administration being only voidable. 6 Rep. 18. 8 Rep. 135. But if there is any fraud, a creditor may have relief upon the stat. 13 Eliz. cap. 5. And when the first administration is merely void, as granted by a wrong person, &c. it is otherwise: so when there is an appeal from the grant of the administration, to suspend the former decree. 5 Rep. 30. Administration was granted to J. S. and he released all actions, and afterwards the administration was revoked, and declared void, this release was held good. 1 Brownl. 51. Qu. If it had been without consideration? If an administrator gives goods away, and then administration is revoked or repealed, 'tis said the gift is good; except it be by covin, when it shall be void only against a creditor by statute: and where the administrator, after many goods administered, had his administration revoked, and it was committed to B. who sued the first administrator for goods unduly administered, it was held that there was no remedy but in Chancery. 6 Rep. 19. Clayt. 44. 4 Shep. Ab. 89. See Hob. 266.—But in such a case as this it seems that the second administrator might maintain an action at law against the first, for money had and received, &c. or trover for any goods remaining in his possession, or by him converted, and not duly administered.

In 2 Leon. 155, it is said, where the first administration is void, the administrator who, under that administration, takes the goods, is a trespasser. Letters of administration obtained by fraud are void. 3 Rep. 78. 6 Rep. 18, 19. 8 Rep. 143.

See the several cases on this part of the subject collected in 1 Com. Dig. title Administrator (B. 8.); the result of which (as given in 4 Burn's Ecclesiastical Law, 236.) is, that ad administration may be repealed, although not arbitrarily, yet where there shall be a just cause for so doing; of which the temporal courts are to judge.

II. All persons are capable of being Executors, that are capable of making wills, and many others besides; as femes coverts and infants: nay even infants unborn, or in ventre ses meres, may be made Executors. West. Symb. p. 1. § 635.

A popish recusant convict cannot be an executor. 9 Rep. 37. A mayor and commonalty may be made executors. 1 Rol. Abr. 915. And if the King is made executor, he appoints others to take the execution of the will upon them, and to take account. 5 Rep. 29.

It seems agreed, that, by our law, an alien, or one born out of the allegiance of our King, may be an executor or administrator; also it hath been adjudged, that such a one shall have administration of leases as well as personal things, because he hath them in auter droit, and not to his own use. Off. of Ex. 17.

But it has been long doubted whether an alien enemy should maintain an action as executor; for, on the one hand, it is said, that by the policy of the law, alien enemies shall not be admitted to actions to recover effects, which may be carried out of the kingdom to weaken ourselves and enrich the enemy, therefore public utility must be preferred to private convenience; but on the other hand it is said, that those effects of the testator are not forfeited to the King by way of reprisal, because they are not the alien enemy's, for he is to recover them for others; and if he allows such alien enemies to possess the effects as well as an alien friend, he must allow them power to recover, since in that there is no difference, and by consequence he must not be disabled to sue for them; if it were otherwise, it would be a prejudice to the King's subjects, who could not recover their debts from the alien executor, by his not being able to get in the assets of the testator. Cro. Eliz. 685. Moor, 431. Carter, 49. 191. Skin. 370.

But an excommunicated person cannot be an executor or administrator; for by the excommunication he is excluded from the body of the church, and is incapable to lay out the goods of the deceased to pious uses. Co. Lit. 134. Swinb. 319. Godolph. 85.

No infant can act as Executor till the age of 17 years; till which time administration must be granted to some other durante minore ætate. Went. Off. of Ex. c. 18. 6 Rep. 67. 4 Inst. 335.

And if the right of administration devolves on an infant, administration durante minore ætate is to be granted till he arrives at twenty-one. Godolph. 102. 5 Co. 29. Hob. 250. Yelv. 128.

And as such an administrator is but in nature of a curator for the infant, and has no interest or benefit in the testator or intestate's estate, but in right of the infant, it has been always held discretionary in the Ordinary to whom to grant it, and therefore it hath been frequently adjudged, that he is not obliged within the stat. 21 H. 8. c. 5. to grant it to the next of kin either of the deceased, or the infant. Hob. 250. 1 Vent. 219. 1 Keb. 549. 3 Mod. 24. 1 New Abr. 381.

If an infant, and one of full age, are made executors, he who is of full age may take out administration durante minori ætate of the infant, and may declare as executor or administrator durante minori ætate; and there is no absurdity in this case, that there should be an executor and administrator to the same party. 1 New Abr. 381.

In like manner, as it may be granted durante absentiâ pendente lite; when the executor is out of the realm; or 1 Lutw. 342. or when a suit is commenced in the Ecclesiastical court, touching the validity of the will. 2 P. Wms. 589, 590.

The appointment of an executor is essential to the making of a will; (Went. c. 1. Plowd. 281.) and it may be performed either by express words, or such as strongly imply the same: but if the testator makes an incomplete will, without naming any executors; or if he names incapable persons; or if the executors named refuse to act, (see 9 Rep. 37. Went. Off. Ex. 38.) in any of these cases administration must be granted cum testamento annexo to some other persons; (1 Rol. Ab. 907. Comb. 20.) and then the duty of the administrator, as also when he is constituted only durante minore ætate, &c. is very little different from that of an Executor. See Glanvil. l. 7. c. 6.

A man may appoint two or more persons to be joint Executors, and they are accounted in law but as one person. See post, V. 3. 5.—Such joint executors shall not be charged by the acts of their companions, any further than for effects actually come to their hands. Moor, 620. Cro. Eliz. 318. 2 Leon. 209—But if two or more executors join in a receipt [in writing] and one of them only actually receives the money, each is liable for the whole, as to creditors at law, but not as to legatees, or next of kin. 1 Salk. 318.—If joint executors, by agreement among themselves, agree that each shall intermeddle with a certain part of the testator's estate, yet each shall be chargeable for the whole (to creditors) by agreeing to the other's receipts. Hard. 314.

III. If the deceased died wholly intestate, without making either will or executors, then general letters of administration must be granted to such administrator as the stats. 31 E. 3. c. 11. and 29 H. 8. c. 4. (see ante 1.) direct; in consequence of which it is to be observed, 1st. That the Ordinary is compellable to grant administration of the goods of the wife to the husband, or his representatives; (Cro. Car. 106. Stat. 20 C. 2. c. 3. 1 P. Wms. 381.) and of the husband's effects to the widow, or next of kin. Salk. 36. Stra. 532.—2dly, That among the kindred, those are to be preferred that are the nearest in degree to the intestate.—3dly, That this nearness of degree shall be reckoned according to the computation of the civilians; (Prec. Ch. 593.) and not of the canonists, which the law of England adopts in the descent of real estates; (see title Descent.)—And therefore, in the first place, the children, or on failure of children, the parents of the deceased are entitled to administration; both which are indeed in the first degree, but the children are allowed the preference. Godolph. p. 2. c. 34. § 1. 2 Vern. 125.—Then follow brothers, grandfathers; (Prec. Ch. 527. 1 P. Wms. 41.) uncles, or nephews; (Atk. 455.) and the females of each class respectively; and, lastly, Cousins.—4thly, The half blood is admitted to the administration as well as the whole; for they are of the kindred of the intestate, and only excluded from inheritances of land, upon feodal reasons. Therefore the brother of the half blood shall exclude the uncle of the whole blood; (1 Vent. 425.) and the Ordinary may grant administration to the sister of the half, or the brother of the whole blood, at his own discretion. Aleyn. 36. Sty. 74. See post, V. 8.—5. If none of the kindred will take out administration, a creditor may, by custom, do it. Salk. 38.—6thly, If the Executor refuses, or dies intestate, the administration may be granted to the residuary legatee, in exclusion of the next of kin. 1 Sid. 281. 1 Vent. 219. And, lastly, the Ordinary may, in defect of all these, commit administration, (as he might have done before the stat. 31 E. 3. c. 11. Plowd. 278.) to such discreet person as he approves of: or (in these cases, as well as in that of an Executor's refusal, Cro. El. 92.) may grant him letters ad colligendum bona defuncti, which neither makes him executor nor administrator; his only business being to keep the goods in his safe custody; (Went. Ch. 14.) and to do other acts for the benefit of such as are entitled to the property of the deceased. 2 Inst. 398. If a bastard who has no kindred, being nullius filius, or any one else that has no kindred, dies intestate, and without wife or child, it hath formerly been held, (Salk. 37.) that the Ordinary might seize his goods, and dispose of them in pios usus. But the usual course now is, for some one to procure letters patent, or other authority from the King; and then the Ordinary, of course, grants administration to such appointee of the crown. 3 P. Wms. 33.

IV. The interest vested in the executor by the will of the deceased, may be continued and kept alive by the will of the same executor; so that the executor of A's. executor is to all intents and purposes the executor and representative of A. himself; see 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c. 5. 1 Leon. 275. but the executor of A.'s administrator, or the administrator of A.'s executor, is not the representative of A. Bro. Abr. title Administrator 7. For the power of an executor is founded upon the special confidence and actual appointment of the deceased; and such executor is therefore allowed to transmit that power to another, in whom he hath equal confidence: but the administrator of A. is merely the officer of the Ordinary, prescribed to him by act of parliament, in whom the deceased has reposed no trust at all; and therefore, on the death of that officer, it results back to the Ordinary to appoint another. And, with regard to the administrator of A.'s executor, he has clearly no privity or relation to A. being only commissioned to administer the effects of the intestate executor, and not of the original testator. Wherefore in both these cases, and whenever the course of representation from executor to executor is interrupted by any one administration, it is necessary for the Ordinary to commit administration afresh, of the goods of the deceased, not administered by the former executor or administrator. And this administrator, de bonis non, is the only legal representative of the deceased in matters of personal property. Sty. 225. But he may, as well as an original administrator, have only a limited or special administration committed to his care, viz. of certain specific effects, such as a term of years and the like; the rest being committed to others. 1 Roll. Abr. 908. Godolph. p. 2. c. 30. Salk. 36. 1 New. Abr. 385. See also the stats. 43 Eliz. c. 8. 30 Car. 2. c. 7.

If an executor dies before probate, such an executor's executor cannot prove the will, because he is not named therein, and no one can prove a will but he who is named executor in it; but if the first executor had proved the will, then his executor might have been executor to the first testator, there requiring no new probate. 1 Salk. 299.

Though an executor of an executor may thus be executor to the first testator, yet he may take upon him the executorship of his own testator, and refuse to intermeddle with the estate of the other: and if the first executor refuses, (as if he dies before probate,) his executor shall not administer to the first testator. Dyer, 372.

V. 1. The duty and office of Executors and Administrators in general are very much the same; excepting, first, that the executor is bound to perform a will, which an administrator is not, unless where a testament is annexed to his administration, and then he differs still less from an executor: and secondly, that an executor may do many acts before he proves the will: Wentw. ch. 3. but an administrator may do nothing till letters of administration are issued; for the former derives his power from the will, and not from the probate; the latter owes his entirely to the appointment of the Ordinary. Com. 51.

If a stranger takes upon him to act as executor, without any just authority; (as by intermeddling with the goods of the deceased, 5 Rep. 33, 34. and many other transactions, Wentw. ch. 14. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 8.) he is called in law an Executor of his own wrong, [de son tort,] and is liable to all the trouble of an executorship, without any of the profits or advantages; but merely doing acts of necessity or humanity, as locking up the goods, or burying the corpse, of the deceased, will not amount to such an intermeddling, as will charge a man as executor of his own wrong. Dyer, 166. Such a one cannot bring any action himself in right of the deceased, (Bro. Abr. title Administrator 8.) but actions may be brought against him. And in all actions by creditors against such an officious intruder, he shall be named an executor generally; (5 Rep. 31.) for the most obvious conclusion which strangers can form from his conduct is, that he hath a will of the deceased, wherein he is named executor, but hath not yet taken probate thereof. 12 Mod. 471. He is chargeable with the debts of the deceased, so far as assets comes to his hands. Dyer, 166. And as against creditors in general, shall be allowed all payments made to any other creditor in the same or superior degree. 1 Chan. Cas. 33. himself only excepted; in which he differs from a rightful executor. 5 Rep. 30. Moor, 527. And though, as against the rightful executor or administrator, he cannot plead such payment, yet it shall be allowed him in mitigation of damages; (12 Mod. 441. 471.) unless, perhaps, upon a deficiency of assets, whereby the rightful executor may be prevented from satisfying his own debt. Wentw. ch. 14.

When there is a rightful executor, and a stranger possesses himself of the testator's goods, without doing any further act as executor, he is not an executor do son tort, but a trespasser, Dyer, 105. Rol. Abr. 918. See 5 Rep. 82. An executor of his own wrong may be sued as executor; and he shall be sued for legacies as well as a rightful executor. Noy, 13. Though an executor de son tort cannot maintain any suit or action, because he cannot produce any will to justify it, yet he will be severely punished for a false plea; for in such case the execution shall be awarded for the whole debt, though he meddled with a thing of very small value. Noy, 69.

What acts make a person liable as Executor de son tort, is a question of Law; the jury are to say whether the acts be sufficiently proved. The slightest circumstance of intermeddling with the testator's goods will constitute a person an executor de son tort. 2 Term Rep. K. B. 97. 597.

Debt was brought against an executor of his own wrong, who pleaded that he never was executor, nor administered as such; it was held, not to be material whether he had assets or no, but to prove that he had administered any thing was enough; for this would make him chargeable with the debt: but if he had not pleaded falsely, he would have been liable for no more than the value of the goods of the deceased. Style, 120.

If an executor of his own wrong possesses himself of goods, and afterwards administration is granted him, he may, by virtue thereof, retain goods for his own debt. 5 Rep. 30. And where a man took possession of an intestate's goods wrongfully, and sold them to another, and then took out administration, it was adjudged that the sale was good by relation. Moor, 126. An executor de son tort shall be allowed in equity all such payments which a rightful executor ought to have paid. 2 Chanc. Rep. 33. See further post, VI. 2. and this Dict. title Devastavit.

A creditor of an intestate, who received goods of the intestate after his death from his widow, in payment of the debt, cannot protect his possession against an action of trover by the lawful administrator, upon the ground of such delivery having been made by one who had, by such intermeddling, made herself executrix de son tort; no fact appearing to give colour to having acted in the character of executrix, except the single act of wrong complained of, in which the defendant participated. Qu. How far any payment by an executor de son tort to a creditor can be set up as a bar to an action of trover by lawful executor, &c.; though if it be such as the latter would have been bound to make, it shall be recouped in damages. Mountford v. Gibson, 4 East. 441.

An executor de son tort cannot discharge himself from an action brought by a creditor, by delivering over the effects to the rightful executor after the action is brought. 3 Term Rep. K. B. 587. 2 H. Blackst. 18.

Nor can he retain for his own debt, of a higher nature, by consent of the rightful executor, given after the bringing of the action by the creditor. 3 Term Rep. 587.

Although a person cannot be charged as an executor de son tort while he acts under a power of attorney made to him by one of several executors who have proved the will, yet if he continue to act after the death of such executor, he may be charged as executor de son tort, though he act under the advice of another of the executors who has not proved. Cottle v. Aldrich, Term Rep. K. B. Tr. 55 Geo. 3. 175.

2. The executor or administrator must bury the deceased in a manner suitable to the estate which he leaves behind him. Necessary funeral expences are allowed, previous to all other debts and charges; but if the executor or administrator be extravagant, it is a species of devastation or waste of the substance of the deceased; and shall only be prejudicial to himself, and not to the creditors or legatees of the deceased. Salk. 196. Godolph. p. 2. c. 26. § 2. See post, VI. 2. and this Dict. title Devastavit, Funeral.

3. The executor or administrator durante minore ætate, or durante absentiâ, or cum testamento annexo, must prove the will of the deceased: which is done either in common form, which is only upon his own oath before the Ordinary, or his surrogate; or per testes, in more solemn form of law, in case the validity of the will be disputed. Godolph. p. 1. c. 20. § 4. When the will is so proved, the original must be deposited in the registry of the Ordinary; and a copy thereof, in parchment, is made out under the seal of the Ordinary, and delivered to the executor or administrator, together with a certificate of its having been proved before him; all which together is usually styled the probate. By stat. 37 Geo. 3. c. 90. the executor must take probate within six months on penalty of 50*l.* See title Probate.

If there are many executors of a will, and one of them only proves the will, and takes upon him the executorship, it is sufficient for all of them; but the rest after may join with him, and intermeddle with the testator's estate; but if they all of them refuse the executorship, none of them will ever afterwards be admitted to prove the will; the Ordinary, in this case, grants administration with the will annexed. 9 Rep. 37. 1 Rep. 113. Perk. 485.

An executor may refuse an executorship; but the refusal ought to be before the Ordinary: If an executor be summoned to accept or refuse the executorship, and he doth not appear on the summons, and prove the will, the Court may grant administration, &c. which shall be good in Law till such executor hath proved the will; but no man can be compelled to take on him the executorship, unless he hath intermeddled with the estate. 1 Leon. 154. Cro. Eliz 858. Where there are several executors, and they all refuse, none of them shall administer afterwards; but if there is a refusal by one, and the other proves the will, the refusing executor may administer when he will during the life of his co-executor. 1 Rep. 28. If there is but one executor, and he administer, he cannot refuse afterwards; and if once he refuse he cannot administer afterwards: Thus, where a testator being possessed of lands, &c. for a term of years, devised the same to the Chief Justice Catline, and made him executor, and died; afterwards the executor wrote a letter to the Judge of the Prerogative Court, intimating that he could not attend the executorship, and desiring him to grant administration to the next of kin to the deceased, which was done accordingly; and after this the executor entered on the lands, and granted the term to another; it was adjudged void, because the letter which he wrote was a sufficient refusal; and he may not after refusal take upon him the executorship. Moor, 272.

An executor, after a caveat entered against the will, took the usual oath of an executor, and afterwards refused to prove the will; and it was held, that having taken the oath of executor, the Court could not admit him to refuse afterwards, but ought to grant probate to him, notwithstanding the caveat, on another's contesting for the administration, &c. 1 Vent. 335. See title Executor.

As the testator has thought the executor appointed a proper person to be intrusted with his affairs, the Ordinary cannot adjudge him disabled or incapax; but a mandamus shall issue from B. R. for the Ordinary to grant probate of the will, and admit the executor, if he refuse him: neither can the Ordinary insist upon security from the executor, as the testator hath thought him able and qualified. 1 Salk. 299.

And although an executor becomes bankrupt, yet it is said the Ordinary cannot grant administration to another: but if an executor become non compos, the Spiritual Court may commit administration for this natural disability. 1 Salk. 307. If an executor takes goods of the testator's, and convert them to his own use; or if he either receive or pay debts of the testator, or give bond for payment; make acquittances for them, or demand, the testator's debts as executor; or give away, the goods of the testator, &c. these are an administration, so that he cannot afterwards refuse the executorship; and it has been held, that if the wife of the testator take more apparel than is necessary, it is an administration. Offic. Exec. 39.

It is usual when there is a contest about a will, or when the right of administration comes in question, to enter a caveat in the Spiritual Court, which, by their law, is said to stand in force for three months. Godolph. 258. Goldsb. 119. 2 Rol. Rep. 6. Cro. Jac. 463, 464.

But it is said that our law takes no notice of a caveat, and that it is but a mere cautionary act done by a stranger, to prevent the Ordinary from doing wrong; and that therefore, if administration be granted pending a caveat, this is valid in our law, though, by the law in the Spiritual Court, it may be such an irregularity as will be sufficient to repeal it. 1 Rol. Rep. 191. Cro. Jac. 463. 2 Rol. Rep. 6.

In defect of any will, the person entitled to be administrator, must also, at this period, take out letters of administration under the seal of the Ordinary; whereby an executorial power to collect and administer, that is, dispose of the goods of the deceased, is vested in him: and he must, by stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. enter into a bond with sureties, faithfully to execute his trust. If all the goods of the deceased lie within the same jurisdiction, a probate before the Ordinary, or an administration granted by him, are the only proper ones: but if the deceased had bona notabilia, or chattels to the value of a hundred shillings, in two distinct dioceses or jurisdictions, then the will must be proved, or administration taken out, before the metropolitan of the province, by way of special prerogative. 4 Inst. 335. Hence the courts, where the validity of such wills are tried, and the offices where they are registered, are called the prerogative courts, and the prerogative offices, of the provinces of Canterbury and York. Lynedewode, who flourished in the beginning of the 15th century, and was official to archbishop Chichele, interprets these hundred shillings to signify solidos legales; of which he tells us seventy-two amounted to a pound of gold, which in his time was valued at fifty nobles, or 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* He therefore computes (Provinc. l. 3. t. 13.) that the hundred shillings, which constituted bona notabilia, were then equal in current money to 23*l.* 3*s.* 0½*d.* This will account for what is said in our antient books, that bona notabilia in the diocese of London, 4 Inst. 335. Godolph. p. 2. c. 22.) and indeed every where else, (Plowd. 281.) were of the value of ten pounds by composition: for, if we pursue the calculations of Lynedewode to their full extent, and consider that a pound of gold is now almost equal to an hundred and fifty nobles, we shall extend the present amount of bona notabilia to nearly 70*l.* But the makers of the canons of 1603, understood this ancient rule to be meant of the shillings current in the reign of James I. and have therefore directed, (Can. 92.) that five pounds shall for the future be the standard of bona notabilia; so as to make the probate fall within the archiepiscopal prerogative. Which prerogative (properly understood) is grounded upon this reasonable foundation: that as the bishops themselves were originally the administrators to all intestates in their own diocese, and as the present administrators are in effect no other than their officers or substitutes, it was impossible for the bishops, or those who acted under them, to collect any goods of the deceased, other than such as lay within their own dioceses, beyond which their episcopal authority extends not. But it would be extremely troublesome, if as many administrations were to be granted, as there are dioceses within which the deceased had bona notabilia; besides the uncertainty which creditors and legatees would be at in case different administrators were appointed to ascertain the fund out of which their demands were to be paid. A prerogative is therefore very prudently vested in the metropolitan of each province, to make in such cases one administration serve for all.

Probate in the court of the Archdeacon of Sudbury, to whom the Bishop granted full power to prove the wills of all persons deceased within the archdeaconry, was held good, the testator having died within the archdeaconry, although he was possessed of a term of years lying within another archdeaconry in the same diocese. R. v. Yonge, Term Rep. K. B. E. 56 Geo. 3. 119.

4. The executor or administrator is to make an inventory of all the goods and chattels, whether in possession or action of the deceased, which he is to deliver in to the Ordinary upon oath, if thereunto lawfully required. Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 5. By stat. 1 Jac. 2. c. 17. § 6. No administrator shall be cited into court to render an account of the personal estate of his intestate, otherwise than by an inventory thereof, unless at the instance of some person in behalf of a minor, or having a demand out of such estate, as a creditor, or next of kin; nor shall be compellable to account before any Ordinary or judge empowered by the act of 22 & 23 Car. 2. cap. 10. otherwise than as aforesaid. See 9 Rep. 30. 2 Inst. 600. Raym. 407.

5. He is to collect all the goods and chattels so inventoried; and to that end he has very large powers and interests conferred on him by law, being the representative of the deceased; Co. Lit. 209. and having the same property in his goods as the principal had when living, and the same remedies to recover them. And if there be two or more executors, a sale or release by one of them shall be good against all the rest. Dyer, 23. Cro. Eliz. 347. Sid. 33. Brownl. 183. unless such release be obtained by fraud. Moor, 620. Cro. Eliz. 318. 2 Leon. 209. but in case of administrators, it is otherwise. 1 Atk. 460. Whatever is so recovered, that is of a saleable nature, and may be converted into ready money, is called assets in the hands of the executor or administrator, that is, sufficient or enough (from the French assez) to make him chargeable to a creditor or legatee, so far as such goods and chattels extend. Whatever assets so come to his hands, he may convert into ready money, to answer the demands that may be made upon him. See 6 Rep. 47. Co. Lit. 374. In actions against executors, the jury must find assets to what value, for the plaintiff shall recover only according to the value of assets found. 1 Ro. Rep. 58. As to real assets by descent, see this Dict. title Assets.

The chattels, real and personal, of the testator coming to the executor, are leases for years, rent due, corn growing and cut, grass cut and severed, &c. cattle, money, plate, household goods, &c. Co. Lit. 118. Dyer, 130, 537. An executor having a lease for years of land in right of the deceased, if he purchase the fee, whereby the lease is extinct, yet this lease shall continue to be assets, as to the creditors and legatees. 1 Rep. 87. Bro. Lease, 63. Though a plantation be an estate of inheritance, yet, being in a foreign country, it is a chattel in the hands of executors to pay debts. 1 Vent. 358. The executor is not only entitled to all personal goods and chattels of the testator, of what nature soever they are, but they are also accounted to be in his possession, though they are not actually so: for he may maintain an action against any one who detains them from him: he is likewise entitled to things in action; as right of execution on a judgment, bond, statute, &c. Also to money awarded on arbitration, where the party dies before the day, &c. Co. Lit. 209. 2 Vent. 249. 1 Danv. Abr. 549.

If goods of the testator are kept from the executor, he may sue for them in the Spiritual Court, or at Common Law; and if one seised of a messuage in fee, &c. hath goods in the house, and makes a will and executors, and dies, the executors may enter into the house, and carry away the goods. Lit. 60. An executor may, in convenient time after the testator's death, enter into a house descended to the heir, for removing and carrying away the goods, so as the door be open, or the key be in the door. Offic. Exec. 8. He may take the goods and chattels to himself, or give power to another to seize them for him, 9 Rep. 38. If an executor with his own goods redeem the goods of the testator; or pays the testator's debts, &c. the goods of the testator shall, for so much, be changed into the proper goods of the executor. Jenk. Cent. 188.

Where a man by will devises that his lands shall be sold for payment of debts, his executors shall sell the land, to whom it belongs to pay the debts, 2 Leon. c. 276. And if lands are devised to executors to be sold for payment of the testator's debts, those executors that act in the executorship, or that will sell, may do it without the others. Co. Lit. 113 By stat. 21 H. 8. c. 4. Bargains and sales of lands, &c. devised to be sold by executors, shall be as good, if made by such of the executors only as take upon them the execution of the will, as if all the executors had joined in the sale. If lands are thus devised to pay debts, a surviving executor may sell them; but if the devise be, that the executor shall sell the land, and not of the land to them to be sold, here being only an authority not an interest; if one dies, the other cannot sell.

6. The Executor or Administrator must pay the debts of the deceased. In payment of debts he must observe the rules of priority; otherwise, on deficiency of assets, if he pay those of a lower degree first, he must answer those of a higher out of his own estate. And, first, he must pay all funeral charges, and the expences of proving the will, and the like. Secondly, debts due to the King on record or specialty. 1 And. 129. Thirdly, such debts as are by particular statutes to be preferred to all others; money due upon poor rates, (Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38.) for letters to the post-office, (Stat. 9 Ann. c. 10.) and some others. Fourthly, debts of record; as judgments, (docquetted according to the stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20.) statutes, and recognizances. (4 Rep. 60. Cro. Car. 363.) Fifthly, debts due on special contracts; as for rent; (for which the lessor has often a better remedy in his own hands, by distraining;) or upon bonds, covenants, and the like under seal. (Wentw. ch. 12.)

Lastly, debts on simple contracts, viz. upon notes unsealed and verbal promises. Among these simple contracts, servants' wages are by some, (1 Rol. Abr. 927.) with reason preferred to any other: and so stood the ancient law according to Bracton, (lib. 2. c. 26.) and Fleta, (b. 2. c. 56. § 10.) Among debts of equal degree, the executor or administrator is allowed to pay himself first; by retaining in his hands so much as his debt amounts to. 10 Mod. 496. If a creditor constitutes his debtor his executor, this is a release or discharge of the debt, whether the executor acts or not. (Plowd. 184. Salk. 299.) provided there be assets sufficient to pay the testator's debts: for, though this discharge of the debt shall take place of all legacies, yet it were unfair to defraud the testator's creditors of their just debts by a release which is absolutely voluntary. Salk. 303. 1 Rol. Abr. 921. 5 Rep. 30. 8 Rep. 136. But if a person dies intestate, and the Ordinary commits administration to a debtor, the debt is not thereby extinguished, for he comes in only by the act of law, not by the act of the party. 5 Rep. 136. 1 Salk. 306.—See also 1 Cha. Rep. 292. Moor, 855. Hutt. 128.

A debt on a judgment against a testator or intestate (not docketed) is put by the Statute on a level with simple contract debts. 6 Term Rep. 384.

A debt on judgment, not docketed according to the directions of stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20, is by that act put on a level with simple contract debts; and therefore such judgment cannot be pleaded by an executor, to an action on a simple contract; and on a plea of plene administravit to debt on such a judgment, the executor may give in evidence payment of specialty debts, which exhausted all the effects. 6 Term Rep. K. B. 384. 1 Bos. & Pull. 307.

A. being indebted in his individual capacity to a house in trade, of which he himself was a partner, in a sum of money, the amount of which could not be exactly ascertained, covenanted to pay the firm all his then debts, and such other debts as should subsequently accrue. A. died without having satisfied the original debt, and having contracted a further debt after the execution of the deed. His executors, two of whom were partners in the house of trade, were not allowed to plead either of these debts as an outstanding specialty debt, or by way of retainer, De Tastet v. Shaw, Term Rep. K. B. Tr. 58 Geo. 3, 664.

If no suit is commenced against him, the executor may pay any one creditor in equal degree his whole debt; though he has nothing left for the rest, for, without a suit commenced, the executor has no legal notice of the debt. Dyer, 32. 2 Leon. 60.

Pending a bill in equity against an executor, he may pay any other debt of a higher nature, or of as high a nature, where he has legal assets: but where there is a final decree against an executor, if he pays a bond, it is a mis-payment; for a decree is in nature of a judgment. 2 Salk 507.

If there be several debts due on several bonds from the testator, his executor may pay which bond debt he pleases, except an action of debt is actually commenced against him upon one of those bonds: and in such case, if, pending an action, another bond creditor brings another action against him, before judgment obtained by either of them, he may prefer which he will, by confessing a judgment to one, and paying him; which judgment he may plead in bar to the other action. Vaugh. 89. See Sid. 21. But this judgment confessed must be before plea. The usual way is, if there is time, and an executor or administrator is desirous of preferring another creditor of equal degree with him who sues, instantly, before plea, to confess a judgment, and then plead it with a plenè administravit ultra.

If judgment for 100*l.* is suffered, and the plaintiff compounds for 60*l.* the judgment for the whole sum shall not be allowed to keep off other creditors. 8 Rep. 133. Judgments are not to be kept on foot by fraud. Sid. 230. 1 Vent. 76.

On a Sci. Fac. against an executor, he cannot plead fully administered, but must plead specially that no goods of the testator came to his hands, whereby he might discharge the debt; for he may have fully administered, and yet be liable to the debt, where goods of the testator's afterwards come to his hands. 1 Lill. 568. Cro. Eliz. 575. In Scire Facias against executors, upon a judgment against their testator, they pleaded Plenè Administravit, by paying debts upon bonds ante notitiam: It was adjudged no plea, for at their peril they ought to take notice of debts upon record, and first pay them; and though the recovery be in another county than that where the testator lived: but where an action is brought against executors in another county than where they live, and they not knowing thereof, pay debts upon specialty, it is good. Cro. Eliz. 793.

Where day of payment is past, the penalty of a bond is the sum due at law; but where the day of payment is not come, the sum in the condition is the debt, and the executor cannot cover the assets any further. The Bank of England v. Morrice, Widow. Annaly, 224.

A bill may be exhibited in the Chancery against an executor, to discover the testator's personal estate; and thereupon he shall be decreed to pay debts and legacies. Abr. Ca. Eq. 238. If a person being executor, and his testator greatly indebted, be desirous to pay the assets as far as they will go, and that his payments may not be afterwards questioned, he may bring a bill in equity against all the testator's creditors, in order that they may, if they will, contest each other's debts, and dispute who ought to be preferred in payment. 2 Vern. 37.

Where there are only equitable assets, they must be equally paid amongst all the creditors; for a debt by judgment and simple contract is in conscience equal. 2 Peere Williams, 416. As to what are legal, and what equitable assets, see Vin. Abr. title Payment. And it is held, that bonds and other debts shall be paid equally by executors, where a person has devised lands to them to be sold for the payment of his debts. 1 P. Wms. 430.

A debt devised by the testator is not to be paid by the debtor to the legatee, but to the executor, who can give a sufficient discharge for it, and is answerable to the legatee if there be sufficient assets. If an executor pays out the assets in legacies, and afterwards debts appear, of which he had no notice, which he is obliged to pay, the executor, by bill in Chancery, may force the legatees to refund. Chan. Rep. 136. 149. One legatee paid shall refund against another, and against a creditor of the testator, that can charge the executor only in equity; but if an executor pays a debt upon simple contract, there shall be no refunding to a creditor of a higher nature. 2 Vent. 360.

The following extract from Mr. Cox's admirable notes to his edition of Peere Williams's Reports; (1 P. Wms. 294. 679.) will serve as a general summary or abridgment of the determinations relative to the application of the different funds of a testator's estate, in payment of his different debts.

The personal estate of a testator shall, in all cases, be primarily applied in discharge of his personal debt (or general legacy), unless he, by express words, or manifest intention exempt it. 2 Atk. 625. 3 Atk. 202. Haslewood v. Pope, 3 P. Wms. 324. French v. Chichester, 1 Bro. P. C. 192. Fereyes v. Robertson, Bunh. 302. Walker v. Jackson, 2 Atk. 624. Bridgeman v. Dove, 3 Atk. 202. Inchiquin (E.) v. French, Amb. 33. 1 Wils. 82. S. C. Samuel v. Wake, 1 Bro. C. R. 144. Ancaster (D.) v. Mayor. Bro. C. R. 454.—Yet it may be so exempted; as in Bampfield v. Wyndham, Pre. Ch. 101. Wainewright v. Bendlowes, 2 Vern. 718. Amb. 581. Stapleton v. Colville, Talb. 202. Walker v. Jackson, 2 Atk. 624. Anderton v. Cooke, 1 Bro. C. R. 456, 457. and the case of Kynaston & Kynaston, cited there.—Holiday v. Bowman, cited 1 Bro. C. R. 145. Webb v. Jones, 2 Bro. B. R. 60.

Every loan creates a debt from the borrower, whether there be a bond or covenant for payment or not. Cope v. Cope, 2 Salk. 449. Howel v. Price, 1 P. Wms. 291. Balsh v. Hyam, 2 P. Wms. 455. King v. King, 3 P. Wms. 458.

So the personal estate shall be liable, although such personal debt be also secured by mortgage. Howel v. Price, 1 P. Wms. 291. Cope v. Cope, 3 Salk. 449. Pockley v. Pockley, 1 Vern. 36. King v. King, 3 P. Wms. 360. Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 436. Robinson v. Gee, 1 Vez. 251. Belvedere (E.) v. Rochfort, 6 Bro. P. C. 520.—Philips v. Philips, 2 Pro. C. R. 273.

So lands subject to, or devised for, payment of debts, shall be liable to discharge such mortgaged lands, either descended or devised. Bartholomew v. May, 1 Atk. 487. Tweedale (MSS.) v. Coventry (E.) 1 Bro. C. R. 240. Even though the mortgaged lands be devised expressly subject to the incumbrance. 2 P. Wms. 366. Serle v. St. Eloy.—So lands descended shall exonerate mortgaged lands devised. Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 424.—So unincumbered lands and mortgaged lands, both being specifically devised, (but expressly "after payment of all debts,") shall contribute in discharge of such mortgage. Carter v. Barnardiston, 1 P. Wms. 505. 2 Bro. P. C. 1.

But in all these cases, the debt being considered as the personal debt of the testator himself, the charge on the real estate is merely collateral. The rule therefore is otherwise where the charge is on the real estate principally, although there be a collateral personal security. Coventry (Countess) v. Coventry (E.) 2 P. Wms. 222. Freeman v. Edwards, 2 P. Wms. 437. Wilson (E.) v. Darlington, 2 P. Wms. 664. in n. Ward v. Ld. Dudley, 2 *Bro. C. With respect to the priority of application of real assets, when the personal estate is either exempt or exhausted, it seems that, First, the real estate expressly devised for payment of debts shall be applied: Secondly, to the extent of specialty debts, the real estate descended: Thirdly, the real estate specifically devised, subject to a general charge of debts. Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 242. Powis v. Corbet, 3 Atk. 566. Wride v. Clarke, 2 Bro. C. R. 261. n. Davies v. Top, Id. 259 n. Donne v. Lewis, Id. 257.

It being the object of a Court of Equity that every claimant upon the assets of a deceased person shall be satisfied, as far as such assets can, by any arrangement consistent with the nature of the respective claims, be applied in satisfaction thereof; it has been long settled, that where one claimant has more than one fund to resort to, and another claimant only one, the first claimant shall resort to that fund on which the second has no lien. Lanoy v. Athol (D.) 2 Atk. 446. Lacam v. Mertins, 1 Ves. 312. Mogg v. Hodges, 2 Ves. 53.

If therefore a specialty creditor, whose debt is a lien on the real assets, receive satisfaction out of the personal assets, a simple contract creditor shall stand in the place of the specialty creditor against the real assets, so far as the latter shall have exhausted the personal assets in payment of his debt. 2 C. C. 4. Sagitary v. Hyde, 1 Vern. 455. Neave v. Alderton, 1 Eq. Ab. 144. Wilson v. Fielding, 2 Vern. 763. Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 436.—And legatees shall have the same equity as against assets descended. Culpepper v. Aston, 2 C. C. 117. Bowman v. Reeve, Pre. Ch. 578. Tipping v. Tipping, 1 P. Wms. 730. Lucy v. Gardner, Bunb. 137. Lutkins v. Leigh, Talb. 54.—So where lands are subjected to payment of all debts, a legatee shall stand in the place of a simple contract creditor, who has been satisfied out of personal assets. Haslewood v. Pope, 3. P. Wms. 323. So where legacies by will are charged on the real estate, but not the legacies by codicil, the former shall resort to the real assets upon a deficiency of the personal assets to pay the whole. Masters v. Masters, 1 P. Wms. 422. Bligh v. Darnley (E.) 2 P. Wms. 620. Hyde v. Hyde, 3 C R. 83.

But from the principles of these rules it is clear, that they cannot be applied in aid of one claimant, so as to defeat the claim of another, and therefore a pecuniary legatee shall not stand in the place of a specialty creditor, as against land devised, though he shall as against land descended. Scott v. Scott, Amb. 383. Clifton v. Burt, 1 P. Wms. 678. and Haslewood v. Pope, 3 P. Wms. 324. But such legatee shall stand in the place of a mortgagee who has exhausted the personal assets to be satisfied out of the mortgaged premises, though specifically devised. Lutkins v. Leigh, Talb. 53. Forrester v. Ld. Leigh, Amb. 171. For the application of the personal assets, in case of the real estate mortgaged, does not take place to the defeating of every legacy. Oneal v. Mead, 1 P. Wms. 693. Tipping v. Tipping, Id. 730. Davies v. Gardner, 2 P. Wms. 190. Ryder v. Wager, Id. 335.

It is now settled that the Court of Chancery will not marshall assets in favour of a charitable bequest, so as to give it effect out of the personal chattels, it being void so far as it touches any interest in land. Mogg v. Hodges, 2 Ves. 52. Attorney-General v. Tyndal, Amb. 614. Foster v. Blagden, Amb. 704. Hillyard v. Taylor, Id. 713. II. and it is to be observed, that none of the rules abovementioned subject any fund to a claim to which it was not before subject, but only take care that the election of one claimant shall not prejudice the claims of the others. 2 Atk. 438. 1 Ves. 312.

Some of the questions heretofore much agitated respecting the application of real assets, are set at rest by the act 47 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 74. 'for more effectually securing the payment of the debts of Traders.' By this act it is provided, that when any person being, at the time of his death, a trader within the meaning of the bankrupt laws, shall die seised of, or entitled to, any real estate, which he shall not by his last will have charged or devised for payment of his debts, and which would have been assets for payment of debts due on any specialty, in which heirs were bound, such real estate shall be assets to be administered in courts of equity for payment of all debts, as well debts due on simple contract as on specialty; and that the heir at law and devisees shall be liable to suits in equity accordingly: Provided that creditors by specialty, in which heirs are bound, shall be fully paid in preference to creditors by simple contract, or by specialty, in which heirs are not bound.

7. When the debts are all discharged, the legacies claim the next regard; which are to be paid by the executor so far as his assets will extend: but he may not give himself the preference herein, as in the case of debts. 2 Vern. 434. 2 P. Wms. 25. See title Legacy.—The assent of an executor to legacies is held necessary to entitle the legatee; but as this assent may be compelled, see March, 97. it does not seem necessary to state the effect of a dissent where there are assets sufficient to answer both debts and legacies. Where there are not assets, the assent of the executor to a legacy would subject him to a devastavit.—See Co. Lit. 111. Keilw. 128. Perk. 570. Plowd. 525, 543. 4 Rep. 28. Cro. Eliz. 719. and this Dict. title Legacy.

8. When all the debts and particular legacies are discharged, the surplus or residuum must be paid to the Residuary Legatee, if any be appointed by the will; and if there be none, it was long a settled notion that it devolved to the executor's own use, by virtue of his executorship. Perkins, 525.—But whatever ground there might have been formerly for it, this opinion seems now to be understood, with the following restriction; that although where the executor has no legacy at all, the residuum shall in general be his own; yet wherever there is sufficient on the face of a will, (by means of a competent legacy or otherwise,) to imply that the testator intended his executor should not have the residue, the undivided surplus of the estate shall go to the next of kin, the executor then standing upon exactly the same footing as an administrator. Prec. Chanc. 323. 1 P. Wms. 7. 514. 2 P. Wms. 338. 3 P. Wms. 43. 194. Stra. 559. Lawson v. Lawson, Dom. Proc. 28 April, 1777.

The result of the many cases on this subject, (as ingeniously stated in a note of Mr. Cox's, to his edition of P. Wms. vol. 1 p. 550.) appears to be this.

By law the appointment of an Executor vests in him beneficially, all the personal estate of the testator not otherwise disposed of; but wherever courts of Equity have seen, on the face of the will, sufficient to convince them that the testator did not intend the executor to take the surplus, they have turned the executors into trustees for those on whom the law would cast the surplus, in case of a complete intestacy, i. e. the next of kin; as where the executors are expressly called executors in trust, or where any other expressions occur, shewing the office only to be intended them, and not the beneficial interest. Pring v. Pring, 2 Vern. 99. Rachfield v. Careless, 2 P. Wms. 158. Graydon v. Hicks, 2 Atk. 18. Dean v. Dalton, 2 Bro. C. R. 634. Bennet v. Bachelor, 3 Bro. C. R. 28. So where there is a residuary clause, but the name of the residuary legatee is not inserted. Wheeler v. Sheers, Mosel. 288. Cloyne (Bishop) v. Young, 2 Ves. 91. North (Lord) v. Purdon, 2 Ves. 495. Or where the residuary legatee dies in the life-time of the testator, Nicholls v. Crisp, Amb. 769. Bennett v. Bachelor, 3 Bro. C. R. 28.

So a pecuniary legacy to a sole executor affords a sufficient argument to exclude him from the residue; as it is absurd to suppose a testator to give expressly a part of the fund to the person he intended to take the whole. Cook v. Walker, cited 2 Vern. 676. Joslin v. Brewett, Bunb. 112. Davers v. Dewes, 3 P. Wms. 10. And it is settled (notwithstanding the case of Ball v. Smith, 2 Vern. 675,) that the wife being the executrix shall make no difference, as appears as well by the cases mentioned in Farrington v. Knightly, (1 P. Wms. 544 and seq.) as by 2 Eq. Ab. 444. p. 58. Martin v. Rebow, 1 Bro. C. R. 154. So equal pecuniary legacies to two or more executors shall exclude them from the surplus. Petit v. Smith, 1 P. Wms. 7. and the several cases there mentioned, and 3 Bro. C. R. 110. Neither will legacies to the next of kin vary the rule. Andrew v. Clarke, 2 Vez. 162.

But wherever the legacy is consistent with the intent that the executor should take the whole, a court of equity will not disturb his legal right: and therefore where the gift to the executor is only an exception out of another legacy, it shall not exclude him from the residue, because it is necessary to make such exception expressly. Griffith v. Rogers, Pre. Ch. 231. Hoskins v. Hoskins, Pre. Ch. 263. Granville (Ld.) v. Beaufort (Dss.) 1 P. Wms. 114. Jones v. Westcombe, Pre. Ch. 316. Newstead v. Johnston, 2 Atk. 45. 2 Eq. Ab. 444. p. 58. So the same principle seems to have prevailed in Lawson v. Lawson, 7 Bro. P. C. 511. So a legacy to one only of two or more executors shall exclude neither from the surplus; because the testator might intend to such a one a preference pro tanto, Colesworth v. Branguin Pre. Ch. 323. Mason v. Hawkins, 4 Bro. P. C. 1. Johnston v. Twist, cited 2 Vez. 167. Cloyne (Bp.) v. Young, 2 Vez. 91. Wilson v. Ivatt, 2 Vez. 166. The same rule and reason hold, where several executors have unequal pecuniary legacies. Brasbridge v. Woodroffe, 2 Atk. 69. Bowker v. Hunter, 1 Bro. C. R. 328. although, in the last case, the following were objected as authorities against the determination, viz. 2 Vern. 677. Pre. Ch. 392. 2 Vern. 361. and Vachell v. Jefferies, Pre. Ch. 169. and 1 Bro. P. C. 167.

Then, as to specific legacies, it is determined, that a specific legacy will exclude a sole executor. Randal v. Bookey, 2 Vern. 425. Southat v. Watson, 3 Atk. 226. Martin v. Rebow, 1 Bro. C. R. 154. but that distinct specific legacies of unequal value to several executors, shall not exclude them. Blinkhorne v. Feast, 2 Vez. 27. and the language of Lord Hardwicke in Southat v. Wilson, treats specific and pecuniary legacies as standing precisely upon the same ground in questions of this nature. See title Legacy.

However, no case occurs in the books in which distinct specific legacies of equal value to several executors have excluded them from the surplus. And the argument which supports this rule as to pecuniary, certainly does not apply with equal force to specific, legatees; since it is very probable that a testator may wish to distribute specific quantities of stock, or particular debts, &c. &c. amongst his executors in some particular manner; although equally, in point of value, and consistently with an intention that they should take the surplus. The case of Shrimpton v. Stanhope, cited 3 Atk. 230. is not a case of distinct specific legacies: for it appears from Reg. Lib. B. 1736, fo. 104. that the testator there gave some specific legacies to a man and his wife jointly, whom he also made his executors. And so in Willis v. Brady, Barn, 64. and these cases therefore seem like legacies to a sole executor.

With regard to the admission of parol evidence in cases of this kind, see Rachfield v. Careless, 2 P. Wms. 158. and Rutland (D.) v. Rutland (Dss.) 2 P. Wms. 210. and Mr. Cox's notes on the former of those cases.

Concerning the Administrator indeed there was formerly much debate, whether or no he could be compelled to make any distribution of the intestate's estate. Godol. p. 2. c. 32. For though (after the administration was taken in effect from the Ordinary, and transferred to the relations of the deceased), the spiritual court endeavoured to compel a distribution, and took bonds of the administrator for that purpose, they were prohibited by the temporal courts, and the bonds declared void at law. 1 Lev. 233. Cart. 125. 2 P. Wms. 447. And the right of the husband not only to administer, but also to enjoy exclusively, the effects of his deceased wife, depends still on this doctrine of the Common Law: the statute of frauds declaring only, that the statute of distribution does not extend to this case. But now these controversies are quite at an end; for by the statute commonly called the Statute of Distribution, 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. (explained by 29 Car. 2. c. 30.) it is enacted that the surplusage of intestates, (except of femes coverts, which are left as at common law. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. § 25.) shall, after the expiration of one full year from the death of the intestate, be distributed in the following manner: One third shall go to the widow of the intestate, and the residue, in equal proportions, to his children, or if dead, to their representatives, that is, their lineal descendants: if there are no children or legal representatives subsisting, then a moiety shall go to the widow, and a moiety to the next of kindred in equal degree, and their representatives: if no widow, the whole shall go to the children; if neither widow nor children, the whole shall be distributed among the next of kin in equal degree, and their representatives: but no representatives are admitted among collaterals farther than the children of the intestate's brothers and sisters. Raym. 496. Lord Raym. 571.

The next of kindred here referred to are to be investigated by the rules of consanguinity, as those who are entitled to letters of administration, of whom sufficient has already been said (ante III.) And therefore, by this statute, the mother, as well as the father, succeeded to all the personal effects of their children, who died intestate, and without wife or issue; in exclusion of any brothers and sisters of the deceased. And so the law still remains with respect to the father; (see 1 P. Wms. 48.) And the father need not administer, (Pr. Ch. 260.) But by stat. 1 Jac. 2. c. 17. if the father be dead, and any of the children die intestate, without wife or issue, in the life-time of the mother, she and each of the remaining children or their representatives, shall divide his effects in equal portions.—And in case a man die, leaving a wife and a mother, and brothers and sisters, the wife shall have only a moiety, the remainder going to his mother, brothers, and sisters equally. 2 P. Wms. 344.

The statute of distribution bears, in its principle, a near resemblance to our ancient English law previous to the statute of wills, by which (see Glanvil, l. 2. c. 5. Bracton, l. 2. c. 26. Fleta, l. 2. c. 57.) a man's goods were to be divided into three equal parts; of which one went to his heirs or lineal descendants, another to his wife, and the third was at his own disposal; or if he died without a wife, he might then dispose of one moiety, and the other went to his children. And so if he had no children, the wife was entitled to one moiety, and he might bequeath the other; but if he died without either wife or issue, the whole was at his own disposal. The shares of the wife and children were called their reasonable parts; and the writ de rationabili parte bonorum was given to recover them. F. N. B. 122.

By the same Statute of Distributions it is directed, that no child of the intestate (except his heir at law,) on whom he settled in his life-time any estate in lands, or pecuniary portion, equal to the distributive shares of the other children, shall have any part of the surplusage with their brothers and sisters; but if the estates so given them, by way of advancement, are not quite equivalent to the other shares, the children, so advanced, shall have so much only as will make them equal. And this with respect to goods and chattels is part of the ancient custom of London, of the province of York, and of Scotland: and with regard to lands descending in coparcenary, that it hath always been and still is, the common law of England, under the name of Hotchpot.

It may be observed that the doctrines and limits of representation, laid down in the statute of Distribution, seem to have been in some measure also borrowed from the civil law: whereby it will sometimes happen, that personal estates are divided per capita, and sometimes per stirpes; whereas the Common Law knows no other rule of succession but that per stirpes only. They are divided per capita, to every man an equal share, when all the claimants claim in their own rights, as in equal degree of kindred, and not jure representationis, in the right of another person. As if the next of kin be the intestate's three brothers, A. B. and C. here his effects are divided into three equal portions, and distributed per capita, one to each: but if one of these brothers A. had been dead, leaving three children, and another, B. leaving two, then the distribution must have been per stirpes; viz. one third to A.'s three children, another third to B.'s two children, and a remaining to C. the surviving brother. Yet if C. had also been dead, without issue, then A.'s and B.'s five children, being all in equal degree to the intestate, would take in their own rights per capita; viz. each of them one-fifth part. Prec. Chanc. 54.

A question hath been made, if a father die intestate, leaving only one son, which son also dies intestate, whether administration should be granted to the next of kin, of the father or of the son? The latter determination hath been, that, by this statute of distribution of intestate's estates, a right is vested in one child, where there is one and no more, (viz.) a right to sue for the estate: and by consequence, if he die before the estate is recovered, and actually in his possession, it must go to his administrator, and not to the administrator of the father. Palmer v. Alcock, 3 Mod. 58. Vide Shower, 26. and 2 Vern. 274.

So where a person died intestate, leaving two, who were next a-kin, in equal degree to him; one of them died intestate within the year, and before distribution; adjudged, that an interest was vested in him, and his next of kin shall have the administration, like the case of a residuary legatee dying before probate of the will, (viz.) his next of kin shall have the administration, and the next of the testator. Show. 25.

9. The Statute of Distributions expressly excepts and reserves the customs of the city of London, of the province of York, and of all other places having peculiar customs of distributing intestates' effects. So that, though in those places the restraint of devising is removed, their ancient customs remain in full force with respect to the estates of intestates.

In the city of London (Ld. Raym. 1329.) and province of York, (2 Burn. Eccl. Law, 746.) as well as in the kingdom of Scotland, (Ibid. 782.) and probably also in Wales, (concerning which there is little to be gathered, but from the stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 38.) the effects of the intestate, after payment of his debts, are in general divided according to the ancient universal doctrine of the pars rationabilis. If the deceased leaves a widow and children, his substance (deducting for the widow's her apparel, and the furniture of her bed-chamber, which in London is called the widow's chamber,) is divided into three parts one of which belongs to the widow, another to the children, and the third to the administrator; if only a widow, or only children, they shall respectively, in either case, take one moiety, and the administrator the other. 1 P. Wms. 341. Salk. 246.—If neither widow nor child, the administrator shall have the whole. 2 Show. 175.—And this portion or dead man's part, the administrator was wont to apply to his own use. (2 Freem. 85. 1 Vern. 133.) Till the stat. 1 Jac. 2. c. 17. declared that the same should be subject to the statute of Distribution. So that if a man dies worth 1800*l.* personal estate, leaving a widow and two children, this estate shall be divided into eighteen parts; whereof the widow shall have eight, six by the custom, and two by the statute; and each of the children five, three by the custom, and two by the statute; if he leaves a widow and one child, she shall have still eight parts, as before, and the child shall have ten, six by the custom, and four by the statute; if he leaves a widow and no child, the widow shall have three-fourths of the whole, two by the custom, and one by the statute; and the remaining fourth shall go, by the statute, to the next of kin. It is also to be observed, that if the wife be provided for by a jointure before marriage, in bar of her customary part, it puts her in a state of non-entity, with regard to the custom only; (2 Vern. 665. 3 P. Wms. 16) but she shall be entitled to her share of the dead man's part under the statute of Distribution, unless barred by special agreement. 1 Vern. 15. 2 Chan. Rep. 252. And if any of the children are advanced by the father in his life-time with any sum of money, (not amounting to their full proportionable part) they shall bring that portion into hotchpot with the rest of the brothers and sisters, but not by the widow, before they are entitled to any benefit under the custom; (2 Freem. 279. 1 Equ. Cas. Abr. 155. 2 P. Wms. 526.) but if they are fully advanced, the custom entitles them to no farther dividend. 2 P. Wms 527.

Thus far, in the main, the customs of London and of York agree: but besides certain other less material variations, there are two principal points in which they considerably differ. One is, that in London the share of the children (or orphanage part) is not fully vested in them till the age of twenty-one, before which they cannot dispose of it by testament, (2 Vern. 558.) and if they die under that age, whether sole or married, their share shall survive to the other children; but after the age of twenty-one it is free from any orphanage custom; and in case of intestacy, shall fall under the statute of Distributions. Prec. Chanc. 537. The other, that in the province of York, the heir at Common Law, who inherits any land, either in fee or in tail, is excluded from any filial portion or reasonable part. 2 Burr. 754.

VI. 1. Against an administrator and for him, action will lie, as for and against an executor, and he shall be charged to the value of the goods, and no further; unless it be by his own false plea, or by wasting the goods of the intestate. An executor or administrator shall never be charged de bonis propriis, but where he doth some wrong; as by selling the testator's goods, and converting the money to his own use, concealing or wasting them, or by pleading what is false. Dyer, 210. 2 Rol. Rep. 295. But this plea must be of a fact within his own knowledge. If an administrator plead plenè administravit, and it is found against him, the judgment shall be de bonis propriis, because it is a false plea, and that upon his own knowledge. 2 Cro. 191. Contrà where he pleads such a plea, and that he hath no more than to satisfy such a judgment, &c. the recovery shall be de bonis testatoris, &c. 2 Rol. Rep. 400. This must mean where such plea is true in fact. Upon plenè administravit pleaded by an administrator, the plaintiff must prove his debt, or he shall recover but a penny damages, though there be assets; because the plea only admits the debt, but not the quantum. 1 Salk. 296.

Special bail is not required of administrators or executors in any action brought against them for the debt of the intestate; except where they have wasted the goods of the deceased: nor shall costs be had against them. Vide title Costs. See Cro. Eliz. 503. Yelv. 168. Hut. 69. 2 Rol. Rep. 87. 1 Salk. 207. 3 Salk. 106. Not even on a writ of error where judgment is affirmed. Where an administrator is plaintiff, he must shew by whom administration was granted; for that only entitles him to the action: but if an administrator is defendant, the plaintiff need not set forth by whom administration was granted, for it may not be within his knowledge. Sid. 228. 1 Lutw. 301. Generally an administrator shall be charged by others for any debt or duty due from the deceased, as he himself might have been charged in his life-time; so far as he hath any of the intestate's estate to discharge the same. Co. Lit. 219. Dyer, 14.

If a man have judgment for land in a real or mixed action and for damages, and then dies, his executor or administrator, not the heir, shall have execution for the damages, but not for the land. Fitz. Admin. 53. March 9.

2. For the goods of the testator, taken from them, or for trespass upon the land, &c. Executors may, before the will proved, bring action of trespass, detinue, &c. And if they sell cattle, or other goods of the testator, before the will is proved, they may have actions for the money payable, before the same is proved. Offic. Exec. 35. It has been ruled, that an executor may commence an action before probate; but he cannot declare upon it without producing in court the letters testamentary: he is not like an administrator, who hath no right till administration committed; for his right is the same before as after probate of the will, and the not proving it is only an impediment to the action. 1 Salk. 303.

Executors may maintain action of trover for goods converted in the life of the testator. Cro. Eliz. 377. And by the stat. Westm. 2. (13 E.) c. 23. executors shall have a writ of account, and the like action and process, as the testator might have had.—By stat. 4 E. 3. c. 7. the executors may bring actions for trespass done to their testator, as for goods and chattels carried away in his life, and shall recover their damages in the same manner as he should have done.—By stat. 25 E. 3. st. 5. c. 5. executors of executors shall have actions of debt, account, and of goods taken away of the first testator's; and have execution of statutes, &c. and shall answer to others, so far as they recover goods of the first testator, as the first executor's.—As to process against Executors, see st. 9 E. 3. c. 3.

Formerly if an executor wasted goods, and left an executor, and died leaving assets, his executor should not be chargeable, because it was a personal tort. 2 Lev. 120. but now it is otherwise by the stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24.

The law subjects the executors to every person's claim and action, which he had against the testator, except as to trespass vi et armis, &c. commited by the testator; for which reason the executor is said to be the testator's assignee, and to represent the person of the testator: but for personal wrongs done by the testator to the person, or goods, &c. of another, the executor doth not represent him: because personal actions die with the person. Co. Lit. 209. 9 Rep. 89. See title Action.

Nothing can be debt in the executor, which was not debt in the testator. Cro. Eliz. 232. A promise to pay to an executor, when the testator is not named, is not good. Cro. Jac. 570. But a testator may bind his executors as to his goods, though he himself is not bound. Ibid. And an executor may recover a duty due to the testator, though he be not named. Dyer, 14. Action lies against an executor upon a collateral promise made and broken by the testator. Cro. Jac. 663. The testator's Assumpsit to do any collateral thing, as to build an house, &c. which is not a debt, binds executors. Jenk. Cent. 290. 336. Assumpsit lies upon a contract of the testator; and the reason is the same upon a promise, where the testator had a valuable consideration. Palm. 329. Though a debt upon a simple contract of the testator, cannot be recovered of the executor by action of debt; yet it may by assumpsit. 1 Lev. 200 9 Rep. 87.

A promise made upon good consideration by a testator, that his executor shall pay, is a sufficient consideration for an action in assumpsit against the executor; and in such action it is neither necessary to aver assets, nor a promise by the executor; and on a count averring an account stated by the defendant of monies due from him as executor the judgment shall be de bonis testatoris, and such count may therefore be joined with counts on promises of the testator. Powell v. Graham, 7 W. P. Taunton, 580.

Counts on promises to a testator, may be joined with counts on promises to an executor, if the damages recovered under the last would be assets in the hands of the executor. Powley v. Newton, 6 W. P. Taunton, 456.

If two persons are jointly bound, and one of them dies, the survivor only shall be charged, and not the other's executor. Pasch. 16 Car. 2. When there are two executors, if one of them dies, action is to be brought against the surviving executor, and not the executor of the deceased: but in equity the testator's goods are liable in whosesoever's hands they are. 1 Leon. 304. Chan. Rep. 57.

If there be no assets, the obligee executor may sue the heir of the obligor testator in action of debt upon his bond. 1 Salk. 304. 1 Lil. Abr. 575.

If an executor releases all actions, suits and demands, it extends only to demands in his own right, not such as he hath as executor. Sh. w. 153. An executor shall be charged with rent in the detinet, if he hath assets; and if he continues the possession, he shall be charged in the debet and detinet, in respect of the perception of the profits, whether he hath assets or not. 1 Lev. 127. But an execution is not suable in the debet and detinet for part, and in the detinet for the other part, because they require several judgments; viz. De bonis propriis for the debet and detinet and de bonis testatoris for the detinet. 3 Lev. 74. See title Debet and Detinet.

If an executor has a term, and the rent reserved is more than the value of the premises, in action brought against him for it in the debet and detinet, he may plead the special matter, viz. That he hath no assets, and that the land is of less value than the rent, and demand judgment if he ought not to be charged in the detinet tantum: and he cannot waive the lease without renouncing the whole executorship. 1 Salk. 297.

One executor cannot regularly sue another at law; but he may have relief in equity: in the eye of the law all are but as one executor; and most acts done by, or to any of them, are esteemed acts done by or to all of them. 1 Rol. Abr. 918. If where one executor is sued, he plead that there is another executor he ought to shew that he hath administered. 1 Lev. 161. And he only that administers is to be sued in actions against executors; but actions brought by executors are to be in the name of all of them, though some do not take upon them the executorship. 1 Rol. 924. Jenk. Cent. 106, 107. If any executor refuses to join in an action with his co-executors he must be summoned and severed.

An executor is not disabled by outlawry to sue for the debts of the testator.

By the stat. of Frauds, 29 Car. 2. c. 3. no action shall charge an executor to answer damages out of his own estate, upon any promise to another, unless there be some writing thereof signed by the party to be charged therewith. See Rann v. Hughes, 4 Bro. P. C.

By stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 8. § 1. on any judgment after verdict, had by or in the name of an executor or administrator; an administrator de bonis non may sue forth a scire facias, and take execution upon such judgment. If an executor makes himself a stranger to the will of the testator, or pleads Ne unques executor, or any false plea, and it is found against him, judgment shall be de bonis propriis: in other cases de bonis testatoris. Cro. Jac. 447.

If on a scire facias against an executor, the sheriff return a devastavit, the plaintiff shall have judgment and execution de bonis propriis of the defendant; and if nulla bona be returned, he may have a capias ad satisfaciend. or an elegit. 2 Nels. 791. Dyer, 185. But one executor shall not be charged with a devastavit made by his companion; for the act of one shall charge the other no further than the goods of the testator in his hands amount to. Cro. Eliz. 318.

If an executor does any waste, or mis-employs the estate of the deceased, or doth any thing by negligence or fraud, &c. it is a devastavit, and he shall be charged for so much out of his own goods. 8 Rep. 133. And a new executor may have an action against a former executor, who wasted the goods of the deceased; or the old one may remain chargeable to creditors, &c. Hob. 266.

If an executor takes an obligation in his own name, for a debt due by simple contract to the testator, this shall charge him as much as if he had received the money; for the new security hath extinguished the old right, and is quasi a payment to him. Off. of Ex. 158. Yelv. 10. 1 Lev. 189.

So if the executor sues a person in trover and conversion, in which he has a right to recover; and afterwards he and the defendant come to an agreement, that he shall pay the executor such a sum at a future day, and the party fails, this is a devastavit; and he shall answer ad valorem. 2 Lev. 189. 2 Jon. 88. S. C. 1 Vern. 474. S. C.

It is a devastavit to permit interest to run in arrear, and then suffer judgment for it; and want of assets to pay before the incurring of it by the administrator shall not be intended unless it be expressly pleaded. 2 Lev. 40. Hil. 23 & 24. Car. 2. B. R. Seaman v. Dee.

An executor in case of a devastavit is in nature of a trustee of an estate. Chan. Cases 304.

EXECUTORY ESTATE. Is where an estate in fee created by deed or fine is to be afterwards executed by entry, livery, writ, &c. Leases for years, rents, annuities, conditions, &c. are called inheritances executory. Wood's Inst. 293. Estates executed are when they pass presently to the person to whom conveyed, without any after act. 2 Inst. 513. See title Estate.

EXECUTORY DEVISE. The Devise of a future interest. A Devise that vests not at the death of the testator, but depends on some contingency which must happen before it can vest. 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 486.

An executory devise differs from a remainder in three very material points. 1. That it needs not any particular estate to support it. 2. That by it a fee-simple or other less estate may be limited after a fee-simple. 3. That by this means a remainder may be limited of a chattel interest, after a particular estate for life created in the same. See title Remainder, and 2 Comm. 172—5.

1. The first case happens when a man devises a future estate to arise upon a contingency: and until that contingency happens does not dispose of the fee-simple, but leaves it to descend to his heir at law. As if one devises land to a feme-sole and her heirs, upon her day of marriage: here is in effect a contingent remainder without any particular estate to support it; a freehold commencing in futuro. This limitation, though it would be void in a deed, yet is good in a will, by way of executory devise. 1 Sid. 153. For, since by a devise a freehold may pass without corporal tradition or livery of seisin, (as it must do if it passes at all,) therefore it may commence in futuro; because the principal reason why it cannot commence in futuro in other cases, is the necessity of actual seisin, which always operates in præsenti. And since it may thus commence in futuro, there is no need of a particular estate to support it, the only use of which is to make the remainder, by its unity with the particular estate, a present interest. And hence also it follows, that such an executory devise not being a present interest, cannot be barred by a recovery, suffered before it commences. Cro. Jac. 593. See this Dict. title Fine and Recovery.

2. By executory devise a fee, or other less estate, may be limited after a fee. And this happens where a devisor devises his whole estate in fee, but limits a remainder thereon to commence on a future contingency. As if a man devises lands to A. and his heirs; but, if he dies before the age of twenty-one, then to B. and his heirs: this remainder also, though void in deed, is good by way of executory devise. 2 Mod. 289.

In both these species of executory devises, the contingencies ought to be such as may happen within a reasonable time, as within one or more life or lives in being, or within a moderate term of years; for courts of justice will not indulge even wills, so as to create a perpetuity, which the law abhors. 12 Mod. 287. 1 Vern. 164. 1 Salk. 229. The utmost length that has been hitherto allowed for the contingency of an executory devise of either kind to happen in, is that of a life or lives in being, and one and twenty years afterwards. As when lands are devised to such unborn son of a feme-covert as shall first attain the age of twenty-one, and his heirs; the utmost length of time that can happen before the estate can vest, is the life of the mother and the subsequent infancy of her son, and this hath been decreed to be a good executory devise. Forr. 232. This limit was taken from the time in which an estate may be rendered unalienable by a strict settlement. An executory devise to an unborn son of a man, may be suspended a few months beyond the life of the father, and twenty-one years afterwards, by a posthumous birth. See post I. ad finem.

3. By executory devise a term of years may be given to one man for his life, and afterwards limited over in remainder to another, which could not be done by deed: for, by law, the first grant of it to a man for life, was a total disposition of the whole term; a life estate being esteemed of a higher and larger nature than any term for years. 8 Rep. 95.

And, at first, the courts were tender even in the case of a will of restraining the devisee for life from aliening the term, but only held, that in case he died without exerting that act of ownership, the remainder over should then take place; for the restraint of the power of alienation, especially in very long terms, was introducing a species of perpetuity. Bro. tit. Chattels, 23. Dyer, 74. But, soon afterwards it was held, that the devisee for life hath no power of alienating the term, so as to bar the remainder-man. Dyer, 358. 8 Rep. 96. Yet, in order to prevent the danger of perpetuities, it was settled, that though such remainders may be limited to as many persons successively as the devisor thinks proper, yet they must all be in esse during the life of the first devisee; for then, as it is expressed, all the candles are lighted, and are consuming together, and the ultimate remainder is in reality only to that remainder-man who happens to survive the rest. It was also settled that such remainder may not be limited to take effect, unless upon such contingency as must happen (if at all) during the life of the first devisee. 1 Sid. 551. Skinn. 341. 3 P. Wms. 358. See post II.

Having said thus much on Executory Devises in general, subsequent information may be thus divided.

I. Of Executory Devises of Lands of Inheritance.
II. Of Executory Devises of Terms for Years; and of personal Goods and Chattels.

I. It is a settled rule of law that where the court can construe a devise to be a contingent remainder, they will never construe it to be an executory devise. 2 Bos. & Pull. 298. See title Remainder, II.

If a particular estate is limited, and the inheritance passes out of the donor, this is a contingent remainder; but where the fee by a devise is vested in any person and to be vested in another by contingency, this is an executory devise: and in all cases of executory devises, the estates descend until the contingencies happen. Raym. 28. 1 Lutw. 798. Where a contingent estate limited, depends upon a freehold, which is capable of supporting a remainder, it shall never be construed an executory devise, but a remainder. And so it is if the estate be limited by words in præsenti, as when a person devises his lands to the heirs of A. B. who is living, &c. Though if the same were to the heir of A. after his death it would be as good as an executory devise. 2 Saund. 380. 4 Mod. 255.

One by will devises land to his mother for life, and after her death, to his brother in fee; provided, that if his wife, being then enseint, be delivered of a son, then the land to remain to him in fee, and dies, and the son is born; in this case it was held, that the fee of the brother shall cease and vest in the son, by way of executory devise, on the happening of the contingency; and here such fee estate enures as a new original devise to take effect when the first fails. Dyer, 33. 127. Cro. Jac. 592. A remainder of a fee may not be limited by the rules of law, after a fee-simple; for when a man hath parted with his whole estate, there cannot remain any thing for him to dispose of: but of late times a distinction hath been made between an absolute fee simple, and a fee simple which depends upon a contingency, or is conditionally limited; especially where such a contingency may happen in the course of a few years, or of one or two lives; and where such a remainder is limited by will, it is called an executory devise. 2 Nels. Abr. 797.

An estate devised to a son and his heirs, upon condition that if he did not pay the legacies given by the will within such a time, that then the land should remain to the legatees, &c. and their heirs; this limitation of a fee in remainder, after a fee limited to the son, being upon the contingency of the son's failing in payment of the legacies, was adjudged good by way of executory devise. Cro. Eliz. 833. And where the father devised his lands to his youngest son and his heirs, and if he die without issue, the eldest son being alive, then to him and his heirs; this was held a good remainder in fee to the eldest brother, after the conditional contingent estate in fee to the youngest, as depending upon the possibility that he might be alive when his youngest brother died without issue; and his dying without issue was a collateral determination of his estate, whilst the other was living. Godb. 282. 2 Nels. Abr. 798.

There can be no executory devise after an estate-tail generally limited, because that would tend to a perpetuity; and a contingency is too remote where a man must expect a fee upon another's dying without issue, generally: But dying without issue, living another, may happen in a little time, because it depends upon one life; and therefore a devise of a fee-simple to one, but to remain to another upon such a contingency, is now held good by executory devise. Cro. Jac. 695.

If a devise be "to A. for ever, that is, if he shall have a son or sons who shall attain 21, but if A. shall die without son or sons to inherit, that the son of B. shall inherit:" this is a fee in A. with an executory devise to the son of B. who shall take if A. die without issue, or if the issue die before 21. 1 Bro. C. R. 147.

If a devise be to the second son, then unborn, of A. B. and after his decease, or accession to his paternal estate, then to his second son and his heirs male, with remainders over: such second son of A. B. when born, will take an estate in tail male by way of executory devise, determinable on the accession of the family estate, and in the mean time the lands descend to the heir of the testator. 2 Black. Rep. 1159.

One devised to his daughter then under age, an estate in fee, and if she died under the age of 21 years, unmarried, and without leaving lawful issue, then to his wife in fee. The daughter married, and died under 21 without issue, but left her husband surviving her. The court of K. B. held that the devise over did not take effect, as by the words of the will it was made to depend on the happening of the three events, dying under 21, dying under that age unmarried, and dying under that age without issue. Doe d. Baldwin & Ux. v. Rawding & Ux. Term Rep. K. B. E. 59 G. 3. 441. and see Doe v. Cook, 7 East's Rep. 269. and Doe v. Jessop, 12 East's Rep. 269. But see Maberly v. Strode, 3 Ves. jun. 450. and Bell v. Phynn, 2 Ves. 247.

By 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 98. reciting 'that it is expedient that all dispositions of real or personal estates, whereby the produce and profits thereof are directed to be accumulated, and the beneficial enjoyment thereof is postponed, should be made subject to certain restrictions;' it is enacted, that no person shall by deed or will settle or dispose of any real or personal property, in such manner that the rents or profits shall be accumulated, for a longer term than the life of the settler, or twenty-one years after his decease, or during the minority of any party living (or in ventre sa mere,) at the time of such decease, or the minorities of parties beneficially entitled: all directions to the contrary are declared void, and the rents, &c. are to go to the parties who would be entitled if such accumulation were not directed.—This act does not extend to provisions for payment of debts, or for raising portions for children, or respecting the produce of timber; nor to the disposition of heritable property in Scotland.

II. It has now been long fully settled, that a term for years, or any chattel interest, may be given by an executory devise to an unborn child of a person in existence, when it attains the age of 21; and that the limits of executory devises of real and personal property are precisely the same. Fearne. See ante I.

It is very common to bequeath chattel interests to A. and his issue, and if he dies without issue to B. It seems now to be determined, that where the words are such as would have given A. an estate tail in real property; in cases of personal property the subsequent limitations are void, and A. has the absolute interest: but if it appear from any clause or circumstance in the will, that the testator intended to give it over only in case A. had no issue living at the time of his death, upon that event the subsequent limitation will be good as an executory devise. See Fearne, and the cases referred to in Cox's P. W. iii. 262.

Formerly where a term of years (which is but a chattel) was devised to one; and that if he died, living another person, it should remain to the other person during the residue of the term, such a remainder was adjudged void: for a devise of a chattel to one for an hour, was a devise of it for ever. Dyer, 74. But it was afterwards held, that a remainder of a term to one, after it was limited to another for life, was good: in a case where a testator having a term, devised that his wife should have the lands for so many years of the term as she should live, and that after her death the residue thereof should go to his son and his assigns; and this was the first case wherein an executory remainder of a term for years was adjudged good. Dyer, 253. 358.

A person possessed of a term, devised to his wife for eighteen years, and after to his eldest son for life, after to the son's eldest issue male during life; though he have no such issue at the time of the devise and death of the devisor, if he has before his own death, he shall have it as an executory devise. 1 Rol. 612. But if one devise a term to his wife for life, the remainder to his first son for life, and if he dies without issue, to his second son, &c. the remainder to the second son is void, and no executory devise; yet where the dying without issue living at a person's death, may be confined to one life, it hinders not a remainder over. 1 Eq. Abr. 194.

Where there is an executory devise, there needs not any particular estate to support it; and because the person who is to take upon contingency, hath not a present but future interest, his estate cannot be barred by a common recovery. 2 Nels. Abr. 797, 798. It is held, executory devises, and limitations of the trust of a term, are governed alike. 1 Vern. 234.

The husband being possessed of a term for years, devised the lease itself to his wife for her life, and after her death to her children unpreferred; it was insisted for the wife that she had the whole term, the devise being of the lease itself, and the lands are not mentioned throughout the will; but adjudged that the wife had only an estate for so many years of the lease as she should live, and that so much as remained unexpired at her death, was to vest in the children upon the contingency of their living at that time. 1 And. 61. 2 Leon. 92. 3 Leon. 89. Gold. 26.

By the rules of the ancient Common Law there could be no future property, to take place in expectancy, created in personal goods and chattels: because, being things transitory, it would occasion many suits and quarrels, and put a stop to the freedom of trade, if such limitations were generally allowed. But yet in last wills and testaments such dispositions were permitted; though, originally, that indulgence was only shewn when merely the use of the goods, and not the goods themselves, were given to the first legatee, the property being supposed to continue in the executor: but now that distinction is disregarded: and therefore if a man, either by deed or will, limits furniture, &c. to A. for life, with remainder over to B. this is good. But where an estate-tail in things personal is given to the first or any subsequent possessor, it vests in him the total property, and no remainder over shall be permitted on such a limitation. For this, if allowed, would tend to a perpetuity, as the devisee or grantee in tail of a chattel has no method of barring the entail; and therefore the law vests in him at once the entire dominion of the property, being analogous to the fee-simple, which a tenant in tail may acquire in a real estate. See 2 Comm. c. 25. II. 3.

EXECUTRY. The personal estate of the deceased; and falling under the distribution of the executor. Scotch Dict.

EXEMPLIFICATION OF LETTERS PATENT, &c. See title Evidence.

EXEMPLIFICATIONE. A writ granted for the exemplification of an original record. Reg. Orig. 290.

EXEMPTION, Exemptio.] A privilege to be free from service or appearance; as knights, clergymen, &c. are exempted from appearing at the county-court by statute, and peers from being put upon inquests. 6 Rep. 23. Persons seventy years of age, apothecaries, &c. are also exempted by law from serving on juries: and justices of peace, attornies, &c. from parish offices. 2 Inst. 247. There is an exemption from tolls, &c. by the King's Letters Patent: and a writ of exemption, or of ease, to be quit of serving on juries, and all public service. Shep. Epitom. 1049. Where an act directs that the tolls of a navigation should be exempt from any taxes, rates, &c. other than such as the land, which should be used for the purpose of the navigation, would have been subject to if the act had not been made; that goes to exempt the tolls qua tolls altogether from being rated in respect of the line so exempted, leaving the land rateable as before. Rex v. The Leeds and Liverpool Canal Company. 5 East. 325. See further the proper titles in this Dict.

EXENNIUM OR EXHENIUM. A gift at present; and more properly a new year's gift.

EXERCITUALE. A heriot; paid only in arms, horses, or military accoutrements. Leg. Edw. Conf. 1.

EXFREDIARE, from ex and the Sax. Frede, Frith, Peace.] To break the peace, or commit open violence. Leg. H. 1. c. 13.

EX GRAVI QUERELA. A writ that lies for him to whom any lands or tenements in fee are devised by will, (within any city, town, or borough, wherein lands are deviseable by custom,) and the heir of the devisor enters and detains them from him. Reg. Orig. 244. Old Nat. Br. 87. And if a man devises such lands or tenements unto another in tail, with remainder over in fee, if the tenant in tail enter, and is seised by force of the entail, and afterwards dieth without issue, he in remainder shall have the writ ex gravi querela to execute that devise. New Nat. Br. 441. Also where tenant in tail dies without issue of his body, the heir of the donor, or he who hath the reversion of the land, shall have this writ in the nature of a formedon in the reverter. Ibid. If a devisor's heir be ousted by the devisee, by entry on the lands, he may not after have this writ, but is to have his remedy by the ordinary course of the Common Law. Co. Lit. 111.—If the claimant's title accrues within twenty years, the most eligible method of proceeding is now by Ejectment.

EXHIBIT, Exhibitum.] Where a deed or other writing is in a suit in Chancery exhibited to be proved by witnesses, and the examiner or commissioners appointed certify on the back of it, that the deed or writing was shewn to the witness, to prove it at the time of his examination, and by him sworn to; this is then called an exhibit in law proceedings. The same under a commission of bankrupt.

EXHIBITION. An allowance for meat and drink, such as was customary among the religious appropriators of churches, who usually made it to the depending vicar: the benefaction settled for the maintaining of scholars in the Universities, not depending on the foundation, are called exhibitions. Paroch. Antiq. 301.

EXHIBITION; in the Scotch law, is the term applied to an action for compelling the production of writings.

EXIGENDARIES. See Exigenter.

EXIGENT, or Exigi facias.] A writ that lies where the defendant in an action personal cannot be found, nor any thing of his within the county, whereby to be attached or distrained; and is directed to the sheriff, to proclaim and call him five county-court days, one after another, charging him to appear upon pain of outlawry: It is called exigent, because it exacteth the party, i. e. requires his appearance or forthcoming to answer the law; and if he come not at the last day's proclamation, he is said to be quinquies exactus, (five times exacted,) and is outlawed. Cromp. Juris. 188.

The statutes requiring proclamations on exigents awarded in civil actions, are 6 Hen. 8. c. 4. 31 Eliz. cap. 3. Exigents are to be awarded against receivers of the King's money, who detain the same; and against conspirators, rioters, &c. Stat. 18 Ed. 3. c. 1. And a writ of proclamation shall be issued to the sheriff to make three proclamations in the county where the defendant dwells, for him to yield himself, &c. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 3.

The writ of exigent also lies in an indictment of felony, where the party indicted cannot be found: And upon suing out an exigent for a criminal matter before conviction, there shall be a writ of proclamation, &c. 3 Inst. 31. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 22. If a person indicted of felony absent himself so long that the writ of exigent is awarded, his withdrawing will be deemed a flight in law, whereby he will be liable to forfeit his goods; and though he renders himself upon the exigent, after such withdrawing, and is found Not guilty, it is said the forfeiture shall stand. 5 Rep. 110. 3 Inst. 232. After a capias directed to the sheriff, to take and imprison a person, &c. if he cannot be taken, an exigent is awarded; And after a judgment in a civil action, the exigent is to go forth after the first capias; but before judgment there must be a capias, alias, and pluries. 4 Inst. 177. If the defendant be in prison, or beyond sea, &c. he or his executors may reverse the award of the exigent. See further this Dict. title Outlawry.

EXIGENTER, Exigendarius.] An officer of the court of Common Pleas; of which officers there are four in number: They make all exigents and proclamations, in actions where process of outlawry doth lie; and also writs of supersedeas, as well as the prothonotaries, upon such exigents made out in their offices. But the issuing writs of supersedeas is taken from them by an officer in the same court, constituted by letters patent by King James the First.

EXIGI FACIAS. See Exigent.

EXILE. A banishment, or driving one away from his country. And this exile is either by restraint, when the government forbids a man, and makes it penal to return; or it is voluntary, where he leaves his country upon disgust, but may come back at pleasure. 2 Lev. 191.

One natural and regular consequence of personal liberty under the laws of England is, that every Englishman may claim a right to abide in his own country so long as he pleases, and not to be driven from it unless by sentence of the law. Exile and Transportation are both punishments unknown to the Common Law; and wherever the latter is inflicted, it is either by the choice of the criminal himself to escape a capital punishment, or by the express direction of some statute. See Magna Charta, c. 29. which expressly declares that no freeman shall be banished unless by the judgment of his peers, or by the laws of the land. And for the provisions of the Habeas Corpus Act, st. 31 Car. 2. c. 2. (termed by Blackstone a second Magna Charta, and stable bulwark of our liberties,) with respect to sending Englishmen prisoners to Scotland, Ireland, or beyond the seas. See titles False Imprisonment, Habeas Corpus.

Soldiers and sailors form necessary exceptions to these rules; but it is said the King cannot even constitute a man Deputy, or Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, nor make one a foreign Ambassador against his will: since these in reality might be no more than honourable exiles. 2 Inst. 46.

See further on this subject, this Dict. titles Abjuration, Clergy, Felony, Transportation.

EXILIUM. Signifies in legal construction, a spoiling: And by the statute of Marlbridge it seems to extend to the injury done to tenants, by altering their tenure, ejecting them, &c. and this is the sense that Fleta determines, who distinguishes between vastum, destructio, and exilium; for he tells us that vastum and destructio are almost the same, and are properly applied to houses, gardens, or woods; but exilium is when servants are enfranchised, and afterwards unlawfully turned out of their tenements. Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 11. See stat. Marlb. c. 25.

EXITUS. Issue or offspring; and applied to the issues or yearly rents and profits of lands. Stat. West. 2. c. 45. See titles Issues.

EXLEGALITUS. He who is prosecuted as an outlaw. Leg. Edw. Confes. c. 38.

EX MERO MOTU. Words used in the King's charters and letters patent, to signify that he grants them of his own will and mere motion, without petition or suggestion of any other: And the intent and effect of these words is to bar all exceptions that might be taken to the charters or letters patent, by alleging that the King in granting them was abused by false suggestions. Kitch. 352. When the words ex mero motu are made use of in any charter, they shall be taken most strongly against the King. 1 Co. Rep. 451.

EX OFFICIO. The power a person has by virtue of an office, to do certain acts, without being applied to: as a justice of peace may not only grant surety of the peace, at the complaint or request of any person, but he may demand and take it ex officio at discretion, &c. Dalt. 270.

Ex Officio Informations. Informations at the suit of the King, filed by the Attorney-General, as by virtue of his office; without applying to the court wherein filed, for leave, or giving the defendant any opportunity of shewing cause why it should not be filed. See title Information.

EXONERATIONE SECTÆ. A writ lay for the King's ward, to be free from all suit to the county-court, hundred-court, leet, &c. during wardship. F. N. B. 158.

Exoneratione Sectæ ad Curiam Baron'. A writ of he same nature, sued by the guardian of the King's ward, and directed to the sheriff or stewards of the court that they do not distrain him, &c for not doing suit of court. New Nat. Br. 352. And if the sheriff distrain tenants in ancient demesne to come to the sheriff's torn or leet, they may have a writ commanding the sheriff to surcease, &c. Ibid. 359. Likewise if a man have lands in divers places in the county, and he is constrained to come to the leet where he is not dwelling, when he resides within the precincts of any other leet, &c. then he shall have this writ to the sheriff to discharge him from coming to any other court-leet than in the hundred where he dwelleth. Ibid. 357.

By the common law parsons shall not be distrained to come to court-leets, for the lands belonging to their churches; and if they be, they may have the writ exoneratione sectæ, &c. F. N. B. 394. So shall a woman holding land in dower, if she is distrained to do suit of court for such land; when the heir has lands sufficient in the same county. Ibid.

EX PARTE. Of the one part; as a commission in Chancery ex parte, is that which is taken out and executed by one side or party only, on the other party's neglecting or refusing to join. When both plaintiff and defendant proceed, it is a joint commission.

Ex parte talis. Is a writ that lies for a bailiff or receiver, who having auditors assigned to take his account, cannot obtain of them reasonable allowance, but is cast into prison. And the course in this case is to sue this writ out of the Chancery, directed to the sheriff to take four mainpernors to bring his body before the barons of the Exchequer at a certain day, and to warn the lord to appear at the same time. F. N. B. 129.

EXPECTANT. Having relation to or depending upon; and this word is likewise used in the law with fee, as fee-expectant.

Expectancy. Estates in; are of two sorts; one created by act of the parties called a remainder; the other by act of law, called a reversion. See titles Estate, Remainder, Reversion, Executory Devise.

EXPEDITATE, Expeditare.] In the laws of the forest, signifies to cut out the ball of the dog's fore-feet, for the preservation of the King's game: but the ball of the foot of a mastiff is not to be taken out, but the three claws of the fore-foot on the right side are to be cut off by the skin. Cromp. Jurisd. 152. Manwood, cap. 16. This relates to every man's dog who lives near the forest; and was formerly done once in every three years: and if any person keeps a great dog not expeditated, he forfeits to the king 3*s.* 4*d.* 4 Inst. 308. See title Forest.

EXPEDITATÆ ARBORES. Trees rooted up or cut down to the roots. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 41.

EXPENDITORS. Persons appointed by commissioners of sewers to pay, disburse, or expend the money collected by the tax for the repairs of sewers, &c. when paid into their hands by the collectors, on the reparations, amendments, and reformations ordered by the commissioners, for which they are to render accounts when thereunto required. Laws of Sewers, 87, 88. See title Sewers. The steward who supervises the repair of the banks and water courses in Romney Marsh, is called the Expenditor.

EXPENSÆ LITIS. Costs of suit, allowed a plaintiff or defendant, recovering in his action. See title Costs.

EXPENSIS MILITUM NON LEVANDIS, &c. An ancient writ to prohibit the sheriff from levying any allowance for knights of the shire, upon those that hold lands in ancient demesne. Reg. Orig. 261. For there was also a writ de expensis militum levandis, for levying expences for knights of the parliament, &c. Reg. Orig. 191. See title Parliament.

EXPLEES. The rents or profits of an estate, &c. See Esplees.

EXPLORATOR. A scout; also a huntsman, or chaser,

EXPORTATION. The shipping or carrying out the native commodities of England for other countries; mentioned in the statutes relating to the Customs. See this Dict. title Navigation Acts.

EXPOSITION OF DEEDS, shall be favourable, according to the apparent intent: and be reasonable and equal, &c. Co. Lit. 313. See title Deed.

EX POST FACTO. Is a term used in the law, signifying something done after, or as arising from, or to affect, another thing that was committed before. An act done, or estate granted, may be made good by matter ex post facto, that was not so at first by election, &c. As sometimes a thing well done at first, may afterwards become ill. 5 Rep. 22. 8 Rep. 146. An ex post facto law is one which operates upon a subject not liable to it at the time the law was made. Such is an act imposing duties of customs on goods imported before the passing of the act. See title Statute.

TO EXTEND, Extendere.] To value the lands or tenements of one bound by a statute, who hath forfeited his bond, at such an indifferent rate, as by the yearly rent the creditor may in time be paid his debt. F. N. B. See the next article.

EXTENDI FACIAS, OR EXTENT, Extenta.] A writ of execution, or commission to the sheriff for the valuing of lands or tenements: and sometimes the act of the sheriff or other commissioner upon this writ. Bro. 313. See this Dict. title Execution. This term is also used for the estimate or valuation of lands, which, when made to the utmost value, is said to be the full extent; whence come our extended rents, or rack rents.

If one bound to the King by specialty, or to others by statute, recognizance, &c. hath forfeited it: so that by the yearly rent of the debtor's lands, the creditor is to be paid his debt; upon this the creditor may sue a writ to the sheriff out of the chancery to deliver him the lands and goods to the value of the debt, which is termed a libertare. F. N. B. 131. This is after the extent directed to the sheriff to seize and value the lands, &c. of the debtor, to the utmost extent. 4 Rep. 67.

Lands and goods are to be appraised and extended by the inquest of twelve men, and then delivered to the creditor, in order to the satisfaction of his debt: every extent ought to be by inquisition and verdict, by the stat. Westm. 2. And the sheriff cannot execute the writ without an inquisition. Cro. Jac. 569.

The body of the cognisor, and all lands and tenements that were his at the time of the statute, &c. entered into, or afterwards, into whose hands soever they come, are liable to the extent. 2 Inst. 396. But copyhold lands are chargeable only during the life of the cognisor: and may not be extended by elegit, so as to admit a stranger to have interest in the lands held by copy, without the admittance of the lord. Lands in ancient demesne, annuities, rents, &c. are extendible. 1 Rol. Abr. 88. Two parts of an entire rent may be delivered upon an extent by the sheriff. Cro. Eliz. 742. But if the cognisor of a statute have a rent-charge, and before the extent he purchase parcel of the land; the rent is gone and shall not be held in execution: It is otherwise if he purchases after extent of the rent. Dyer, 206. A reversion of lands, &c. may not be extended; but a plaintiff had judgment for his debt and damages de reversione cum acciderit, and a special elegit to extend the moiety, &c. 2 Sid 86. Dyer. 373.

An advowson in gross is not extendible on elegit, &c. Stat. Westm. 2. cap. 18. An office of trust cannot be extended, because it is not assignable; and nothing shall be extended, but what may be assigned over. Dyer, 7. Though an office is extendible in equity. Chanc. Rep. 39. Goods and chattels, as leases for years, cattle, &c. in the cognisor's own hands, and not sold for valuable consideration, are subject to the extent. As the lands are to be delivered to the party at a reasonable yearly value, so the goods shall be delivered in extent at a price that is reasonable; and on a scire facias ad computand' the cognisee is to account according to the extended value; not the real value of the land. Hardr. 136. If the extenders appraise and value the lands too high, the cognisee at the return of the writ may pray that they may take and retain the lands at the rate appraised; and then it is said he may have execution against their lands for the debt; but this may not be on elegit. Cro. Jac. 12. It has been adjudged, that at the return of the writ the cognisee may refuse the lands, &c. extended, if overvalued. Cro. Car. 148.

Where lands are extended at under-value, and delivered in execution, the cognisee hath an interest in the land, which cannot be divested by finding of surplusage. Cro. Eliz. 266. Cro. Jac. 85. The cognisor cannot enter upon the cognisee, when satisfaction is received for the debt, but is put to his scire facias on an extent; though on an elegit the defendant may enter because the land is only awarded, till the debt, which is certain, is satisfied; whereas on extent, the land is to be held until the debt, damages and costs, &c. are satisfied; and the cognisee being in by matter of record, shall not be put out but by matter of record, viz. a scire facias brought against him, 4 Rep. 67. March's Rep. 207, 208. Sed. qu. Where is the difference? Is not the tenant by elegit in by matter of record?

After an extent returned, a liberate shall go to the sheriff, reciting the extendi facias and return, and commanding that he deliver the goods and lands to the conusee (under a statute-staple, &c.) si per extentum, et pretium illa habere voluit. F. N. B. 131. Lutw. 432.

The cognisee hath no absolute property in land, by the extent, till the delivery upon the liberate: but notwithstanding by the very extent they are in custodiâ legis for his benefit. Cro. Car. 106. 148. No actual seisin can be on an extent, and a cognisee of a statute staple, &c. cannot bring ejectment before the liberate; nor can the sheriff upon the liberate turn the tertenant out of possession, as he may upon a hab. fac. possessionem, 1 Vent. 41. Where there is an extent upon a statute, and a liberate thereupon, but not returned, yet it is good; though regularly, when inquisitions are taken, the writ ought to be returned. 4 Rep. 67. 1 Lill. Abr. 592. The sheriff may be charged to make a return of his writ, if he put the cognisee in possession of part only; and so the cognisee may have possession of the whole. 2 Nels. Abr. 774. But it is said if a person suing out an extent, die before the return of a writ, the sheriff may proceed in his inquisition, &c. afterwards; for there must be a prosecution de novo.

After a full and perfect execution had by extent, returned, and of record, there shall never be any re-extent upon an eviction: but by stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 5. if lands delivered in execution on a judgment, statute, or recognizance, shall be evicted, without fraud, or default of the tenant, who holds them in execution, before the debt and damages are wholly levied, the recoveror or conusee may have a scire facias against the person on whom the execution was first sued, his heirs, executors or assigns, of lands then liable, returnable in the same Court, 40 days after the teste; and if the defendant makes default, or shews not cause, the Chancellor or Justices of the court where the scire facias is returned shall make a new writ of the like nature of the former execution for levying the residue of the debt. Co. Lit. 290.

If lands be extended upon a mistake, &c. a re-extent may be had; see Dyer, 299. If part of the lands is evicted, the cognisee is to hold over the residue of the land till the debt is satisfied. 4 Rep. 66. When lands are delivered in extent, it is as if the cognisee had taken a lease thereof for years, until the debt is satisfied; and he shall never afterwards take out a new execution; the cognisee having accepted the land upon the liberate, the law presumes the debt to be satisfied.

1 Lutw. 429. An extent was filed, and though it was discovered that lands were omitted, the court would not grant a re-extent. Sid. 356. By stat. 16 & 17 C. 2. c. 5. (made perpetual by stat. 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 2.) when any judgment, statute or recognizance shall be extended (within twenty years after such judgment, &c. had,) the same shall not be avoided or delayed by occasion that any part of the lands extendible are omitted out of such extent: saving to the parties whose lands shall be extended, their remedy for contribution against those whose lands are omitted; except heirs within age.

Where a fieri facias issues, and is delivered to the sheriff to be executed, the property of the goods is vested by the delivery, and an extent afterwards for the King comes too late. Comb. 123. See also 2 Black. Rep. 1294. Doug. 415. 399. 4 Term Rep. K. B. 402. See this Dict. title Execution, Receiver.

EXTINGUISHMENT; from Lat. Extinguo.] The Extinction or annihilation of a right, estate, &c. by means of its being merged in, or consolidated with, another, generally a greater or more extensive, right or estate. Wherever a right, title, or interest is destroyed, or taken away by the act of God, operation of law, or act of the party, this in many books is called an Extinguishment. Co. Lit. 147, b. 1 Ro. Abr. 933.

This Extinguishment is of various natures, as applied to various rights; viz. Estates, Commons, Copyholds, Debts, Liberties, Services, and Ways. See more at large under those titles: what follows will give some general information on the subject.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF ESTATES. If a man hath a yearly rent out of lands, and afterwards purchases the lands whereout it ariseth, so that he hath as good an estate in the land as in the rent: now both the property and rent are consolidated or united in one possessor; and therefore the rent is said to be extinguished. Also where a person has a lease for years, and afterwards buys the property; this is a consolidation of the property and fruits, and an extinguishment of the lease: but if a man have an estate in the land but for life or years, and hath a higher estate as a fee-simple, in the rent; the rent is not extinguished, but in suspence for a time; for after the term, the rent shall revive. Termes de Ley.

Extinguishment of a rent is a destroying of the rent by purchase of the land; for no one can have a rent going out of his own land: though a person must have as high an estate in the land, as in the rent, or the rent will not be extinct. Co. Lit. 147. If a person hath a rent-charge to him and his heirs issuing out of lands, and he purchaseth any part of the land to him and his heirs; as the rent is entire and issuing out of every part of the land, the whole rent-charge is extinguished; though it is not so where one hath a rent-service, and purchaseth part of the land out of which it issues; rent-service being apportionable according to the value of the land, so that it shall only extinguish the rent for the land purchased. Lit. 222. Co. Lit. 148. And if the grantee of a rent-charge purchases parcel of the lands, and the grantor by his deed granteth that he may distrain for the rent in the residue of the land, this amounts to a new grant. Co. Lit. 147. See titles Grant, Estate.

If a man be seised of a rent-charge in fee, and grants it to another and his heirs, and the tenant attorns; the grantor is without remedy for the rent in arrear before his grant; and such arrears become as it were extinct. Vaug. 40. 1 Lill. Abr. 594. A. B. made a lease for years of land to another, and afterwards granted a rent-charge to C. D. who devised the said rent to the said A. B. till 100*l.* should be levied; then to B. G. and died: adjudged that by the devise to A. B. the rent was suspended, and that a personal thing once suspended by the act of the party is extinguished for ever. Dyer, 140.

If tenant for life makes a lease for years, rendering rent, and afterwards the reversion desends to the tenant for life; this is not an extinguishment of the term; but it is otherwise if he have the reversion by purchase. 1 Co. Rep. 96. A joint-tenant for life purchases the land in reversion, it will extinguish the estate for life for a moiety, and sever the joint-tenure. 2 Rep. 60. Lands are given to two men, and the heirs of their bodies; though they have an estate for life jointly, and several inheritances, yet the estate for life is not extinct: Contrà, if it be by several conveyances; as where a lease is made to two for their lives, and after the lessor grants the reversion to them and their heirs, &c. here the life estate will be extinguished. Co. Lit. 182.

If one after his title begun to be tenant by the curtesy, make a feoffment in fee upon condition, and enter for the condition broken; the estate is extinct, so that if his wife die, he shall not be tenant by the curtesy. 1 Rep. 18. Where a man hath an estate for his own life, and for another's life at once; the estate pour auter vie will be extinguished in the estate for his own life, which is greater in law than the other. 11 Rep. 87. Dyer, 11. See Bro. 409. Moor, 94. 2 Nels. Abr. 821.

When the freehold cometh to the term, the estate for years is extinct. 2 Nels. Abr. 820. Where the remainder of a term is granted over to another, if the party in possession purchase the fee-simple, though by this means his interest is extinguished; yet that shall not defeat the reversionary interest. 10 Rep. 52. 2 Nels. 820.

A fine, &c. of lands, will extinguish a term; and by purchase of an estate in fee-simple, an estate-tail in land is extinct. 9 Rep. 139. But if a fee-simple and fee-tail meet together by descent, the estate-tail will not be extinguished. 3 Rep. 61. Descent of lands to the same person who has a term, will extinguish the term. Moor, 286.

When a lessor enters tortiously upon the lessee against his consent, the rent is extinguished. 2 Lev, 143. But it has been adjudged, that rent is not extinct by the entry of the lessor, but only suspended; and revives by the lessee's re-entry. Dyer, 361. An infant has a rent, and purchases the land out of which it is issuing; by this the rent will be suspended, but not extinct. Bro. Extinguish. A man lessee for years takes a wife, or woman lessee a husband, that hath the reversion after the lease; here the term is not extinguished. 12 Rep. 81. See title Baron and Feme.

Although a surrender of a life-estate to the owner of the fee is, as between the parties, an extinguishment of the estate surrendered; yet such estate may have continuance to uphold a prior interest derived under it. Therefore, on an ejectment, where J. B. C. having a lease for three lives of a manor (where by the custom the copyholds were demisable by copy) made a lease for years, by indenture of a copyhold tenement to the father of the defendant, and afterwards the estate of J. B. C. was surrendered to the lord of the fee, who made a lease of the manor to the lessor of the plaintiff; the court of K. B. held that, inasmuch as the lease to the defendant's father, though not warranted by the custom, and though it suspended the copyhold tenure, was nevertheless good to pass an interest to him, the lessor of the plaintiff should not avoid it, during the continuance of one of the three lives in the lease to J. B. C. notwithstanding the surrender of that estate. Doe. d. Beadon, v. Pyke, Term Rep. K. B. E. 56 Geo. 3. 146. See 1 Inst, 338 b. 8 Rep. 144 b.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF COMMON. By purchasing lands wherein a person hath common appendant, the common is extinguished. Cro. Eliz. 594. A commoner releases his common in one acre, it is an extinguishment of the whole common. Show. Rep. 350. And where a person hath common of vicinage, if he incloses any part of the land, all the common is extinct. 1 Brownl. 174.

But if one hath common appendant in a great waste, belonging to his tenant, and the lord improve part of the waste leaving sufficient; if he after make a feoffment to the commoner of the land improved, this will be no extinguishment. Dyer, 339. Hob. 172. A commoner aliens part of his land, to which the common doth belong; the common is not extinct, but shall be divided. 2 Shep. Abr. 152. See title Common.

Extinguishment of Copyhold. It is laid down as a general rule, that any act of the copyholder's which denotes his intention to hold no longer of his lord, and amounts to a determination of his will, is an extinguishment of his copyhold. Hutt. 81. Cro. Eliz. 21. 1 Jon. 41.

As if a copyholder in fee accepts a lease for years of the same land from the lord, this determines his copyhold estate; or if the lord leases the copyhold to another, and the copyholder accepts an assignment from the lessee, his copyhold is extinct. Moor, 184. 2 Co. 16, b. Godb. 11. 101.

So if a copyholder bargains and sells his copyhold to the lessee for years of the manor, his copyhold is thereby extinguished; or if he joins with his lord in a feoffment of the manor, his copyhold is thereby extinct, for these are acts which denote his intention to hold no longer by copy. Hutt. 65. 1 Jon. 41. S. C. Godb. 11.

So if a copyholder accepts to hold of his lord, by bill under the lord's hand, this determines his copyhold; so if he accepts an estate for life by parol, if with livery this is an extinguishment; otherwise not; for without livery, nothing but an estate at will passes, which cannot merge or extinguish an estate at will. 1 And. 199. Latch. 213.

If one seised of a manor in right of his wife lets lands by indenture for years, this doth not destroy the custom as to the wife: for after the death of her husband she may demise it again by copy. Cro. Eliz. 459.

So if a copyhold is in the hands of a subject, who after becomes King, the copyhold is extinct, for it is below the Majesty of a King to perform such servile services; yet after his decease the next that hath right shall be admitted, and the tenure revived. 2 Sid. 82. 4 Co. 24. Cro. Eliz. 232. See 2 Leon. 208. 4 Co. 26, b. Cro. Eliz. 103. And a copyhold estate is extinct whenever it becomes not demiseable by copy. Coke's Copyholder, 62. See further title Copyhold.

Extinguishment of Debt. If feme sole debtee take the debtor to husband; or there be two joint obligors in a bond, and the obligee marries one of them; or in case a person is bound to a feme sole and another, and she takes the obligor to husband; in these cases, the debt will be extinguished. 8 Rep. 136. And if a debtor makes the debtee his executor, or him and another executors, and they take the executorship upon them; or if the debtee makes his debtor executor, &c. it is an extinguishment of the debt, and it shall never revive. Plowd. 184. 1 Salk. 304. But where a debtee or debtor executor legally refuseth; or he and others being made executors they all refuse, then the debt is revived again. Plowd. 185. See titles Baron and Feme, Executor.

It is agreed as a general rule, that a creditor's accepting a higher security than he had before, is an extinguishment of the first debt; as if a creditor by simple contract accepts an obligation, this extinguishes the simple contract debt. 1 Rol. Abr. 470, 471. 604. 6 Co. 44.

So if a man accepts a bond for a legacy, he cannot after sue for his legacy in the spiritual court; for by the deed the legacy is extinct, and it is become a mere debt at Common-law. Yelv. 38.

So if a bond-creditor obtains judgment on the bond, or has judgment acknowledged to him, he cannot afterwards bring an action on the bond; for the debt is drowned in the judgment, which is a security of a higher nature than the bond. 6 Co. 44 b.

But these cases must be understood where the debtor himself enters into these securities; and therefore if a stranger give bond for a simple contract due by another, this does not extinguish the simple contract debt; but if upon making the contract, a stranger gives bond for it, or being present promises to give bond for it and after does so, the debt by simple contract is extinguished, the obligation being made upon, or pursuant to the contract. 2 Leon. 110.

But the accepting a security of an inferior nature is by no means an extinguishment of the first debt; as if a bond be given in satisfaction of a judgment. Cro. Jac. 579. 2 Brownl. 29. Cro. Jac. 649, 650.

Also the accepting a security of equal degree is no extinguishment of the first debt; as where an obligee has a second bond given to him; for one deed cannot determine the duty upon another. Cro. Eliz. 304. 716. 727. 1 Brownl. 74. Lit. Rep. 58. Cro. Car. 86.

Though a bond is taken for a simple contract debt, yet if it is after an act of bankruptcy, the simple contract is not extinguished. Stran. 1042.

By a release of part of a debt due on bond, the whole is gone, and the obligation extinguished. Bro. Contract. 80. 1 And. 235.—See further titles Acceptance, Bond.

Extinguishment of Liberties. Liberties and franchises granted by the King, may sometimes be extinguished, and sometimes not. Moor, 474. When the King grants any privileges, liberties or franchises, which were in his own hands, as parcel of the flowers of the crown, such as bona felonum, fugitivorum et utlagatorum, waifs, strays, deodand, wreck on the sea, &c. if they come to the crown again, they are drowned and extinct in the crown, and the King is seised of them jure coronæ: but if liberties of fairs, markets, or other franchises, and jurisdictions, be erected and created by the King, they will not be extinguished, nor their appendances severed from the possessions. 9 Rep. 25. A man has liberties by prescription, if he takes letters patent of them, the prescription will be gone and extinct; for things of a higher determine those of a lower nature. 2 H. 7. 5. See title King.

Extinguishment of Services. The lord purchases or accepts parcel of the tenantcy, out of which an intire service is to be paid or done; by this the whole service will be extinct: but if the service be pro bono publico, then no part of it shall be extinguished; and homage and fealty are not subject to extinguishment, by the lord's purchasing part of the land. 6 Rep. 1. 105. Co. Lit. 149. If the lord and another person do purchase the lands, whereout he is to have services, they are extinct: also by severance of the services, a manor may be extinguished. Co. Lit. 147. 1 And. 257. See title Tenure.

Extinguishment of Ways. If a man hath a highway as appendant, and after purchases the land wherein this way is, the way is extinct. Termes de Ley. Though a way of necessity to market or church, or to arable land, &c. is not extinguished by purchase of ground, or unity of possession. 11 H. 7. 25. Co. Lit. 155. See title Way.

EXTIRPATIONE. A judicial writ, either before or after judgment, that lies against a person who, when a verdict is found against him for land, &c. doth maliciously overthrow any house, or extirpate any trees upon it. Reg. Jud. 13. 56.

EXTOCARE. To grub up lands, and reduce them to arable or meadow. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 71.

EXTORTION, extorsio, from extorqueo, to wrest away]. In a large sense, any oppression under colour of right: It is usually applied to that abuse of public justice which consists in the unlawful taking by any officer, &c. by colour of his office, of any money, or valuable thing, from a person where none at all is due, or not so much is due, or before it is due. Co. Lit. 368. 10 Rep. 102. See title Bribery, Fees.

The distinction between bribery and extortion seems to be this. The former offence consists in the offering a present or receiving one if offered; the latter, in demanding a fee or present, by colour of office.

At the Common law, which was affirmed by the statute of Westm. 1. c. 26. it was extortion for any minister of the King, whose office did any way concern the administration and execution of justice, or the common good of the subject, to take any reward for doing his office, except what he received from the King: though reasonable fees for the labour and attendance of officers of the courts of justice are not restrained by statute, which are stated and settled by the respective courts; and it has been thought expedient to allow these officers to take certain immediate fees in many cases. 2 Inst. 209. 3 Inst. 149. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 68.

The taking of money by virtue of an office, implies the act to be lawful; but to take any money by colour of an office, implies an ill action; and the taking being for expedition of business, is judged by colour of the office, and unlawful. 2 Inst. 206. Co. Lit. 368.

Yet according to some it seems that an officer, who takes a reward which is voluntarily given to him, and which has been usual in certain cases, for the more diligent or expeditious performance of his duty, cannot be said to be guilty of extortion; for without such a premium it would be impossible in many cases to have the laws executed with vigour and success. 9 Inst. 210. 3 Inst. 149. Co. Lit. 368.

But it has been always held, that a promise to pay an officer money for the doing of a thing, which the law will not suffer him to take any thing for, is merely void, however freely and voluntarily it may appear to have been made. 1 Rol. Ab. 16. 1 Rol. Rep. 313. Noy, 76. 1 Jon. 65. Cro. Eliz. 654. Moor, 468. Cro. Jac. 103.

It is an extortion to oblige an executor to prove a will in the bishop's court, and to take fees thereon, knowing the same to have been proved in the Prerogative Court. Str. 73.—Or in a sheriff's officer to admit a prisoner to bail, upon an agreement to receive a certain sum when the prisoner should pay to a third person another sum of money. 2 Burr. 924.—To arrest a man in order to obtain a release from him. 8 Mod. 189.—In a gaoler to obtain money from his prisoner by any colourable means. 8 Mod. 226. Stra. 575.—Or in a church warden colore officii. 1 Sid. 307.—In a miller, if he takes more toll than is due by custom. Ld. Raym. 159. Or a commissary for absolution. 3 Leon. 268.—Or a ferryman more for his ferry. 4 Mod. 101.—Or to seize upon the place where a fair is held, and by building stalls to force an exorbitant price for them. Ld. Raym. 150.—Or in an undersheriff to refuse to execute process till his fees are paid. Salk. 330.—Or to take a bond for his fee before execution is sued out. Hut. 53. Or for a coroner to refuse his view until his fees be paid. 3 Inst. 149.

Extortion, by the Common-law is severely punished, on indictment, by fine and imprisonment, and removal of officers from the offices wherein committed. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 68. By the Stat. 3 Ed. 1. inferior officers of justice, &c. guilty of extortion, are to render, by c. 26, double, and by c. 30. treble value; and there are divers other statutes for punishing extortions of sheriffs, bailiffs, gaolers, clerks of the assise, and of the peace, attornies and solicitors, &c. See stats. 23 H. 6. cc. 7. 9. 33 Hen. 8. c. 24. 29 Eliz. c. 4. 1 Jac. 1. c. 10. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 41. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23. 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. 32 Geo. 2. c. 28. § 11. 17 Geo. 3. c. 26. § 6. &c. See titles Sheriff, Gaolers, Debtor, Fees.

In cases of extortion, there must be a positive charge, and that the person charged with it took so much extorsive or colore officii; which words are as essential as proditoriè or felonice for treason or felony. 2 Salk. 680.

Officers may be jointly indicted of extortion, as they may be jointly guilty of the offence. 1 Salk. 382.

The place where the extortion was committed should be set down in the declaration. See Pl. C. c. 200. The sum certain extorted must be particularly set forth, and he cannot say that the defendant did extort divers sums from divers men generally. Godb. 438. pl. 583. Mich. 4 Car.

The indictment (which may be brought at the Sessions, Str. 73), or information must state the fact particularly. 3 Leon. 268. 25 E. 3. st. 3. c. 9. 11 Mod. 80. It must also specify the time when the offence was committed. 4 Mod. 101. 3. But although it be omitted to be stated for what the thing extorted was taken, it is good after verdict. Sid. 91. And in general the Court of K. B. will oblige the party to demur to a defective indictment for extortion. 5 Mod. 13. And whatever may be the sum, if there is proof only of a shilling taken, the defendant is guilty; for the taking is the offence, and not the contract. Ld. Raym. 149. And he also who assists is equally guilty, for there are no accessaries in extortion. Str. 73.

Against attornies for extortion, action may be brought, and the party grieved shall have treble damages and costs; but information will not lie on the stat. 3 Jac. 1. cap. 7. Sid. 434. 2 Nels. 822.

If by abuse of the process of one of the courts at Westminster a sheriff's officer extort a promissory note from a suitor, and declare upon it in another of the courts at Westminster, the latter court cannot interfere summarily to punish the officer. 2 Bos. & Pull. 88.

EXTRACTA CURIÆ. The issues or profits of holding a court arising from the customary fees, &c. Paroch. Antiq. 572.

Extracts of writings or records, being notes thereof. See title Estreats.

In the Scotch law the Extract is the certified copy by a clerk of the court, of the proceedings in an action carried on before that court, and of the judgment pronounced; and it contains an order for execution or proceedings thereupon.

EXTRAJUDICIAL. Is when judgment is had in a cause not depending in that court where given, or wherein the judge has not jurisdiction. The term is used in contradistinction to a regular act done in judgment, or in the regular proceedings of a court.

EXTRAPAROCHIAL. Out of any parish; any thing privileged and exempt from the duties of a parish.—See this Dict. title Poor.

EXTRAVAGANTS. Certain constitutions of the Popes so called, because extra corpus canonicum Gratiani, sive extra decretorum libros vagantur. Du Cange.

EXTUMÆ. Reliques in churches and tombs.—Cartular. Abbat. Glaston. MS.

EXUPERARE. To overcome; sometimes it signifies to apprehend or take, as, exuperare vivum vel mortuum. Leg. Edm. c. 2.

EY, Insula, an island.] Where the names of places end in ey, it denotes them an island. As Ramsey, is the island of Rams; Sheppy, the island of Sheep; Hersey, the island of Harts, &c.

EYERY of hawks. See title Aerie.

EYRE. Vide Eire, and Justices in Eyre.

F. Is a letter wherewith felons, &c. are branded and marked with an hot iron, on their being admitted to the benefit of clergy. See this Dict. title Clergy.

FABRICK LANDS. Are lands given towards the rebuilding or repairing of cathedral and other churches; for in ancient times almost every person gave by his will more or less, to the fabrick of the cathedral or parish-church where he lived; and lands thus given were called fabrick lands, being ad fabricam reparandum: these lands are mentioned in the stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 8.

FACILITY of disposition, whereby one is easily imposed upon and induced to do deeds to his own prejudice, when combined with any fraud or circumvention on the part of another, is a ground for the interference of Equity.

FACTA ARMORUM. Feats of arms, justs, tournaments, &c. His. Job. Brompton, in R. 1. p. 1261.

FACTO. In fact; as where any thing is actually done, &c. See De facto.

FACTOR. The agent of a merchant abroad, residing in this country: or è contra.—A Factor is authorised by a letter of attorney, with a salary or allowance for his care. He must pursue his commission strictly; and the same person may be factor for many different merchants. Mal. 81.

A Factor is a species of Mandatory, whose powers depend on the nature and terms of the mandate, commission, or authority under which he acts.

The character of Broker is materially different from that of Factor; and therefore where a broker sells goods without disclosing the name of his principal, he acts beyond the scope of his authority, and the buyer cannot set off a debt due from the broker to him against the demand of the goods made by the principal. Baring v. Corrie, Term Rep. K. B. Mic. 59 Geo. 3. 157. See further title Merchant.

If the principal give the factor a general commission to act for the best, he may do for him as he thinks fit; but otherwise he may not. Though in commissions at this time, it is common to give the factor power in express words to dispose of the merchandize, and deal therein as if it were his own; by which the factor's actions will be excused, though they occasion loss to his principal. Lex Mercat. Mal, 81. Str. 1178.

Goods remitted to a factor ought to be carefully preserved; and he is accountable for all lawful goods which shall come to his hands; yet if the factor buy goods for his principal, and they receive damage after in his possession, though no negligence of his, the principal shall bear the loss; and if a factor be robbed, he shall be discharged in account brought against him by his principal. 4 Rep. 83. See title Bailment.

If the factor has orders from his principal not to sell any goods but in such a manner, and breaks those orders, he is liable to the loss or damage that shall be received thereby: and where any goods are brought or exchanged without orders, it is at the merchant's curtesy whether he will accept of them, or turn them on his factor's hands. When a factor has bought or sold goods pursuant to orders, he is immediately to give advice of it to his principal, lest the former orders should be contradicted before the time of his giving notice, whereby his reputation might possibly suffer: and where a factor has made a considerable profit for his principal, he must take due care in the disposition of the same; for without commission or particular orders he is answerable.

FACTOR.

A factor shall suffer for not observing orders; and no factor acting for another man's account in merchandize, can justify receding from the orders of his principal, though there may be a probability of advantage by it: if he make any composition with creditors without orders, he shall answer it to his principal. Lex Mercatoria.

Factors ought to observe the contents of all letters from their principals, or written to them by their order. A merchant is answerable in action upon the case for the deceits of his factor, in selling goods abroad: and as somebody must be a loser by such deceit, it is more reasonable that he who employs, and puts confidence in the deceiver, should lose, than a stranger. 1 Salk. 289.

Factors are liable to the statutes concerning bankrupts. Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. § 39. See title Bankrupt. Factor not to buy cattle on his own account. Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 40. § 11. See title Cattle.

A bare commission to a factor to sell and dispose of merchandize, is not sufficient power for the factor to entrust any person, or to give a further day of payment than the day of the sale of the goods; for in this case, on the delivery of the one he ought to receive the other: and by the general power of doing as if it were his own, he may not trust an unreasonable time, viz. beyond one or three months, &c. the usual time allowed for the commodities disposed of; if he doth, he shall be answerable to his principal out of his own estate. 1 Bulst. 102. But in 2 C. C. 57. it is said that by his general commission a factor has authority to sell upon credit.

If a Factor buys goods on account of his principal, where he is used so to do, the contract of the factor shall oblige the principal to a performance of the bargain; and the principal is the proper person to be prosecuted on non-performance: but if the factor enters into a charter-party of affreightment with a master of a ship, the contract obliges him only; unless he lades aboard generally his principal's goods; then both the principal and lading become liable for the freight, and not the factor. Goldsh. 137.

It is a general rule that where a factor, who is authorised to sells goods in his own name, makes the buyer debtor to himself, though he is not answerable to his principal for the debt, if the money be not paid: yet he has a right to receive it if it be paid, and his receipt is a discharge to the buyer. The factor may compel such payment by action, and the buyer cannot defend himself by saying that the principal was indebted to him more than the amount. Comp. 255, 256. Where goods are sold by a factor at his own risk, for which he has an additional allowance, the vendee is not answerable to the owner. Stra. 1182. See Del Credere.

Though a factor has power to sell, and thereby bind his principal, yet he cannot bind or affect the property of the goods by pledging them as a security for his own debt, though there is the formality of a bill of parcels and a receipt. Stran. 1178.

If a factor sells goods as his own, by indorsement of the bill of lading, though no delivery is made, the goods being at sea, the vendee shall keep possession unless fraud appears between him and the factor. 4 Burr. 2046. 1 Black. Rep. 629. See post, the last paragraph of this article.

It hath been held in Equity, that if one employs a factor, and entrusts him with the disposal of merchandize, and the factor receives the money, and dies indebted in debts of a higher nature, and it appears by evidence that this money was vested in other goods, and remains unpaid, those goods shall be taken as part of the merchant's estate, and not the factor's; but if the factor have the money, it shall be looked upon as the factor's estate, and must first answer the debts of superior creditors, &c. for as money has no ear-mark, Equity cannot follow that in behalf of him who employed the factor. 1 Salk. 160.

If a person doth employ a factor to sell goods, who sells them on credit, and before the money is paid dies indebted more than his assets will pay; this money shall be paid to the principal merchant, and not to the factor's administrator, but thereout must be deducted what was due for commission; for a factor is in nature only of a trustee for his principal. 2 Vern. 638.

Bills remitted to a factor or banker, while unpaid, are in the nature of goods unsold; and if the factor become bankrupt, must be returned to the principal, subject to such lien as the factor may have thereon. 2 Blac. Rep. 1154.

A factor has a Lien on goods consigned to him, not only for incident charges, but as an item of mutual account, for the general balance due to him, so long as he retains the possession; if he parts with the possession, he parts with his lien. See 1 Burr. 489. 1 Blac. Rep. 104. If he be surety in a bond for his principal, he has a lien on the price of the goods sold by him for his principal, to the amount of the sum he is bound for. Cowp. 251. A dyer, merely as a manufacturer, has not a general lien; but a packer being in the nature of a factor has. 4 Burr. 2214.

A factor has no lien on goods for a general balance, unless they come into his actual possession; and if, in consideration of goods being consigned to him, he accept bills drawn by the consignor, and pay part of the freight, and become insolvent before the bills are due, and before the goods get into his actual possession, the consignor may stop them in transitu. 1 Term Rep. 119. If a factor accept bills drawn by his principal upon the faith of consignments agreed to be made by the principal to the factor, and both of them become bankrupts before a cargo consigned come into possession of the factor, the factor's assignees have no property in such cargo, and cannot recover the produce of it against the assignees of the principal, if the latter have sold it, and received the purchase money. 1 Term Rep. 783. See 4 Bro. P. C. 47. (8vo. ed.)

The consignor may stop goods in transitu before they get into the hands of the consignee, in case of the insolvency of the consignee; but if the consignee assign the bills of lading to a third person for a valuable consideration, the right of the consignor as against such assignee is devested. There is no distinction between a bill of lading indorsed in blank, and an indorsement to a particular person. 4 Bro. P. C. (8vo. ed.) 57. See 2 Term Rep. 63. 1 H. Blac. Rep. 357. And further as to stopping goods in transitu, 2 Term Rep. 674. 3 Term Rep. 465.

A Factor cannot pledge the goods of his principal by indorsement and delivery of the bill of lading, any more than by the delivery of the goods themselves; though the indorsee knew not that he was factor. And where goods were consigned on the joint account of the consignors and consignee, and a bill of lading was sent to deliver the goods to the consignee or his assigns, who afterwards indorsed and delivered it to the defendants, upon condition of their making an advance to him on it, which they failed to do, but claimed to retain it as a security for prior advances, held that such indorsement and delivery of the bill of lading, did not devest the consignor's right to stop the goods in transitu upon the insolvency of the consignee, who had not paid for them. Newsom & al. v. Thornton & al. 6 East's Rep. 17. 1 Maul. & Selw. Rep. 140. See further title Merchant.

Where an estate is sequestrated by the Court of Session in Scotland, or where the property of it is in dispute, that court appoints a Factor to take charge of the rents and preserve the property.

FACTORAGE. Is the wages or allowance paid and made to a factor by the merchant. The gain of factorage is certain, however the success proves to the merchant; but the commissioners and allowances vary according to the customs and distance of the country, in the several places where factors are resident. Lex. Mercat. See title Factor.

FACTUM. A man's own act and deed; fact or feat; particularly used in the civil law, for any thing stated and made certain. See Fait.

FACULTY, Facultas.] As restrained from the original and active sense, to a particular understanding in law, is used for a privilege, or special dispensation, granted to a man by favour and indulgence, to do that which by law he ought not to do. And for the granting of these, there is an especial court under the Archbishop of Canterbury, called the Court of the Faculties; and the chief officer thereof the Master of the Faculties; who has power by the stat. 25 H. 8. cap. 21. to grant dispensations; as to marry persons without the banns first asked, (and every diocesan may make the like grants) to ordain a deacon under age, for a son to succeed the father in his benefice, one to have two or more benefices incompatible, and for other purposes. And in this court are registered the certificates of bishops and noblemen granted to their chaplains, to qualify them for pluralities and non-residence. 4 Inst. 337. See title Chaplain. In the Scotch law, Faculty is synonimous with Power: thus a Faculty to burden, is the power or right of charging an estate with a sum of money. See title Pews.

FASTING MEN. In Mon. Angl. tom. 1. pag. 100. are rendered to signify vassals: but Cowel thinks they rather mean pledges or bondsmen; which, by the custom of the Saxons, were fast bound to answer for one another's peaceable behaviour. See Festing-men.

FAG. A knot or excrescency in cloth; and in this sense it is used in the statute 4 Ed. 4. cap. 1. The fag-end, signifies that end of a piece of cloth or linen, where the weaver ends his piece, and works up the worst part of his materials.

FAGGOT. A badge wore in the times of popery, by persons who had recanted and abjured what was then adjudged to be heresy: those were condemned not only to the penance of carrying a faggot, as an emblem of what they had merited, to such an appointed place of solemnity; but for a more durable mark of infamy, they were to have the sign of a faggot embroidered on the sleeve of their upper garment: and if this badge or faggot was at any time left off, it was often alledged as the sign of apostacy.

FAIDA. Malice or deadly fued. Leg. H. 1. c. 88.

FAILURE OF RECORD. Is when an action is brought against a man, who alledges in his plea matter of record in bar of the action, and avers to prove it by the record; but the plaintiff saith, Nul tiel record, viz. denies there is any such record: upon which, the defendant hath day given him by the court to bring it in; and if he fails to it, then he is said to fail of his record, and the plaintiff shall have judgment to recover. Terms de Ley. See further titles Amendment, Jeofails, Record.

FAINT ACTION, Fr. feinte.] A feigned action; such that although the words of the writ are true, yet for certain causes the plaintiff hath no title to recover thereby; but a false action is properly where the words of the writ are false. Co. Lit. 361.

FAINT PLEADER. A fraudulent, false or collusory manner of pleading to the deceit of a third person; against which, among other things, was made the stat. 3. Ed. 1. cap. 19.

FAIR-PLEADER. See title Beau-pleader.

FAIR.

FAIR. Fr. feire, Lat. feriæ, nundinæ.] A solemn or greater sort of market, granted to any town by privilege, for the more speedy and commodious providing of such things as the subject needeth: and the utterance of what commodities we abound in above our own uses and occasions; and both our English and the French word seems to come from feriæ [festivals]; because it is incident to a fair that persons shall be privileged from being molested or arrested in it, for any other debt, or contract than what was contracted in the same, or at least was promised to be paid there. See stat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 2. made perpetual by 1 R. 3. c. 6. and this Dict. title Courts of Pie powders. See also stats. 2 E. 3. c. 15. 5 E. 3. c. 5. 27 H. 6. c. 5. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 7. 18 Eliz. c. 21.

I. The Right to a Fair, and the Manner of holding it.
II. The Duty, Power, and Interest of the Owners of Fairs.
—How far a Sale in a Fair changes the Property of a Thing therein sold, See this Dict. title Market.

I. The first institution of fairs and markets seems plainly to have been for the better regulation of trade and commerce, and that merchants and traders might be furnished with such commodities as they wanted, at a particular mart without that trouble and loss of time, which must necessarily attend travelling about from place to place; and therefore as this is a matter of universal concern to the commonwealth: so it hath always been held, that no person can claim a fair or market, unless it be by grant from the King, or by prescription, which supposes such a grant. 2 Inst. 220. 3 Mod. 123.

And therefore, if any person sets up any such fair or market, without the King's authority, a quo warranto lies against him; and the persons who frequent such fair, &c. may be punished by fine to the King. 3 Mod. 127.

Also it seems, that if the King grants a patent for holding a fair or market, without a writ of ad quod damnum executed and returned, that the same may be repealed by scire facias; for though such fairs and markets are a benefit to the commonwealth; yet too great a number of them may become nuisances to the public, as well as a detriment to those who have more ancient grants. 3 Lev. 222.

Fairs are generally kept once or twice in the year; and it has been observed, that fairs were first occasioned by the resort of people to the feast of Dedication, and therefore in most places the fairs, by old custom, are on the same day with the wake or festival of that Saint to whom the church was dedicated: and for the same reason they were kept in the church-yard, till restrained by stat. 13 E. 1. st. 2. c. 6. 2 Inst. 221. Blount. The Court of Pie-powder is incident to every fair, &c. By stat 2 Ed. 3. c. 15. fairs are not to be kept longer than they ought by the lords thereof, on pain of their being seized into the King's hands, until such lords have paid a fine for the offence; and proclamation is to be made how long fairs are to continue.—By stat. 5 E. 3. c. 5. no merchant shall sell any goods or merchandise at a fair after the time of the fair is ended, under the penalty of forfeiting double the value of the goods sold, one fourth part thereof to the prosecutor, and the rest to the King. Any citizen of London may carry his goods or merchandise to any fair or market in England at his pleasure. See stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 9. and this Dict. title London.

It seems clearly agreed, that if a person hath a right to a fair or market, and another erects a fair or market so near his, that it becomes a nuisance to his fair, &c. that for this detriment and injury done to him, an action on the case lies; for it is implied in the King's grant, that it should be no prejudice to another. 2 Rol. Abr. 140.

Also, although the new market be held on a different day, yet an action on the case lies; for this, by forestalling the ancient market, may be a greater injury to the owner, than if held on the same day with his. 2 Saund. 172. 1 Mod. 69. See title Market.

If a man hath a fair or market, and a stranger disturbs those who are coming to buy or sell there, by which he loses his toll, or receives some prejudice in the profits arising from his fair, &c. an action on the case lies. 1 Rol. Abr. 106. 2 Vent. 26, 28. So if upon a sale in a fair a stranger disturbs the lord in taking the toll, an action upon the case lies for this. 1 Rol. Abr. 106.

The King is the sole judge where fairs and markets ought to be kept; and therefore it is said, that if he grants a market to be kept in such a place, which happens not to be convenient for the country, yet the subjects can go to no other; and if they do, the owner of the soil where they meet is liable to an action at the suit of the grantee of the market, 3 Mod. 123. But if no place be limited for keeping a fair by the King's grant, the grantees may keep it where they please, or rather where they can most conveniently: and if it be so limited, they may keep it in what part of such place they will. 3 Mod. 108.

At what time fairs are to be held, see stat. 27 H. 6. c. 5. & 1 Car. 1. c. 1. 29 Car. 2. c. 7. and this Dict. title Holidays.

II. Owners and governors of fairs are to take care that every thing be sold according to just weight and measure; for that and other purposes they may appoint a clerk of the fair or market, who is to mark and allow all such weights, and for his duty herein can only take his reasonable and just fees. See 4 Inst. 274. Moor. 523. 1 Salk. 327.

Fairs and markets are such franchises as may be forfeited; as if the owners of them hold them contrary to their charter, as by continuing them a longer time than the charter admits, by disuser, and by extorting fees and duties where none are due, or more than are justly due. 2 Inst. 220. Finch. 164. 3 Mod. 108.

As to their interest it arises chiefly from tolls. Toll payable at a fair or market is a reasonable sum of money due to the owner of the fair or market, upon sale of things tollable within the fair or market, or for stallage, pickage or the like. 2 Inst. 222. 2 Jon. 207.

But this is not incident to a fair or market without special grant; for where it is not granted, such a fair or market is accounted a free fair or market. 2 Inst. 220. Cro. Eliz. 559.

Toll is a matter of private benefit to the owner of the fair or market, and not incident to them; therefore if the King grants a fair or market, and grants no toll, the patentee can have none, and such fair or market is accounted free. Cro. Eliz. 558. 2 Inst. 220. S. P. 2 Lutw. 1326. S. P. resolved.

Also if the King, at the time he grants a fair or market, grants a toll, and the same is outrageous and excessive, the grant of the toll is void, and the same becomes free. 2 Inst. 220. 2 Lutw. 1336. But the King, after he grants a fair or market, may grant that the patentee may have a reasonable toll; but this must be in consideration of some benefit accruing from it to those who trade and merchandise in such fair or market. 2 Inst. 221.

No toll shall be paid for any thing brought to the fair or market, before the same is sold, unless it be by custom time out of mind, and upon such sale the toll is to be paid by the buyer; and therefore my Lord Coke says, that a fair or market by prescription is better than one by grant. 2 Inst. 221.

And by stat. Westm. 1. cap. 31. "touching them that take outrageous toll, contrary to the common custom of the realm in market towns, it is provided, that if any do so in the King's town, which is let in fee-farm, the King shall seize into his own hand the franchise of the market; and if it be another's town, and the same be done by the lord of the town, the King shall do in like manner; and if it be done by a bailiff, or any mean officer, without the commandment of his lord, he shall restore to the plaintiff as much more, for the outrageous taking, as he had of him, if he carried away his toll, and shall have forty days' imprisonment."

But where by custom a toll is due upon the sale of any goods in a fair or market, and he who ought to pay it refuses, an action on the case lies against him. 1 Rol. Abr. 103, 104. 106.

Some persons, however, are exempt from payment of toll, and if the King or any of his progenitors have granted to any to be discharged of toll, either generally or specially; this grant is good to discharge him of all tolls to the King's own fairs or markets, and of the tolls, which, together with any fair or market, have been granted after such grant of discharge; but cannot discharge tolls formerly due to subjects either by grant or prescription. 2 Inst. 221.

Also the King himself shall not pay toll for any of his goods; and if any be taken, it is punishable within the statute Westm. 1. cap. 31. 2 Inst. 221. So tenants in ancient demesne are free and quit from all manner of tolls in fairs and markets, whether such tenants hold in fee, or for life, years, or at will. 2 Inst. 221. 4 Inst. 269. 1 Rol. Abr. 321.

But this privilege does not extend to him who is a merchant, and gets his living by buying and selling, but is annexed to the person in respect of the land, and to those things which grow and are the produce of the land. F. N. B. 228. 2 Leon. 191. Cro. Eliz. 227. 2 Inst. 221. 1 Rol. Abr. 321, 2.

Owners of fairs and markets are to appoint toll-takers or book-keepers, on pain of 40*s.* and they shall enter and give account of horses sold, &c. Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 7. 3 Eliz. c. 12. See further titles Toll, Horses, Market.

FAIT, factum.] A deed or writing, lawfully executed to bind the parties thereto. See title Deed.

FAIT ENROLLE, Fr.] A deed of bargain and sale, &c. and forging the inrollment of it is a great misdemeanor, but not forgery within the stat. 5 Eliz. 1 Keb. 568.

FAITOURS, Fr.] In the statute 7 R. 2. cap. 5. is used for evil-doers; and may be interpreted idle livers, from faitardise, which signifies a kind of sleepy disease, proceeding from too much sluggishness; and in the same statute it seems to be synonymous with vagabonds. Termes de Ley. See titles Poor, Vagrants.

FALANG. A jacket or close coat. Blount.

FALCATURA. One day's mowing of grass; a customary service to the lord by his inferior tenants: falcata was the grass fresh mowed, and laid in swathes; and falcator the servile tenant performing the labour. Kennet's Gloss.

FALCO. A faulcon. Falconarius, a falconer; falco gentilis, a jer-falcon; Falco Spuarius, a Sparrow Hawk. Cowel.

FALDA. A sheep-fold. Rot. Chart. 6 Hen. 3.

FALDAGE, faldagium.] A privilege which several lords anciently reserved to themselves, of setting up folds for sheep in any field within their manors, for the better manurance of the same; and this was usually done not only with their own but their tenants' sheep, which they call secta faldæ. This faldage is termed in some places a fold course; and in old charters faldsoca, i. e. libertas faldæ, or faldagii.

FALDÆ CURSUS. A sheep walk or feed for sheep. 2 Vent. 139.

FALDFEY, FALD-FEE. A fee or rent paid by some customary tenants for liberty to fold their sheep upon their own land.

FALDISTOR, Sax.] The highest seat of a bishop inclosed round with a lettice. Cowel.

FALDWORTH. A person of age, that he may be reckoned of some decennary. Du Fresne.

FALERÆ, Lat. phaleræ.] The tackle and furniture of a cart or wain. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. 256.

FALESIA. A great rock, bank or hill by the sea side. Domesd.

FALK-LAND, or FOLK-LAND. See title Copy-hold.

FALLOW-LAND. See Warrectum & Terra Warrecta.

FALLUM. An unexplained term for some particular sort of land.—De duobus acris et viginti fallis in, &c. Mon. tom. 2. 425.

FALMOTUM, or falkmote; the same with folkemote. See title Parliament.

FALSE ACTION. If brought against one, whereby he is cast into prison, and dies pending the suit, the law giveth no remedy in this case, because the truth or falsehood of the matter cannot appear before it is tried: and if the plaintiff be barred or nonsuited, at common law, regularly all the punishment is amercement. Jenk. Cent. 161. See Faint Action. But if one commence a bailable action against another and hold him to bail thereon, either without a reasonable cause, or for something considerable, more than what is bonâ fide due, an action upon the case will lie for the vexation and injury. See title Action, II.

FALSE CLAIM. By the forest laws, is where a man claims more than is his due, and is amerced and punished for the same. A person had a grant, by charter, of the tenth of all the venison in the forest of Lancaster, viz. In carne tantum sed non in corio; and because he made a false claim, by alledging that he ought to have the tenth of all the venison within the forest, as well in carne, as in corio, therefore he was in misericordia de decima venationis suæ in corio non percipiendo. Manwood, c. 25.

FALSE FORM. In proceedings at law, is aided by a verdict; though not where there is want of certainty, &c. 1 Keb. 734. 876. See titles Amendment, Error.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

Falsum Imprisonamentum.] A trespass committed against a person, by arresting and imprisoning him without just cause, contrary to law; or where a man is unlawfully detained without legal process; it is also used for a writ which is brought for this trespass.

To constitute the injury of false imprisonment two points are necessary; the detention of the person and the unlawfulness of such detention. Every confinement of the person is an imprisonment whether it be in a common prison, or in a private house, or in the stocks, or even by forcibly detaining one in the public streets. 2 Inst. 589. Unlawful or false imprisonment consists in such confinement or detention without sufficient authority: which authority may arise either from some process from the courts of justice, or from some warrant from a legal officer having power to commit, under his hand and seal, and expressing the cause of such commitment. 2 Inst. 46. See this Dict. titles Arrest, Commitment, Constable. Such authority may also arise from some other special cause; warranted, for the necessity of the thing, either by Common or Statute law: as the arresting of a felon by a private person without warrant; the impressing of mariners for the public service; or the apprehending waggoners (under stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78.) for misbehaviour in the public highways. False imprisonment may also arise by executing a lawful warrant or process at an unlawful time, as on a Sunday. See titles Arrest, Sunday.

The means of removing the actual injury of false imprisonment are four-fold; by writs of mainprize; odio et atia; homine replegiando; and habeas corpus. See this Dict under those titles. The remedy for a satisfaction for the injury is by action either of case or trespass: and therein the party shall recover damages for the injury he has received.

The distinction between the action of case and action of trespass for this injury is thus stated. Where the immediate act of imprisonment proceeds from the defendant, the action can only be trespass; but when the act of imprisonment by one person, is in consequence of information from another, there an action on the case is a proper remedy. Morgan v. Hughes, 2 Term Rep. K. B. 232.

The most atrocious degree of this offence, that of sending any subject of this realm a prisoner into parts beyond the seas, whereby he is deprived of the friendly assistance of the laws to redeem him from such his captivity, is criminally punished with the pains of præmunire, and incapacity to hold any office, without a possibility of pardon. Stat. 31 C. 2. c. 2. See this Dict. titles Exile, Habeas Corpus.—And by the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 13. to carry any one by force out of the four Northern counties, or imprison him within the same, in order to ransom him, or make spoil of his person or goods, is felony without benefit of clergy in the principals and all accessaries before the fact. Inferior degrees of this offence of false imprisonment are also punishable by indictment, and the delinquent may be fined and imprisoned. 4 Comm. 218.

By the statute of Limitations, 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. this action must be brought within four years; which has been construed to be from the end of any continued imprisoment. Salk. 420. —By stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44. actions against justices of peace, or constables acting under their warrants, must be brought within six months; and one month's notice of bringing the action must be given them; and by stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 12. those officers may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence. See this Dict. titles Justice, Constable, Action.

No action of false imprisonment lies against a judge of a court of record for any act done by him in the execution of his office, nor for any mistake of judgment. Salk. 396.

Action on the case for false imprisonment has been held to lie against a superior officer where the imprisonment at first was legal, but was afterwards aggravated with many circumstances of cruelty and was continued beyond necessary bounds.—So also where a captain of a man of war imprisoned the defendant three days for a supposed breach of duty, without hearing him, and then released him without bringing him to a Court Martial. 1 Term Rep. K. B. 536, 537.

If erroneous process issues out of a court that hath jurisdiction of the matter, and the bailiff or officer executes it, whereby the party is imprisoned, the officer shall be excused in action of false imprisonment: but if the court out of which the process issues hath no cognizance of the cause, it is otherwise; for in such case the whole proceedings are coram non judice, and the officer will not be excused. 10 Rep. 75. See titles Arrest, Constable.

An officer hath a warrant upon a capias ad satisfaciend' against an earl, or countess, &c. who are privileged in their persons and he arrests them: it is said action of false imprisonment will not lie against the officer, because he is not to examine the judicial act of the court, but to obey. 6 Rep. 56. 10 Rep. 75.

If an arrest is made by one who is no legal officer, it is false imprisonment, for which action lies. Co. Lit. 69. An action of false imprisonment lies against a bailiff for arresting a person without warrant, though he afterwards receives a warrant: and so it is if he arrests one after the return of the writ is past; for it is then without writ. 2 Inst. 53. If a sheriff, or any of his bailiffs, arrests a man out of his county, &c. or after the sheriff is discharged of his office; or a person arrests one on a justice's warrant after his commission is determined, &c. it will be false imprisonment. Dyer, 41. And if the sheriff, after he hath arrested a man lawfully, when a legal discharge comes to him, as a supersedeas, or the like, do not then discharge the party, he may be sued in this action. 2 R. 1. 12. Fitzh. 253.

In case the plaintiff in a suit brings an unlawful warrant to a sheriff, and shews him the defendant, requiring him to make the arrest; or if he bring a good warrant and direct the sheriff to a wrong man, &c. for this the action of false imprisonment will lie against both. Bro. Tresp. 99. 307. Faux. Impr. 19. 1 Brownl. 211. If a warrant be granted to arrest, or apprehend a person, where there are several of the name, and the bailiff or other officer arrests a wrong person, he is liable to action of false imprisonment; and he is to take notice of the right party at his peril. Dyer, 244. Moor, 457.

A man arrested on a Sunday may bring his action of false imprisonment; but one has been refused to be released in such a case. 5 Mod. 95. See titles Arrest, Sunday. If a bailiff demands more than his just fees, when offered him, and keep a person in custody thereupon, it is false imprisonment and punishable: and if a sheriff, or gaoler, keeps a prisoner in gaol, after his acquittal, for any thing except his fees, it is unlawful imprisonment. 2 Inst. 482. Wood, 16. If a man falsely imprisons A. B. and the gaoler detains him till he pays so much money, he shall have action of false imprisonment, and taking so much money from him against such person. Mod. Cas. 179, Unlawful or false imprisonment is sometimes called duress of imprisonment, where one is wrongfully imprisoned till he seals a bond, &c. 2 Inst. 482. See title Duress.

An imprisonment will be unlawful, and give this action, although the cause be good, when he that makes it doth the same without any colour of authority; or if he has a colour, yet if he hath no good authority, from the court, &c. or where a court or officer hath power, but do not well make it out; or when the authority is well made forth, and not rightly pursued and executed. 4 Rep. 64. 8 Rep. 67. Dyer, 242. If A. having been robbed, suspect B. to be guilty, and take and deliver him into the charge of a constable present; B. if innocent may maintain action of trespass and false imprisonment against A. 6 Term Rep. K. B. 315.

A conviction of a justice of peace having competent jurisdiction, upon which the plaintiff was arrested and imprisoned, is, till reversed or quashed, conclusive evidence in favour of the justice against whom an action of trespass and false imprisonment was brought. 7 Term Rep. K. B. 633. n.

Further as to relief in cases of false imprisonment or wrongful detainer of the person, see this Dict. titles Habeas Corpus, Imprisonment.

FALSE JUDGMENT, Falsum Judicium.] A writ that lieth where false judgment is given in the county-court, court-baron, or other courts, not of record. F. N. B. 17, 18. See title Error.

A judgment may be falsified, reversed or avoided without a writ of error for matters foreign to, or dehors, the record; that is, not apparent upon the face of it, so that they cannot be assigned for error in the superior court, which can only judge from what appears in the record itself; and therefore if the whole record be not certified, or not timely certified by the inferior court, the party injured thereby, in both civil and criminal cases, may alledge a Diminution of the record, and cause it to be rectified. See this Dict. title Diminution. Thus if any judgment whatever be given by persons who had no good commission to proceed against the person condemned, it is void; and may be falsified by shewing the special matter without writ of error. As where a commission issues to A. and B. and twelve others or any two of them, of which A. or B. shall be one, to take and try indictments, and any of the other twelve proceed without the interposition or presence of either A. or B. in this case all proceedings, trials, convictions and judgments are void for want of a proper authority in the commissioners, and may be falsified upon bare inspection without the trouble of a writ of error. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 50. § 2. It being a high misdemeanor in the judges so proceeding, and little, if any thing, short of murder in them all, in case the person so attainted be executed and suffer death. 4 Comm. 390.

So likewise if a man purchases land of another, and afterwards the vendor is, either by outlawry or his own confession, convicted and attainted of treason or felony previous to the sale or alienation; whereby such land becomes liable to forfeiture or escheat: now upon any trial the purchaser is at liberty without bringing any writ of error, to falsify, not only the time of the felony or treason supposed, but the very point of the treason or felony itself; and is not concluded by the confession or outlawry of the vendor; though the vendor himself is concluded, and not suffered then to deny the fact which he had by confession or flight acknowledged. But if such attainder of the vendor was by verdict, on the oath of his peers, the alience cannot be received to falsify or contradict the fact of the crime committed; though he is at liberty to prove a mistake in time: or that the offence was committed after the alienation and not before. 3 Inst. 231. 1 Hal. P. C. 361.

This writ may be brought on a judgment in a plea, real or personal: and for errors in the proceedings of inferior courts, or where they proceed without having jurisdiction, writ of false judgment lieth: though the plaintiff assign errors in a writ of false judgment, he shall not say, In hoc erratum est, &c. but unde queritur diversimodo sibi falsum judicium factum fuisse judicium in hoc, &c. Moor, 73. 2 Nels. Abr. 829. If a writ of false judgment abate for any fault in the writ, the plaintiff shall not have Scire facias ad audiend' errores, upon the record certified, because it comes without an original: but if the plaintiff dies, and false judgment is given in the inferior court, his heir shall have a Sci. fac. ad audiend' error against him who recovered upon that record which is removed into C. B.; and where the plaintiff in a writ of false judgment is nonsuit, it was formerly a question, whether the other party shall sue execution upon this record so removed against the plaintiff, without suing out a Scire facias; but it has been adjudged, that he may do it, Hil. 23 Hen. 6. New Nat. Br. 39.

When a record is removed into C. P. by writ of false judgment, if the party alledges variance between the record removed, and that on which judgment was given, the trial shall be by those who were present in court when the record was made up. 2 Lutw. 957. Stat. 1 Ed. 3. c. 4. A man shall not have a writ of false judgment but in a court where there are suitors; for if there be no suitors, there the record cannot be certified by them. New. Nat. Br. 40. Where false judgment is given on a writ of justices, directed to the sheriff, the party grieved shall have a writ of false judgment; although the judgment be for debt, or trespass above the sum of 40*s. Ibid.*

Where a record of a judgment in the county-court was vicious, and the judgment reversed in C. B. the suitors were ordered to be amerced a mark, and the county clerk fined 5*l.* And if a plaintiff in an inferior court declare for more than 40*s.* judgment shall be reversed by writ of false judgment: but where damages are laid under that sum, costs may make it amount to more. 1 Mod. 249. 2 Mod. 102. 206.

Upon false judgment before bailiffs, or others who hold plea by prescription, in every sum in debt by bill before them a party shall not have a writ of false judgment; but a writ of error thereupon. M. 4. E. 4. For defaults of tenants for life, in writs of right, &c. writ of false judgment by him in reversion: and this writ may be brought against a stranger to the judgment, if he be tenant of the land. A judgment shall be intended good till reversed by writ of false judgment, &c. See titles Accedas ad Curiam, Attaint.

FALSE LATIN. Before the statute directing law proceedings to be in English, if a Latin word was significant, though not good Latin, yet an indictment, declaration, or fine, should not be made void by it: but if the word was not Latin, nor allowed by the law, and it were in a material point, it made the whole vicious. 5 Rep. 121. 2 Nels. 830.

FALSE NEWS. Spreading false news, to make discord between the King and nobility, or concerning any great man of the realm, is punished by common-law, with fine and imprisonment, which is confirmed by statutes Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 34. 2 Rich. 2. stat. 1. c. 5. 12 Rich. 2. c. 11. See 2 Inst. 226. 3 Inst. 198.

FALSE OATH. See title Perjury.

FALSE PLEA. See title Pleading.

FALSE PRETENCES. The statutes 30 Geo. 2. c. 24. and 52 Geo. 3. c. 64. make the offence of obtaining goods, monies or bonds, or other securities by false pretences punishable by transportation or imprisonment, &c. See title Cheats.

An indictment on the stat. 30 Geo. 2. must negative the truth of the pretences by a special averment; merely to state that the defendant falsely pretended, &c. (setting out the pretences) by means of which said false pretences, he obtained, &c. is insufficient. 2 Maul. & Sel. Rep. 379.

FALSE PROPHECY. See title Prophecy.

FALSE RETURN. On a false return by a mayor, &c. to a mandamus, or by a sheriff, &c. to a writ, a special action on the case will lie. See title Action.

FALSE TOKENS. Where persons get money or goods into their hands, by forged letters, or other counterfeit means they are punishable by imprisonment, &c. See title Cheats.

FALSE VERDICT. A writ of attaint lieth, to inquire whether a jury of twelve men have given a false verdict; that so the judgment following thereupon may be reversed. It is allowed in almost every action except in a writ of right. See titles Attaint, Jury, Trial.

FALSE WEIGHTS. See Weights, Cheats.

TO FALSIFY. To prove a thing to be false. Perk. 383.

FALSIFYING A RECORD. A person that purchases land of another, who is afterwards outlawed of felony, &c. may falsify the record, not only as to the time wherein the felony is supposed to have been committed, but also as to the point of the offence: but where a man is found guilty by verdict, a purchasor cannot falsify as to the offence; though he may for the time, where the party is found guilty generally in the indictment, &c. because the time is not material upon evidence. And any judgment given by persons who had no good commission to proceed against the person condemned, may be falsified by shewing the special matter, without writ of error. Also where a man is attainted of treason or felony, if he be afterwards pardoned by parliament, the attainder may be falsified by him or his heir, without plea. 2 Hawk. P. C. See title Record.

FALSIFYING RECOVERY. See titles Fine, Recovery.

FALSIFYING A VERDICT. Where in any real action, there is a verdict against tenant in tail, the issue can never falsify such verdict in the point directly tried; but only in a special manner, as by saying that some evidence was omitted, &c. 2 Ld. Raym. 1050. See titles Trial, New Trial, Jury, Verdict.

FALSING OF DOOMS. In Scotch law, the old term for an appeal: Doom is the sentence of a court, and the falsing of Dooms is proving the injustice of that sentence.

FALSONARIUS. A forger.—Hoveden, 424.

FALSO RETURNO BREVIUM. A writ that lieth against the sheriff who hath execution of process, for false returning of writs. Reg. Jud. 43.

FAMILIA. Signifies all the servants belonging to a particular master; but in another sense it is taken for a portion of land, sufficient to maintain one family: It is sometimes mentioned by our writers to be a Hide of land, which is also called a Manse; and sometimes Carucata or a plough land. Blount.

FANATICKS. Persons supposing themselves inspired. A general name for Quakers, Anabaptists, and other sectaries and dissenters from the church of England. See stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 6.

FANATICO, Mensis Fanationis.] The fawning season or fence-months in forests. Kennet's Gloss. See title Fence-Month.

FARANDMAN, Sax.] A traveller or merchant stranger, to whom by the laws of Scotland justice ought to be done with all expedition, that his business or journey be not hindered. Shene, c. 104.

FARDEL OF LAND, Fardella Terræ.] Is generally accounted the fourth part of a Yard Land, but according to Noy, (in his Compleat Lawyer, p. 57.) it is an eighth part only; for there he says that two fardels of land make a nook, and four nooks a yard land.

FARDING-DEAL, OR FARUNDEL OF LAND; Quadrantata terræ.] Is the fourth part of an acre: and besides quadrantata terræ, we read of obolata, demariata, solidata, and librata terræ, which probably arise in proportion of quantity from the farding-deal, as an half-penny, penny, shilling or pound in money, rise in value, and then must obolata be half an acre, denariatia an acre, solidata twelve acres, and librata terræ twelve score acres of land: but some hold obolata to be but half a perch, and denariata a perch; and there is mentioned viginti libratas terræ vel redditus, in Reg. Orig. 94. 248. whereby it seems that librata terræ is so much as yields 20*s. per annum*. F. N. B. 87. Spelm. Gloss.

FARE, Sax.] A voyage or passage by water; but more commonly the money paid for such passage, in which sense it is now used. See stat. 3 P. & M. cap. 16. So for what we pay an hackney or stage coachman for our carriage.

FARINAGIUM. Toll of meal or flour.—Ordin. Insul. de Jersey, 17 Edw. 2.

FARLEU. Is money paid by tenants in the West of England in lieu of a heriot: and in some manors in Devonshire, farleu is distinguished to be the best goods; as heriot is the best beast, payable at the death of a tenant. Cowel.

FARLINGARII. Whoremongers and adulterers. Sax.

FARUNDEL OF LAND. See Farding-deal.

FARM, OR FERM. Lat. firma, from the Sax. feorme, i. e. Food; and feorman to feed or yield victuals.] A large messuage of land, taken by lease under a certain yearly rent, payable by the tenant; and in former days, about the time of William the First, called the Conqueror, these rents were reserved to the lords in victuals and other necessaries arising from the land: but afterwards in the reign of King Hen. I. were altered and converted into money. Termes de Ley. A farm is most properly called the chief messuage in a village; and it is a collective word, consisting of divers things gathered in one, as a messuage, land, meadow, pasture, wood, common, &c. Locare ad firmam is to let or set to farm; and the reason of it may be in respect to the firm or sure hold the tenants thereof have above tenants at will. A farm in Lancashire is called Ferm-holt; in the North a Tack; and in Essex a Wike: And ferm is taken in various ways. Plowd. 195.

FARMER. He that holds a farm, or is tenant or lessee thereof. Termes de Ley. And it is said generally every lessee for life or years, although it be but of a small house and land, is called Farmer, as he is that occupieth the farm: as this word implies no mystery, except it be that of husbandry, husbandman is the proper addition of a farmer. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. § 115. No person whatsoever shall take above two farms together, and they to be in the same parish, under the penalty of 3*s.* 4*d.* a week. Stats. 25 H. 8. c. 13. § 14.

FARTHING. Was the fourth part of a Saxon penny, as it is now of the English penny.

FARTHING OF GOLD, quasi fourth thing.] A coin used in ancient times, containing in value the fourth part of a Noble. It is mentioned in the stat. 9 E. 5. cap. 7. where it is ordained, that there shall be good and just weight of the noble, half noble, and farthing of gold, &c.

FARTHING OF LAND. Seems to differ from Farding-deal; for it is a large quantity of land: in a survey-book of the manor of West Slapton in Com. Devon is entered thus: A. B. holds six farthings of land at 12*l. per annum.*

FASIUS, Fr. Faisseau.] A faggot of wood. Mong. Angl. tom. 2. p. 238.

FAST-DAYS. Days of fasting and humiliation, appointed to be kept by public authority. There are fixed days of fasting injoined by our Church, at certain times in the year, mentioned in ancient statutes, particularly the 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 19. and 5 El. c. 5. And by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 14. the 30th of January is ordained to be a day of fasting and repentance, for the murder of King Charles I. Other days of fasting, which are not fixed, are occasionally appointed by the King's Proclamation. See Embring Days, Holydays.

FASTERMANS, Sax.] Pledges. Leg. Ed. Confess. cap. 38. Vide Fæstingmen.

FAT, VAT, OR WATE. Is a large wooden vessel used by maltsters and brewers, for measuring of malt with expedition, containing eight bushels or a quarter. Stats. 1 H. 5. c. 10. 11 H. 6. c. 8. It is also a vessel made use of by brewers to run their wort into, and by others for the making of salt at Droitwich in the county of Worcester.

FATHER. See Descent, Executor, Guardian, Marriage.

FATUA MULIER. A whore. Du Fresne.

FATUOUS PERSONS. Ideots. See title Lunatics.

FAUSETUM. A faucet, musical pipe or flute.

FAUTORS. Favourers or supporters of others; abettors of crimes, &c.

FEAL. The tenants by knight service did swear to their lords to be feal and leal, i. e. to be faithful and loyal. Spelm. de Parliament, 59. See Fealty.

FEAL AND DIVOT. A right in Scotland similar to the right of Turbary in England for fuel, &c. See title Common of Turbary.

FEALTY, Fidelitas, Fr. Feauté, i. e. Fides, fidei, obsequii et servitii ligamen, quo particulariter vassalus domino astringitur. Spelm.] The oath taken at the admittance of every tenant, to be true to the lord of whom he holds his land: and he that holds land by the oath of fealty, has it in the freest manner; because all persons that have fee, hold per fidem et fiduciam, that is, by fealty at least. Smith de Repub. Ang. lib. 3. c. 8. And fealty is incident to all manner of tenures except frankalmoigne and tenancy at will. See title Tenures, I. 6. et passim. This fealty, which is used in other nations, as well as England, at the first creation of it bound the tenant to fidelity; the breach whereof was the loss of his fee.

It is usually mentioned with homage, but differs from it; being an obligation permanent, which binds for ever: and these differ in the manner of the solemnity, for the oath of homage is taken by the tenant kneeling; but that of fealty is taken standing, and includes the six following things, viz.

1. Incolume, that he do no bodily injury to the lord. 2. Tutum, that he do no secret damage to him in his house, or any thing which is for his defence. 3 Honestum, that he do him no injury in his reputation. 4. Utile, that he do no damage to him in his possessions. 5. Facile, and 6. Possible, that he render it easy for the lord to do any good, and not make that impossible to be done, which was before in his power to do: all which is comprised in Leg. Hen. 1. c. 5.

Fealty has likewise been divided into general and special; general to be performed by every subject to his prince; and special, required only of such as in respect of their fee, are tied by oaths to their lords. Grand. Custum. Normand.

By stat. 17 Ed. 2. st. 2. the form of this oath is appointed, and as now observed, it runs as follows, viz. I A. B. will be to you my lord C. true and faithful, and bear to you fealty and faith for the lands and tenements which I hold of you: and I will truly do and perform the customs and services that I ought to do to you. So help me God. The oath is administered by the lord or his steward; the tenant holding his right hand upon the book, and repeating after the lord, &c. the words of the oath; and then kissing the book. Termes de Ley.

The law with respect to fealty continues the same as when Lord Coke wrote; (See 1 Inst. 686. in note:) for it does not appear to be varied by stat. 12 C. 2. c. 24. or any other statute made since; but it is no longer the practice to exact the performance of fealty. In the case of copyholders it is become a thing of course on admitting them to enter a respite of fealty; but with respect to such as hold by other tenures it is never thought of. In Wood's Inst. 183. it is said that lessees for life or years ought to do fealty to their lords for the lands they hold.—However it may not be amiss to remember that the title to fealty still remains; that it is due from all tenants except tenants in frankalmoigne, and such as hold at will or by sufferance, and if required must be iterated at every change of the lord; it differing in this respect from homage, which except in special cases is only due once; that the receiving of it is at least attended with the advantage of preserving the memory of the tenures; which though perhaps sufficiently done in the case of copyholds by the admittances and by the payment of fines and quit-rents and continual render of other services, may be very necessary in cases where fealty is the only service due; and lastly, that the law for compelling the performance of fealty has provided the remedy by distress, which is an inseparable incident to all services due by tenure, and in the case of fealty cannot, as it is said, be excessive. See 1 Inst. 68 a. 103 b. 104 a b. 152 b. 2 Inst. 107. 4 Co. 8 b.

FEAR. See Duress.

FEASTS. Anniversary times of feasting and thanksgiving, as Christmas, Easter, Whitsuntide, &c. The four feasts which our laws especially take notice of, are the feasts of the annunciation of the blessed Virgin Mary, of the nativity of St. John the Baptist, of St. Michael the Archangel, and of St. Thomas the Apostle; (or in lieu of the last, the birth of our Lord Christ,) on which quarterly days, rent on leases is usuallly reserved to be paid. See stats. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 3. 12 Car. 2. c. 30.

FEE, AND FEE-SIMPLE.—Tenant in fee simple, is he which has lands or tenements to hold to him and his heirs for ever. Litt. c. 1. § 1.

The word fee is sometimes used for the compass or circuit of a lordship or manor, as we say the lord of the fee, &c. as well as the particular estate of the tenant; and also for a perpetual right incorporeal; as to have the keeping of prisons, &c. in fee. Bract. Lib. 2. c. 5. Old Nat. Br. 41. And when a rent or annuity is granted to one and his heirs, it is a fee personal. Co. Lit. 1, 2.

As to the general nature and origin of estates in fee-simple, and the other estates arising therefrom, see this Dict. titles Estate, Tenure, III. 5. It is therefore in this place sufficient to inquire,

I. In what things one may have a Fee-simple.
II. By what Means such an Estate may be acquired.
III. By what words it may be created.

I. A man may have an estate, in fee-simple of all lands or tenements or other things real. Co. Lit. 1 b. Of lordships, advowsons, commons, estovers, and all hereditaments. Co. Lit. 4 a. So he may have a fee-simple in things mixed; as in franchises, liberties, &c. Co. L. 2. a.

So if a man grants to another and his heirs all woods, underwoods, timber-trees or others in such a part of a forest, saving the soil: the grantee has a fee to take in alieno solo. R. 8 Co. 137. b.

So, in things personal; as in annuity. Co. Lit. 2. a. In a dignity granted to him and his heirs. Co. Lit. 2. a. In a swan-mark. 7 Co. 17. In a part or share of the New River water. Co. Parl. 207.

So, in the patronage of an hospital, or other thing created de novo, in which there was not a precedent estate, a man may have a fee to him and his heirs, qualified in a particular manner: as if a Queen consort institutes an hospital, and reserves the patronage sibi & reginis Angliæ succedentibus. Ca. Ch. 214.

But in estates in esse before such desultory inheritance it cannot be: as the dutchy of Cornwall limited to the prince & filiis regis Angliæ primogenitis, shall not be good, except when limited by act of parliament. 8 Co. 16.

II. A man may take a fee by descent or by purchase.

In what manner a man may take by descent, see under title Descent.

With respect to purchasers, it is to be noted, that some are incapable of parchasing.

Any alien cannot purchase any lands in England. Vaugh. 227. 291. 7 Co. 16, 17, 18. Dyer. 2. pl. 8. See Alien.

All persons attainted of treason or felony are incapable of purchasing. 2 New. Abridg. 249. Co. Lit. 8. a. See Dig. Feud. lib. 2. tit. 23, 24. Vigellius, 242. 350. Spel. Gloss. 214. 215.

If a man be attainted of felony, and after purchase land, and dies, the King shall have it by his prerogative, and not the lord of the fee; because his person being forfeited to the King, he cannot purchase but for the King. Co. Lit. 2. b.

A monster not having human shape cannot purchase or inherit, but an hermaphrodite shall inherit or purchase secundum prævalentiam sexûs incalescentis; one born deaf and dumb may inherit; so may one born deaf, dumb, and blind, because it is for their advantage; but they cannot contract, because they cannot understand the signs of contracting; an infant, an ideot, and a person of non-sane memory may inherit, because the law, in compassion to their natural infirmities, presumes them capable of property; so also an infant or a person of non-sane memory may purchase, because it is intended for his benefit, and the freehold is in him till he disagree thereto, because an agreement is presumed, it being for their benefit, and because the freehold cannot be in the grantor, contrary to his own act, nor can be in abeyance, for then a stranger would not know against whom to demand his right; if at full age, or after recovery of his memory they agree thereto, they cannot avoid it: but if they die during minority or lunacy, the heirs may avoid it; for they shall not be subject to the contracts of persons who wanted capacity to contract; so, if after his memory recovered, the lunatick or person non compos die without agreement to the purchase, their heirs may avoid it. Co. Lit. 2. 8. 2 Vent. 303. See title Estate.

A feme covert is capable of purchasing: for such an act does not make the property of the husband liable to any disadvantage, nor does it suppose a separate will or power of contracting in the wife; but here the will of the wife is supposed the mind of the husband, (he not objecting,) since no man is supposed not to assent to that which is for his benefit; but in this case the husband may disagree, and it shall avoid the purchase. Co. Lit. 3. a. See titles Baron and Feme.

By the stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4. Papists were disabled from purchasing lands, &c. But see title Papist.

Persons capable of purchasing may gain a fee-simple by feoffment; or by fine, or common recovery; which are of the nature of a feoffment upon record; or by grant, or by exchange, release, or confirmation, which are in the nature of grant; or by bargain and sale; or by covenant to stand seised; or by devise. See title Estate.

So a man may gain a fee by wrong; as by disseisin, abatement, or intrusion. See those titles.

III. It is the word heirs makes the inheritance: and a man cannot have a greater estate. Lit. 1. To have fee-simple implies, that it is without limitation to what heirs but to heirs generally; though it may be limited by act of parliament. 4 Inst. 206. If one give or grant land to J. S. and his heirs; and if he die without heirs, that J. D. shall have it to him and his heirs: by this J. S. hath a fee-simple, and J. D. will have no estate. Dyer, 4. 33. This means by parol, with livery and seisin, or by deed, &c. but not by will.

Where land is given or granted by fine, deed or will, in possession, reversion, or remainder, to another and his heirs; it will be a fee-simple. Plowd. 143. And if land be granted to a man and his heirs, habendum to him for life only, and livery of seisin is made; it is a fee-simple estate, because a fee is expressed in the grant. 2 Rep. 23.

A lease is granted to one for a term of years, and after that the lessee shall have the land to him and his heirs by the rent of 10*l.* a year; if the grantor make livery upon it, 'tis a fee-simple: otherwise but for years. Co. Lit. 217. Where lands are granted to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, the remainder to the right heirs of A. here A. hath a fee-simple. 20 Hen. 6. 35. Bro. Est. 34, 35. A gift or grant to a man's wife during life, after to him in tail, and after to his right heirs; he will have a fee-simple estate. 2 Rep. 91.

If lands are granted to a man and his successors, this creates no fee-simple: but if such a grant be made to a corporation, it is a fee-simple; and in case of a sole corporation, as a bishop, parson, &c. a fee-simple is to them and their successors. Co. Lit. 1. b. Wood, 119. An estate granted to a person, to hold to him for ever, or to him and his assigns for ever, is only an estate for life; the word heirs being wanted to make it fee-simple: but in wills, which are more favoured than grants, the fee-simple and inheritance may pass without the word heirs. Co. Lit. 19. 9.

And by deed of feoffment a fee-simple may be created, which would be an estate-tail by will; as where lands are given to another, and his heirs male, &c. without the word body. Hob. 32. A gift to a man and his children, and their heirs, is a fee-simple to all that are living. Co. Lit. 8. Lit. Rep. 6.

A feoffment to B. & heredibus, without saying suis, gives him a fee-simple. Co. Lit. 8. b. So to a son and the heirs of his father. Semb. Co. Lit. 220. b. So to B. & liberis suis and their heirs; if he has issue, it gives them a joint estate in fee. Co. Lit. 9. a. So to B. heredibus & successoribus suis, gives a fee. Co. Lit. 9. a.

So a grant to the King in perpetuum gives him a fee, without the words, his heirs or successors, for he never dies. Co. Lit. 9. b. So a feoffment to a corporation aggregate in perpetuum gives a fee; for it never dies. Co. Lit. 9. b. 1 Rol. 832. l. 55.

Or, to a corporation sole, to be held in frankalmoigne. Co. Lit. 9. b. 1 Roll. 833. l. 5. So if A. re-enfeoffs B. adeo plené as B. enfeoffed him, he has a fee without the word heirs. Co. Lit. 9. b.—This must mean where A. had an estate in fee of the feoffment of B. 1 Rol. 833. l. 12. So a grant to the church of B. gives a fee, without the word heirs or successors. 1 Rol. 833. l. 3.

And a limitation to the right heirs of B. gives a fee, without the words, and their heirs. 1 Rol. 133. l. 16. So a fee may be given without the words, his heirs, by fine sur conuzance de droit come ceo, &c. Co. Lit. 9. b. or by a common recovery. Co. Lit. 9. b.

So a fee passes without the words, his heirs, where a man gives land with his daughter, &c. in frankmarriage. Co. Lit. 9. b. If a parcener, or joint-tenant releases to his companion. Co. Lit. 9. b. If the lord, &c. releases to the tertenant; which enures by way of extinguishment. Co. Lit. 9. b. If a man releases a mere right; as where a disseissee releases to the disseissor all his right. Co. Lit. 9. b.

So, if a rent be granted upon partition, for owelty (or equality) of partition, Co. Lit. 9, 10. So if a peer be summoned to parliament by writ, he has a fee in his dignity, without the word heirs. Co. Lit. 9. b. So, by the forest law, if the King at a justice seat, grants to another an assart in perpetuum, without more, he has a fee. Co. Lit. 10. a. So, by custom, a grant of a copyhold, sibi & suis, or sibi & assignatis, may give the inheritance. 4 Co. 29. b.

A fee-simple determinable upon a contingency, is a fee to all intents; though not so durable as absolute fee. Vaugh. 273. But see title Executory Devise.

In pleading estates in fee-simple, they may be alledged generally; but the commencement of estates tail, and other particular estates, must regularly be shown. Co. Lit. 303. The fee-simple estate, being the chief and most excellent; he who hath it in lands or tenements may give, grant, or charge the same by deed or will at his pleasure; or he may make waste or spoil upon it: And if he bind himself and his heirs to warranty, or for money by obligation, or otherwise, and leave such land to the heir, it shall be charged with warranty and debts: Also the wife of a man that is seised of such an estate, shall be endowed; and the husband of a woman having this estate, shall be tenant by the curtesy. Co. Lit. 273. Dyer, 330. Perk. § 286.

Though fee-simple is the most ample estate of inheritance, it is subject to many incumbrances; as judgments, statutes, mortgages, fines, jointures, dower, &c. And there is a fee-simple conditional, where the estate is defeasible by not performing the condition; and a qualified fee-simple, which may be defeated by a limitation, &c. This is called a base fee, upon which no reversion or remainder can be expectant. Co. Lit. 18. 10 Rep. 97.

See further on this subject titles Descent, Estate, Executory Devise, Tenure, Wills, &c.

FEE-EXPECTANT. [Feudum Expectativum.] Where lands are given to a man and his wife, in frank-marriage to have and to hold to them and their heirs, in this case they have fee-simple; but if they are given to them and the heirs of their body, they have tail and fee-expectant. Kitch. 153. See title Tail.

FEE-FARM, Feodi Firma.] Or fee-farm rent; is when the lord, upon creation of the tenancy, reserves to himself and his heirs, either the rent for which it was before let to farm, or was reasonably worth, or at least a fourth part of the value; without homage, fealty, or other services, beyond what are especially comprised in the feoffment. 2 Inst. 44. By Fitzherbert, a third part of the yearly value of the land may be appointed for the rent, where lands are granted in fee-farm, &c. F. N. B. 110. And Lord Coke says, fee-farm rents may be one half, a third, or fourth part of the value. Co. Lit. 143. See 2 Comm. 43. Doug. 627. in note, and the notes to 1 Inst. 143.

These fee-farm rents seem to be more or less, according to the conditions or consideration of the purchase of the lands out of which they are issuing. It is the nature of fee-farm, that if the rent be behind and unpaid for the space of two years, then the feoffor or his heirs may bring an action to recover the lands, &c. Brit. c. 66. num. 4. See title Cessavit.

Feodi firma appellatur, cum quis, ex dono vel concessione alterius, prædia tenuerit sibi et hæredibus suis, reddendo vel dimidiam, vel tertiam, vel ad minus quartam partem veri valoris. Tenens hujusmodi ad nulla servitia obligatur, nisi quæ in ipsâ Chartâ continentur: exceptâ fidelitate, quæ omnibus tenuris incumbit. Spelm. Gloss. 221.

FEE-FARM RENTS OF THE CROWN. The fee-farm rents remaining to the Kings of England from their ancient demesnes, were many of them alienated from the crown in the reign of King Charles II. By stats 22 Car. 2. c. 6. 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 24. (explained by stat. 10 An. c. 18.) the King was enabled by letters-patent to grant fee-farm rents due in right of his crown, or in right of his dutchies of Lancaster and Cornwall, except quit-rents, &c. to trustees to make sale thereof, and the trustees were to convey the same by bargain and sale to purchasers, &c. who may recover the same as the King might. But it has been observed, that men were so very doubtful of the title to alienations of this nature, that while these rents were exposed to sale for ready money, scarce any would deal for them, and they remained unsold: but what made men earnest to buy them, was the stop upon some of his Majesty's other payments, which occasioned persons to resort to this as the most eligible in that conjuncture: No tenant in tail of any of the said rents, is enable to bar the remainder. FEES. Certain perquisites allowed to officers in the administration of justice, as a recompence for their labour and trouble; ascertained either by acts of parliament, or by ancient usage, which gives them an equal sanction with an act of parliament. 2 New. Abr. 463.

I. In what Cases Fees are due.
II. At what Time they may be demanded.

I. At common law no officer, whose office related to the administration of justice, could take any reward for doing his duty, but what he was to receive from the King. Co. Lit. 368. 2 Inst. 176. 208, 9.

And this fundamental maxim of the common law is confirmed by Westm. 1. cap. 26. which enacts, "That no sheriff, or other King's officer, shall take any reward to do his office, but shall be paid of that which they take of the King; and that he who so doth shall yield twice as much, and shall be punished at the King's pleasure."

This statute comprehends escheators, coroners, bailiffs, gaolers, the King's clerk of the market, aulnager, and other inferior ministers and officers of the King, whose offices do any way concern the administration or execution of justice. 2 Inst. 209.

And so much hath this law been thought to conduce to the honour of the King and welfare of the subject, that all prescriptions whatsoever, which have been contrary to it, have been holden void; as where by prescription the clerk of the market claimed certain fees for the view and examination of all weights and measures, and it was held merely void. 4 Inst. 274. Moor, 523. 2 Inst. 209. 2 Rol. Abr. 226.

But it hath been holden, that the fee of 20*d.* commonly called the bar fee, which hath been taken time out of mind, by the sheriff, of every prisoner who is acquitted; and also the fee of one penny, which was claimed by the coroner of every visne, when he came before the justices in eyre, are not within the meaning of the statute, because they are not demanded by the sheriff or coroner for doing any thing relating to their offices, but claimed as perquisites of right belonging to any of them. 2 Inst. 210. Staun. P. C. 49.

Also it is holden by Lord Coke, that within the words of the statute 34 Ed. 1. which are, "No tallage or aid shall be taken or levied by us or our heirs in our realm, without the good will and assent of archbishops, bishops, earls, barons, knights, burgesses, and other freemen of the land;" no new offices can be erected with new fees, or old offices with new fees; for that is a tallage upon the subject, which cannot be done without common assent by act of parliament, 2 Inst. 533.

Yet it is holden, that an office erected for the public good, though no fee is annexed to it, is a good office; and that the party, for the labour and pains which he takes in executing it, may maintain a quantum meruit, if not as a fee, yet as a competent recompence for his trouble. Moor, 808.

All fees allowed by acts of parliament become established fees; and the several officers intitled to them may maintain action of debt for them. 2 Inst. 210. All such fees as have been allowed by the courts of justice to their officers, as a recompence for their labour and attendance, are established fees: and the parties cannot be deprived of them without an act of parliament. Co. Lit. 368. Prec. Chan. 551.

Where a fee is due by custom, such custom, like all others, must be reasonable; and therefore where a person libelled in the spiritual court for a burying fee due to him for every one who died in the parish, though buried in another; the court held this unreasonable, and a prohibition was granted. Hob. 175. The plaintiff brought an action on the case for fees due to him as Usher of the Black Rod, and obtained a verdict. Stran. 747. Justices in Sessions have no authority to fix the bailiff's fees for arrests in civil cases; nor would the Court of K. B. allow more than the usual fee of one guinea, though a larger sum had in fact been paid for years under an order of such justices. 3 Term Rep. K. B. 417.

By stat. 23 H. 6. c. 9. (see title Sheriff, V.) the sheriff is entitled to charge only 4*d.* on each warrant issued by him: and where a sheriff claimed a larger fee, and the attorney paid it in ignorance of the law, it was held that he might maintain an action for money had and received for the excess, or might set off the amount in an action by the sheriff against him for fees and postage. Dew v. Parsons, Term Rep. K. B. E. 59 Geo. 3. 562.

As to the fees of sheriffs for executions, by st. 29 Eliz. cap. 4. it is enacted, "That it shall not be lawful for any sheriff, &c. nor for any of their officers, &c. by colour of their office, to take of any person, directly or indirectly, for the serving and executing of any extent or execution upon the body, lands, goods or chattels of any person, more recompence than in this present act appointed, i. e. twelve-pence of and for every twenty shillings where it exceedeth not one hundred pounds; and six-pence of and for every twenty shillings, over and above the said sum of 100*l.* that he or they shall so levy or extend, and deliver in execution, or take the body in execution for; upon pain, that the person offending shall forfeit, to the party grieved, his treble damages; and shall forfeit the sum of 40*l.* for every time that he, they, or any of them shall do the contrary.

In an action on this stat. 29 Eliz. 3. c. 4. the plaintiff is entitled to treble costs as well as treble damages. Deacon v. Morris, Term Rep. K. B. Hil. 59 Geo. 3. 393.

Nothing but the poundage can be taken by the sheriff under this stat. 29 Eliz. c. 4.—In actions on simple contract, and judgment, for a debt certain, as the expences of levying must be paid by the plaintiff, he is the party grieved by any overcharge of the sheriff: but if the judgment be for a penalty the defendant must pay the expences, and in such case he is the party grieved by such overcharge. 2 Term Rep. K. B. 148. 157.

See stat. 43 Geo. 3. c. 46. § 5. as to poundage to sheriffs on executions.—Where the sheriff levied under fi. fa. and received the money, and afterwards the judgment and execution being set aside for irregularity, and the money ordered to be returned, paid it back, with the assent of the plaintiff; it was held that the stat. 43 Geo. 3. c. 46. did not take away the sheriff's remedy by action of debt against the plaintiff for his poundage. Rawstone v. Wilkinson, Term Rep. K. B. Tr. 55 Geo. 3. 256.

No fee shall be taken for a report upon a reference from any court, stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 10.—Certain fees of sheriffs settled. st. 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. See title Sheriff.—Fees on nisi prius records out of the Exchequer to be the same as on other records, st. 23 Geo. 2. c. 26. § 10.—Fees of Justices' clerks to be regulated, st. 26 Geo. 2. c. 14. 27 Geo. 2. c. 16.

By 46 Geo. 3. c. 82. and 47 Geo. 3. st. 1. c. 51. for Great Britain, and 48 Geo. 3. c. 56. for Ireland; the fees to the officers of the customs in the several ports of the United Kingdom are abolished, and their hours of attendance regulated.

II. It is extortion for any officer to take his fee before it is due; and therefore where an under-sheriff refused to execute a capias ad satisfaciendum till he had his fees, the court held, that the plaintiff might bring an action against him for not doing his duty, or might pay him his fees, and then indict him for extortion. Co. Lit. 368. 10 Co. 102. a. 1 Salk. 330.

Officer must obey a writ, though fees unpaid. Stran. 814. Process must be obeyed though fees are not tendered. Stran. 1262. If an habeas corpus ad subjiciendum be directed to a gaoler, he must bring up the prisoner although his fees were not paid him; and he cannot excuse himself of the contempt to the court, by alledging that the prisoner did not tender him his fees. 1 Keb. 272. pl. 57. So as to an habeas corpus ad faciendum & recipiendum. March 89. 2 Keb. 280. 2 Inst. 178. 1 Keb. 566. cont.

But if the gaoler brings up the prisoner by virtue of such habeas corpus, the court will not turn him over till the gaoler be paid all his fees; nor, according to some opinions, till he be paid all that is due to him for the prisoner's diet: for that a gaoler is compellable to find his prisoner sustenance. See 1 Rol. Rep. 338. Co. Lit. 295. 9 Co. 87. Plowd. 68. a. 2 Rol. Abr. 32. 2 Jon. 178. See titles Gaol and Gaoler.

If a person pleads his pardon, the judges may insist on the usual fee of gloves to themselves and officers, before they allow it. Fitz. Coron. 294. Pulton de Pace, 88. Keling. 25. 2 Jon. 56. 1 Sid. 452.

If an erroneous writ be delivered to the sheriff, and he executes it, he shall have his fees, though the writ be erroneous. 1 Salk. 332. It seems to be laid down in the old books as a distinction, that upon an extent of land upon a statute, the sheriff is to have his fees, so much per pound according to the statute immediately; but that upon an elegit he is not to have them till the liberate. Poph. 156. Winch. 51. S. P.

Fees are now recoverable by an action for money had and received, which has been introduced in lieu of an assise. Money given to A. and claimed by B. as perquisites of office, cannot be recovered by B. in such action, unless such perquisites be known and accustomed fees, such as the legal officer could have recovered from A. 6 Term Rep. K. B. 681, 3.

Fees of Attornies and Officers. Are considerations allowed them as a recompence for their labour: and in respect to officers, they are granted over and above their salaries, to excite them to diligence in executing their offices. They differ from wages which are paid to servants for certain work and labour done in a certain space; whereas fees are disbursed to officers, &c. for the transacting of business which occasionally occurs. If a client, when his business in court is dispatched, refuseth to pay the officer his court fees; the court on motion will grant an attachment against him, on which he shall be committed until the fees are paid. 1 Lil. Abr. 598. Ecclesiastical courts have not power to establish fees: But if a person bring a quantum meruit in B. R. &c. for fees, and the jury find for him, then they become established fees. 1 Salk. 333.

A solicitor in Chancery may exhibit his bill for his fees for business done in that court; and so he may where the business is done in another court, if it relates to another demand the plaintiff makes in Chancery. 1 Vern. 203. 2 Chan. Ca. 135.

Action on the case lies for an attorney for his fees, against him that retained him in his cause: And attornies are not to be dismissed by their clients, till their fees are paid. 1 Lil. 142. But attornies are not to demand more than their just fees; nor to be allowed fees to counsel without tickets, or the signature of counsel, &c. Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 7. An attorney may have action of debt for his fees, and also of counsel, and costs of suit: as a counsellor is not bound to give counsel till he has his fee, it is said he can have no action for it: Though it has been held otherwise, F. N. B. 121. Brownl. 73. 31 H. 6. c. 9.

FEIGNED ACTION. See title Faint Action.

FEIGNED ISSUE. If, in a suit in equity, any matter of fact is strongly contested, the court usually directs the matter to be tried by a jury; especially such important facts as the validity of a will, or whether A. is the heir at law to B. or the existence of a modus decimand, or real and immemorial compositions for tithes. But as a jury cannot be summoned to attend a court of equity, the fact is usually directed to be tried in the court of King's Bench, or at the assises, upon a feigned issue. For this purpose, a feigned action is brought, wherein the pretended plaintiff declares that he laid a wager of 5*l.* with the defendant, that A. was heir at law to B; then he avers he is so; and brings his action for the 5*l.* the defendant allows the wager, but avers that A. is not the heir to B. and thereupon that issue is joined, which is directed out of Chancery to be tried: and thus the verdict of the jurors at law determines the fact in the court of equity. 3 Comm. 452. If it is a matter of great difficulty and consequence, the direction may be for a trial at bar, with leave of the court. See titles Chancery, Equity.

Trying a feigned issue without the consent of the court, is a contempt of court: and after such a trial, they will stay the proceedings. 4 Term Rep. K. B. 402.

The costs in a feigned issue, under an inclosure act which contains no special directions as to costs, abide the event, by the statute of Gloster, as in other actions of assumpsit. Fitzwilliam, E. v. Maxwell. 7 W. P. Taunton, 31. See title Costs.

FELAGUS, Quasi fide cum eo ligatus.] A companion, but particularly a friend, who was bound in the decennary for the good behaviour of another. In the laws of King Ina, it is said, if a murderer could not be found, &c, the parents of the person slain should have six marks, and the King forty; if he had no parents, then the lord should have it. Et si dominus non haberet, felagus ejus. LL. Inæ. cap. 15.

FELD. Is a Saxon word, signifying field: and in its compound it signifies wild; as feld honey, is wild honey, &c. Blount.

FELE or FEAL HOMAGERS. Faithful subjects; from the Sax. fai. i. e. fides. See Fealty.

FELO DE SE. One that commits felony by laying violent hands upon himself, or commits any unlawful malicious act, the consequence of which is, his own untimely death. See title Homicide, III. 1.

FELONS' GOODS. The statuto de prærogativa regis. 17 Ed. 2. c. 1. grants to the King, among other things, the goods of felons and fugitives. If the King grant to a man and his heirs felons' goods the grantee cannot devise them, &c. on the statute 32 H. 8. c. 1. because they are not of a yearly value; but where a person is seised of a manor, to which they are appendant, it is otherwise, for they will pass as appurtenant. 3 Rep. 32. See titles Flight, Forfeiture.

FELONY.

Felonia.] A term of law including, generally, all capital crimes, below treason. 4 Comm. 98. This word is of feudal original; but as to the derivation of which authors differ. Some deduce it, fancifully enough as it seems, from φηλος Gr. an impostor; from fallo, Lat. to deceive; and Coke (1 Inst. 391,) says it is crimen felleo animo perpetratum.—All, however, agree that it is such a crime as occasions a forfeiture of the offender's lands or goods; this therefore gives great probability to Spelman's derivation from the Teutonick or German fee, a feud or fief, and lon, price or value. Spelm. in verb. Felon.—Felony according to this derivation, is then the same as pretium feudi; the consideration for which a man gives up his fief or estate; as in common speech it is said, such an act is as much as one's life or estate is worth. In this sense, it will clearly signify the feodal forfeiture, or rather the act by which an estate is forfeited or escheats to the lord. See 4 Comm. 95.

Felony, in the general acceptance of law, comprises every species of crime which occasioned, at Common-law, the forfeiture of lands or goods. This most frequently happens in those crimes for which a capital punishment, either was or is liable to be inflicted; for those felonies which are called clergyable, or to which the benefit of clergy extends, were anciently punished with death in lay or unlearned offenders, though now by the statute law that punishment is for the first offence universally remitted. See this Dict. title Clergy, Benefit of. Treason itself (says Coke 3 Inst. 15.) was anciently comprised under the name of Felony. And not only all offences now capital are in some degree or other, felony; but this is likewise the case with some other offences, which are not punished with death; as suicide, where the party is already dead; homicide by chance medley, or in self defence; and petty larceny or pilfering: all which are, strictly speaking Felonies, as they subject the committers of them to forfeitures. So that upon the whole the only adequate definition of Felony seems to be this, viz. "An offence which occasions a total forfeiture, of either lands or goods or both, at the Common law; and to which, capital or other punishment may be superadded, according to the degree of guilt." 4 Comm. 94, 95.

As felony may be without inflicting capital punishment, so it is possible that capital punishment may be inflicted for an offence which is no felony; as in case of Heresy by the Common-law, which though capital, never worked any forfeiture of lands or goods, an inseparable incident to felony. 3 Inst. 43. Of the same nature was the punishment of standing mute, which at Common law was capital, but without any forfeiture, and was therefore no felony. In short the true criterion of Felony is forfeiture, for in all felonies which are punishable by death, the offender loses all his lands in fee-simple, and also his goods and chattels; in such as are not so punishable, his goods and chattels only. 1 Inst. 391.

The idea of felony is so generally connected with that of capital punishment, that it seems hard to separate them: and to this usage the interpretations of law now conform. For if a statute makes any new offence felony, the law implies that it shall be punished with death (viz. by hanging,) as well as by forfeiture, unless the offender prays the benefit of clergy. Hawk. P. C. i. c. 41. § 4. ii. c. 48. So where a statute decrees an offence to undergo judgment of life and member, the offence becomes a Felony, though that precise word be omitted; but the words of the statute must not in such case be the least doubtful or ambiguous. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 41. § 1. 2.

Where a statute declares that the offender shall, under the particular circumstances, be deemed to have feloniously committed any act, it makes the offence a felony, and imposes all the common and ordinary consequences attending a felony. 3 Maul. & Selw. Rep. 556. And though a statute make the doing of an act felonious, yet if a subsequent act make it penal only, the latter is considered as a virtual repeal of the former. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 40. § 5.

Under the word felony in commissions, &c. is included petit treason, murder, homicide, burning of houses, burglary, robbery, rape, &c. chance medley, se defendendo and petit larceny. All felonies punishable according to the course of the Common-law, are either by the Common-law, or by statute. Piracy, robbery, and murder on the sea are punishable by the civil statute law. 1 Inst. 391.

Felony, by the Common Law, is against the life of a man; as murder, manslaughter, felo de se, se defendendo, &c. Against a man's goods, such as larceny, and robbery, against his habitation, as burglary, arson or house-burning: and against public justice, as breach of prison. 3 Inst. 31.

It is not very easy to recapitulate the vast variety of offences which are made Felony, by the almost innumerable statutes which have been from time to time found necessary, to restrain mankind within those bounds which the security of Society requires.

A general list is here subjoined of Felonies, by statute; within clergy, and without. But which probably is not complete: For the particulars relative to each offence, this Dictionary may be consulted under the proper titles; see particularly titles Larceny, Robbery, Accessary.

FELONIES WITHOUT CLERGY. Abortion, procuring.—Accessaries, in certain cases.—Aliens returning from transportation.—Arson.—Bail, personating.—Bank of England, clerks embezzling notes; altering dividend warrants, &c. paper-makers unauthorised using moulds for notes; (See post, Forgery.)—Banks of the sea destroying.—Bankrupt, not surrendering; concealing his estate, &c.—Bastard, murdering, &c.—Black act, offenders under.—Bridges, wilfully damaging, those of London, Westminster and Fulham.—Burglary.—Burning houses, or barns with corn.—Cattle stealing or maiming.—Challenging jurors above twenty, in felonies ousted of clergy—Cloth, stealing from the tenters.—Coal mines, setting fire to.—Coining.—Cottons, selling with forged stamps.—Customs; smugglers shooting at or wounding officers of the navy or custom house; harbouring transported offenders; not surrendering on proclamation.—Cutting maliciously.—Deeds inrolled acknowledging in the name of another robbing.—Fences of Commons, destroying.—Fish ponds, Fens, destroying works for draining of.—Fines, acknowledging in another's name.—Forgeries of deeds, transfers of stock, stamps, bills, notes, wills, registers, &c. &c.—Highway robbery.—Hops, cutting the binds.—Horse-stealing.—Judgments, acknowledging in another's name.—Letters threatening, sending; or rescuing offenders so doing.—Linen, stealing from bleaching grounds; or cutting or destroying.—Mail, robbing, or stealing letters from post-office.—Maiming; maliciously lying in wait for that purpose.—Malicious injuries, viz. shooting at, stabbing, &c. giving medicine to procure miscarriages: setting fire to houses, out-houses, &c.—Marshes; setting fire to engines for draining.—Mariners wandering without testimonials, and see stat. 39 Eliz. c. 17. § 4. (post. Seaman.)—Marriage, forcible.—Mines, damaging.—Miscarriage, procuring, when the woman is quick with child.—Money, uttering false money; 3d Offence.—Murder.—Mute, standing on trial for treason or felony.—Northern borders, thieves and spoilers in Cumberland, Northumberland, Westmorland and Durham.—Outlawry, for felonies without clergy.—Perjury, convicts for escaping, breaking prison or returning from transportation.—Personating bail, seamen, pensioners, nominees of annuities, &c.—Piracy; under which is included, sailors hindering the captain of a ship from fighting, by forcible restraint.—Poisoning of malice prepensed, and administering with intent to murder, &c.—Popish recusants, priests and jesuits in certain cases.—Post-Office; robbing mail, secreting letters, &c.—Prisoners for swearing themselves under insolvent acts, refusing to deliver up, or concealing their effects; escaping from confinement to hard labour; 2d Offence.—Privy Councillors, attempting to kill.—Quarantine, neglecting the regulations for performing.—Rape.—Rescuing convicts from transportation, or murderers.—Rebels returning from transportation, their aiders and correspondents.—Recognizance or recovery, acknowledging in another's name.—Riots, and destroying buildings.—Robbery, churches, on the highway, in booths in fairs, dwelling-houses, shops, ware-houses, coach-houses or stables; on board vessels; in wharfs; in lodgings, if above 12*d*. value; stealing exchequer orders, bank notes, navy bills, promissory notes, &c.—Sea; Treasons, Robberies, Murders, &c. upon.—Seamen personating to receive their pay.—Ships of war and others, wilfully destroying.—Shooting at another.—Silk; destroying any silk or velvet in the loom, or the tools for manufacturing thereof.—Smuggling, and assembling armed for that purpose.—Sodomy.—Soldiers; deserting, wandering without testimonials, personating them.—Stabbing maliciously.—South Sea Company; servants embezzling their effects.—Stamps, counterfeiting.—Stolen goods, helping to a reward in certain cases.—Stores, government; imbezzling or burning or destroying in dock yards.—Transportation, returning from, or being at large in the kingdom after sentence.—Turnpikes, gates, weighing engines, locks, sluices, &c. destroying.—Wool; destroying woollen goods, racks, or tools, or forcibly entering a house for that purpose.—Women, stealing, and marrying.—Wreck of ships, causing by stealing pumps, &c. stealing shipwrecked goods, or killing shipwrecked persons.

By stat. 52 Geo. 3. c. 143. for amending and reducing into one act the provisions contained in any laws in force, imposing the penalty of death for any act done in breach of, or in resistance to, any part of the laws for collecting the Revenue in Great Britain; all such offences punishable under former acts as felonies without clergy, are reduced to felonies within clergy, except where by that act they are expressly re-enacted as felonies without clergy.

Before the reign of K. Hen. I. felonies were punished with pecuniary fines; for he was the first who ordered felons to be hanged, about the year 1108. The judgment against a man for felony hath been the same since the reign of that King, i. e. That he be hanged by the neck till dead; which is entered suspendatur per collum, &c. 4 Inst. 124. Felony was anciently every capital crime perpetrated with an evil intention: All capital offences by the Common-law, came generally under the title of felony; and could not be expressed by any word but felonicè; which must of necessity be laid in an indictment of felony. Co. Lit. 391. It is always accompanied with an evil intention; and therefore felony cannot be imputed to any other motive. But the bare intention to commit a felony is so very criminal, that at the Common-law it was punishable as felony, where it missed of its effect through some accident; and now the party may be severely fined for such an intention. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 23.

Felony is punished with loss of life, and of lands not entailed, goods and chattels: Heretofore felony worked corruption of blood; unless a statute making an offence felony, ordained it otherwise, as many statutes did; and at last by stat. 54 Geo. 3. c. 145. no corruption of blood takes place for any felony (not treason) except murder or petty treason. See title Attainder, Clergy, benefit of: Corruption of Blood.

The punishment of a person for felony, by our ancient books, is, 1st. To lose his life, 2dly, To lose his blood, as to his ancestry, and so as to have neither heir nor posterity. 3dly, To loose his goods. 4thly, To lose his lands; and the King shall have annum diem & vastum, to the intent that his wife and children be cast out of the house, his house pulled down, and all that he had for his comfort or delight destroyed. 4 Rep. 124. A felony by statute implies, that the offender shall be subject to the like attainder and forfeiture, &c. as is incident to a felon at Common-law. 3 Inst. 47. 59. 90.

By stat. 53 Geo. 3. c. 162. any court may pass on persons convicted of felony with benefit of clergy (or of grand or petty larceny) sentence of imprisonment to hard labour, either singly and alone, or in addition to any other sentence. A former provision as to passing this sentence on felons by 52 Geo. 3. c. 44. is repealed by this act. 53 Geo. 3.

By stat. 59 Geo. 3. c. 27. provision is made for the trial of felonies committed on board vessels employed on canals; and by c. 96. for felonies committed in stage waggons and stage coaches: by which acts the offence may be tried in any county through which the canal, &c. passes.

All felonies are several, and cannot be joint; so that a pardon of one felon cannot discharge another: but the felony of one man may be dependant upon that of another, and the pardon of the one by a necessary consequence enure to the benefit of the other, as in cases of principal and accessary, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C.

Private persons may arrest felons by their own authority, or by warrant from a justice of peace: And every private person is bound to assist an officer to take felons, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. see title Constable.

But one ought not to be arrested upon suspicion of felony, except there be probabilis causa shewed for the ground of the suspicion. 1 Lil. Abr. 603. If a felony is not done by a man, but some person else, if another hath probable cause to suspect he is the felon, and accordingly doth arrest him, this is lawful and may be justified. But to make good such justification, there must be in fact a felony committed by some person, without which there can be no ground of suspicion. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 78. And as to the person, there ought to be a reasonable cause to suspect him, otherwise the arrest will be illegal. See titles Arrest, Constable.

A private man arresting one for felony, cannot justify breaking doors, to take the party suspected; but he doth it at his peril, viz. if in truth he be a felon, it is justifiable; but if innocent, then it is not. To prevent a murder or manslaughter, private persons may break doors open. 2 Hale 82. Officers may break open a house to take a felon, or any person justly suspected of felony; and if an officer hath a warrant to take a felon, who is killed in resisting, it is not felony in the officer; but if the officer is killed, it is otherwise. Dalt. 289.

A plea justifying an arrest by a private person on suspicion of felony, must shew the circumstances from which the court may judge whether the suspicion was reasonable. 4 W. P. Taunton, 34.

Watchmen and beadles have authority at Common-law to arrest and detain in prison for examination by a magistrate, persons walking in the streets at night, whom there is reasonable ground to suspect of felony, although there is no proof of a felony having been committed. 3 W. P. Taunton, 14.

Persons indicted of felony, &c. where there are strong presumptions and circumstances of guilt, are not replevisable; but for larceny, &c. when persons are committed who are of good reputation, they may be bailed. 2 Hawk. P. C. The former part of the position must be, with an exception to the power of the court of King's Bench. See title Bail.

If one be committed to prison for one felony, the justices of gaol delivery may try him for another felony, for which he was not committed, by virtue of their commission, 1 Lil. 602.

In the highest crime, and in the lowest species of felony, viz. in petit larceny, and in all the misdemeanors, standing mute hath always been an equivalent to conviction. But upon appeals or indictments for other felonies, or petit treason, the prisoner was not by the ancient law looked upon as convicted, so as to receive judgment for the felony, but should, for his obstinacy, have received a terrible sentence of penance, or peine sort & dure. See this Dict. titles Mute, Trial.

Where a married woman commits felony, in company with her husband, it shall be presumed to be done by his command, and she shall be excused. 3 Inst. 310. See title Baron and Feme VII.

If a man's horse be going into the ground of another, and he takes it felleo animo, not as damage-feasant, it is no finding, but felony: But if A's sheep stray into the flock of B. and he drives the same along with his flock, or by mistake shears them, this is not a felony; though if he knew them to be another person's, and marks them with his mark, it is an evidence of felony. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 506.

Where one steals another's goods, and a third person feloniously takes them from him; he is a felon as to both the others. And when there is a pretence of title to things unlawfully taken, it may be only a trick to colour felony; and the ordinary discovery of a felonious intent is, if the party doth it secretly, or being charged with the goods denies it. 1 H. P. C. 507, 509. If a person to whom goods are delivered on a pretended buying them, runs away with them, it is felony: and a guest stealing plate set before him at an inn, &c. is felony; also persons who have the charge of things, as a servant of a chamber, &c. may be guilty of felony; and the least removing of a thing in attempts of felony, is felony, though it be not carried off. 3 Inst. 303. Raym. 275.

But goods must not be of a base nature; such as dogs, &c. nor feræ naturæ, as deer, hares, &c. except they be made tame, when it will be felony to steal them. If any turkeys, geese, poultry, fish in a trunk, &c. are taken away, it is felony. 3 Inst. 309, 310. Stealing of tame peacocks, is felony; so of herons and young hawks in their nests; it is otherwise of pheasants, partridges, conies, &c. although they be so kept that they cannot escape; if they be not reclaimed, and known. Jenk. Cent. 204. As to cats, dogs, monkeys, and the like; though it be not felony to take them, trespass lies for them. Jenk. Ibid.

The owner of goods stolen prosecuting the felon to conviction, cannot recover the value of them in trover from the person who purchased them in market overt, and sold them again before conviction, notwithstanding the owner gave him notice of the robbery, while they were in his possession; but he has a right to restitution of the goods in specie. 2 Term Rep. K. B. 750. See as to expences of prosecutions for Felony, title Rewards.

FEME COVERT. A married woman; said to be covert baron. See title Baron and Feme.

FEME SOLE, Fr.] A woman alone, that is unmarried. Feme Sole Merchant; A married woman who by the custom of London trades on her own account, independant. See titles Baron and Feme, London.

FENCE. A hedge, ditch, or other inclosure of land for the better manurance and improvement of the same. And where a hedge, and ditch join together, in whose ground or side the hedge is, to the owner of that land belongs the keeping of the same hedge or fence, and the ditch adjoining to it on the other side, in repair and scoured. Par. Offic. 188. An action on the case or trespass lies, for not repairing of fences, whereby cattle come into the ground of another, and do damage. 1 Salk. 335. Also it is presentable in the Court-baron, &c. By stat. 9 G. 3. c. 29. destroying fences set up inclosing commons is made felony, but within benefit of clergy.

No man making a ditch can cut into his neighbours soil, but usually he cuts it to the very extremity of his own land, he is of course bound to throw the soil which he digs out upon his own land, and often if he likes it he plants a hedge on the top of it; therefore if he afterwards cut beyond the edge of the ditch which is the extremity of his land, he cuts into his neighbour's land, and is a trespasser. Vowles v. Miller, 3 W. P. Taunton, 137. See further this Dict. titles Common, Inclosure.

FENCE MONTH, mensis fanationis (or feonacionis) mensis prohibitionis, or mensis vetitus.] Is a month wherin female deer in forests, &c. do fawn, and therefore it is unlawful to hunt in forests during that time; which begins fifteen days before Old Midsummer, and ends fifteen days after it, being in all thirty days. Manw. part 2. cap. 13. Stat. 20 Car. 2. cap. 3. Some ancient foresters call this month the defence month, because then the deer are to be defended from being disturbed, and the interruptions of fear and danger. Serjeant Fleetwood saith, that the fence month hath been always kept with watch and ward, in every bailiwick throughout the whole forest, since the time of Canutus. Fleetwood's Forest Laws, p. 5. See title Fish.

FENGELD, Sax.] A tax or imposition, exacted for the repelling of enemies. MS. Antiq.

FENS, paludes.] Low marshy grounds, or lakes for water; for the draining whereof in this kingdom several statutes have been from time to time enacted, which are chiefly local, and by the provision of which the destroying of works for the drainage or fences for the securing them, are punishable as felonies within clergy, and by other penalties. See title Rivers, Sea Banks, Poudike.

FEOD OR FEUD. The right which the vassal had in land, or some immoveable thing of his lord's, to use the same and take the profits thereof, rendering unto his lord such feodal duties and services as belonged to military tenure; the mere property of the soil always remaining in the lord. See Spelman of Feuds and Tenures, cap. 1. and this Dict. title Tenures, I. 1.

FEODAL, feodalis, vel feudalis.] Of or belonging to the feud or fee. Stat. 12 Car. 2. cap. 24.

FEODALITY. Fealty. See title Fealty, Tenures, I. 6.

FEODARY, OR FEUDARY, feudatarius.] An officer of the court of wards, appointed by the master of that court by virtue of the statute 32 Hen. 8. c. 26. whose business it was to be present with the escheator in every county at the finding of offices of lands, and to give in evidence for the King as well concerning the value as the tenure; and his office was also to survey the lands of the ward, after the office found, and to rate it. He did likewise assign the King's widows their dowers; and receive all the rents of wards, lands within his circuit, which he answered to the receiver of the court. This office was wholly taken away by the operation of statute 12 Car. 2. cap. 24. abolishing tenures.

FEODATARY, OR FEUDATARY. The tenant who held his estate by feodal service; and grantees, to whom lands in feud or fee were granted by a superior lord, were sometimes called homagers; and in some writings are termed vassals, feuds, and feodataries. See title Tenures, I.

FEODUM. See FEOD.

FEODUM MILITIS. A knight's fee: feodum laicum, a lay-fee, or land held in fee of a lay-lord. Kennet's Gloss. See title Tenures.

FEOFFMENT, Feoffamentum, from the verb, feoffare; donatio feudi.] A gift or grant of any manors, messuages, lands or tenements, to another in fee, to him and his heirs for ever, by the delivery of seisin and possession of the thing given or granted.—In every feoffment, the giver or grantor is called the feoffor, and he that receives by virtue thereof, is the feoffee. Littleton says, the proper difference between a feoffor and a donor, is that the one gives in fee-simple, the other in fee-tail. Litt. lib. 1. cap. 6.

Blackstone (2 Com. 399.) defines feoffment to be the gift of any corporeal hereditament to another. The deed of feoffment is our most antient conveyance of lands; and in records we often find fees given to knights under the phrases of de veteri feoffamento, and de novo feoffamento; the first whereof were such lands as were given or granted by King Henry I. And the others, such as were granted after the death of the said King, since the beginning of the reign of Henry II. At common-law the usual conveyance was by feoffment, to which delivery (shortly called livery) and seisin were necessary, the possession being thereby given to the feoffee; but if livery and seisin could not be made, by reason there was a tenant in possession, the reversion was granted, and the particular tenant attorned. Co. Lit. 9. 49. A feoffment is said, in some respects, to excel the conveyance by fine and recovery; it clearing all disseisins, abatements, intrusions, and other wrongful estates, which no other conveyance doth: and for that it is so solemnly and publicly made, it has been of all other conveyances the most observed. West. Symb. 235. Plowd. 554. See this Dict. titles Conveyance, Deed; and 2 Comm. c. 20. Shep. Touchst. c. 9. and the notes to the 8vo. edition, 1791.

This conveyance is now but very little used; except where no consideration passes, as is the case of trustees of lands for a corporation, &c. See this Dict. title Lease and Release. as to conveyance by bodies corporate. It is still however a formal, valid, and effectual mode of conveyance: but has been of late years almost entirely superseded by the conveyance by Lease and Release. See this Dict. under that title; as also titles Bargain and Sale, Conveyance, Deed.

It will be found useful to consider the learning relating to feoffments according to the following division:

I. Of what things a Feoffment may be made.
II. Who may make a Feoffment, and how it is to be made.
III. Of the different Kinds of Livery; with their effects and operations.

I. A Feoffment may be of a messuage, land, meadow, pasture, or other corporeal hereditament, and of a moiety, or fourth part of it; that lies in livery. The deed must contain the words, have granted, bargained, and enfeoffed.

A Feoffment may be made of lands, in which a man has no fixed estate; as, if he has twelve acres to be annually assigned in such a meadow; and livery in any acre, which he has at the time of the feoffment, is sufficient. Co. Lit. 4, a. 48, b. 2 Rol. 10. l. 40—50.

So, if a feoffment be of fifty acres towards the North in such a moor, which contains 100 acres, livery in any of them is sufficient. 2 Rol. 11. l. 5. Dy. 372, b.

So, if two manors be divided alternis vicibus between parceners, either may make a feoffment of her manor; and the deed ought to comprehend both; and she shall make livery in one secundum formam chartæ this year, and in the other the next year. Co. L. 48. b.

But a feoffment cannot be made of a thing of which livery cannot be given; as, of incorporeal inheritances, rent, advowson, common, &c. 2 Rol. 1. b. 20. Though it be an advowson, &c. in gross. Cont. 11 H. 6. 4. Acc. 2 Rol. 1 l. 21.

So a feoffment of lands, which are uncertain till a future act, is void; for livery does not operate in futuro: as, if A. agrees by indenture to convey 20*l. per annum* in land to such an use, and 20*s. per annum* to such an use, and makes a feoffment of all his lands to the uses in the indenture; it will be void for all but that where livery was made, it not being ascertained which shall be to one use, and which to the other. R. 1 Rol. 187.

In a deed of feoffment, there must be a good feoffor, that is, one able to grant the thing conveyed by the deed; a feoffee capable to take it; and a thing grantable, and granted in the manner the law requireth. Co. Lit. 42. 49. 190.

See further of what things a feoffment may be made, Com. Dig. Feoffment (A. 2.) Vin. Ab. Feoffment (C.)

II. If a person non compos makes a feoffment, and gives livery himself, that is allowed on all hands to be good to bind himself, so that he can by no process or plea avoid the feoffment, and restore himself to the possession; the same law of an ideot; and the reason is, because the investiture being made before the pares curiæ, their solemn attestation could not be defeated by the person himself, because it is presumed they are competent judges of the ability of the feoffor to make such feoffment. 2 Rol. Abr. 2. Co. Lit. 247. 4 Co. 125, a. Show. Parl. Cases, 153. and see title Ideots and Lunaticks; and post. II.

But if an infant makes a feoffment, and makes livery himself, this shall not bind him, but he himself may avoid it by writ of dum fuit infra ætatem; yet the feoffment of the infant is not void in itself, as well because he is allowed to contract for his benefit, as that there ought to be some act of notoriety to restore the possession to him equal to that which transferred it from him. 4 Co. 125. 2 Rol. Abr. 2. 8 Co. 42, 43. Whittingham's case.

Yet if an infant makes a feoffment, and a letter of attorney to make livery, that is void; so if a person non compos makes a surrender or release, this is void in law; so if he makes a letter of attorney to give livery: but the heir at law after the death of the person of non-sane memory, or ideot, may avoid his feoffment; and so may the king upon an office found of his lunacy during his life. 8 Co. 45. Co. Lit. 247, a. 4 Co. 125, a. 2 Rol. Abr. 2. Show. Par. Cases, 153.

There must be livery of seisin in all feoffments, and gifts, &c. where a corporeal inheritance or freehold doth pass; and without livery, the deed is no feoffment, gift or demise. Lit. 59. 8 Rep. 82. But a freehold may pass without livery, by the statute 27 H. 8. c. 10. By force of which statute, a feoffment to the use of the feoffor, feoffee, &c. supplies the place of livery and seisin. Wood's Inst. 239.

But a feoffment may not be of such things whereof livery and seisin may not be made; for no deed of feoffment is good to pass an estate without livery of seisin; and if either of the parties die before livery, the feoffment is void. Plowd. 214. 219. Though where a feme feoffor made a feoffment of lands with livery in view, and then married the feoffee before the livery was executed by actual entry; it was adjudged the livery might be executed after marriage, the feoffee having not only an authority to enter, but an interest passed by the livery in view, and the woman did all on her part to be done. 1 Vent. 186.

A man may either give or receive livery in deed by letter of attorney; for since a contract is no more than the consent of a man's mind to a thing, where that consent or concurrence appears, it were unreasonable to oblige each person to be present at the execution of the contract, since it may as well be performed by any other person delegated for that purpose by the parties to the contract. Co. Lit. 52. 2 Rol. Abr. 8.

But such delegation, or authority to give or receive livery, must be by deed, that it may appear to the court, that the attorney had a commission, to represent the parties that are to give or take the livery, and whether the authority was pursued. Co. Lit. 48, b. 52, a.

If a man be disseised, and makes a deed of feoffment, and a letter of attorney to enter and take possession of the land, and afterwards to make livery, according to the form of the charter, it will be a good feoffment, though he was out of possession at the time of the deed made: for the feoffment takes effect by the livery, and not by the deed, Co. Lit. 48. 52.

A feoffment being a Common-law conveyance, and executed by livery, makes a transmutation of estate; but a conveyance on the statute of uses, as a covenant to stand seized, &c. makes only a transmutation of possession, and not of estate. 2 Lev. 77. Vent. 378. A feoffment to the use of A. for life, the remainder to B. if A. refuses to take the estate, B. shall take presently, because the whole estate is out of the feoffor by livery; but if it had been by covenant to stand sesied, he should not have taken till after the death of A. but it would rest in the covenantor who shall have the use in the mean time. 2 Lev. 77. 2 Leon. Ca. 279. Before the Stat. Westm. 1. if a man had made a feoffment in fee, without declaring any use, it should have been to the use of the feoffee; though now by that statute, where no consideration or declaration of use is expressed, it shall go to the feoffor himself. 2 Leon. 15, 16. If I convey lands by feoffment, which I have on the part of the mother, to J. S. and his heirs, without consideration; the use will be void, and the land shall return again to me and my heirs on the part of the mother; yet if I declare the use to me and my heirs, or upon such feoffment reserve a rent in like manner, it shall go to my heirs at the Common-law, it being a new thing divided from the land. Hob. 31. Co. Lit. 13. 231. 1 Rep. 100. Dyer, 134. Where a man makes a feoffment, without any consideration; by that the estate and possession passes, but not the use, which shall descend to his heir. 1 Leon. 182.

A feoffment in fee is made to the use of such persons, and for such estates, as the feoffer shall appoint by his will, or to the issue of his last will; by operation of law the use vests in the feoffor, and he is seised of a qualified fee, viz. until he makes his will, and declares the uses; and after the will is made, it is only directory, for nothing passes by it but all by the feoffment. 6 Rep. 18. Moor, 567. A feoffment in fee, upon condition, &c. was inrolled, but no livery made; and it was adjudged no good feoffment, but the inrollment shall conclude the person to say that it was not his deed. Poph. 6. 2 Nels. Abr. 844. If a bargain and sale of lands be not inrolled, and the bargainer deliver livery and seisin of the lands secundum formam chartæ, &c. it has been held a good feoffment. 1 And. 68.

A feoffment in fee made upon condition not to alien, the condition is void; because it is repugnant to the estate; but if livery is had, the feoffment will be good against the feoffor: and a bond with condition that the feoffee shall not alien, is said to be good. Co. Lit. 206. Cro. Jac. 596. If a man makes a feoffment of lands on condition that the feoffee shall give the lands to the feoffor, and his wife in special tail, remainder to the heirs of the feoffor, and he dies before such gift is made, the feoffee ought to make it as near the intent of the condition as may be, viz. to the wife without impeachment of waste, remainder to the heirs of the body of her husband, on her body begotten, and remainder to the husband's right heirs. In case the feoffor and his wife both die, the feoffee then should make the estate to the issue, and heirs of the body of his father and mother begotten, remainder to the right heirs of the husband or father. Co. Lit. 219, 220.

Tenant in tail makes a feoffment in fee; the inheritance of the tail is not given to the feoffee by the feoffment, nor is he thereby tenant in tail; for none shall be tenant in tail but he only who is comprehended in the gift made by the donor. But it gives away all the immediate estate the feoffor had. Plowd. 562. Hob. 335. If lessee for life, and the reversioner in fee, make a feoffment in fee by deed, each gives his estate; the lessee his by livery, and the fee from him in remainder. 6 Rep. 15. Lil. Abr. 609. A feoffment was made habendum to the feoffee and his heirs, after the death of the feoffor, and livery was made: yet it was held to be a void feoffment, for an estate of freehold in lands cannot begin at a day to come: but where a lessor made a lease for lives, and granted the reversion to another for life, whose estate for life was to begin after the death of the survivor of the other lessees for life, this was adjudged a good estate in reversion for life. Hob. 171. 1 Nels. Abr. 846.

If the husband alone make a feoffment of his wife's land, or of both their lands, his wife being on the land and disagreeing to it; this will be good against all persons but the wife: also so it is, if one jointenant make a deed of feoffment of the whole land his companion being then upon it; or if a man disseise me of my lands, and then enfeoff another thereof, whilst I am upon the land, &c. Perk. § 219, 220.

Every gift or feoffment of lands made by fraud or maintenance, shall be void; and the disseisee, notwithstanding such alienation, shall recover against the first disseisor his land and double damages; provided he commence his suit in a year after the disseissin, and that the feoffor be pernor of the profits. Stat. 1 R. 2. c. 9. See stat. 11 H. 6. c. 3.

III. Livery may be by deed; or in law; which latter is also called livery within view.

The livery in deed, is the actual tradition of the land, and is made either by the delivery of a branch of a tree or a turf of the land, or some other thing, in the name of all the lands and tenements contained in the deed; and it may be made by words only without the delivery of any thing; as if the feoffor being upon the land, or at the door of the house, says to the feoffee, I am content that you should enjoy this land according to the deed; or enter into this house or land, and enjoy it according to the deed; this is a good livery to pass the freehold, because in all these cases, the charter of feoffment makes the limitation of the estate, and then the words spoken by the feoffor on the land, are a sufficient indicium to the people present, to determine in whom the freehold resides during the extent of the limitation; besides, the words, being relative to the charter of feoffment, plainly denote an intention to enfeoff. Co. Lit. 48, a. 9 Co. 137, b. Thorowgood's case. 6 Co. 26. Sharp's case. 2 Rol. Abr. 7. Cro. Jac. 80. contrà.

But if a man without any charter, being in his house, says, I here demise you this house, as long as I live, paying 20*l. per. annum*, this passes no freehold, but only an estate at will; because the word demise denotes only the extent of the limitation of the estate intended to be conveyed: but bare words of limitation, without some acts or words to discover the intention of the feoffor to deliver over the possession, are not sufficient to convey the freehold; for if a charter of feoffment be made to a man and his heirs, this, without some other act, or word to give the possession, only passes an estate at will, because the act of delivery is requisite to the perfection of the charter; but besides the charter of feoffment, there must be some act or words to deliver over the possession, before the feoffee can enjoy it pursuant to the charter. 6 Co. 26, 2 Rol. Abr. 7. Co. Lit. 48. Cro. Eliz. 482. 9 Co. 138. Moor, pl. 632.

Livery in deed is thus performed.—The feoffor, lessor, or his attorney, (for this may be as effectually done by deputy or attorney as by the principals themselves in person,) come to the land, or to the house; and there in the presence of witnesses declare the contents of the feoffment or lease on which livery is to be made: and then the feoffor, if it be of land, doth deliver to the feoffee, all other persons being out of the ground, a clod or turf or a twig or bough there growing with words to this effect, "I deliver these to you in the "name of seisin of all the lands and tenements contained in "this deed." But if it be of a house, the feoffor must take the ring or latch of the door, the house being quite empty, and deliver it to the feoffee in the same form; and then the feoffee must enter alone and shut the door, and then open it and let in the others. 1 Inst. 48. West. Symb. 251.

If the conveyance or feoffment be of divers lands, lying scattered in one and the same county, then in the feoffor's possession, livery of seisin of any parcel, in the name of the rest, sufficeth for all; but if they be in several counties there must be as many liveries as there are counties. Lit. § 414. Also if the lands be out on lease, though all be in the same county, there must be as many liveries as there are tenants; because no livery can be made in this case but by the consent of the particular tenant; and the consent of one will not bind the rest. Dy. 18.

In all these cases it is prudent and usual to indorse the livery of seisin on the back of the deed; specifying the manner, place, and time, of making it, together with the names of the witnesses. Co. Lit. 48.

The livery within view, or the livery in law, is, when the feoffor is not actually on the land, or in the house, but being in sight of it says to the feoffee, I give you yonder house, or land, go and enter into the same, and take possession of it accordingly; this sort of livery seems to have been made at first only at the courts baron, which were antiently held sub dio, (in the open air) in some open part of the manor, from whence a general survey or view might have been taken of the whole manor, and the pares curiæ easily distinguished that part which was then to be transferred. Pollex. 47. This livery in law cannot be given or received by attorney, but only by the parties themselves. 1 Inst. 48.

This latter sort of livery also is not perfect to carry the freehold, till an actual entry made by the feoffee, because the possession is not actually delivered to him but only a licence or power given him by the feoffor to take possession of it; and therefore, if either the feffor or feoffee die before livery, and entry made by the feoffee, the livery within the view becomes ineffectual and void; for if the feoffor dies before entry, the feoffee cannot afterwards enter, because then the land immediately descends upon his heir, and consequently no person can take possession of his land without an authority delegated from him who is the proprietor; nor can the heir of the feoffee enter, because he is not the person to whom the feoffor intended to convey his land, nor had he an authority from the feoffor to take possession; besides if the heir of the feoffee were admitted to take possession after his father's death, he would come in as purchaser, whereas he was mentioned in the feoffment to take as the representative of his ancestor which he cannot do, since the estate never vested in his ancestor. Co. Lit. 48, b. 2 Rol. Abr, 3. 7. 1 Vent. 186. Moor, 85. Pollex. 48.

The livery within view may be made of lands in another county than where the lands lie, because the translation of the feud was often made at the court-baron, in the presence of pares curiæ; and these courts being held sub dio, the pares could have a distinct view of every part of the manor; and therefore were proper to attest this sort of investiture, though the lands were in a different county, for notwithstanding that they might have been part of the same manor, for which the court was held. Co. Lit. 48, b.

This ceremony was first instituted, that the pares of the county might, upon any dispute relating to the freehold, determine in whom it was lodged; and from thence be the better enabled to determine in whom the right was. Hence therefore it is, that if a man makes a feoffment, or lease for life, to commence in futuro, and makes livery immediately, the livery is void, and only an estate at will passes to the feoffee; for the design of the institution would fail, if such livery were effectual to pass the freehold; for it would be no evidence, or notoriety of the change of the freehold, if after the livery made, the freehold still remained in the feoffor; the use of the investiture would rather create than prevent the uncertainty of the freehold, and in many cases would put men to fruitless trouble and expence in pursuit of their right; for by that means, after a man had brought his præcipe against a person, whom he supposed to be tenant to the freehold, and had proceeded in it a considerable time, the writ might abate by the freehold's vesting in another, by virtue of a livery made before the purchase of the writ. Another reason why such future interests cannot be allowed to pass by any act of livery was because no man would be safe in his purchase, if the operation of livery might create an estate, to commence many years after the livery was made; and though they have allowed a future interest, to commence by way of lease, yet that had no such ill effect in making purchases uncertain, because anciently they were under the power of the freeholder, who by recovery might destroy them; and now unless such leases are made upon good considerations, they are fraudulent against a purchaser; and it is not to be presumed that leases at great distances should be purchased for value. Cro. Eliz. 451. 2 Vent. 204. Co. Lit. 217. 5 Co. 94, b.

Hence, by the way, we may account why a freehold in reversion or remainder cannot be granted in futuro, though there no livery is necessary to pass it; as where A. is tenant for life, remainder to B. in fee; A. makes a lease for years to C. and afterwards grants the land to D. habend' from Michaelmas next ensuing, for life; this grant to D. was adjudged void, though C. attorned to it after Michaelmas, because such future grants create an uncertainty of the freehold; and the tenant of the freehold being the person who is to answer the stranger's præcipe, and who was answerable to the lord for the services, it were unreasonable to permit him by any act of his own to prevent or delay the prosecution of their right. Cro. Eliz. 451. 2 Vent. 204. Co. Lit. 217. 5 Co. 94, b. 2 Co. 55. Buckler's case. 2 And. 29. Moor, 423. Cro. Eliz. 450. 585. Hob. 170, 171. 5 Co. 94. 1 Rol. Rep. 261.

FEOFFOR AND FEOFFEE. Feoffor is he that infeoffs or makes a feoffment to another of lands or tenements in fee-simple. Feoffee is he who is infeoffed or to whom the feoffment is so made. See title Feoffment.

FERÆ NETURÆ. Beasts and birds that are wild, in opposition to the tame; such as hares, foxes, wild geese, and the like wherein no man may claim a property. Unless under particular circumstances, as where they are confined, or made tame, &c. See titles Game, Property.

FERDELLA Terræ. Ten acres, a fardel-land. Query a yard land: but see Virgata terra.

FERDFARE, from the Sax. fyrd. and fare iter.] Significat quietantiam eundi in exercitum. Fleta. lib. 1. c. 47.

FERDWIT, Sax. ferd exercitus, and wite pœna.] Was used for being quit of manslaughter, committed in the army. Fleta, lib. 1.—It is rather a fine imposed on persons for not going forth in a military expedition; to which duty all persons, who held land, were in necessity obliged: and a neglect or omission of this common service to the public, was punished with a pecuniary mulct called the ferdwite. Cowel.

FERIAL DAYS, dies feriales, feriæ.] According to the Latin dictionary are holy days; but in the stat. 27 H. 6. c. 5. Ferial days are taken for working days; all the days of the week, except Sunday.

FERLINGATA (FERLINGUS AND FERDLINGUS) TERRÆ. A quarter or fourth-part of a yard-land.—See titles Fardel of Land, and Fardingdeal.

FERM, firma.] A house and land let by lease, &c. See title Farm.

FERMARY, from the Sax. feorme, victus.] Is an hospital; and we read of friers of the firmary.

FERMISONA. The winter season of killing deer; as tempus pinguedinis is the summer season.

FERNIGO. A piece of waste ground where fern grows. Cartular. Abbat. Glaston. MS.

FERRAMENTUM, ferramenta.] The iron tools or instruments of a mill.—Et reparare ferramenta ad tres carucas, i. e. the iron work of three ploughs. Lib. Nig. Heref.

FERRANDUS. An iron colour particularly applied to horses, which we at this time call an iron grey.

FERRY. A liberty, by prescription, or the King's grant, to have a boat for passage upon a river, for carriage of horses and men for reasonable toll: it is usually to cross a large river. Termes de Ley. A ferry is no more than a common highway; and no action will lie for one's being disturbed in his passage, unless he alledge some particular damage, &c. 3 Mod. Rep. 294.

A Ferry is in respect of the landing-place, and not of the water, the water may be to one, and the ferry to another; as it is of ferries on the Thames, where the ferry in some places belongs to the archbishop of Canterbury, while the mayor of London has the interest of the water; and in every ferry, the land on both sides of the water ought to belong to the owner of the ferry, or otherwise he cannot land on the other part. Savil, 11. And every ferry ought to have expert and able ferry-men, and to have present passage and reasonable payment for the passage. And it is requisite to have one, who has property in the ferry, and not to allow every fisherman to carry and to re-carry at their pleasure, for divers inconveniences; and especially when a place is between the divisions of two counties, any felon may be conveyed from one county to another, secretly, without any notice. Sav. 14.

A ferryman if it be on salt water, ought to be privileged from being pressed as a soldier, or otherwise. Savil. 11. 14.

Owner of a ferry cannot suppress that, and put up a bridge in its place without licence, and writ of ad quod dammum; per Holt, Ch. J. Show. 243. 257. Cart. 193. 1 Salk. 12.

If a ferry be granted at this day, he that accepts such grant is bound to keep a boat for the public good; per Holt Ch. J. Show. 257.

Custom for the inhabitants to be discharged of toll, may have a reasonable beginning by agreement, as that the inhabitants of the town might be at the charge of procuring the grant, and in consideration thereof, one man to find the boat, and take toll; and the inhabitants to pay none. Show. 257.

A common ferry was for all passengers paying toll, but the inhabitants of A. were toll free. An inhabitant of A. may bring an action for taking toll, but not for neglecting to keep up the ferry; because the former is a private right, but the latter a public. But he cannot maintain an action for not passing; for so, any other subject might bring an action, which would be endless; but the taking toll was a special damage, and without special damage he can only indict, or bring information. 1 Salk. 12.

An exclusive right to a ferry from A. to B. does not prevent persons going by any other boat from A. directly to C. though it lie near to B. provided this be not done fraudulently, and as a pretence for avoiding the regular ferry. 4 Term Rep. K. B. 666.

The not keeping up a ferry, has been held to be indictable. See title Bridge.

FERSPEKEN. To speak suddenly.—Leg. H. 1. c. 61.

FESTA IN CAPPIS. Were some grand holy days, on which the whole choirs and cathedrals wore caps. Vita. Abbat. St. Alban. p. 80. 83.

FESTINGMEN. The Sax. Festinman signifies a surety or pledge; and to be free of festingmen, was probably to be free of frank-pledge, and not bound for any man's fortheoming, who should transgress the law. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. p. 123.

FESTING-PENNY. Earnest given to servants when hired or retained in service, so called in some Northern parts of England, from the Sax. Festnian, to fasten, or confirm.

FESTUM. A feast. Festum S. Michaelis, the feast of St. Michael, &c.

FESTUM STULTORUM. The feast of fools. See Caput anni.

FEU, OR FEW. A free and gratuitous right to lands, made to one for service to be performed by him, according to the proper nature thereof. Scotch Dict.

FEU, OR FEW-HOLDING. Is whereby the vassal is obliged to pay to the superior a sum of money yearly. Scotch Dict.

Though the Latin word Feudum was used to denote the feudal holding where the service was purely military, the term Feu is used in Scotland in contradistinction to ward-holding, the military tenure of that country, and means that holding where the vassal, in place of military services, makes a return in grain or in money. Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

FEU, OR FEW ANNUALS. The rent which is due by the reddendo of the property of the ground, before the house was built within burgh. Scotch Dict.

FEUD, (Deadly.) See Deadly Feud.

FEUDAL AND FEUDARY. See titles Feodal and Feodary.

FEUDBOTE. A recompence for engaging in a feud, and the damages consequent; it having been the custom in antient times, for all the kindred to engage in their kinsman's quarrel. Sax. Dict.

FEUDS. See title Tenures, I.

FIAR. In Scotch law, in opposition to life renter; the person in whom the property of an estate is vested, subject to the life renter's estate. Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

FIARS-PRICES. The prices of grain in the different counties of Scotland, fixed yearly by the respective sheriffs in the month of February, with the assistance of juries: and these regulate the prices of all grain stipulated to be sold at the fiar prices: and also all cases where no price has been stipulated. Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

FIAT. A short order or warrant of some judge for making out and allowing certain processes, &c. If a certiorari be taken out in vacation, and tested of the precedent term, the fiat for it must be signed by a judge of the court, sometime before the essoign-day of the subsequent term, otherwise it will be irregular; but it is said there is no need for a judge to sign the writ of certiorari itself: but only where it is required by statute. 1 Salk. 150. See title Certiorari.

FIAT JUSTITIA. On a petition to the King, for his warrant to bring a writ of error in parliament, he writes on the top of the petition fiat justitia, and then the writ of error is made out, &c. And when the King is petitioned to redress a wrong, he indorses upon the petition, "Let right be done the party." Dyer, 385. Stamf. Prærog. Reg. 22.

FICTION OF LAW, Fictio juris.] A Supposition of Law, that a thing is true, without enquiring whether it be so or not, that it may have the effect of truth so far as is consistent with Equity. It is allowed of in several cases: but it must be framed, according to the rules of law; not what is imaginable in the conception of man; and there ought to be equity and possibility in every legal fiction. There are many of these fictions in the civil law; and by some civilians, it is said to be an assumption of law upon an untruth, for a truth in something possible to be done, but not done. Godolphin and Bartol. The seisin of the conusee in a fine is but a fiction in our law; it being an invented form of conveyance only. 1 Lil. Abr. 610. And a common recovery is fictio juris, a formal act or device by consent, where a man is desirous to cut off an estate-tail, remainders, &c. 10 Rep. 42.

By Fiction of law, a bond made beyond sea, may be pleaded to be made in the place where not made, to wit, in Islington in the county of Middlesex, &c. in order to try the same here; without which such trial cannot be had. Co. Lit. 261. And so it is in some other cases; but the law ought not to be satisfied with fictions, where it may be otherwise really satisfied; and fictions in law shall not be carried farther than the reasons which introduce them necessarily require. 1 Lil. Abr. 610. 2 Hawk. 320.

FIDEM MENTIRI. Is when a tenant doth not keep that fealty which he hath sworn to the lord. Leg. H. 1. c. 53.

FIEF, which we call fee, is in other countries the contrary to chattels: in Germany, certain districts or territories are called fiefs; where there are fiefs of the Empire. See this Dict. title Fee, Tenure.

FIERI FACIAS. A judicial writ of execution, that lies where judgment is had for debt or damages recovered in the King's courts; by which writ the sheriff is commanded to levy the debt and damages of the goods and chattels of the defendant, &c. Old. Nat. Br. 152. See this Dict. title Execution.

This writ, though mentioned in the statute W. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 18. is a writ of execution at common-law, and is called a fieri facias, because the words of the writ, directed to the sheriff, are quod fieri facias de bonis et catallis, &c. and from these words the writ takes its denomination. Co. Lit. 290. b.

This writ is to be sued out within a year and a day after judgment; or the judgment must be revived by scire facias: but if a fieri facias sued in time be not executed, a second fieri facias, or elegit may be sued out; and it is said some years after, without a scire facias, provided continuances are entered from the first fi. fa. which it is also held may be entered after the second fi. fa. taken out, unless a rule is made that proceedings shall stay, &c. Sid. 59. 2 Nels. Abr. 776.

If a man recover a debt against A. B. and levy part of it by fieri facias, and this writ is returned; yet he may take the body in execution by capias for the rest of the debt. Rol. Abr. 904. The sheriff on a fieri facias is to do his best endeavours to levy the money upon the goods and chattels of the defendant; and for that purpose to inquire after his goods, &c. And the plaintiff may inquire and search if he can find any, and give notice thereof to the sheriff, who ex officio is to take and sell them if he can, or if not, by a writ of venditioni exponas. 2 Shep. Abr. 111.

There may be a testatum fieri facias into another county, if the defendant hath not goods enough in the county where the action is laid to satisfy the execution; and the fieri facias for the ground of the testatum, may be returned of course by the attornies, as originals are. 2 Salk. 589. If all the money is not levied on a fieri facias, the writ must be returned before a second execution can be issued; because it is to be grounded on the first writ, by reciting that all the money was not levied. 1 Salk. 318.

If an execution is sued on a fi. fa. and the defendant dies before it is executed, it may be served on the defendant's goods in the hands of his executor or administrator. Cro. Eliz. 181. See further this Dict. titles Sheriff, Extent, Execution.

FIFTEENTHS. A tribute or imposition of money, antiently laid generally upon cities, boroughs, &c. through the whole realm; so called, because it amounted to a fifteenth part of that which each city or town was valued at, or a fifteenth of every man's personal estate according to a reasonable valuation. And every town knew what was a fifteenth part, which was always the same; whereas a subsidy raised on every particular man's lands or goods, was adjudged uncertain; and in that regard the fifteenth seems to have been a rate formerly laid upon every town; according to the land, or circuit belonging to it. Camd. Brit. 171.

There are certain rates mentioned in Domesday, for levying this tribute yearly; but since, though the rate be certain, it is not to be levied but by parliament. See Cowell; 1 Com. 309. and this Dict. title Taxes.

FIGHTING AND QUARRELLING. Is prohibited by statute, in a church or church yard, &c. on pain of excommunication, and other corporal punishment. Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 4. See title Church.

FIGHTWITE, Sax.] A match for fighting, or making a quarrel to the disturbance of the peace.

FIGURES. The stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 14. Allows the expressing numbers by figures in all writs, &c: pleadings, rules, orders and indictments, &c. in courts of justice, as have been commonly used in the said courts, notwithstanding any thing in the stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 26. See titles Amendment, Error, Pleading.

FILACER, FILAZER OR FILIZER, Filizarius, from Lat. Filum, Fr. file, filace, a thread.] An officer of the court of Common Pleas, so called, as he files those writs whereon he makes out process. There are fourteen of those filazers in their several divisions and counties, and they make forth all writs and processes upon original writs, issuing out of Chancery, as well real, as personal and mixed, returnable in that court; and in actions merely personal, where the defendants are returned summoned, they make out pones or attachments; which being returned and executed, if the defendant appears not, they make forth a distringas, and so ad infinitum, or until he doth appear; if he be returned nihil, then process of capias infinite, &c. They enter all appearances and special bails, upon any process made by them: and make the first scire facias on special bails, writs of habeas corpus, distringas nuper vicecomitem vel ballivum, and all supersedeas's upon special bail: in real actions, writs of view, of grand and petit cape, of withernam, &c. also writs of adjournment of a term, in case of public disturbance, &c.
